

COMMON SENSE.

A Journal of Live Ideas.

Vol. 1.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., STURDAY, MAY 16TH, 1874.

No. 1.

Signs of the Times.

THE increasing attendance at the various "liberal" meetings in San Francisco is an indication of the drift of public sentiment.

The age of reason has begun to dawn, and the Church, if she is to survive and be a power in the world, must be sustained by reason and sound argument.

Two hundred and seventeen members of the present Parliament are said to be in favor of Woman Suffrage. Among the number is the Prime Minister and a majority of the House members.

A FEMALE graduate of the Medical Department of Iowa University has taken the first prize for the best performed dissection in surgical anatomy, in a class consisting of twenty-four young men and one other young woman.

Two young women have recently been elected to the charge of departments in two excellent institutions—Miss Rice at Antioch being Mathematical Professor, and Miss Mary B. Read, Professor of German and French in Missouri State University. Both ladies thoroughly prepared themselves for their positions by study here and in Europe.

THE Chicago Tribune gives a lengthy description of a recently patented device for a street railway, dependent upon gravity for the motive power. The railway consists of a series of inclined tracks elevated upon a tressle work. The car itself does not incline towards the earth as it progresses, but is elevated by means of a screw, just in proportion as the track descends. The average length of the sections is about one mile; on reaching the end the wheels run on a piece of track which slides vertically in grooves to the height of the original starting point. The invention is said to be a practical success.

OF the Temperance Crusade, Woodhull & Claflin's Weekly says that the whiskey rings started the movement in order to injure the cause of woman suffrage. They wish to organize all the forces of rum against woman's right to vote. Possibly that may be true, but whiskey sellers and whiskey drinkers, as a class, have always been opposed to woman's enfranchisement, and a combination of this element would only lead to a combination of those who desire to restrict the use of intoxicating beverages. In the same article in which this opinion is expressed it is admitted that the movement has shown women themselves that the most reputable and sensitive may visit places where vice is supposed to hold high carnival, and come forth with their purity unimpaired; thus they will be able to see that the polls cannot contaminate them, and this bugbear against woman suffrage will be dispelled.

Miss Mary Charlton, one of the Assistant Clerks of the General Assembly of Illinois, seems to have performed her duties in a satisfactory manner. The following resolution was unanimously adopted at the close of the session:

Resolved, That we think it but simple justice to Miss Charlton, the first lady ever elected to a clerkship in the General Assembly of this State, to say that by her constant attention to duty, and her faithful, careful, and accurate discharge thereof, she has entitled herself to the respect of every member of the House, and has done much toward allaying any remaining prejudice against the employment of women in public positions.

The New York Herald says there are many indications that we are approaching a period during which the truce that has been preserved between science and religion will be broken, and that, whatever the result, the fight will be general and severe. Religion thrives, the churches prosper; but, in spite of all appearances to the contrary, there is a large amount of scepticism widely diffused among all ranks and classes of the people. The researches of Darwin, the experiments of Tyndall and the teachings of Huxley, Carpenter and others have done much within the last ten years to sap the foundations of religious belief. In these days the apostles of science are men of great ability and learning, and these high qualities are quite equalled by their industry and daring.

Mrs. M. J. Holcomb, of Chicago, was one of a committee appointed by the "Social Purity Society" to visit the prisons, courts, etc. She recently related her experience in a lecture, giving many instances of gross injustice on the part of judges and jailors. Among other things she said children of nine to thirteen years of age are shut up in dark cells in the county jail, and are obliged to keep candles burning to frighten away the rats. Small tallow candles are sold to the prisoners for seven cents each by the jailor, a price double their cost. The money to purchase them is begged by prisoners from occasional visitors. The question is asked what crime can children commit equal to the crime that society commits by inflicting on them such punishment? By what right are little children shut in from the light and air? Another illustration of injustice given by Mrs. Holcomb was a fine of $25 and costs, imposed upon a woman who had presumed to lock her door, at night, against a man (not her husband), while the man, who made all the disturbance of the peace that was made, was fined only $3. and costs. A policeman who found him with a hatchet endeavoring to break down the woman's door, arrested both the assaulter and the assaulted, and the Judge completed the outrage by imposing on the latter a fine eight times as large as that inflicted on her assailant.

SPIRITUAL PHENOMENA.

Many of our readers have doubtless seen statements copied from English papers, of the physical manifestations common in London; but as it is always more satisfactory to have such statements from witnesses with whom we are acquainted, and on whose word strict reliance can be placed, we have asked a gentleman of this city, who recently returned from London, to give an account of phenomena which occurred in his presence. He is a close observer, a man of culture, and one whose word is as good as any man's. He was formerly a surgeon in the British army; is a member of the Royal College of Surgeons, and a man accustomed to weigh evidence and take it for only what it is worth. He writes:

MR. EDITOR: You have asked me to give you some account of spiritualistic phenomena to which I was witness during the month of January last, in London, England. I will do so with pleasure; and as I saw a good deal more than I could recount in the space of one short letter, I will write you a series on the subject, in which I will endeavor to relate in the simplest language possible, the facts I witnessed, so that your readers may be able to form some idea of the present state of spiritualistic science in England. I may add that I have been a careful student of these matters for the past thirteen years: that I have examined into the matter, as it has cropped up from time, in my paths in almost every country in the world;—for I have met with it in some shape almost everywhere—and that, being of a very rationalistic and sceptical frame of mind, it has been my habit rigidly to exclude from my list of admitted facts any phenomenon, where imposture was possible; for there is nothing I am more sure of than this, that there are some mediums who occasionally lie and deceive us, and some pretending to be mediums who have no mediumistic powers at all. Nothing is therefore more foolish than over credulity on the part of spiritualists, and nothing more calculated to damage the cause with the scientific: and really acknowledged facts of the most marvellous kind are now so rife in our midst that there is no need at all of our accepting half-proved or ill-proved ones.

I spent but one month in London. I was very busy all the time, and only attended a few seances during the last week of my stay. I will endeavor, in recounting these, to state strictly what happened, and nothing else, and to leave my readers to draw their own conclusions for the most part.

Mrs. Guppy is now well known all over Europe as one of the most extraordinary of mediums for what are called "physical manifestations." She was formerly Miss Nichol I believe: She is now in very prosperous circumstances, having married a wealthy man, and it is quite a matter of favor to be admitted to one of her seances. I took to their house with me a friend of twenty years standing, a sceptic; a very clever, practical, long-headed man, who had acquired a large fortune by industry and business abilities in the East Indies; and had lately returned from Borneo. He accompanied me throughout these investigations, and as I must necessarily frequently mention him, I will call him X. Well, one wet evening in January, 1874, X and I drove up to Mr. Guppy's door at Holloway. As the servant admitted us, a fat little girl ran out of an adjacent room and insisted upon being kissed: we kissed her and then walked into an elegantly furnished drawing-room, and were introduced to Mrs. Guppy, an exceedingly stout lady, with light yellow hair and blue eyes. Mr. Guppy almost immediately took me away into the billiard-room, where we played till tea was announced. Tea over, all the company present adjourned to a parlor adjoining, furnished only with an old round table, having a loose top, a lot of broken chairs, an old piano, and a music stool. The company assembled consisted of Mr. and Mrs. Guppy, Miss H, another medium, my friend and myself, a Glasgow gentleman, a lady and gentleman whose names I forget, and Messrs. Henderson and Voltman, about both of whom I shall hereafter have a tale to tell.

As soon as we had all taken seats at the table, the door was locked and the key taken possession of by one of us; the window was fastened; and a roll of cloth was placed along the bottom of the door, to exclude the light with which the hall was flooded. Mrs. Guppy and Miss H sat next the piano, Mr. Voltman on Miss H's left, then X the strange gentleman, Mr. Guppy the Glasgow man, myself, the lady, and lastly Mr. Henderson. On Mrs. Guppy's right. The gas was turned out, and the table at once began to rock and crack; a light cold breeze seemed to blow over it from time to time, and now and then a blue point of light would spring from its surface with a slow and curvilinear leap, sometimes falling on to it again, and anon soaring above our heads; to me it looked just like a firefly, and I do not believe that its appearance or antics could have been imitated by any phosphoric contrivance. The table called for the alphabet, and it was rapped out "Ask for what you wish and we will bring it if we can." Mrs. Guppy asked for a china teapot which we had left on one of the side tables in her drawing-room. Mr. Guppy asked for "anything queer." X asked for a lot of tulips in flower; I asked for a bunch of grapes; some one for snuff; Mr. Henderson for all the materials requisite to make a Welsh rare-bit. In a moment or two after these wishes were expressed some hard substances began to fall fast upon the table and floor; and something soft fell on the ends of my fingers. After a while Mr. Henderson began to sneeze excessively, and begged us to light up the gas, as he was suffocating, "and did not know what they were doing with him." He then said, "Something nasty has fallen on the back of my hand." We were all sitting touching hands, as a safe-guard against tricks. We lit the gas, as soon as the table would allow us, and found things as follows: Lying around X, on the floor, and before him on the table, were a number of tulips, about eight or ten, I think, in full flower, attached to the bulbs, which carried a lot of damp earth upon their roots; some of which was scattered all over the table. X stated that these objects appeared to him to have been thrown at him from above the place where I was seated. The most striking thing about them was that they were as fresh as if just that moment pulled from their pots, and the leaves quite wet with rain. Certainly, no one of our number had been absent from the warm rooms for an hour or two. The soft object that lay on my hand was a bunch of raisins. On Mr. Henderson's hand lay a dab of butter, now melting fast, a piece of bread and another of cheese lay close beside; the whole table on his side, as well as his whiskers, was covered with pepper and salt, with mustard; and opposite the lady who sat next to me lay a heap of snuff. Mr. Guppy had been presented with a clothes-brush, and another article which I forget; and Mrs. Guppy produced the china teapot she had asked for from below the table, saying that she found it in her lap. Now in spite of all that seems marvellous about this, X and I both felt that it was all eminently unsatisfactory. Nothing had been done that a professor of legerdemain could not have done far better. Moreover, Mrs. Guppy sat between another medium, her intimate friend, and Mr. Henderson, also a friend, and a man of highly unstable nervous temperament. There was nothing to show that she had sat still. We could not accept anything we had seen as worthy of a moment's consideration, in the light of a test. But the gas was again turned down; then the piano was struck discordantly, the table was rocked, a chair was placed upon it, and pushed so violently at me, apparently by X who sat immediately opposite, that I was obliged to hold it with all the strength I had, or I should have been hurt. After this all answers to our questions were at once given by loud strokes on the keys of the piano. Some of the persons present were dragged away from the table, chair and all; all were pulled or patted by unseen hands; some kissed by unseen lips. We heard the kissing, all of us plainly. X was touched by a warm, female hand, on the forehead. I begged them to pull my hair: they said they could. Mrs. Guppy said, "give it a good pull, as he is so anxious for it." My hair was not pulled, but after a while a small hand, the hand of a child of six or seven years, was laid caressingly on the back of my left hand which touched the right of the lady next me; it quietly rested there a minute, was then slowly and gently drawn away, with a movement evidently and unmistakably meant for a caress; but the sensation was so exactly that of a real child's hand placed upon mine, that, at the time, I did not realize the wonder of the fact. Now I did not see any way to account for this: the lady beside me was quite above suspicion, and I know she did not move: Mrs. Guppy and the other medium had hands far too large, even if they could have reached me, which was impossible; and the hand was withdrawn in such a way that the person to whom it belonged must have been on the right hand, whereas all the ladies on my left. If it was a mechanical hand the mechanism was perfect and the composition the naked truth. Besides, here is the rub: it was perfectly dark, and yet there was not the least approach to fumbling. Now I'd defy even the man at my right hand to do just that with his own hand, without fumbling for my hand, before he could lay his own upon it. But it was this little fact alone that with me gave any weight at all to the phenomena we had before witnessed: alone they would have been worthless. As soon as the seance was concluded, we removed the cloth from the bottom of the door, and found the door and window secured as at first, so that it was difficult to understand how the material objects, which seemed to come at our call, had been introduced, since it was hardly possible to suppose that Miss Guppy could have entered the room prepared with such a variety of objects, or could have kept them concealed anywhere in the room. A gentleman whose veracity I could not doubt told her that at a previous seance at which he was present at Mrs. Duffy's under precisely similar circumstances, some one asked for a sun-flower, and in a moment, there was a tremendous bang upon the table, whilst earth was scattered over the persons of all present, and some were struck by wet foliage. On light—the gas, a sun-flower, six feet long, in flower, with a large quantity of earth about its roots, lay across the table. After leaving the room where we had been sitting, we enjoyed a very pleasant and merry supper, and finally took leave of our hostess at a late hour.

Mr Editor, I have already exceeded my space. I have related I believe with absolute truth and perfect accuracy of detail, all the most important occurrences of that seance. X and I drove home, X by no means favorably impressed by what we had seen at Mr. Guppy's; and as sceptical as ever. Yours, faithfully,
MEDICUS.

"The Champion of Humanity, an exponent of spiritual unity, self-sovereignty, and the principles of human life," is the title of a new weekly journal published in New York City, the first number of which was issued May 2nd.

THE ORIGIN OF SPIRITUAL IDEAS.

BY J. W. MACKIE.

The origin of nearly all systems of religion can be traced to a belief in the influence of the stars on man's destiny. The progress of mental development through which man passed before he reached this belief must have been very slow. First perceiving that the more inert matter, earth, was continually operated upon by water, which in its turn was moved by the air, naturally introduced ideas which gradually rose from the perception of ponderable to the conception of imponderable bodies. Claudius Ptolemy, an astrological writer of the second century, says:

"That a certain power derived from etherial nature is diffused over and pervades the whole atmosphere of the earth, is clearly evident to all men. Fire and air, the first of the sublunary elements, are encompassed and altered by the motions of the ether. These elements, in their turn, encompass all inferior matter, and vary it as they themselves are varied; acting on earth and water, on plants and animals."

This etherial essence was thought to be the medium by which astral influences were brought to bear upon terrestrial things. But still away beyond this etherial theory man's irrepressible curiosity pushed his fancy, and pictured in his mind a living intelligence. This he called spirit, God, or the Soul of the World.

Looking beyond man—beyond our globe away into the starry heights and depths of infinitude—we see glittering worlds maintaining a fixed relationship to each other, suggestive of a sympathetic chord binding them together. Then turning our gaze upon our own earth, we perceive a similar relationship existing, an unbroken chain of law and order in the gradual growth of the world from the granite to man. And when we see plants and trees and animals adapting themselves to their situations and conditions; when we see the runners of the strawberry and the root of the gigantic oak adopting the best means to reach the needed water; when plants stretch forth their stems from the darkness towards the light which steals through a crevice in a cellar; when every where, in every thing, including humanity, there is ever observable a wonderful power of adaptation to promote the development of life, it seems almost impossible to resist the conclusion that there is in all things a connecting link or principle of intelligence which unites the universe into one grand system of brotherhood—to say with Shelly:

"The interminable spirit it contains Is Nature's only God."

Having united the influences of the stars with the idea of a controlling divinity, the Lord of the hosts of heaven, ambitious man conceived the idea of influencing divine intelligence—of "moving the hand that moves the world." This magic in its varied forms and phases came into being; and astrology and magic became inseparable terms. Separate divinities ruled the various stars, with subordinate angels to execute the will of heaven. The etherial elements were filled with spiritual beings; earth, water, air and fire had their respective gods, with classified subordinate spirits who worked among men for good or ill. Man at last conceived the idea of a spirit or deity in himself which outlived the death of the body, and was affected in the after life by the life while in the flesh. Then we see men taking measures to avoid the evils of a future life consequent upon the deeds done in the body. Thus the laudable desire to penetrate the mysteries of Nature laid the foundation of all the spiritual despotisms which have enslaved mankind and retarded progress.

MARRIAGE.

BY H. F. M. BROWN.

The New York newspapers have recently, made mention of an atrocious assault upon a young Irish girl, who was going through New York, to her home in Providence. The man, or the villian is Higgins. He was identified by his victim, arrested and tried. Frightened at the prospect of a twenty years' sentence for his offence, he offered to marry her. And, strange as it may seem, the girl was advised, urged, to accept the fellow for life. And why? Did she love him? No. Did he love her? Of course not. But then the girl was poor, ignorant, and with but few friends. Tom Higgins knows the world; "he belongs to a good family," and, can support a wife, so the papers say. True he has defamed and defrauded one whose good name is her sole stock in trade. So, to escape the penalty of his crime, he frankly offers the girl his hand. In plain English, the fellow says: I have inflicted upon you a blow; because you was in my power. The law is against me, and twenty years' imprisonment will be meted out to me, unless you give me legal power to insult and abuse you all the days of your mortal life."

The girl listened to the base proposition. She was counseled to accept it. Her advisers were ministers, magistrates Christians! What did the poor distracted child of Erin answer? Here is what she said: "I would not marry him if a court house full of people told me to." Theodore Tilton wisely remarked, "No wonder this was the girl's reply, but what is to be thought of the men who would urge her to give herself for life to such a dastardly villian? Men must have singular ideas as to womanhood and its sanctities when they suggest such a method of condoning the grossest offense against it." Glory, honor, praise, and power be unto the girl who scorned the paltry bribe. Let her name be written among the immortals. But, what of men who call the misalliance of souls marriage? Do they know anything of the holiness of heart unions? aught of the sacredness of marriage? Do they know that the marriage of convenience is productive of nameless evils, of unwritten wrongs? Drunkenness and vagabondism, in high and low places, are the legitimate fruit of ill-assorted, loveless unions. The government swindlers are, in nine cases out of ten, children of parents who were defrauded in love, and bankrupt in affections. Is it, then any wonder that most of these very men regard womanhood as the cheapest of commodities, and hug to their hearts the heathen dogmarriage will cover a multitude of sins?

Friends of free thought who have subscribed for several copies of COMMON SENSE with the intention of giving them away, would do the cause more good by purchasing only the first number, at wholesale price, $5. per hundred, and leave those to whom they are given to buy their own papers after that. A person generally appreciates most that which he pays for himself.

✂ CANVASSERS wanted at this office, 236 Montgomery.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE CONVENTION.

THE fifth annual meeting of the California Woman Suffrage Association was held in Mercantile Library Hall, San Francisco, April 29th, and 30th. In the absence of the President, Mary F. Snow was chosen to preside.

After the appointment of a committee on resolutions, the President read letters which had been received from various persons unable to attend. The following are extracts:

FROM C. O. STEPHENS, SAN JOSE.

"The war that we are now waging for the abolition of Woman Slavery is the most gallant, the most chivalrous, the grandest struggle that the ages have yet witnessed, or that the pen of the historian shall ever record. It is the legitimate development of the principles of our Revolutionary Declaration of Independence * * * We have no cause to be disheartened at the seemingly slow progress we have hitherto made, but have every reason to be hopeful for the future. Great reforms are not the work of a day, but often the growth of centuries. But in this cause the signs of the times indicate that the pioneering is about finished. Our opponents have reached their last ditch. For myself neither detraction, nor calumny, nor slander, nor misconstruction of motives, nor social ostracism, nor aught that may come, shall muzzle my pen, or still my voice, or paralyze my arm in durinh what I can for woman's enfranchisement. I am satisfied to serve as a private for life in that grand army of human freedom, and receive as my reward only the consciousness that when our banners of victory (as they surely will) flash in the sunlight of a not distant future, then will our men be purer, our women nobler, and all those forms of vice and immorality that are the legitimate results of woman's subjection, such as prostitution, intemperance, gambling, and corruption in high and low places, will no longer pollute the life, and fester to the core, our social system."

FROM J. L. YORK:

San Francisco, April, 27th.

To the officers and friends of the California Woman Suffrage Association: Dear Friends—It is with no small degree of disappointment that I am obliged to forego the pleasure and satisfaction I should feel in contributing my mite to the success of your annual meeting. A previous engagement in San Diego makes it my duty to go there, but you will accept my thanks for your kind invitation, and I hope and pray your meeting may be marked by unanimity of feeling and harmony of action. The principles involved in our cause, which you have met to advance, are those which affect our entire governmental and social relations; hence they are worthy of our best thought and action. Principles so grand—high as heaven and broad as the universe—should certainly lift us above all petty personal animosities into the atmosphere of a noble manhood and womanhood. I am not in sympathy with any party or faction in the suffrage cause, but desire to be counted in, with all true workers in reform who seek the emancipation of woman. To this end, dear friends, you have my sympathy, and such little influence as I may possess, in carrying forward the woman suffrage reform; and I ardently hope that the friends of our noble cause throughout the State will gather under one standard, and thus, by an aggregation of all our forces, characterized by a sweet and loving spirit, present a united front to do battle for equal justice and equal privileges for both sexes before the law, and in all our social relations.

With these hastily penned lines, I commend you all to good and kindly influences, as a guide to lead you into right action in behalf of the cause to which we stand continually pledged, and for which I will not fail to bear testimony wherever I go.

Hoping all things (that are good) and believing all things (that are true) I remain yours in spirit,

J. L. York.

A series of resolutions were reported by J. A. Collins, Chairman of the Committee, recommending that a memorial be sent to Congress asking the protection of the women of Utah, and the defeat of any bill proposing to deny the right of suffrage to any individual on account of sex. Another resolution declared that women owning property are justified in refusing to pay taxes. The resolutions were discussed by Messrs. Collins, Ferree and Butler, and by Miss Abby Baker, Mrs. Kingsbury and Mrs. Addie Ballou, and were adopted.

The afternoon session was devoted to debate on various subjects, during which, Rev. Otis Gibson declared himself in favor of woman's enfranchisement.

In the evening Mrs. Snow, Recording Secretary of the State Board of Control, read her annual report, showing a satisfactory condition of the Society. Unity of purpose and harmony of action have characterized its sessions, which have been occupied in devising plans for the furtherance of the cause. The report detailed the action taken at the various meetings, and the other work done during the year, such as endeavoring to procure the nomination of friends of the cause to office, measures taken to influence legislative action, etc.

In the evening an address was made by Mrs. A. J. Dunnaway, of Portland, Oregon. She regretted the absence of politicians from the meeting, as she desired to remove the common impression concerning the woman movement, that it is opposed to the rights of man. It is really a movement for human rights. When men separate from the society of women, they put asunder what God has put together. Politics has become a filthy pool, and the aid of woman is required to assist in purifying it. Whatever elevates woman ennobles man. Woman's influence will yet remodel the Republic. She is soon to have the ballot, not because it is just that she should have it; but because the interests of the Republican party require it. That party was in the throes of dissolution after the war, and, in order to save it, negro suffrage was inaugurated; now to save it, woman suffrage will be adopted. The establishment of granges assists greatly in the education of woman. The Good Templars, Daughters of Temperance, etc., also help to accustom women to take part in public affairs, and by July 4th, 1876, she predicted woman will get the ballot. The discourse was very lengthy, and excepting the points here given, it contained nothing new.

On the second day a business meeting was held, and officers for the ensuing year were chosen, as follows: President, P. J. Shafter, with a long list of Vice Presidents. Secretary, Mrs. Lena Clarke. Board of Control, Mrs. M. A. Lewis, Hon. John A. Collins, Mrs. E. S. Sleeper, Rev. Herman Snow, Mrs. C. M. Palmer, Hon.

John M. Days, Mrs. Mary J. Collins, Mary F. Snow, Mrs. E. A. De Wolf, Mrs. E. G. Leavitt, Mrs. Lena Clarke, E. A. Lewis, Mrs. R. M. Beverly, and Miss Henrietta Lewis. Letters received from Prof. Denton, Prof. Carr, of the University, Governor Campbell, of Wyoming, John Taylor, of Tuolumne, and others, were read; also a fine poem written for the occasion by H. Winchester, of Lower Lake. All these documents, together with the resolutions, mysteriously disappeared, and could not be found in time for publication.

Mrs. Lewis, President of the Board of Control, read her report, which was approved. The Convention adjourned until evening, when Mrs. Dunnaway made another address, and a final adjournment took place.

THE OAKLAND MYSTERY.

On the night of April 3rd, the family of T. B. Clark, of Oakland, was aroused soon after retiring, by the ringing of a bell. Mr. Clark went to the door, but could see no one. In a few minutes the bell rang again; and this time it occurred to him that it did not sound like the door bell. He called to Mr. Oxland, a gentleman who roomed in the house, thinking Oxland might be striking his clock; but he had retired. Shortly after, a noise was heard in the parlor, and, on entering, the furniture was found displaced. Soon after, the manifestations became more violent, the house trembling in every joint; heavy raps were made on the outside; a great racket was made in the parlor and dining rooms, and finally the front door, which was locked, was burst from its hinges with a tremendous crash, and deposited quickly at the end of the hall, without disturbing the bolt or injuring the hinges. The manifestations continued nearly all night, recurred in the morning, and commenced again the next evening, continuing in all, three days, during which, occurrences took place which would, if fully described, fill a small volume.

At present a committee consisting of Prof. Le Conte, Hon. W. W. Crane and Rev. Mr. McLean are engaged in taking the testimony of the scores of persons who witnessed the phenomena. Their report will be ready in time for the main facts to be given in our next. Until then we prefer not to publish a detailed account of the occurrences, inasmuch as the daily papers (especially the Chronicle) have devoted many columns to the matter. A great deal has been said that is untrue, but the Chronicle reports are in the main correct, corresponding nearly with a detailed account given by Mr. Clarke to the editor of this paper. The witnesses generally are men of unimpeachable character, persons who could have no motive for deception, and who are above suspicion.

Here now is an opportunity for the California Academy of Sciences to do a little practical work, which undeniably belongs especially to them to perform. It is to make a thorough scientific investigation of the facts, so far as can be ascertained by the testimony of witnesses. Then, when they have learned this, let them follow the example of the Dialectical Society of London, and appoint a committee to ascertain the causes of similar phenomena.

COMMON SENSE.

W. N. SLOCUM, EDITOR.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, MAY 16, 1874.

READERS who look in this column for the editor's salutatory are referred to the first page of advertisements, where will be found the COMMON SENSE PLATFORM, containing all the promises we have to make; and as to apologies, although this first number may seem to require some excuses, we prefer to let it go for what it is worth. The paper hereafter will speak for itself.

SPIRITUALISTS have no creed. They desire to believe in what is true. They cannot believe alike because they cannot see alike; are not constituted alike, and are surrounded by diverse circumstances; yet they should be the most tolerant of all people. Intolerance is a sure sign of ignorance. A person of high cultivation finds no fault with an ignorant neighbor who cannot perceive the truths that are apparent to him. It would be as reasonable to chide a child for not being a man.

SAN FRANCISCO has been highly favored of late with radical lectures from able men and women. First, Professor Denton came, and gave a series of lectures on geology, speaking also, each Sunday, on rationalistic religion. He was followed by Gerald Massey, who gave three lectures only; one on Shakespeare, one on the Devil, and the last and best on Spiritualism—"the coming Religion." Both Massey and Denton attracted large audiences. The latter, after speaking in San Jose and Stockton, is again here, and is awaking much interest, by his clear and logical discourses. In fact, so many church members have been drawn out to hear these radical utterances, that some pastors have felt it their duty to warn their flock against the danger threatening them, and some of the strictures of the clergy have been quite severe and uncharitable. Danton says he "has passed the region of blame." He may have passed the point of blaming others, but he will have to go quite beyond the confines of this earth, before he will have escaped all who blame. It is well, however, that one can be satisfied with the approval of one's own conscience, and be content to let those blame who will. Time sets all things right. Mrs. Addie Ballou has also been in San Francisco during the month of April, speaking to large and appreciative audiences. She is now in Stockton. Notices of her lectures will appear from time to time, in COMMON SENSE.

J. L. York lectured in Charter Oak Hall, Sunday evening April 19th, on "Truth." The seats were not all filled, and in reference to the absence of familiar faces, Mr. York said, there should be no ill feeling between the two societies; he did not know of the division until his arrival in the city, under engagement to speak in the usual place. He counseled the cultivation of a kindly feeling, hoping both societies might grow, and that the two halls would soon be found inadequate to hold all anxious to attend.

On the following Sunday, his subject was Spiritualism—the evidences on which it is based. It was the first discourse on the subject of spiritualism, given by him in this city, and is spoken of as the best he has delivered.

A PUBLIC JOURNAL should aim to be a leader of intelligence and morals in society, as well as a reliable exponent of the conditions, interests and sentiments of the people, lifting high the standard of truth and justice for the millions. It should be a builder, as well as a destroyer. While protesting against and exposing the unsoundness of existing institutions, it should be able to point the inquirer to broader and deeper and stronger principles of truth, that rest upon the bed-rock of human nature. To this end it should be free to criticise, and fearless in the expression of what seems to be truth; but it should be careful that its liberty does not degenerate into license, and thus become a curse, instead of a blessing.

In the wider interests of society, the Journal should be one of the strong arms of the State, to guard it against political corruption, with its host of evils—betrayal of public trust, in order to advance private ends—usurpation of power for the promotion of party purposes—and fraud, and speculation. In the narrower spheres of use, the Journal should be an influential friend, a defender of the weak and helpless, against the oppression of the strong and powerful.

It is the duty of a public journal to condemn wrong, but, in so doing, it should avoid personalities; as these tend to divert the public mind from the very evils which are denounced, by exciting its indignation against individuals, instead of their crimes. Such a policy injures the cause it desires to serve; for the awakened indignation of the people is soon cooled in the swift whirl of events, and they, having made their protest against the offenders, are satisfied, while the old wrong remains unabated.

Independence of party, whether social, political or religious, is an essential requisite of a journal devoted broadly to Human Rights, for these do not admit of prejudiced views, or partial statement of facts. Our motto is human rights, equal liberty and exact justice for every citizen, without regard to sex, class or nationality.

IT IS STATED that the pictures composing the "Spirit Art Gallery" are in the hands of the Sheriff, an attachment having been levied on them by one of Mr. Winchester's creditors. The exhibition has not been a pecuniary success; but the result is owing mainly to the fact that the locality is too far from the business portion of the city. It required one-half day's time to go to Sixteenth street, look at the pictures and return. Not one in ten, even of the Spiritualists of San Francisco, visited the gallery. People from the interior were the principal visitors; but comparatively few of this class found time to go there, however much they desired to see the pictures. It is to be hoped the attachment will soon be released, and that an arrangement may be made to bring the pictures into town, as they are, in reality, a very strange and interesting subject for study. Cannot Spiritualists assist in the matter?

The beautiful white paper on which COMMON SENSE is from the Pioneer Paper Mill of S. P. Taylor & Co. It lacks the finish of the sized and calendared paper of Eastern make, but in other respects it is superior; and we believe in patronizing home institutions.

FREE THOUGHT SOCIETIES.

WITHIN a few years past "Liberal" societies have been formed in nearly all the large towns of the State, while San Francisco, Sacramento and San Jose have each several organizations, though differing somewhat in character. The spiritualists were earliest in the field, followed by the Liberal Unitarian congregations organized by Rev. Charles G. Ames; but the most striking advance in the line of Free Thought was made by the originators of the Lyceum for Self Culture, which society was formed in this city June 27th, 1869; and as it was composed of people who did not shrink from being known for just what they were, the gathering was called the Infidel and Spiritual Lyceum, the object being to bring infidels and spiritualists together for a comparison of views. If spiritualism is true, the infidels, so called, desired to become spiritualists, because, whatever they may be infidel to, they are not infidel to the truth. On the other hand, if the spiritual theory is not true, those holding to that faith must necessarily become "infidels," there being to them no satisfying proof of a hereafter other than that furnished by spiritualism. These two elements therefore combined, that the merits of their respective philosophies might be compared. James Battersby was elected President and J. W. Mackie Secretary. After a few months the number in attendance became so large that Dashaway Hall was engaged, and has since been retained for the meetings of the society, the name of which was changed to the "LYCEUM FOR SELF-CULTURE," thus avoiding an unnecessary opprobrium and more clearly indicating its purpose and character. A circular was issued, inviting the attendance of the people, and setting forth the objects of the society, as follows:

"THE LYCEUM FOR SELF-CULTURE seeks to supply a social want in the present period of religious transition, and is intended to bring together thoughtful and earnest persons for free conference on all the problems of life, destiny and duty. In a time of general restlessness and discontent, when external authorities have ceased to command confidence, when so many feel the old foundations to be insufficient, and existing religious institutions no longer furnish them a satisfactory home, there is yet, even in sceptical minds, a conviction that truth and virtue are attainable; and those that seek in the right spirit are at least more likely to find, than those who sink into indifference and sloth. The stimulus of other minds operates on us as a motive and help to enquiry; and in the exchange of our best thoughts and feelings we are all enriched. Even the expression of our errors gives opportunity for their correction. We are, therefore, drawn together for a purpose which all mankind have ever approved; and we employ for mutual benefit the only faculties by which mankind has ever advanced a single step. We aspire—we reason—we welcome instruction. We extend a cordial welcome to all, and invite every seeker for truth to aid by presence and co-operation, the accomplishment of our common desire. We have no aim to establish, no system of proselytism, nor any pre-established mode of warfare on existing systems. Our purpose is to arrive at truth, though systems grown hoary and reverent with age should fall, and our most cherished theories and dearest philosophies be exploded. Our time and place of meeting is in Dashaway Hall, Post Street, every Sunday at 2 o'clock, P. M., and we hope that you will find an opportunity to meet with, and aid us by word and work, in this effort for mutual improvement."

This invitation was sent to all the clergy, but very few ordained ministers have been present. Occasionally one would come in and take a seat near the entrance, ready for a hasty retreat, which was almost invariably made before the close of the meeting. Rev. S. D. Simonds is the only clergyman who attends regularly and takes part in the proceedings, though remarks are occasionally made by Rev. A. M. Bailey, Rev. Mr. Klein and others. The opening address is limited to one half hour and the speeches to ten minutes each. The officers of the society constitute a committee of management. There is also a literary committee to decide upon the subjects for discussion, arrange preliminary exercises, etc. An admission fee of 10 cts. is required in order to defray expenses. Messrs. Battersby and Mackie have served as officers of the society almost continuously since its organization. They recently requested to be relieved, and Mr. Waldron was chosen President, but declined on account of ill health. The present officers are: President, Mrs. Julia Melville; Vice President, Thomas Watson; Secretary, Patrick Healey; Treasurer, James Galligan; Sargeant-at-Arms, Robert Laswell.

About two years ago the Spiritualists, becoming dissatisfied with the manner in which some of the speakers referred to them, quietly left the "Lyceum" and formed a society of their own, called the "San Francisco Spiritualists' Union." They have held large meetings in Charter Oak Hall. The place, holding about 500, became too small, and the officers, with the approval of most of the members, hired Mercantile Library Hall, where meetings are now held weekly, and where the Children's Lyceum is also held. The Hall being dark and unfit for day meetings, it is probable some new arrangement will be made with regard to the Lyceum. An election of officers is soon to be held, after which the course of the future will be determined upon. The evening meetings have been well attended. Meetings of "Independent Spiritualists" are also held every Sunday in Charter Oak Hall. The forenoons are devoted to conversations; the afternoon occupied by a seance, and in the evening there is generally a lecture on spiritualism.

In San Jose, also, there are two flourishing societies. One is called Unity Congregation, organized by Rev. Charles G. Ames, and now under the ministrations of Rev. Mr. ———. This society, although it has no creed, is not in any broad sense a Free Thought Society. The speaker lectures, and the people listen, very much after the manner of regularly organized churches. The institution was formerly sustained mainly by Spiritualists and Free Thinkers, who now have a organization of their own, called "The Society of Free Thought of San Jose," which was organized on the 15th of December, 1872. Its organization is simple. Its creed is extremely short; its platform broad and comprehensive; its objects co-extensive with human welfare. The whole constitution consists of but five articles:

1st "The undersigned, for the purpose of mutual improvement socially, intellectually and morally, hereby associate themselves together into a society to be called the "Society of Free Thought of San Jose."

2nd. This society shall have stated meetings for listening to discourses, lectures, discussions, and essays upon all subjects that relate to man's welfare, as a moral and intellectual being, allowing all latitude permissible under parliamentary rules.

3d. The management of the finances, and providing speakers and intellectual entertainment, shall be under the control of a committee of seven persons, at least three of whom shall be women, to be elected semi-annually by the society.

4th. and 5th. Provide for the organization of the Committee, and the amendment of the Constitution.

The Society endeavors to secure the best speakers and the best thought, but not to make any lengthy engagements with any speaker.

The platform would be as free for a Catholic or Methodist as for a Free Thinker or Spiritualist, with this understanding with all, that the "Society" is not considered as endorsing, or responsible for, any views spoken therefrom; nor can any speaker expect to be protected from criticism or reply, as in the Churches, by any artificial claim of sanctity. The intention of the Society is to "prove all things," and subject all views to the tests of reason and common sense. Its President is E. A. Clark; Secretary, A. C. Stowe.

The Society holds monthly Sociables, which combine literary entertainments,—dramatic, elocutionary and musical—with sociability, ending with a dance, which closes at 12 o'clock.

Probably the most successful society in the State is the Metaphysico Scientific Association of Stockton. The officers are: A. T. Hudson, President; W. S. Freeman, Vice President; H. A. Manchester, Secretary; W. S. Sturgeon, Treasurer. The Executive Committee is composed of Dr. W. T. Brown, M. Armstrong and C. G. Earnest. The society consists of about one hundred members proper; but the meetings are attended by hundreds of others. The secretary in answer to a letter of inquiry, writes: "We started six months ago with thirteen members. We have now an attendance which would make any clergyman in our city swear that the millenium was at hand, if he could see it gathered under the roof of his own tabernacle. He would jump for joy in the full belief that the season of a two bit harvest was at hand, and that the ten cent fever would soon be driven from the atmosphere of the contribution plates. We are thankful that so many of our citizens love the truth and are willing to trust to their own sober judgement as to things spiritual. We started in a hall which accommodated three hundred. Two months since we were forced to leave that for want of room. Our present Hall seats 670, and is well filled. We are hopeful that the good time coming may not be so far off as many suppose, and that the sun of theological and spiritual truth may yet shine in our midst."

Sacramento has two societies, one Spiritual, and the other Free Thought. The latter was organized by J. L. York, who is engaged in the work of forming similar societies throughout the State. The officers are, C. W. Hoit, President; L. H. Waterhouse, Vice President; F. Woodward, Secretary; W. Hoyt, Treasurer. Directors, C. W. Hoit, Dr. Hollister, W. Murray, F. Woodward, W. Hoyt, B. M. Van Alstine, Mesdames Waterhouse, Stephenson, Childs, Marsh, and Woodward. A letter from the Secretary states that the name first adopted, "Society of Free Thought," has been changed to Friends of Free Thought. He writes: "The name was changed lest some might think Society implied creed; and we wish it distinctly understood that—

"We are pledged but to truth, to liberty and law;
No creed shall bind us, no frown shall awe."

Mr. York has recently organized a Free Thought Society in Woodland, Yolo county, together with a Children's Lyceum. At present he is in San Diego, and will, before his return, visit San Bernardino, Riverside, Anaheim, Los Angeles and other places, after which he will go to Oregon and Washington Territory. Mr. York is a very efficient worker in this field, and will meet with a cordial reception from the people. He has been called an iconoclast; but not altogether justly; because, although he has spent a number of years in tearing away the rubbish of theological dogma, he is, by nature, an organizer, a builder-up of institutions based on truth and common sense.

IS SPIRITUALISM A SCIENCE?

This question is under discussion by the members of the Lyceum for Self Culture, at Dashaway Hall. Of the score or more speeches already made, not more than three or four had any direct bearing on the real question at issue. In fact it was generally admitted that spiritualism is not itself a science, and most of the speakers maintained that it has not even a scientific basis.

The discussion was opened by Mrs. Elizabeth Hughes. After speaking of the influence which communion with the spirit world exerts on those who seek such communion, Mrs. Hughes said: "If people do not understand the laws of this life—the laws by which our bodies and souls can be preserved here—how is it possible that they should understand fully the laws of the other life? Taking a broad view of the matter, there are but two classes of people in the world—spiritualists and materialists. But of the spiritualists those only are truly so who accept high spiritual views of life. They recognize matter as subservient to mind, not mind to matter. Materialists comprise a very great portion of mankind. They are found in the churches, and even among spiritualists, so called. Materialistic spiritualists are satisfied with the phenomena of matter. The beyond is to them doubtful because they neither see it nor feel it spiritually. They cling to the sensuous phenomena of modern spiritualism with a hope that there may be something in it; but that hope soon withers, because it has no root in the spiritual nature. The phenomena of the lower spheres of spirit life are transitory and unsatisfactory, necessarily so, for the spirits through whom they come are those whose materialistic condition enables them to operate on matter. * * * By and by the spirit world will reveal itself more fully. The chasm that separates the two worlds will be better bridged, and something worthy to be called the science of Spiritualism will be built up. Spiritual ideas will then permeate not only our religion, but our law, our social and business life, and all the relations of mankind. Facts are the foundation of science, and the facts of modern spiritualism are as yet fragmentary and insufficient to form a basis for the deduction of principles. They are not yet so well authenticated and so familiar to scientists as to permit of their classification, and allow us to comprehend the laws which underlie them."

Mr. Edmunds, who followed Mrs. Hughes, said if spiritualism is not a science to-day it never will be. If the phenomena has now no foundation in fact it never will have. The word science is derived from a Latin word signifying knowledge. A knowledge of something which exists in the mind is subjective science; that which exists in form is objective science. A science is none the less a science because people generally do not understand it. The speaker discoursed at considerable length on what constitutes science, and the difference between science and art, the latter enabling us to do that which the former demonstrates to be possible. The only question is, Are the phenomena produced by disembodied spirits, or by some [other] power in nature? * * * All bodies having vegetable or animal life, draw their support from the elements around them. This in time returns to its original forms again. If it were true that a spiritual substance passes from this material earth at the death of each human body, the material universe would in time become pure spirit, and no matter would remain in existence.

[Mr. Edmunds ignored the fact that there is an etherial substance, not belonging solely to this planet, but permeating space, from which "spirit substance" may be eliminated. There is not necessarily any permanent loss of matter, little danger in fact that the world will disappear by piecemeal, or if it should, as some of our modern philosophers assert, it will reappear as substance again, while the pure spirit, as the Buddhists believe, passes on into the Nirwana, or great universal spirit of nature. "All matter turns to motion, and motion to heat, and heat to force, and force to will, and will to thought enacted, and thought to will reflected," and so on in a never ending circle of change.]

Dr. O'Donnell followed Mr. Edmunds, giving copious extracts from Shakespeare, and arguing that spiritualism is a delusion.

Mr. French, who declared himself a spiritualist of 22 years experience, said it does not matter whether spiritualism is a science or not; it is a fact. If it is not a science it is certainly a belief based on scientific principles. He considered spiritualism pure Christianity. Its doctrines and faith are what Jesus taught, and the same signs testify to its truth—the healing of the sick, etc. In answer to a remark by Mr. Edmunds that it had had 25 years to prove its truth, he said its enemies have had the same time to prove its falsity, and they have utterly failed. No sooner is one form of manifestation imitated by impostors and opponents than a new phase of phenomena comes up to confound them.

Mr. Ryan, a U. S. soldier, made quite a spicy little speech, in which he denounced spiritualism as a humbug and its votaries as tricksters and idiots—deceivers and deceived. He called it "the dream of fools—the imagining of madmen."

President Battersby reminded speakers that the object of the discussion is to examine into the claims of spiritualism as a science, and not to denounce its believers as fools.

Mr. Talbot talked about Christ and the Christian religion. He said that even if all the things claimed as spiritual manifestations are performed as claimed, that does not prove spiritualism a science, because the Bible predicted that such things would come!

Mr. Healey made a few remarks, in which he said law is universal, governing alike matter and spirit. We do not yet understand all the laws of nature, but we are growing in knowledge, and the time will come when man will be able to comprehend many things which now appear mysterious. Because spiritualism has not yet been systematized into a science, that is no reason why it may not be in the future. A few years ago one who proposed to take down the sun, analyze it, and tell of what it is composed, would have been called a lunatic, but by spectral analysis this is now done, and we know not only the bulk, density, etc., of the great luminary, but of what minerals, gases, etc., it is composed. There will be time enough to denounce spiritualism when it has been thoroughly examined. Doubt, if you will, but investigate.

Mrs. Dr. Perkins closed the discussion for the day, but presented nothing new.

The second day's discussion was opened by Rev. Mr. Simonds, who gave some of the ideas advanced by Swedenborg and confirmed by his own observation. No brief report can do justice to this very able and spiritual discourse, and we have not space to give it in full.

Emperor Norton made one of his very brief speeches, in which he said that science deals with things visible and invisible; but much more attention has been paid to the visible than the invisible. He alluded to a dream, so called, in which was made known a fact at that moment transpiring hundreds of miles distant. He asked what it was that transmitted the intelligence. The fact communicated is something we can comprehend; but the means by which the news is conveyed is yet unknown, and it is the duty of scientists to solve such riddles.

Mr. J. I. Ferree said modern spiritualism is the first attempt in the world's history to demonstrate the existence of a spiritual state of being. We are indebted to Christianity for the gross ignorance which prevailed until 25 years ago, on the subject of spiritual existence, and now the church is the most bitter opponent of a movement which promises to prove the very thing the church claims, but has failed to prove. The proofs furnished by spiritualism are simply truths discovered in nature, and the fact that all the phenomena depend upon conditions proves conclusively that the manifestations rest on a scientific basis. They are all subject to law. Mediumship is a purely physical qualification, dependent not at all on moral or intellectual character, though somewhat modified by it. In time spiritualism is sure to demonstrate the continued existence of man, and there will yet be a spiritual science. He believed it a design of the spiritual powers to prove to man his continued existence, in order that he may grow more spiritual, and the race make more rapid progress.

DENTON'S LECTURES.

The discussion was continued by Messrs. Kennry, Coster, Allen, Klein and Wilson, without eliciting any important facts bearing on the question.

The third day's discussion was opened by Mr. Mackey, who gave by far the most important facts touching the subject elicited during the discussion. At the request of the editor Mr. Mackey has consented to write out his views in a series of articles for COMMON SENSE, the first of which will be found on page of this issue.

Mr. Lundi gave an account of the reported exposure of a person pretending to give spiritual communications, and said it is hardly fair for spiritualists to ask us to believe as genuine things which are so easily counterfeited! He declared that no man exists who can give off even the smallest quantity of "animal magnetism," and said he did not believe any disembodied spirit ever caused the moving even of a hair or one particle of matter. He called for demonstrations then and there, and asked that the hands of the clock be turned five minutes without touching it. He closed by saying he would rather lose his life than lose his hope in the future as taught by Christ.

Emperor Norton told about his dream again, and asked what it was that took such an irresistible hold of his brain.

Dr. E. White said no well informed person will concede that spiritualism is an exact science. Mathematics is a science, and so is anatomy, but medicine is not; because experience has proved that like treatment does not always produce like results. There are too many unknown and unknowable contingencies for any exact calculation as to cause and effect. In spiritual experiments also, the results, instead of being similar, have been remarkably diverse and opposite. In company with a party of friends the speaker had investigated the phenomena sixty-three nights, during most of which nothing of a satisfactory nature had been obtained. On six nights there had been manifestations, mental and physical, for which they could not account; but there was much of an unpleasant nature, proving that the source of the messages, whatever that source might be, was not very good. In conclusion he said if spiritualism is ever proved it must be by what is contained in the Bible.

Mr. French closed the discussion for the day, maintaining that the germ of life is prophetic of future life, and when the germ becomes a living human being, that condition is prophetic of eternal life. He claimed spiritual phenomena as purely natural; said no intelligent spiritualist believes in anything supernatural. Theologians have taught that there is a divine being outside of and superior to nature. Spiritualists do not believe this.

The subject was continued for further discussion, an account of which will be given in our next issue.

On Sunday afternoon, Professor William Denton delivered an interesting lecture in Mercantile Library Hall, on the True Revelations, in which he proved clearly that the prophecies of the bible are not worthy the name of prophecies, and that the true revelations are those that are made by nature herself. He said, there are several conditions necessary in order to constitute a prophecy: First, it should be proved that the prophecy was actually written before the events referred to took place. Many of the so called prophecies in the bible will not bear this test. Second—If a prediction is made that a certain event will take place, and no limit is set to the time, that is no prophecy, because any event, such as the destruction of a city, is sure to take place, sooner or later. The same might be said of San Francisco to-day that was said of Jerusalem. The day will come when not one stone will be left upon another. It is only a matter of time. Give time enough, and the waters of the sea will roll where the city now stands. Not one in a dozen of the so called prophecies of the bible have any relation to the events to which they are said to refer. They are vague statements about something of an entirely different character. Then that is no prophecy which fulfils itself. We read in the new testament of many things that were done purposely, in order that prophecy might be fulfilled. Neither is that a true prophecy which may be fulfilled by any one of a score of events. Take one hundred commentators on some of the prophecies of the bible, and unless they copy from one another, each one will give a different version of the meaning of the predictions. Then, again, a prophecy, to be worthy the name, must be fulfilled in every particular. To ask from a string of predictions as long as your arm, one little point as big as your finger nail, and make a great parade of it, is manifestly a fraud. Take, for instance, the 28th chapter of Deuteronomy, in which it is said the Jews "shall be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth." This portion of a sentence, detached from all that precedes and follows it, has been talked of and sermonized upon, as if it were a most wonderful thing; but it happens to be about the only truthful prediction of the entire lot of a hundred or more evils, which, in the same chapter, it is said will surely befall the Jews, if disobedient. Any one might be a prophet, if he could be so by making a hundred guesses, and have one come true. Much more remarkable prophecies have been made in modern times, by men who made no pretensions to divine inspiration; but who prophesied of the future from their knowledge of the past, and their acquaintance with facts in science.

This brief notice of Mr. Denton's lecture is necessarily very imperfect, and we have no space at all for the evening discourse, a masterly production on temperance.

Each reader of COMMON SENSE is requested to act as a committee of one to obtain subscribers for the paper. With a little effort friends could easily obtain three or four subscribers, but if each procured but one, the aggregate would be very large, and a material aid to the enterprise.

PUBLIC SEANCES.

For several months past, there have been held at Charter Oak Hall, on Sunday afternoons, what is called a Medium's Conference. The attendance is so large that in order to prevent disturbance, by people going in and out, it has been found necessary to lock the door, at 2 o'clock, the time set for the seance. An admission fee of ten cents is also charged. Ada Hoyt Foye acts as presiding officer. There are usually a dozen or twenty mediums present, grouped near the platform the spectators being seated outside of the "circle." The exercises generally commence with vocal or instrumental music. The audience is composed in the main of intelligent, earnest, and very quiet people. A few of the faces are noticable quite regularly, but a larger number come only occasionally. Thus there is a change of magnetic influences, and the manifestations are not always satisfactory. The following sketch of several of the meetings, will give an idea of what is usually said and done:

On Sunday, April 19th, (after a statement Mrs. Foye that without harmony good demonstrations were impossible,) there was music on the piano, then a short pause, when Mrs. Kerns, a medium, gave a description of the spirit of a blind man, who was attracted there by his child, he said was in the audience. Spirit not recognized.

Mrs. Hendee spoke briefly, of the progress of Spiritualism generally, and particularly of the large attendance at the Charter Oak Hall seances, many being unable to gain admittance. She also referred to a spiritual society in Sacramento, recently organized by Mr. York, and which is in a flourishing condition. Soon after, Mrs. Hendee, addressing a lady, called her "mother," and described a sensation of suffocation which she felt, and said her throat was affected. The old lady said the spirit impressing Mrs. Hendee might be that of her daughter, who died of putrid sore throat. Later in the afternoon Mrs. Cummings, another medium, stated that the influence felt by Mrs. Hendee was that of a brother and sister, the children of the lady addressed as mother, and that the girl died of throat disease, and the boy was drowned. She was a stranger to the medium.

Another medium described the spirit of a man, whose head in life was partially bald; hair sandy; blue eyes, full figure, name given as William George Wilson. Not recognized.

The spirit of Edward Morgan was next described by a medium, as about five feet eight inches in height, long face and black hair. The spirit appeared to be draped in royal purple. The lady in whose neighborhood the spirit appeared said she had never known any one who wore royal purple.

Mrs. Kern said the spirit of a lady, who gave the name of Ra-a-mah, asked her (the medium) to speak to her husband. Mrs. K. said she did not know him. The spirit was recognized by a gentleman present, as that of his first wife.

Another medium, Mrs. McKinley, told how to become susceptible to spirit influences, relating her own experience.

Mrs. Foye described the spirit of Calvin S. Greenwood; recognized by Mrs. Kerns. "Old Betsey," the spirit of a small woman, gray and lame, presented herself, but was not recognized. An inspirational discourse was then given by one of the mediums, in which the people were told that the spirits are endeavoring to drive out of the minds of the people the dreadful idea that the blood of Christ can redeem from sin. Various other short addresses were made, but none of particular interest. Mrs. Foye asked a spirit through Mrs. Cummings to give some idea of spirit life; but the spirit seemed to be unable to do so. The answer was that the spirit speaking lived almost entirely in the atmosphere of the medium, as her guide. Mrs. Foye asked what became of the medium's spirit when her body is taken possession of. The reply was that the spirit friends around her had charge of it, a few feet distant from the body of the medium.

On the 26th of April, the hall was crowded, as usual, many being unable to obtain even standing room. The door was locked at 2 o'clock. A song, "Home and Mother," was beautifully rendered, with piano accompaniment. Mrs. Hendee then related a portion of her experience, recalled to mind by the words of the song. She spoke of her own mother, and of the consolation she had derived from communion with her spirit. She said she had experienced so much joy and satisfaction through the manifestation of spirit friends, that she no longer thought of them as dead. She added the following as one of the beatitudes: Blessed are they who have recognized the spirits of their departed; for to them there is no death. They have evidence of life immortal.

The name of Charles Fiske was given, and description. He appeared as if clinging to the masts of a ship which was in a sinking condition. A lady present said she had a friend of that name and description, who was lost at sea. John Kern, a spirit, also recognized, expressed dissatisfaction with the disposition of property left by him.

A lady, afflicted with erysipelas in the hand, was relieved of pain by magnetic passes made by Mrs. McKinley. Chas. Mather was described by a medium and recognized by a lady, who said he had died from a wound received in battle, and that she was the nurse who attended him.

Ellen Merrill—been in the spirit world, about four years. Not recognized. Margaret Guthrie, who died in New York, wishes to communicate with her aunt, who is a Catholic. Not recognized. Mrs. Hendee, taking a lady by the hand, whom she had never before seen, addressed her by the name "Mary," the spirit importing to be that of the lady's husband. The name was acknowledged, and the spirit recognized.

The following unrecognized names were given through various mediums: William Wort, Samuel Collins, Mary Wright, (wished to communicate with her mother,) Jane Perry, Thomas Perry and Harvey Little.

Several reports of lectures and other articles of interest, are necessarily deferred until next week.

[For Common Sense.]
COMMON SENSE.

"Tis just the thing the people need !
The rarest thing to find
In all the realm of mind,
Tis the fine balance power, indeed,
Of active heart and brain,
That each should strive to gain.

It always keeps the happy mean ;
Is neither vain, nor proud,
In dress, nor manners loud,
Nor passionate in action seen ;
But holds an even course,
For reason is its source.

"Tis tolerant to thought and creed ;
No witches hang, nor drown,
Beneath its deadly frown,
No heretics nor burn, nor bleed,
It asks not A to see
Through glasses made for B.

"Tis moose to be desired than gold,"
Or railroad bonds to-day,
Or mining stocks that pay
Large dividends, are safe to hold ;—
One grain of common sense
Outweighs the rich man's pence.

"Tis human nature's saving grace.
If real sorrow come
To cloud the pleasant home,
It looks the stern fact in the face ;—
What it can't shun of care,
Tis brave to meet and bear.

Do morbid sentiments oppress ?
And trifles light annoy,
Excluding peace and joy ?
And fancied forms of woe distress ?
A little common sense
Will drive the vapors hence.

The need and the demand is great
Among the high and low,
In all the paths we go,
In each department of the state ;—
Let the supply ne'er fail.
Hail, "Common Sense," all hail !

[For Common Sense.]
WHY IS IT SO? LET THOSE ANSWER WHO CAN.

Why is it so? can matter find
Expression but through spirit power?
Explain how primates are combined
That beauty gives to every flower.

Can matter reason, talk and think,
And read and write, o'er Science pore,
From Wisdom's fountains knowledge drink,
And then the fields of space explore?

Why does the morning-glory bloom,
Then close its petals to the sun?
What gives the rose its sweet perfume?
Taught other flowers the light to shun?

By what strange power has Nature wrought
The various forms of life as seen;
By whom was simple nature taught
To smoothly run life's great machine?

Who placed the stars in yonder sky,
Ten thousand million orbs of light?
Who gave them power thro' space to fly,
And filled with gems the vault of night?

Can Paine's clear mind, or Gibbon, tell,
Or Hume, or Holbach's brilliant lore
Explain the cause so clear and well
That human reason asks no more?

Vain are the mighty powers of man
To weigh or measure Nature's laws,
Or fathom God's mysterious plan—
Explain the great Primeval Cause.

[thought]
How strange is life—how weak the
Of man its mysteries to explore!
Tell how and when the worlds were wrought—
Probe life's great problem to the core!

If all the powers of human thought
Throughout the world, in one combined,
T'would only be a cipher brought Against the great Eternal mind.

Lower Lake, April 19, 1874.

H. WINCHESTER.

DEEDS VERSUS CREEDS.

By ANNIE L. MURPHY.

In seeking truth, I wholly lost my way;
Rocked back and forward by the swinging tides
Of doubt and faith, confused by many guides,
Each one armed with a doctrine and a creed
Which, each felt safe to say,
Would meet and satisfy my every need.

And one claimed Jesus was the Son of God ;
And one denied that he was more than man ;
One scented wrath in the redeeming plan ;
One dwelt upon its mercy and its love ;
One threatened with the rod ;
One wooed me with the cooings of the dove.

And whether souls were fore-ordained to bliss ;
And whether faith, or works, were strong to save ;
And whether judgment lay beyond the grave,
And love, with pardoning power, went down to hell,—
Whether that road, or this,
Led up to heaven's gate, I could not tell.

Amid this dust of theologic strife,
I hungered with a want unsatisfied.
Heaven while I lived, not heaven when I died,
Was what I craved ; and how to make sublime
And beautiful my life,
While yet I lingered on the shores of time.

To judgment swift my guides in doctrine came :
Which one lived out the royal truths he preached?
Which one loved mercy, and ne'er o'erreached
His weaker brother? And which one forgot
His own in others' claim,
And put self last? I sought but found him not ;

And wept and raved because religion seemed
Only the thin, ascending smoke of words—
The jangling rude of inharmonious chords ;
Until, my false inductions to disprove,
Across my vision streamed
The glory of a life aflame with love.

One who was silent while his brethren taught,
And showed me not the beauties of his creed,
But went before me, sowing silent seed
That made the waste and barren desert glad ;
Whose hand in secret brought
Healing and comfort to the sick and sad.

Aglow I cried, "Here all my questionings end ;
Oh! what is thy religion, thy belief?"
Smiling, he shook his head, with answer brief—
This man, so swift to act, so slow to speak—
In deeds, not creeds, my friend,
Lives the religion that I humbly seek."

Then soft and sweet across my spirit stole
The rest and peace so long and vainly sought ;
And though I mourn the graces I have not,
If I may help my brother in his need,
And love him as my soul,
I trust God's pardon if I have no creed.

THE SAGE, EXPERIENCE, TO HIS FOLLOWERS.

From a MSS. Poem by E. R. PLACE.

Children! let those with me who walk,
With patience learn, with prudence talk.
The road we tread, I warn you, brings
Not always hours with golden wings,
For storms will rise and winds will blow,
Grief come apace, and joy be slow.
Yes, days will dawn whose pall of doubt
May shut Truth's light of glory out.
Mere incidents of soul-life all ;
As casual frosts on harvests fall :
Tho' blades have withered, fruitage died,
The earth-tried soul is glorified !
Seek not to walk by sight alone
Nor in mere faith your sight disown ;
Nor, when amidst the dark ye grope,
Be all your help the heart of hope ;
Nor hold, what'er the way betide,
The intellect alone should guide ;
E'en love, tho' pure, may lead astray
If solely it direct the way.
Each faculty or gift of mind,
Experience-trained and truth-refined,
May in its sphere thy steps control,
As helpers of the lab'ring soul.

Deny to none the right divine
To guide, or warn, or cheer, or shine.
Reason alone is lunar light,
Shed from an iceberg in the night ;
Love, without Reason, is a fire
In whose embrace true loves expire.
Let head and heart, the twins of truth,
Like Age mature with fairy Youth,
Together roll Progression's car,
The train shall signal every star.

Or dost thou hold our lives to be
More as a voy'ging on the sea ;
Now as a sound and trim-built ship,
Thou'rt ready for life's vent'rous trip ;
With cargo fit, with ballast due,
Each sail in place, mast firm and true,
Urged by a rare, celestial breeze,
Sail on, O Soul, to broader seas !
The crafts of men how poor, how frail,
How soon decayed, freight, ship and sail ;
Bound for the truth's eternal pole,
A ship of God art thou, O Soul !

O Death! thou art the palace of our hopes,
The storehouse of our joys, great labor's end
Thou art the bronzed key which swiftly opens
The coffers of the past ; and thou shalt send Such trophies to our hearts as sunny days,
When life upon its golden harpstring plays.
And when a nation mourns a silent voice
That long entranced its ear with melody,
How must thou in thy inmost soul rejoice
To wrap such treasure in thy boundless sea ;
And thou wert dignified if but one soul
Had been enfolded in thy twilight stole.

COMMON SENSE.

A Journal of Live Ideas.

VOL. 1.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, MAY 23RD, 1874.

No. 2.

Signs of the Times.

THEODORE TILTON's love story, in the Golden Age, is attracting considerable attention. It is said to be a success.

A score or more of anti-Christian journals are now published in the United States, and the number is annually increasing. There was a time when the Boston Investigator stood alone in the field.

Residents of Sherman Island, California, have successfully inaugurated the culture of opium. One man produced two hundred pounds. The drug sells for eight dollars per pound in the market.

The bill granting the right of suffrage to women in Massachusetts was defeated by only three votes. A few years ago it would not have received three votes. A few years hence perhaps there will not be three against it.

The suspension of eighty students of the Michigan University for hazing is likely to bring about a healthy reform in one institution at least. Public sentiment, of late years, is in decided opposition to the continuance of this foolish custom.

A young woman named Jenny Bonnet was arrested in San Francisco a few days since, on a charge of misdemeanor in wearing male attire. She stated that she had been herding sheep in San Mateo county in the garb in which she was arrested, which she put on to enable her to get such employment. She was locked up in the City Prison.

Henry Ward Beecher, in a recent sermon, likened churches to the national conservatory at Washington, where tall canes, when they grew to the top, are cut short, that their growth may not break the glass of their prison house. Men in churches, he said, are cut and trimmed in order not to break their glass houses by growing.

A tremendous meeting was held in this city on Monday evening, to protest against the repeal of the national eight-hour law, the repeal of which has been recommended by A. B. Mullett, supervising architect of public buildings. Resolutions were passed in favor of land reform and against Chinese immigration. The contract system in the erection of public buildings was also denounced.

The light of new truths is not, and should not be, limited to doctrines and creeds. If it is to make a new earth, as we who believe in the growth of the race hope and are sure that it will, it will also give us new ideas of friendship, and love, and social regard. Every new and beautiful thought which we receive in our minds ought to be incorporated into our social forms, to give them a new truth, and use, and friendliness, for our true growth is together.—Ella F. Mosby.

A worthy example was set at a wedding reception given at the residence of Henry G. Fiske, San Francisco, last week, by the banishment of wine from the tables. There was an abundance of lemonade and ice cream to take with the cake, but no wine. The marriage ceremony was performed at church, just prior to the reception, the parties being Miss Mollie Fiske and James Dewing.

Miss Ella A. Stockton, in a letter to the Washington Chronicle, justly denounces our abominable San Francisco weather, and praises the gentlemanly deportment and scholarly sermons of Rev. Dr. Stone. One offsets the other. Stone and Summer begin with the same letter—but the presence of Stone can hardly compensate for the lack of Summer, which is quite unknown in San Francisco. January is damp, June foggy, and both are cold.

A book entitled "Modern Christianity — a Civilized Heathenism," has been published in London, in the preface of which the author says:

"The question which is beginning to agitate the religious world is not whether we shall continue to recite damnatory clauses in our Athanasian Creed, but whether there is any Creed whatever that is worth reciting: not whether this form of Christianity is preferable to that, but whether all forms of Christianity, pretending to come from God through Christ, are not gross impositions from beginning to end. No man who reads a newspaper, or listens to a conversation in his Common Room or at his Club, will consent to place the impending controversy on any narrower basis. Revealed Religion is on its trial before the world, not for some trifling blemishes which a little mild correction may mend, but for its very life; and if the Clergy, its natural defenders, can show no intelligible reason why it should stand, common sense, in this country at least, will very speedily decide upon its merits after a somewhat rough and ready fashion."

A friend writing from Santa Cruz concerning the contest there under the Local Option Law, says: "The air seems instinct with feeling on this subject; and I believe those who have undertaken the fight will push it further than they now see. We found the vine-growers of Scott's Valley in a state of anxiety about the movement, which, they say, will do them serious harm. * * * For the present all sectarian lines are abolished in the effort to blot from society those social cancers, the saloons. A large class which has always heretofore held aloof from temperance movements, throws itself heartily and effectively into this one. The wife of one of our lawyers is engaged in public speaking on the subject, and has exhibited great natural ability as an orator, commencing where most public speakers are glad to end, with earnestness and great persuasive power, exhibiting both imagination and reasoning ability, dignified, yet with the faculty of reaching and holding her audience."

SPIRITUAL PHENOMENA.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: In my last letter I spoke of Messrs. Henderson and Volkman as gentlemen about whom I had a tale to tell. I propose now to fulfill my promise.

It is known to all Spiritualists that there are now mediums in whose presence the forms of spirits appear to be so far materialized that they are able to make themselves palpable to all the senses so perfectly that those can, in certain cases, form no other appreciation of the materialized spiritual form than they would if brought into contact with a living body. As far as I know, there has yet been only one medium with whom this phenomenon has presented itself in absolute completeness. Some years ago it was noticed by the friends of a little girl, called Florence Cook, that occasionally, on her going into a trance, another form, not unlike her, presented itself; and walked and talked with the people present, and made itself evident to their senses of sight and touch, just as Florry herself might have done, had she not been unconscious. It is said, however, that this double is taller than Miss Cook, not quite a good likeness of her, and that she is able to converse with a clearness and intelligence of which the medium is utterly incapable. This appearance presented itself in the light. Of course, as soon as it became known, every Spiritualist and every lover of the marvellous wished to go and see Florry Cook's "ghost." At first, her parents, being poor, thought to make money by its exhibition; but some rich Spiritualists in Manchester offered to provide for Florry if they would not use the power she possessed as a means of gain. A gentleman of wealth and character residing in Gloster Square, Hyde Park, then took charge of Miss Cook's seances, and granted free admission to whomsoever he chose. It was customary to tie Miss Cook in a cabinet, to fasten the ropes with tape, and to seal the tapes. Many eminent persons, amongst others the Earl and Countess of Caithness, have testified in the public papers to the facts of the phenomenon, and have stated that Miss Cook remained tied and insensible, whilst the spirit form was walking about the room and conversing with the company. This usually took place in a half-lighted room. Of course, the papers made great fun of this ghost manufactory, and many even of the Spiritualists believed that it was an imposition; and thought that either some other female was concealed in the room, or entered through a hidden door; or else that Miss Cook herself managed to get released, and to personate a spirit. Against this was the fact—testified to by numbers of intelligent observers—that the bonds and seals with which the medium was tied remained unbroken and untampered with; whilst others declared that they had seen the medium senseless in the cabinet whilst the figure was present in the room. Now, a certain medium in London, who had formerly been the most celebrated for physical manifestations, appears to have grown very jealous of Miss Cook's growing notoriety; and she made a point of expressing loudly on all occasions her belief that the thing was an imposture. I think it probable that she really did believe it was. At all events, she instigated Mr. Volkman to go to the seance and expose the thing. Volkman obtained admission, determined to test the facts. He was asked to inspect the medium's bonds, but declined, stating that he "knew all about it." He tacitly engaged, as did all who were admitted, not to interfere with the proceedings. However, as soon as the figure came from the cabinet, Volkman jumped up, as it passed him, siezed it round the waist, and tried to throw it down by tripping it up. The gentlemen present were not in time to prevent a sharp struggle taking place, during which Volkman's face was severely scratched, and a good handful torn out of his beard; but as soon as possible those present compelled him to let go his hold, and the figure tripped back into the cabinet. The effect on the medium appeared to be terrible; she did not come out of her trance, and, in spite of the restoratives that were at once applied, appeared to her friends to be dying. At length she recovered slowly, but with nerves and system so shattered that it was determined to allow her no more to appear in public for some time. Punch and the other comic papers were, of course, very merry over this "struggle with a ghost" which could pull out beards and scratch faces; but very unreasonably so, for it must be apparent to all those who know anything of modern manifestations, that there is nothing more wonderful in this than in a spirit's writing on a slate, or speaking in its own voice in propria persona—facts now as familiar to us as the sparrows upon the housetops. Mr. Volkman, when I met him, at Mrs. Guppy's, fully believed that Miss Cook was an impostor, and that it was Miss Cook, and no ghost, who had pulled out his beard. I asked him what the figure felt like, and he answered, "Why, like a young woman of seventeen, of course." When I left London, in December, this matter greatly exercised the minds of the London Spiritualists. Some believed with Volkman, others supported Miss Cook's pretensions. However, I have since received a letter from my friend X., in which he says, that, in order to settle this question, Mr. Crooks undertook to take charge of Miss Cook, to take her into his own house, and place her under circumstances which would render impostures impossible, and thus to decide the matter. Mr. Crooks did so, and declared himself perfectly convinced that the manifestation was absolutely genuine. Now, Mr. Crooks is acknowledged as one of the most intelligent of the London scientists. If now a Spiritualist, he has only lately become so. He is a member of the London Dialectical Society. This society undertook, some two years ago, to inquire systematically into the facts and phenomena of modern Spiritualism. I believe the society was a purely scientific body, and doubt if, up to that time, they counted any Spiritualists among their number. With the aid of the best mediums London afforded, they met regularly, and honestly set about their investigations. They have lately published an account of their proceedings, and after two years' careful examination, in which they have tested the alleged phenomena in the most exhaustive way, they unanimously agree in stating their conviction that all the physical facts alleged by Spiritualists to occur, do happen, just as they have said, and are not to be accounted for by any of the known laws of Nature. Mr. Crooks has also just published a pamphlet, in which he states that he has himself witnessed all these things under test conditions, down to the partial materialization of the form—he had not then seen Miss Cook;—and I believe his pamphlet is only the forerunner of a much more complete work on the subject by him.

What I have to say about Mr. Henderson is this. He himself made the following statement to me, and the facts were at the time testified to by more than a dozen persons who witnessed them, and who made public attestation of their truth with a unanimity, circumstantiality, and positiveness, which certainly would have left no chance for a criminal had his death depended on such evidence in a court of law. Mr. Henderson was, some time during last Fall, at a seance at Mrs. Guppy's; the circumstances were just what they were at the meeting described in my first letter: the room was the same; the door and windows were shut and locked; the key was held by the most sceptical of the company; a roll of cloth was put along the bottom of the door to exclude the light from the hall; so that no one could possibly open door or window without all in the room becoming instantly aware of the fact. When asked by the table to wish for something, Mrs. Guppy wished audibly that one of them might be removed from the room and carried elsewhere. As is usual, the sitters kept up an animated conversation in the dark while waiting for developments. Suddenly it was noticed that Mr. Henderson ceased to speak, or answer when spoken to; his wife, who was present, became alarmed; they lit the gas, and lo, there was no Mr. Henderson in the room; his seat was empty. Mrs. H., in great alarm, went home to seek for him there. Mr. Henderson, who is a tall and stout man, and must weigh some two hundred pounds, told me that he does not know what happened to him; he was conscious of nothing, except that he suddenly ceased to feel as if sitting at the table; and quite as suddenly found himself standing in the back yard of a house he did not know, with the rain falling on his unprotected head. He called out, and tried to get in at a back door; people looked out, and cried "thieves." He spoke to them; they recognized his voice, and let him in. He found himself in the house of a friend, where there was also a circle holding a seance. The people who admitted Mr. Henderson testified that although it was raining fast, he was but very slightly wet, and his boots were not soiled with mud; he was not out of breath or heated. They took note of the time. They then took him to his own house, where they found Mrs. H. in great tribulation at his non-arrival. The persons whom he had left at Mrs. Guppy's also noted the time shown by the clock when they lit the gas on discovering his absence. On comparing notes, it was discovered that of the two hours thus noted, that noted at the house arrived at by Mr. Henderson was five minutes in advance of that at Mrs. Guppy's; but this was easily accounted for by a discrepancy in the clocks themselves. Mr. Henderson does not think that any appreciable time was occupied in his transit, yet the one house was at least two miles, by the crow, from the other. If this be not all a lie, here is an instance of a very substantial body being carried through a material wall without experiencing any resistance. The spirits assert that this can readily be done; they say that they dissolve the matter into its ultimate atoms. Was Mr. H. or the wall so dissolved? I have asked many spirits to explain the process; they try, but always say that they doubt if they can offer any explanation comprehensible to us, and so I find it.

In conclusion to this, I ought, in all fairness, to state that one of the most experienced Spiritualists on the Pacific Coast gave me, a few evenings ago, an account of his wife bringing to him a bouquet of withered flowers from Boston to Washington in ten minutes; but she directed him to leave his window open so that she could bring them in; and he then stated that it was entirely contrary to all his experience that spirits could pass matter through matter. The same gentleman shewed me a photograph of a medium with whom he had been en rapport, taken in Manchester, England, whilst he was in Washington yet; in the corner of the card, in the background, was a very perfect and accurate photograph of himself in uniform. The same medium sat again on the same occasion, and his place was then taken by a distinct likeness of an officer in a military cloak, with the hood over his head; the gentleman told me that this was a good likeness of his brother, who had been buried on the field in his cloak. Who shall explain? Yours, faithfully,

San Francisco, May 10, 1874.

MEDICUS.

Owing to the negligence of the printer, a line, "Test Medium," was omitted last week in Mrs. Sproul's advertisement; also a wrong number given to the card of Mme. Avery, who is at 214 Bush street.

A WORD FOR DR. CUNNINGHAM.

BY MRS. H. F. M. BROWN.

At the Temperance Mass Meeting in San Francisco one of the speakers said: "In this great work we hear the voice of God calling, and we are answering, 'Here, God, am I.'" Good! Another speaker, the Rev. Dr. Cunningham, said, when speaking of this movement, "It was not inaugurated by such women as Woodhull and Stanton." Now, what I want to ask is this: If we are all the dear God's children—and if some have been beguiled into serving the Prince of Darkness—and if the evil-doer has heard the Good Father calling, "Come into the temperance field;" where is the objection to the reply, "Here, God, am I"? Can any one tell? Shall we gather up our skirts and ask, "Who has inaugurated the good work?" John Gough, the chief apostle of temperance, glories in having washed his robes in whisky. Will the Rev. Dr. Cunningham reject him on that account? We all give thanks when the saloonkeeper turns from his unrighteous traffic and joins the holy crusaders in prayer and praise. A praying woman has never refused to kneel beside the drunkard, the debauchee. Why, then, should the Rev. Dr. Cunningham rejoice that Mrs. Stanton and Mrs. Woodhull are not workers in this good cause? Allowing that their hands are not white—that they have been going hell-ward, would it not be a matter of great joy to know that they, too, have joined "the army of the Lord"? When the masks fall from all faces—when the Sun of Truth lightens the hovels and palaces in which we live, it would not be strange if the traduced were the white-souled. At any rate, give me their chance, rather than that of the traducer. "The voice of God is calling." Let us not stop to jostle a soul who is "bearing a load on the rough road of life." If we are not strong enough to work beside a soul who does not bow at our shrine, let us go straightway to Bethesda and be healed. I like vastly the strong man, who, conscious of his firm standing, cried out: "I am thankful that I am fire-proof; no flame can singe me; I am a salamander safe; no burglar can break into me; I am without encumbrance; no sheriff can put his hands on me. I am grateful that my unfettered soul can mount up exultingly like the lark and sing freedom's glad anthem!" My "fire-proof" friend will never make faces at those who have gained a higher lookout than he; but he will climb and conquer, without even making a stepping stone of a woman's reputation.

ELLA F. MOSBY, in The Living Way, says: "I have known characters so lovely that their presence reminded me of walking in fresh green woods in spring, and being suddenly enveloped in the color and fragrance of a blossoming grove. This effect is not result of the physical beauty merely; it is the spiritual sphere of power and pleasure from a beautiful life."

Mrs. Victoria Woodhull and Mrs. Claflin have arrived in San Francisco.

[For Common Sense.]

CHERISHING LOVE.

A community is sometimes thrown into commotion by reports, from gossiping tongues, of some hitherto respectable married woman having been accused of violating her marriage vows. These reports, often presented without good authority, are never "laid on the table;" but are immediately adopted and spread abroad, with gratuitous comments. The victim is at once cast off from former associates; failings that had hitherto passed unnoticed are now recalled, repeated, and enlarged, till a stranger would think that earth never contained another such vile creature on its surface; when, if the truth were known, she had committed no crime, but merely been led into indiscretion by the total absence of that cherishing love from her husband, which, if he had bestowed upon her as lavishly as upon his favorite horse or dog, would have been to her a shield and safeguard through life. The maledictions of society should fall just as heavily upon the thousands of men, as on the few women, who ignore that part of their marriage vow wherein they swear before God and men to not only love but cherish each other in sickness and health. How many men can be found with whom a few years of married life have passed who cherish their wives, by comforting them when discouraged, by helping lighten their burdens with tender sympathy, calling a sparkle to the eye and a glow to the faded cheek by words of approval, and filling their hearts with sunshine by words and acts of endearment. Said a very estimable lady, not long ago, "My husband has not kissed me for years." "No," said her husband, "me and my old woman are done with such nonsense as that." The "old woman" sighed, and looked as though she would regard it as very sweet "nonsense" to be cherished in the heart of her husband enough to be the recipient of voluntary, demonstrative affection, and as in domestic affairs she had always been accustomed to make a little go a great ways, so homeopathic doses of "nonsense" bestowed occasionally would be acceptable to her. If a husband does not cherish his wife he annuls his marriage vow, and forces his wife to accept smiles and kindness from those who have both to give. As a beautiful bud that is transplanted and neglected never develops into a flower, but blights ere half its beauty is unfolded, so in married life it depends upon a husband's cherishing love whether the wife develops into noble womanhood, dwindles into a pigmy, or seeks in others a response to her affections, at the sacrifice of what every woman ought to prize dearly, her moral obligations and a spotless reputation. It is not in the nature of woman to go astray, if the full measure of a husband's love is meted out to her; but when the autocrat of home considers as "nonsense" that part of his marriage vow which bids him cherish his wife, he ought to take a part of the blame to himself, if, through the coldness and leanness of his soul, he succeeds in driving his wife into "taking a new departure."

AURORA.

THE MORALITY OF OUR DAY.

BY J. D. PIERSON.

Bad as we find the field of corruption in society to be, there is reason to believe that it would be infinitely worse if people were not superior to some of the popular institutions with which they are connected. The religious training imposed upon most of us, so far from having had a beneficial influence upon life and character, has produced, in a large majority of cases, a contrary effect. Who is there, having been thus raised, will deny that the largest share of positive deception, in one form or another, witnessed in their lives, was made manifest under the parental roof? To say that theology teaches monstrous lies, is not sufficient to cover the ground of complaint against her corrupting, debasing system. If one calls in question some of the dogmatical points of doctrine in her creedal programme, she mutters "blasphemy!" If there be such a thing as blasphemy in the world, theology is most certainly guilty of using it in her degrading teachings. What can be more blasphemous against humanity at large than the lying dogma, total depravity? This baleful proposition has acted as a blight wherever promulgated, by inflicting a stain upon the crowning work and glorious manifestation of the Supreme Power.

Sir James Mackintosh says: "More than three thousand years have elapsed since the composition of the Pentateuch; and let any man, if he is able, tell me in what important respect the rule of life has varied since that distant period." He denies the possibility of any advance in the principles of morality, and tells us that what we have of the moral teachings, were known to heathen philosophers long anterior to the Christian era. What are these moral truths? "A complete moral system states the supreme good of man, the supreme moral principle which should guide his action, and his particular duties to himself and to mankind." And what does this complete system embrace? "To do good to others; to sacrifice for their benefit your own wishes; to restrain your passions; to honor your parents; to love your neighbor as yourself; to forgive your enemies; to respect those who are set over you." These and a few others of the same import, are the sole essentials of morals, as they have existed for thousands of years, and all the sermonizing in the world has not thus far added one jot or tittle to them; yet the clergy pretend to teach new moral truths. How can they teach new moral truths when there are none to teach? The fact is, theological teachings multiply hypocrisies just in proportion to the amount of unbelief associated with those who wait upon the ministration of the church. Is it any matter of wonderment, then, that deceptive practices prevail in the families of most church-going people, and that deception is the rule in business transactions of church people?

All incarnations are miracles—unseen spiritual forces acting on matter—if it is only a thought incarnated into the lineaments of a face.—Ella F. Mosby.

THE ORIGIN OF PRIESTCRAFT.

BY J. W. MACKIE.

When humanity arrived at a belief in deity, the next rational step was naturally to expect communications from heaven; for it was most reasonable to believe that if gods existed, man should be the special object of their care; that as man was ignorant in regard to what the gods required, means would be adopted to enable man to be cognizant of the divine will. Not receiving direct revelations from the spirit world, the operations of nature in every department were looked upon as media speaking in symbolical language, as certain signs preceding certain events, some of which were drawn from the entrails of animals, some from the note and flight of birds, some from the sight of lightning, some from prodigies, some from stars, some from visions of dreamers, and some from exclamations of men in frenzy. The air was filled with signs and the ground strewn with omens. Of course, interpreters of these signs became necessary, and prophets, priests and soothsayers were the result. So attached to the affections of society has been this order of priestcraft that it is represented to this day in the fortune-tellers who live upon the superstitious fancies of a credulous people; and among the wisest of us is a lingering faith in omens and signs, even while we laugh at our own folly.

In time arose another class of diviners, who claimed the more direct mode of knowing the mind of God—communion with God himself. In proof of the truth of their assertion, "signs and wonders" were produced which only gods were supposed to be able to do. There were those who knew more of psychical mysteries than their fellows, or were greater experts in trickery, and by these means early gained credit for possessing divine powers, as having influence with God—his representatives, clothed with his authority.

There is probably in all religions a substratum of truth; and the founders of all faiths may have possessed peculiar powers which to their followers were sure proofs of the divinity of their mission. All religions relate in proof of their truth wonderful prodigies. Judaism lives in miracles, till miracle at last seems the rule instead of the exception. Christianity is ablaze with miracle in its inception as proof of its divine character, and those who, through faith in Jesus, received the divine afflatus or spirit, were promised, in proof of the divine change, the ability to perform greater wonders than those which Jesus exhibited. What is now called animal magnetism, clairvoyance, and the wonders of the ecstatic or trance state, was likely the basis of these "signs and wonders" given as evidences of divine power. It was exhibited in paganism as proof of the existence of the gods, and diviners possessed by this divine ardor sang

"In verses which the fanns of olden times
And white-haired prophets chanted."

This power was accredited to Apollonius, the heathen rival to Christ. It is said of him that "at the moment when the tyrant Domitian was cut off at Rome, he made a sudden pause in the midst of a public disputation at Ephesus, and changing his tone, to have exclaimed, 'Well done, Stephen! take heart; kill the tyrant, kill him;' and then, after a pause, to have added, 'The tyrant is dead, he is killed this very hour.'"

This power, of course, invested its possessor with a certain sacred authority. Schools were founded for the education of priests in the sacred mysteries, and which in the days of Cicero were buried in formality, the living spirit being lost in tradition; but priestcraft is too cunning or too human to permit a system of emolument to die easily. When the real could not be given, a semblance was substituted.

The priesthood of Paganism was more tolerant and less pretentious than the Mosaic and Christian. Moses tolerated none that did not indorse his teachings and claims. Signs, wonders and prophecy were tangible tokens of divinity for him; but the same signs and wonders given to establish other teachings were false, and rendered the operator liable to die the death of an impostor. Spiritual gifts were not permitted unless they indorsed Judaism. Dealers with familiar spirits who were not angels of God, were wizards and witches, worthy only of death. Thus the proofs of the divinity of the Mosaic priesthood were monopolized by a patent right from Jehovah, and any infringement was punished by death. When Jesus, in a later age, introduced a new system, sustained by the credentials of signs and wonders, he was, in accordance with the Mosaic law, put to death. But the new system was not more tolerant than the old. Once established on the basis of miracle, other systems were forbidden the use of miracle in proof of their divinity. Not even an angel from heaven could preach a different doctrine from Paul; no spirit that confessed not Christ could obtain a hearing, and he who brought any other doctrine was to be ostracised from every Christian community. And so it has continued.

Spiritualism will no doubt, by and by, follow in the wake of its predecessors, when it becomes respectable and powerful. There will be a doctrinal fence built around the mediumistic priests of Spiritualism. A cloud the size of a man's hand is seen now on the horizon which portends a storm not far off, and has already divided the Spiritualists in San Francisco. A monopoly of the toll-gates on the way to heaven is the danger and curse attending the little light which pierces the refts in the clouds which darken the spiritual sky.

I look not back after my childhood, but forward! I feel it as something to reach, not to leave. O young people, these hoary and wrinkled ones, your elders, smile at your esteeming them so old! Some very young folks I consider much older than I am. I see them practising old errors of which I fancy I am rid. Not the number of earth's revolutions, since you dropped on it, measures your age. There is, as the heathens fabled, an elixir of life, a fountain of immortal youth. Every prejudice you throw off renews your age, till you are more a child in "your Father's house" of "many mansions" than you were in your spring-time. Every conquest of passion is rejuvenation.—Bartol.

COMMON SENSE.

W. N. SLOOUM, EDITOR.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, MAY 23, 1874.

SUBSCRIBERS are requested to remit single subscriptions by postal order, in currency. Larger sums, in coin, may be sent by express, at the expense of the publisher.

A LETTER from Mrs. H. F. M. Brown, giving an account of Mrs. Woodhull's lecture in Virginia City, arrived too late for this issue. One of the forms had already gone to press.

CORRESPONDENTS will endeavor to be as concise as possible. The shorter an article is, as a general rule, the better. A half dozen brief paragraphs are worth columns of labored argument.

In accordance with the original design of those who projected this journal, editorials are omitted to give place to contributed articles and reports, some of which cannot well be deferred.

SEVERAL PAGES of the first number of this paper were, by accident, sent to the press without revision, the result being a number of glaring errors. We are now in working order; and take pleasure in calling attention to the general appearance of the paper.

A RELIGION is not worth much which does not enter into the lives of its adherents, making them better men and women. There are Spiritualists we know whom to hear talk one might think they live in hourly communion with the angel world; yet, so far as their acts show, they are made not one whit better by it; no more generous and forgiving, no more charitable, kind and considerate for others; no more spiritually minded. Their religion is a dead faith, as fruitless of good works as that of orthodox believers who hang helplessly to the skirts of Jesus, doing nothing to redeem themselves.

THE MATERIALISTS, among our subscribers, are doubtless disappointed to find so large a share of the paper devoted to Spiritualism. This happens to be the case, at present, because all the meetings of interest to report just now are those of the Spiritualists. Even the discussions at Dashaway Hall have been on subjects pertaining to Spiritualism. If there had been a Tom Paine convention in progress, or a series of meetings by Underwood, or any other materialistic speaker, they would have been just as faithfully reported. The columns of the paper are open to all opponents of Spiritualism, and communications are invited. It must be remembered also that at this time an unusual public interest is felt in what are called spiritual manifestations. To gratify this feeling a somewhat lengthy report of the Oakland affair is given, besides interesting letters concerning recent spiritualistic occurrences in London. The seances of this city are noticed for the same reason. These meetings are crowded to overflowing each week, thus indicating the drift of the public mind. All we care for in the conduct of this journal is to satisfy the majority of our readers, and be fair to all.

A NEW DEPARTURE.

The Spiritualists of Charter Oak Hall, in a constitution just adopted, set forth their objects, the first of which is declared to be "religious worship." Worship of what? That is a queer word for Spiritualists to use. After the organization of a society for "religious worship" will naturally follow a "house of worship" and a hired minister or priest as a go-between, a sort of connecting link between the church members and the "Almighty." Increase in numbers brings wealth, and with wealth always comes respectability; and when people get to be respectable they become conservative. After respectability and conservatism will follow rituals and the adoption of a creed. Indeed, some Spiritualists propose to make the last first, and are even now ready for a creed of limited proportions. It is to be hoped, however, that this last link in the chain will be deferred as long as possible. It is an evil day for free thought when leading ideas are crystalized into creeds, and undue limitations are placed on the expression of opinion. The Charter Oak Hall Society has not reached that stage yet; but some of the members are looking straight towards it. It might be well for them to pause long enough to take a look around. As we get wider views by looking on either side, so we may obtain broader and better ideas by a fearless examination of each field of thought that presents itself. There is nothing too sacred for investigation, and concerning subjects which affect the human race for good or evil there should be no forbidden ground; yet Article 8 of the constitution of this society declares:

Neither "Free Love," so-called, nor any question, subject or issue not strictly pertaining to Spiritualism, shall be discussed in any of the meetings of this Society, except by express authority of the Trustees, and with the permission of the President.

It is doubtless true that much of the talk heretofore indulged in Spiritual meetings on the social and other questions is unprofitable. The same might be said of much of the spiritualistic bosh that is often heard from people who imagine themselves inspired; yet when societies are organized it is presumed that there must be mutual concession. Society of any kind cannot exist without it. We must give up some of our own wishes in deference to the desires of others. People who do not do this are called barbarous; those who can do it are civilized. It is not well to attempt to engraft any of the off-shoots of barbarism on our flourishing tree of civilization. When we do, dry rot commences, and that is a worse evil than the one we would seek to avoid. With a good presiding officer, and a suitable discrimination on the part of the Trustees, unprofitable subjects can be kept in the background without materially infringing on free speech; but the adoption of an iron rule indicates an unhealthy fear of public opinion. It is a poor cause that will not bear argument, and a defective "virtue" that fears lest a breath from Mrs. Grundy will be sufficient to blast it. Let our lives be so pure that slander cannot harm us; then we shall care less what is said of us and more what we are.

BRITAIN'S JOURNAL OF SPIRITUAL SCIENCE—a record of art, literature and inspiration, published quarterly in New York—has won the first place in the list of publications on the philosophy of Spiritualism. Each number is illustrated with a steel plate engraving of some notable character. It has received very high commendations from the press. The tendency of the work is to counteract the tide that has of late set in towards materialism. It clearly shows that the idea of spiritual life is in full accord with the teachings of true science. The first volume has been completed, and may be obtained, bound, at the store of H. Snow, 319 Kearny street. No. 2 of Vol. II. has been received, and is for sale by Mr. Snow.

AN ADDRESS ON The True Mission of Spiritualism was given at Charter Oak Hall on Sunday evening last by Mrs. Wiggins, in which she took the ground that its principal work is to drive the idea of hell out of people's minds; to cheer up and encourage the weary pilgrims in their passage through this "vale of tears," which has only been made a vale of tears by the false teachings of religionists. Just as we make our lives here, she said, so will be our hereafter. It lies with us, in a great measure, to make our heaven or hell. The mission of Spiritualism, she said, is to teach that God is a God of Love. She illustrated her discourse by relating instances in which people have been restrained from evil and incited to good by communications received from spirits.

THE SOCIETY which holds its meetings in Charter Oak Hall has recently been incorporated under the name of the "San Francisco Spiritualist Society," with Mrs. Ada Foye as President; J. F. Miller, Vice-President; George W. Lewis, Secretary, and Harry Wiggins, Treasurer. The Trustees are: Mrs. Foye, J. F. Miller, Mrs. Wiggins, D. D. Cook, Mrs. Sleeper, Geo. W. Lewis, and J. H. Butler. By the constitution of this society the discussion of any subject except Spiritualism is prohibited at its meetings, unless by express authority of the Trustees and with the permission of the President; the object being to confine themselves strictly (as a society) to the investigation of Spiritualism, its philosophy, its laws, and its phenomena, excluding all other subjects and issues, however important, however worthy of praise or deserving of reprobation.

How to Love.—Among the good things written by Ella F. Mosby, is the following, taken from the March number of The Living Way: "In order to have true life and spiritual power in one's friendships or affections, one must love always the angel within the man or woman—must steadfastly believe in it, and must appeal to it above the lower nature. This only gives one the wholeness, fullness and symmetry of love. Without this looking toward the angelic nature of human life, the affection, especially of an enthusiastic and ideal temperament, is apt to be continually disappointed, vexed, chilled, and discouraged by the stripping away of illusions, which is the result of everyday contact and intercourse. But this is not an illusion; it is a possible reality; and when it is once attained, the daily and common experience becomes a heavenly life."

THE AIMEE TROUPE AT THE CALIFORNIA.—A season of French opera was inaugurated last Monday at the California, and proves a great success, both musically and financially. The house has been crowded every night, and is likely to remain so as long as the present company stays here. As to "The Daughter of Mme. Angot," the piece with which the Aimee Troupe opened, it aims at the corruption which existed in France at the time of the Directoire, the government that followed the Convention in the year IV. of the Republic (1795 to 1799). The whole piece is replete with fine political allusions and local humor: but the thing most worthy of notice, besides the general excellence of the troupe, is the great care and attention bestowed on the costumes, sceneries, and on the exaggerated manners of the time. There is nothing lacking to do the characters full justice, even to the smallest bit of ribbon, and to the French cocarde, people wore at that time as evidence of patriotism. Mlle. Aimee's voice is in splendid condition, and seems to have gained in volume and sweetness since her previous visit to this city. She is admirably supported by Mlle. Stani, as the favorite of Barras; by Mlle. Cantrelle, who is magnificent as a market woman, both in voice and in gesture; and by the two tenors, Messrs. Juteau and Deschamps, whose voices also are excellent and acting perfect. The music is of a light, easy, flowing style, and the three acts of the piece are played with the vivacite, entrain, and eclat which are characteristic of the nation, and not a single discordant element exists to mar the beauty of the tout ensemble.

I wish, Mr. Editor, our friends of the Spiritualist persuasion would develop a partiality for briefer appellations. I hate a name that is as long as Jack's bean-stalk; "Children's Progressive Lyceum," for instance. Isn't the time-hallowed Sunday-school good enough?

We suppose the Spiritualists want a name for their Sunday-school which will distinguish it from the schools established by the churches. The word "progressive" might, however, be omitted without detriment. Andrew Jackson Davis originated the idea, and he is proverbial for long words.

A subscriber, who is not satisfied with the first number of COMMON SENSE, writes, among other things, as follows:

"I do not care about people's religion—whether a man worships one god or fifty; in fact, I think there are too many religions in the world, and too little charity. What I care about is the religion of humanity, not the religion of sects. The idea of "serving God" in any other way than by assisting our fellow creatures, has always appeared to me to be an arrant humbug."

This is precisely the opinion held by the editor of COMMON SENSE, and there certainly has been nothing contrary to this in the paper. It is not expected that each reader will be pleased with all the articles in each number; but our friend should tolerate those which do not suit him, in consideration of others which do. If he reads the paper carefully he will probably find something to approve.

THE OAKLAND MANIFESTATIONS.

THE COMMITTEE OF INQUIRY—A FULL ACCOUNT TO BE PUBLISHED.

The gentlemen who undertook to make an inquiry into the circumstances attending the recent manifestations at the house of T. B. Clark, of Oakland, have not yet concluded their investigation, and probably will not for several weeks, as they all have other duties which occupy most of their time. The names of the committee are Prof. Joseph Le Conte, Rev. Mr. McLeon, and Hon. W. W. Crane, men of ability, and believed to be disposed to get at the facts. What opinion they may have as to the cause is unknown; but, whatever it may be, people will draw their own conclusions. All they want are the facts well authenticated. Up to this time the committee have taken the statements of about twenty-five persons, who were witnesses of the strange doings.

The facts elicited do not differ materially from those already published, and are in brief as follows: The manifestations commenced at 11½ o'clock on the night of April 23d. The inmates of the house at the time were T. B. Clark, a clerk in the office of the Assistant U. S. Treasurer, and his family, consisting of his wife, a daughter, who is a young woman, and a son of eight years; also three boarders—Mrs. F., a widow lady, who has for some months been confined to her bed by a local affection, although otherwise in good health; Charles Oxland, salesman with Dickson, De Wolf & Co.; and George B. Bayley, a bookkeeper in the Bank of California.

None of these persons were Spiritualists, nor did any of them have much knowledge of the philosophy of Spiritualism. Indeed, at first, the manifestations were not attributed to spirits by any person in the house. The family had all retired, Mr. Oxland going to his room last, when the tinkling of a bell was heard, which Mr. Clark thought was the door-bell. He went to the door, but there was no one there. After retiring the bell was heard again, but it did not sound like the door-bell, and soon after a noise was heard as of some one moving furniture in the parlor. Mr. Bayley and Mr. Clark went into the parlor, and found the furniture displaced, but could see no person. Mr. Bayley thought the intruder must have escaped by the window. They again retired, but the noises continued, and as the furniture in the parlor was nearly all of it upholstered, it was impossible for that alone to have made so loud a racket. A stuffed chair, tipped over on the carpet by any person, however violently, would not have made a great noise; but the sounds which came from the parlor were as if everything in it must be broken in splinters. Then noises commenced in the dining-room, and from that extended to every room in the house, excepting that occupied by Mrs. F. The inmates of the house were, of course, greatly alarmed and mystified; but being courageous and sensible, they determined that they would not be driven out of the house. Among other things that occurred during the night was the spinning of a heavy chair in a remarkable manner. Mr. and Mrs. Clark, their daughter, Mr. Bayley and Mr. Oxland were in the dining-room. Bayley made some remark about retiring, when a large upholstered easy chair, weighing about forty pounds, left its place in the corner and commenced a rapidly whirling motion like a top, then fell over on its side. On touching the floor it remained perfectly still, as if the power which held it had been suddenly withdrawn. This peculiarity attended the moving of all the articles. There was no rebound, as is the case when thrown by hand; but there was a sudden cessation of motion, without a perceptible tremble. This chair rotated very rapidly, while in motion, and ceased its motion instantly. The noises and moving of furniture continued until an early hour on Friday morning, when Miss Clark, being very tired, started to go up stairs to bed, but had only mounted two or three steps when a large basket of silverware, which must weigh at least twenty pounds, came flying down at her. The basket was always kept on a little bureau at the head of the stairs, and it had stood there for some weeks. There was no person up there who could throw it down, Mrs. F. being bed-ridden, yet it came whirling, and with great force. Nothing was injured in the basket but one little vase, which was slightly bent. About the same time a box of coal, which stood in the upper hall alongside the banister, leaped up over the rail and came tumbling down the steps. The family then gathered in Mr. Bayley's room, up-stairs, and while waiting for a recurrence of the phenomena, Miss Clark said, "Well, if they are coming again I wish they'd do it, for I'm getting sleepy." Instantly one of Oxland's chairs leaped from the floor and landed on his bed. Soon after that Oxland took his watch from his vest and put it on the bed, and it was taken up and carried to another part of the room and laid in a chair.

Mrs. F. did not leave her room; in fact, she could not, as she was physically unable; but all the other members of the family were up. The demonstrations were kept up almost incessantly nearly all night, closing with taking the front door off its hinges and depositing it with a tremendous racket against the banisters leading up stairs. The door was locked and bolted, and could not be lifted from the hinges without first opening the door; yet it was taken off with one sudden crash, and the bolt was found undisturbed. The hinges were not bent, nor in the slightest degree injured. None of the furniture was injured, although noise enough was made to demolish it. The door was replaced by Mr. Clark, and no further demonstrations occurred until the next morning, about 8 o'clock. Mr. Bayley and Mr. Oxland had both left the house. Miss Clark had gone to a neighbor's. The furniture in the parlor had been left in confusion, as evidence of what was done. At this time Mr. Clark heard noises in the parlor, and on going in, he found the sofa thrown over in front of the grate, and a heavy toy safe of iron, weighing about ten pounds, deposited carefully, as if by hands, on the back of a stuffed chair which was turned over. A pair of gloves, belonging to Miss Clark, were found on the floor, carefully pressed out, as if flattened and smoothed by human hands. They could not possibly have fallen into that position; they must have been deposited there with care. This occurred during broad daylight, and no person was in the room at the time. Nothing further occurred during the day; but in the evening when the family, excepting the sick lady, and Mr. Bayley, who was out, were all in the parlor talking over the matter, and wondering if they had seen the end of it, the daughter said, "If anything is coming to-night, I wish it would come now, for I am sleepy." Instantly a small French chair, near by, as if in answer to her request, moved towards her, and another chair came with a crash down the stairway. In order to get down it had to pass over the railing behind which it stood on the upper floor. Mr. Clark then called in some friends to witness the occurrences, including William Sherman, Assistant U. S. Treasurer, and Col. J. B. Howard, who saw the moving of furniture without visible contact of hands, but the movements soon ceased, and nothing further occurred during that night. On the following evening a much larger number were present, including Rev. Mr. Eells, H. W. Severance (Hawaiian Consul), Mr. Sherman, Col. J. B. Howard, Charles Kellogg, who lives across the way, Charles and Frank Palmer, George K. Vernon, partner of the gentleman who owns the house, and five or six others.

The demonstrations were commenced by three thumps under the dining-room floor. The party started for the dining-room, when they saw a chair at the head of the stairs moving without visible means towards them. A number of bells in the house rang, boxes and baskets were thrown down the stairs, and a large stuffed chair came down stairs with a great crash, with a force which shook the house; yet the chair was not injured. A heavy bureau at the head of the stairs fell forward against the banisters, the drawers slid partly out, and the marble on the top fell off; but nothing was broken. Some of the party left the scene, but Mr. Frank Palmer and Col. Vernon remained all night. They testify that at about 12 o'clock, while they were in the parlor, a heavy trunk belonging to Mr. Oxland came with a great crash down stairs to the hall floor. Mr. Oxland states that he had left the trunk in his room, with the door of the room closed. No person was up-stairs who could have thrown it down, as the other inmates of the house had retired. Besides, the trunk and contents weighed eighty pounds, and it contained a large number of delicate articles made of glass, which must have been broken had the trunk been thrown by any person. The trunk itself was slightly damaged, but not an article in it was broken. On going to Mr. Oxland's room, the door was found closed, just as it had been left.

Among many other singular things that were done in the presence of these witnesses and others was the following: A chair standing by itself, with a long shawl on the seat, was tipped over, face down, and the shawl, instead of falling on the floor, under the chair, was carefully drawn up and draped over the chair, and was arranged with as much precision as any person in the company could have done it. Various small articles were moved in a manner indicating an intelligent mover.

During the early part of this night a large crowd of people surrounded the house, but at midnight all had left. After this the house was comparatively quiet until 2 o'clock in the morning. The family, including Oxland and Bayley, had gone to bed; but Mr. Clark, with Col. Vernon, Mr. Howard and Mr. Palmer, were sitting in the parlor, smoking and talking, when, without any warning, there rang through the house a wild, shrill screech, in a female voice—a most appalling and terrible sound of concentrated agony and terror. It was heard by neighbors several squares distant. The sound emanated apparently from the hall, near the parlor door. It awakened every person in the house, and filled all with alarm. The gentlemen sprang into the hall, and Mr. Clark rushed up stairs to pacify his terrified family. His daughter, nearly in hysterics, kept repeating, "that horrible scream; that horrible face." She had seen the face of a woman—an agonized, fearful face. Her mouth, she said, was open, and her eyes had a staring, stony look. The screech was like the prolonged wail of a lost spirit; it was not human; it was apparently beyond the power of any human voice to utter such a sound. This was the last of the demonstrations.

The family at first determined to move; but after a few hours they sufficiently recovered their equanimity to decide upon a different course. The sick woman, Mrs. F., was taken from the house, and transferred to the care of friends in San Francisco. The demonstrations entirely ceased, and the old family life has been resumed as before, with the exception of the loss of one of the inmates, Mrs. F., and the added experience which each has had.

The report of the committee, or at least the facts elicited, will be published in pamphlet form. It will embrace all the material occurrences of the three days, including many not here given.

AMERICA'S FUTURE AND AMERICAN WOMEN.

Governor Gilpin, of Colorado, recently addressed the Lyceum for Self Culture in this city, on the subject of America's future, in which he showed the immense resources of this country, and its favorable situation for the support of a large, and homogeneous population. He illustrated his subject by means of maps, showing the mountain ranges, and by isothermal lines, as a guide to the climate. Whereas the countries of Europe are separated by natural divisions, causing diversity of interests, language, etc., America is substantially one country,—the natural home of one great people. At the close of his very able address, Mrs. Elizabeth Hughes made the following remarks:

In listening to the grand utterances, and reading the valuable book, of the distinguished gentleman who has addressed us, my soul felt sad for one omission. I felt that something was wanting to complete the glowing picture he has drawn; my mind was borne aloft with joy in contemplating the glorious heritage of our children, yet one central figure was absent. Man in his greatness, in his glory, in his strength, was there—the exultant founder of mighty empires—but the woman of the future did not appear at his side; there was instead only the pale shadow of what she might be—of what she will be. There is no man in all this land who more chivalrously recognizes woman than Col. Gilpin; no man who has a more prophetic appreciation of her possibilities than he has; but he, as yet, sees only her shadow, her possibility: woman hardly sees more than that herself. Like Alexander, the king, she has given almost everything away, because she has such a royal, loving nature; and for herself with regard to her financial, social, and political condition, she has hardly done more than to reserve Hope. But the signs of the times are becoming every day more propitious. The noblest of men are recognizing us, and we can afford to wait for the recognition of the rest. Here in this land, so wonderful in its resources, so agreeable in its climate, will the consummate flower of all the ages,—the woman of the future—bud, blossom and fill the world with its perfume. The times are ripe for such an advent. Here must woman take her place, socially and politically free to do, to be and to suffer, if necessary, for her most righteous birthright, and in the great mission of the American people, the emancipation of woman must take the foremost place. If long ages were required to ripen man to what he is, the consummate sovereign of the world, rejoicing and delighting in this his last and fairest heritage, longer ages still were destined to ripen woman, to prepare for her her own peculiar place, in circumstances of such freedom and dignity as best befit her finer and more spiritual nature—a place in regions fairer than poet ever sung; in climates the most perfect; in such a royal domain that is only awaiting its queen. Col. Gilpin says, "Here is a continent cut loose, and secured to a new society,—a new society erected on fresh ground," and then he says, "In the littleness of mortality we may yet recognize the divine miracle which closes the cycle of conquests and slaves in the world, that humanity may enter upon a new departure, illuminated by universal freedom." The distinction of sex now is the only badge of slavery. The new era—the divine mission of the North American people—calls on woman to come up higher, to take part in the grand movements that are to reform the world and elevate the human race. The Governor says "the 4th of July 1776 was a day of intense daring to the men of this nation." I say, let the 4th of July, 1876, be a day of intense daring to the women of this nation.

DENTON'S LECTURES.

At Mercantile Library Hall, Sunday, the 10th, the afternoon seance was preceded by a brief lecture on "Genesis and Geology," by Prof. Denton, in which he showed the gross absurdities of the Mosaic account of the creation—an account evidently written by very ignorant men in a benighted period of the world's history. Every step science has taken it has had to push this old Jewish story-book out of the way. The Bible keeps men in ignorance and superstition. When men become freed from their shackles, then they will become familiar with science and live according to its teachings. When the truth makes us free the question will be, "How can we so live as to be in harmony with everlasting law?" No Jesus can save us from the consequences of our misdeeds. If we wish to reap the reward of well-doing, we must do well.

In the evening the discourse was on Prayer, Mr. Denton taking the position that prayer to spirit friends is reasonable, natural, and productive of good results, while prayer to something we call God can have no effect whatever on the order of Nature, though it may on ourselves by the expression of good desires. The latter effect, however, is also produced by prayer to spirits, and in a much greater degree.

Last Sunday morning Mr. Denton resumed his comparison of the revelations of Genesis and Geology. He took up the bible account of the creation of man, showing it up in a ridiculous aspect; then he briefly reviewed the mode of man's advent as demonstrated by science. In the evening the lecture was on the origin of the bible. He showed how the various books came to be accepted as sacred, and that innumerable other writings not included in the bible had just as much claim to be called the word of God. He considered each of the books of the Old Testament separately, showing that some of them were not written by the men reputed to be the authors, and that all that is good in them was borrowed from the more ancient heathen nations. His conclusion was that the bible as a whole is not worthy to be called divine; yet it should not be totally rejected; it is interesting as an ancient record, and as an indication of what people have believed. It assists to show the progress mankind has made in knowledge and morals. It is only when the bible is accepted for more than it is that it becomes dangerous. If accepted as the word of God, it ceases to be a help, and becomes a tyrant to man. Take the good in it and use it with the good to be found in all other books, and you have a bible infinitely superior to this. God is not bound up in a book. He is the life of the universe. Your own nature is divine. In you God moves and has his being. Listen to the voice of God within you. It speaks to the soul of every human being who keeps himself in a condition to hear it. Mr. Denton added:

"The truths in the bible I am ready to receive, but when a man tells me to bow down and worship it, I cast it aside. Jesus I recognize as a good and noble example, but when told to accept him as 'master,' I say no. I am not the slave of any man, nor even of a God. I am a free man. We must be our own saviors—saving ourselves from sickness by obeying the laws of health; from ignorance by cultivating the understanding; from evil by living in all respects the best we know how."

PUBLIC SEANCES.

These meetings have become so popular that two large halls are now filled each Sunday afternoon by people interested in obtaining evidence of the life hereafter. At Mercantile Library Hall Mrs. McKinley, Mrs. Kerns and others appear. At Charter Oak Mrs. Foye continues to preside, the mediums being Mrs. Wiggins and others. At the former place, on the 10th, several good tests were given; among others, Mrs. Kerns said: "Coming back of me three or four times is a spirit who desires to be recognized. She is a middle-aged lady, and she gives a peculiar name. It is Louisa Lucinda Angeline. She says she has a brother in the audience." A man in the back part of the hall said: "She was my sister. She passed away twenty years ago." As Mrs. Kerns is a stranger in the city, and had never seen the gentleman, it was deemed a good test. John Bewster, a rough, uncultured man (a spirit), claimed that many in the house knew him. The description of him, given by Mrs. Kerns, was recognized by several. Another medium stated that while Mr. Denton was lecturing, prior to the seance, she saw the spirit of a Jewish Rabbi standing near and prompting him. Mrs. McKinley gave notice that an hour's seance would be held every Sunday afternoon, when there was a lecture. If no lecture was given, two hours would be spent in a seance and the answering of any questions upon the subject of spiritual phenomena and kindred themes which might be sent in by the audience.

The usual public seance was given on Sunday afternoon last at Charter Oak Hall, in which Mrs. Foye, Mrs. Staley and Mrs. Hubbard took the most active part. There was also a boy of about twelve years, who gives promise of becoming an excellent seer. A large number of spirits were said to be present—perhaps fifty—some of whom identified themselves to the satisfaction of their friends among the audience. Many messages of love and friendship were given, and some communications relating to business affairs. One person was advised to sign no papers; another was told that he had recently escaped a snare set for him, that his future was bright, and that for further particulars he must consult a certain lady then present; a third was directed by his dead brother not to sign certain papers, and was told by him that he did not hold on to money as his brother had done—this spirit swore so, that the mediums declined to give his exact language; and so on. The spirit of James Fisk, Jr., was seen in half a dozen places in the Hall, shaking his finger at some and apparently encouraging others. He (Fisk) wrote to one of the audience, through Mrs. Foye, that "it was all right." The inference is that Jimmy retains his interest in earthly stock speculations. One of the mediums saw a bloody hand with an ugly gash across the palm; this was supposed by another medium to refer to a patient of hers, whom she had recently treated for spasms, arising from a wound of that nature, but who, however, still lives. Mrs. Foye gave notice that, in accordance with a request of the spirits, she would devote ten or fifteen minutes next Sunday to what is known as the "ballot test," which announcement was received with applause. Those wishing to test the matter are requested to write the names before entering the Hall.

KILL YOUR OWN DEVIL.

The meeting of the Lyceum for Self-Culture, at Dash-away Hall, on Sunday last, was well attended. The subject for discussion was, "It is every man's duty to kill his own Devil." Mr. Healy said it was gratifying to see the interest that has lately been manifested about the Devil—the people seem to want more knowledge on the subject. Some of them, he said, need not worry on that account; they would know all about him soon enough, if he existed as a personal being, which he doubted. He quoted Muller, to show that to fully comprehend the Devil, we must examine the languages where the traditions of the various peoples are preserved. Our Aryan Devil has come to us from the Sanscrit Dyu, the Greek Zeus, the Latin Dius pater, corrupted into Jupiter, Father of Light. In Saxon it became Tiw, the god of war, hence Tuesday. There came also from the same primal root the German Teufel, the Irish Diabhal, and our Anglo-Saxon Devil. The Pagan devils in general were dethroned or superseded by gods. The new god and new religion taking precedence, the old ones, in course of time, were forgotten as gods, but existed as demons, and were generally of a harmless character. Their anger was never eternal. That characteristic was reserved for the Christian God. The church early monopolized all the Pagan devils, and concentrated them into one grand saurian reptile—the ironclad, copper-fastened monster that inspired Milton's "Paradise Lost." Before the era of Protestantism, the Catholic Church was gradually rounding off the corners of the "Prince of Darkness; her artists, from having depicted him in horrible hideousness, began to caricature him, just as we now do with our presidential candidates. Their saints actually made fun of him; Anthony laughed in his face; several of them pulled his nose, and he suffered many other indignities; so that, in fact, he was in some danger of becoming extinct as a monster, had it not been for Luther and Calvin. After they began their work the mother church, to hold her own, had to revive "Auld Cloutie" in all his horror. Mr. Healy quoted largely from the bible to show the character of the Devil. The various allusions to him are inconsistent. He finally said we ought to pay more attention to the devils that are in every one of us, and which we alone can cast out. He did not believe that knowledge of itself would "kill the Devil;" nearly all people know better than they do; what is most wanting is the moral courage to act out that which we already know. Self-denial and self-sacrifice are as necessary now as in the days of Jesus. He that cannot give his life for others, if necessary, is no reformer. If there is an eternal Devil, he is a necessity in the economy of the universe, and God alone can take care of him. It is each one's duty to kill the "little devil that is in his own nature."

Mr. Coey impeached the testimony of the preceding speaker in regard to the antiquity of the bible. He believed the bible the oldest book written, and that it gives a rational account of the Devil and the work that he has to perform in these latter days. It was prophesied in that grand old book that Satan would be instigating just such meetings as these; and he found as many bigots in these so-called "free thought" meetings as in the Christian Church. This gentleman closed his remarks by a pathetic appeal to the audience to prepare for the wrath to come.

Rev. Mr. Simonds admitted that Muller and others have thrown much light on the subject of the Devil's cognomen; but that did not prove the non-existence of a personal being. He disliked to hear people reason so loosely from scientific grounds. If we believe only that which we see and handle, how do we account for a mathematical line or point, for they only exist in the mind? Yet the science of mathematics—the foundation of the physics—is based upon these abstract and intangible lines and points. This gentleman clearly demonstrated the inutility of ignoring the existence of the imponderable substances, and proved the importance of their recognition in our every-day life.

Mr. Ryan, one of the "boys in blue," wished to know what Christianity had done for the world. What is it doing for us now? Was it the "gospel of peace" that they preached at the massacre of St. Bartholomew? Was it Christian charity that animated the pious Cromwell of glorious memory? Are the scenes that were enacted on the banks of the Rhine to be taken as specimen bricks of the Christian fabric? How much better would be the religion of Tom Paine—to recognize the world as your country, and to do good for good's sake. The speaker, although a "man of war," showed the necessity of universal peace, and believed that condition impossible under the rule of kings and priests; and as Christianity supports these parasites, it is responsible for the wars and disturbances under which humanity groans.

Dr. White was proud to give a reason for the hope that was in him. His pursuits in life compelled him to be acquainted with the conclusions of modern science, and he found nothing in science to conflict with his belief in the truth of the holy scriptures. In his youth he was not as religious as he might be, but he thanked the Lord that he had now seen the error of his ways. He had no cause for doubting the existence of a personal God and a personal Devil. He described their attributes in glowing language.

Dr. Merrick did not believe in Milton's Devil, but had seen one himself, and could describe him. The Devil he saw was a creature with broad shoulders, black skin, and thick lips. He saw him on Post street, taking a little boy's pocket handkerchief in exchange for ten cents, knowing that the dime was to be spent for rum. There is a personal devil for you that we can kill. After more temperance talk, the Doctor asked what had free thought done as an organization for the amelioration of the hoodlum and other waifs of humanity? (A voice—"Stephen Girard.") The speaker did not deny that an individual of that character could be found after much search, but we must not allow our institutions to be thrown down until we can see something better take their place. During the remarks of this gentleman the audience were much excited, applauding violently.

Mr. Ferral, Sr., now took the stand. He deplored the lack of respectful attention that some of the audience manifested. He said that in order to arrive at truth we must give all sides a patient hearing. Truth is many sided, and should be sought with ardor for its own sake. He indignantly repelled the charge of illiberality made by Dr. Merrick. It is not hospitals and almshouses we want, but that condition of society which will render such institutions unnecessary; and this state of society cannot exist until there is absolute freedom of inquiry, without fear of God or man. Ignorance is the only devil. Knowledge will kill him. Spread knowledge and evil decreases. After robbing us of our inheritance to the point of starvation, the thieves dole us out spoonfuls, in the shape of hospitals, in order that we may live to further swell their store. And you Christians call this charity. D—n such charity; give us justice.

Mr. Battersby was proud to sail in the same boat with Gibbon, Voltaire, Hume, Paine, and kindred spirits. He would rather go to hell with such company than to heaven with a lot of Christian sycophants. He announced that the subject would be continued next Sunday, when he hoped it would be probed to the bottom. "Fiat justitia, ruat coelum."

[ For Common Sense.]
MORNING DREAMS OF CLEAR LAKE.

BY AN EXILED FATHER IN FRISCO.

Of in watches of the morning,
When deep sleep hath left my brain,
And this weary body turning,
Fain would seek repose again;
Comes my home, 'fore eyes half dreaming,
Perched upon the calm lake's shore,
The unrisen sun just gleaming
Half awakened hilltops o'er.
Uncle Sam,* our Mountain Giant,
Sentinels that chosen spot,
Stretching brawny arms defiant
O'er the height that shades our grot.
Stretching rough right hand to heaven,
Grasping stately pines for spears,
Gashed brow bearing gold helm, riven
With the earthquake blows of years.
On his left his lava buckler,
Live oaks rampant for a crest;
Leaf and twig all mirrored, subtler
Than a painting had expressed;
Mirrored in the melting waters,
Limned with green inverted heads,
As though some old merman's daughters
Hung such tap'stries o'er their beds.
Like some stalwart life-guard royal,
Fierce of face, he shields the spot,
But we know his bosom loyal
Blossoms with Forget-me-not.
Now the sun so lights each feature,
Buddy once with brimstone showers,
One might deem a living crater
Still above the calm lake towers.
Shanty, bowered in buckeyes sleeping,
Cot, where all I love are lain—
Hold them safely in thy keeping
Till I clasp mine own again.
Oaks above the hut are towering,
Budding bright in tender green,
Flowering shrubs its gables bowing
Scatter scents from emerald sheen.
Lambkins on the hilltop leaping
Bleat with glee to hail the dawn, [ing,
Blue bells, vine shoots, bright dew weep—
Deck the dells of that fair lawn.
Soon I see the children saunter
From their bedroom, one by one;
First there comes a little daughter,
After her a tiny son.
Neenee, earliest riser, quickens
Steps that with the tortoise vied,
Anxious lest some tender chickens
In the frosty night have died.
On the shore she spurns the shingle
With her fairy flying feet;
Past the brake, where buckeyes mingle
With clematis, scents as sweet.
There, beside her coops low bending
O'er those fluffy, buffy things,
Scolds the hens for not defending
Chickens closer 'neath their wings.
Neenee, with brown eyes gazellish,
Tosses wild her yellow hair,
Fearing lest some polecat hellish
Should have slain the pets, her care.
Chides the rooster, if his clarion
Did not give the warning cry,
Crying, "Brigham, why d'you marry 'em
If you can't defend 'em? Fie!"

Buddha hastens up beside her,
Mattock quivering in his fist,
Fetches water, kills the spider
That her rosy cheek has kissed.
Gets the grain; then marches boldly
Up the hill 'gainst poison oak,
And—his fingers trembling coldly—
Grubs it up with manful stroke.
Zoe, grey eyed and majestic,
Now appears upon the scene,
Sent to rouse the late domestic
From the sheets he lurks between.
Weary wight, he hates to get up,
And pretends he does not hear;
Buddha brings a towel wet, up—
Holding it just o'er his ear.
Then right nimbly up he's getting,
Crying loudly, "Oh! Miss Zo,
Speck to Buddha, why d' you let him
Bully a poor fellow so?"
"Last eve I sat up till midnight
Reading Read's 'Too Late to Mend,'
Wasting tallow, spoiling eyesight—
When you call I can't attend:
"Mrs. B. may want her teacup,
Pusey howl for bread donied—
'Tis too late to mend for me; up
Early I can't get—I've tried.
"If Mamma insists upon me
Getting breakfast now by nine,
She must take my candles from me,
And no novels must be mine."
"Lauk-a-daisy, what's for breakfast?
Why, the perch have to be caught—
Launch the skiff, Miss, to her deck, fast
Tie the gear your father brought."
Naughty Nannie now comes running,
Curly locks, old fashioned face,
Tiny features, weird and cunning,
Eager to secure a place.
Pussy toddles tumbling after—
Buddy cheeks, grey eyes deep set—
Calling, half in tears, half laughter,
"Lalla darlin', Lalla pet,
"Let me tum, too, Lalla darlin', Lalla darlin', petty boy"—
Lalla takes a strand of marling,
Ties him in, and seals his joy.
Flash the wet sculls in the sunbeams,
Glides the skiff o'er laughing waves,
While from baby faces fun beams,
Outstretched palms pink water laves.
Silken strands on sudden tightening
Warm those little fishers soon,
Darting here and there like lightning
Trouty damns the treacherous spoon.
Zoe holds him gently, firmly,
Till his weakening struggle stops,
Half a yard of silver pearly
At her sister's feet she drops.
"Bravo, bravo!" shout the babies,
"Here's our breakfast come, do look;
Kill him, Lalla, ere they fade, his Beauties, kill, and clean, and cook."
Hid by curtains, Maud reposes
Softly on her mother's breast,
Blushing like a bunch of roses
Budding in their cosy nest.

* Uncle Sam is an extinct volcano four thousand feet high.

Phoebe sleeps a restless slumber
Very pitiful to see,
Wondering with a ceaseless wonder
Why they do not bring her tea.
Waking I in sleepy wonder,
Dreaming, doubting, seem to see,
Shout stentorian, "Why in thunder
Don't you take my wife her tea?"
Frisco, May 1st, 1874.

Then my landlady, arousing,
Gently knocks, "Did you, sir, call?"
Thinks I must have been carousing,
Till I stammer, feeling small,
"Pardon, madam, dreams," I liep, "for Faith I did not mean to shout."
"Would you dream, sir, in a whisper;
This loud dreaming is played out."
DON FULANO.

[ For Common Sense.]
THOMAS PAINE.

Ere the earth unto form had condensed from matter crude,
Ere the primates had united into forms both strange and rude,
In that vapor life was floating—germs of every herb and grain—
And the forms of living matter, by progression, gave us PAINE!
First upon the roll of honor, for the truth he dared to tell,
That the God the Christians worship was far worse than the fiends of hell;
In whose heart no love or pity ever throbbed; who on his throne
Swayed his bloody-dripping scepter, cursing children of his own.
View him on the plains of Egypt, bringing curses on the land;
Read the record of his doings, that his name might ever stand,
In the coming years and ages, as a God with passions strong,
Whose delight was blood and carnage, who delighted in the wrong.
'Tis the God the Christians worship, and to whom they bend the knee,
For they fear this bloody tyrant—though the truth would make them free;
Bow and worship at his footstool—cringing slaves, who dare not tell
How this God, in deeds of darkness, shames the very fims of hell.
Read his history in the pages of the book they call divine;
Search the record of past ages, in the land of Palestine—
How the prophets, kings, and princes, in obedience to this God,
How on human rights they trampled—on all human rights they trod,
Years on years, in darkness lying, slumbered Reason's light divine,
When the Truth, for ages buried, like a star began to shine.
PAINE absorbed that light eternal, while his voice rang loud and clear—
"Freedom is a right inherent, born to every mortal here."
God nor priests, or prophets holy, have a right to chain the mind;
All are free as air or water—free is every living kind
To pursue the course which Nature has established by her laws;
Men or atoms, beast or insect, act obedient to their cause.
Ask the priest, who fears and trembles when he bends the slavish knee,
Why he prays to such a tyrant, when the truth would make him free!
Ask him of his God imperial, in whose bosom passions dwell,
By what right he claims to judge us. Let the soulless demon tell.
But the light of truth now shining on the darkness of the past
Has awoke the dead to thinking—Reason's age has come at last,
To dispel the clouds of darkness, resting on the minds of all,
And the bigots' chains are broken—on their heads their temples fall.
But to Paine, earth's greatest hero, may the laurel crown of fame
Wreath his brow, and forever honor'd be his noble name;
He it was who struck the shackles from the lame, the halt and blind,
And proclaimed this truth eternal—mental freedom for mankind.
Lower Lake, California. H. WINCHESTER.

MY CREED.

The person has called on me lately with questions concerning my creed.
He fears I am somewhat unsettled. Let's see if I have one indeed.
I know I have faith in the Bible though not in the way it is preached.
The Bible is one and not many, and truth rather hard to be reached.
I'm not, in the matter of doctrine securely entrenched, I should say.
It seems to me more to the purpose to live than to preach and to pray.
I'm doubtful concerning salvation,—a very unorthodox elf:
I think I remarked to the person it came by one's saving himself.
I cannot believe in election; the fates do not govern us still.
We're made and unmade by surroundings, and flatter ourselves it's free will.
I sometimes have faith in professions—if only when backed by good deeds.
The worship that ends with the service is rather too short for my needs.
I know I believe in the goodness and justice of God through His laws.
With Him you can have no attorney;—a sinner must plead his own cause.
'Tis plain I'm in doubt about dogmas, and sceptical touching "the plan;"
But steadfast and sure in believing his works are the tests of a man.
So when the person inquires again if my creed be true,
I'll tell him to read it as written in what I have done or may do.

QUILL-PEN.

For the very best Photographs go to Bradley & Rulofson's Gallery, with an elevator, 429 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

A. Provo Kluit's new style of Photo-crayon Portraits is only made at the Florence Gallery, No. 28 Third Street, San Francisco. Price from $20 to $30. Beware of imitations.

Drs. Rutley & Streeter's "Prince of Blood Purifiers" eradicates all corrupt humors from the blood, however they may have been caused, rejuvenates the exhausted forces, and restores, unfailingly, the vigor of those debilitated by all excesses. Try it. Head office, 745 Mission Street, San Francisco.

COMMON SENSE.

A Journal of Live Ideas.

VOL. 1.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, MAY 30TH, 1874.

No. 3.

Signs of the Times.

Beecher says it has not been the church that has preserved religion; but religion that has preserved the church.

Four persons were recently burned in the town of Jacobo, Sinaloa, Mexico, by order of the Alcalde, at the request of the people, on charge of sorcery.

The Congregationalist accuses Rev. J. D. Fulton of down-right plagiarism in his sermons, and proves it; Margaret Fuller Ossoli being the party who furnished the Brooklyn divine with his eloquent utterances.

Henry Ward Beecher is in favor of prohibitory liquor laws, when sustained by public sentiment, but says that as yet the tone of popular feeling is so low that stringent legislation would be worse than useless.

The "Second Universal Freethinkers' Congress" is to be held in Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. Freethinkers are requested to correspond with the Secretary, David Hoyle, 75 West Fifty-fourth street, New York City.

Rev. Mr. Fitzgerald, President of the Pacific Methodist College in Santa Rosa, has become a convert to the co-education of the sexes. He says the plan has worked admirably in that institution. He went there prejudiced against the idea.

Mrs. Maggie Van Cott, the sensational revivalist, having found California a good field for golden harvests, has returned, and is now holding forth in Sacramento. When she was here a few months ago she pretended to have engagements for several years ahead.

The Massachusetts Seamen's Friend Society, during the past twelve years, has placed on board of every ship sailing from Boston on foreign voyages, select libraries containing forty volumes of moral and entertaining literature for the use of the sailors. Five hundred of these libraries are now afloat, comprising in the aggregate, 20,000 volumes.

In Davenport, Iowa, there resides a most interesting family. The father, Charles E. Putnam, is a prominent lawyer, and the mother is a daughter of the late Governor Duncan of Illinois. The family consists of ten boys and one girl, and is a little nation in itself. The boys are natural-born scientists, artists and mechanics. Besides cultivating a farm, they publish a magazine called the Star of Woodlawn, build boats, prepare specimens of entomology, manufacture toys, teach school, and conclude the catalogue of their industries by writing for the papers. The Star of Woodlawn is a handsomely printed magazine of forty-four pages, and contains many interesting original articles, most of them being from the pens of the Putnam family. In their last issue they gave notice that their sister, Bessie Putnam, is admitted to partnership, and that hereafter the firm name will be Putnam Brothers & Sister. The members of the firm are Joseph, aged 18 years; Charles, 17; John, 15; Henry, 12; William 11; George, 8, Bessie, 7.

The Christian Leader says the world has grown a thousand years older since the General Assembly of 1832, which pronounced against women teaching, exhorting or praying in public and promiscuous assemblies.

At Welfleet, Mass., April 22d, Howard Alcott Hanaford was ordained pastor of the Universalist Society in that place, and the ordaining prayer was offered by his mother, the Rev. Phoebe A. Hanaford, of Jersey City.

The women of Santa Cruz are entitled to the credit of the success of the temperance party in the recent election held there under the Local Option Law. The telegraph mentions particularly Mrs. Kirby and Mrs. McCann, as most earnest in their efforts for the temperance cause.

The seal of "silence in the churches" is lifted from woman's lips by the temperance crusade. A writer in the New York Sun says: "I never heard such touching exhortations, such tender and beautiful prayers from any pulpit as these consecrated women are daily uttering in all our land. The effect is irresistible."

Men begin to see the fearful havoc rum is making of our public morals, and are becoming willing to employ every available agency to check it. Admit women to vote, and they will vote it out of existence. Not only would they pass prohibitory laws, but so earnest and devoted are they that these laws would be promptly enforced.

In the British Museum is a pamphlet, written in 1652, entitled "The Husband's Authority Unveiled," wherein it is discussed whether it be fit or lawful for a good man to beat his bad wife. The argument extends through one hundred pages, liberally crammed with scripture citations, and in the end the writer comes to the conclusion that it is lawful for a good man to beat his bad wife if he does it "with the chastest love."

The Philosophical Journal gives an account of the development of a Mrs. Andrus, of Norwalk, Ohio, as a painter of portraits, during the trance state. She is entirely ignorant of painting in her normal condition, yet her work shows marks of high culture. The Journal says: This phase of spirit power sets at defiance all known laws of science and art. It performs what the world denominates miracles—an effect whose cause is not understood. Science demands light to distinguish colors and to compound them, and yet the most delicate colors are compounded by this woman in total darkness. Sceptics, without a knowledge of spirit power, and apparently without any desire to know the truth, deride and ridicule well demonstrated facts like this, and scientists stand aloof, and, with knowing looks, pronounce the phenomenon a fraud, and divines when assured that it is done as claimed, gravely assert that "it is the work of the Devil."

MATTER AND MIND.

REPLY TO PROF. FORSHEY'S PAMPHLET ENTITLED "THE ENTITIES."

The following interesting letter was written by Catherine F. Windle, of South Carolina, to a friend in this city. Our readers will find it to repay perusal, and the most thoughtful will obtain from it material for deep reflection:

Since you particularly request it, I will endeavor to give you my opinions respecting the hypothesis of Prof. F. with regard to Matter and Mind, and its dismissal of the current theory of a Creator, to which you so much object. But I come to the whole subject, in truth, from a point of outlook so very different from yours, that I almost despair, in advance, of your being able to form an idea what it is I do think about it when I shall have done. Who is it that has sung:

"Thought is deeper than all speech,
Feeling deeper than all thought;
Soul to soul can never teach
What unto itself was taught."

If I ever realized the saddening truth contained in these lines, it is in setting about, as now, to indicate to another mind those intellectual conclusions which are absolutely inseparable from various mental passages so exclusively my own, that I could as vainly hope perfectly to reproduce them for any one else in language, as I could expect to transfer my individuality to the organism of some other person. Indeed, these are problems which it is requisite for all individuals to think out for themselves from the depths of their own consciousness, assisted by the whole of the knowledge they may be able to bring to bear upon them. A theory or belief presented from without must be impossible of true appreciation, even if it can procure a formal assent.

You observe: "If, as Prof. Forshey says, there are two 'Entities,' I would ask, from whence did they originate? If they were never created, then there is no First Cause, no God, and the world is a thing of chance. Is this reason, philosophy, or common sense?"

I do not, like yourself, perceive in Prof. F.'s chapter on "The Entities" his virtual denial of a Cause. His propositions are these:

"There are two Entities, Matter and Mind."

"Matter includes all the subjects of the five senses. It is absolutely inert and dead."

"Mind embraces all Motion, all Design, all System. It is absolutely alive and voluntary."

"All Phenomena are the product of Mind acting upon Matter, moving, changing, controlling, guiding."

"Neither of the Entities has ever been created, neither can ever be destroyed. Their creation is absolutely unthinkable; their annihilation absolutely inconceivable."

"The Phenomena of the Material Universe exhibit system, order, place, design, skill immeasurable. All human minds recognize this truth."

"(Induction.) Effect demands Cause. Design indicates a Designer. The demand is imperative. In the English tongue, the All-Cause and Designer we denominate God."

Thus he distinctly identifies one of his "Entities" with those names which stand for our sense of a self-existent, eternal Power. He, however, in one of the foregoing statements denies the theory of a Creation; and elsewhere in his pamphlet insists that it is not, as is commonly claimed, necessary for the human mind; nay more, he asserts that "a primordial in the operations of nature is not probable, scarcely hypothecable."

I differ from Prof. Forshey, in not distinguishing Matter and Mind as two "Entities;" neither would I declare the former to be "inert or dead," nor ascribe to the latter in a human sense (if he does so) the attributes of will and design. But with him I follow the great thinkers of the day, in the belief that the phenomena of nature furnish "no testimony of a beginning, no symptoms of an end." I do not see any reason for supposing that the material universe was ever "created" by any power existing independently of itself. A child, when told that God made the world, naturally inquires next, "Who made God?" and the only answer that can be given is, that God has existed from eternity, since we would else fall back continually upon an endless retrogression of creative Causes, each of which must be referred to an antecedent one. In short, there is to us a necessity for this assumption as a standing-point. But it is just as plausible to my mind to make an inclusive assumption, and to say at once that the natural universe is coeval with the eternal Power which controls its evolutions and cycles.

Can you not, my dear friend, conceive of an inherent Essence, which must have existed eternally in nature as the Cause or acting Power in all its operations, and so dispense with the idea of a beginning? In the present light of science, the conception of an extra-mundane, supernatural Deity is no longer believed to be in the least degree tenable, by any who approach the subject in a spirit of real inquiry, and divested of the prejudices of the theology. It has been found that the sum of Matter composing the Cosmos is incapable of increase or diminution by so much as a single infinitesimal atom. A particle of Matter can never be created, nor can an old one be annihilated. This is regarded as a fair indication of its eternal character. Thus, for example, if a piece of wood is burned, it is not destroyed, but it is converted into smoke and ashes; the former ascending in vapor and coming down in rain, watering the dust with which the latter assimilated, to grow up into a tree, and to be cut down again for fuel. We see in this, and multiform kindred processes, a continual succession of cycles, but no intimation of a beginning. We moreover discern in all the changes of Matter an everywhere present Motor, which is in its sum, actual and potential, ever the same, being like Matter itself, subject neither to increase nor diminution. This discovery of the conservation of Force, and of its identity in all the various modes of its manifestation—of its being virtually the same in the heat which stimulates the pulses of our bodies as in the fire which cooks their nutriment and the steam that impels the car by which they are conveyed from place to place; in the effort with which we lift a weight and the resistance which it opposes to us; the same in electricity and magnetic currents as in the nervous shocks of our frame which produce thought and emotion—is justly regarded as the grandest scientific result of our remarkable era. It appears, besides, that each individual particle of Matter is possessed by this force, in some one or other of its various forms. There is not an atom that exists that is not impelled by some power or powers of its own; and this neither indifferently nor passively, but according to certain specific properties and aptitudes making it effective in its own sphere of relationships; for all the atoms of every elementary body (of which there are now many recognized) have been discovered to possess their affinities and disaffinities; their attractions in the ratio of their masses, and in the inverse ratio of the squares of their distances; their tendencies to combine in certain definite proportions, and thus form particular compounds, and take on especial forms, etc.

[Here follows a quotation from Herbert Spencer to show the mysterious properties of matter. See article headed "Properties of Matter" on page 37. The writer then proceeds as follows:]

Matter is not revealed to science as "inert or dead;" but we find it in ceaseless activity, inseparably possessed with an all-pervading Motor, competent, under various correlative forms, of accomplishing all the operations of nature; and these affording a continuous series of results, but no suggestions of a beginning. In other words, within the elements themselves of the natural universe are comprised conditions all-sufficient to account for everything that exists or that can exist. Wherever the suitable conditions appear—admitting of the affinities or other properties of Matter coming into effect—particular phenomena are induced. And it is in virtue of this law of Matter, doubtless, that the phenomena of life and organization have been evolved, along with the rest. Whatever is, implies the power of becoming; and since we have learned to recognize in the atoms of organic matter the forces by which they attract or repel—combining or separating, crystalizing into particular forms, etc., we cannot philosophically deny to nature the possession of germs susceptible of ultimately developing into living and thinking organisms.

This omnipresent Force, expressed in perpetual Motion—whether as seen in gravitation, electricity, magnetism, life, light, heat or thought—being recognized as the Cause or operative Power in the universe, the anthropomorphic idea of Deity is no longer requisite; nay, it becomes puerile, and seems incommensurable with the magnitude and mystery in which Matter and Mind are perceived to be involved.

Prof. Forshey designates these as two "Entities," but it would appear that they might rather be called two faces of one and the same insoluble Problem. This is sufficiently proved by the fact that it is possible to refine away either phase, leaving only the other—which has been done in the respective philosophies of Idealism and Realism; the former by resolving Matter into resistance without extension, or, in other words, by regarding it as a mere mode of Mind or Force; and the latter by referring Mind to Matter, or Force to external nature for its origin. But the absolute identity of Mind and Matter is yet more clearly manifest when we realize that it is impossible to speak of either of them, respectively, save in terms of each other. And after all, the Janus-face they present to us is but purely relative, and fully conceived, is evidently merely our finite apprehension of some wholly inappreciable and infinite Reality. If we examine the two faces closely, we perceive that Mind is only known to us as the subject of our consciousness, and Matter as the object of our consciousness; while, in analyzing consciousness, it is resolved, in both instances, into something which persists, or is permanent—in the one case, as a link in the face of changing states of consciousness, and in the other, as a sensuous renewal of fading or dissipated impressions.

It is from the impossibility of our knowing anything of the nature of Mind, save as it is presented to us in human consciousness, that man has been led to anthropomorphize the incomprehensible Dynamis, ascribing to it, among other human attributes, design, adaptation of means to ends, and a definite creation of the world. Yet the fact is, we can never know anything of the nature of Matter or Mind as they really are outside of our own consciousness, while consciousness lasts. We know Mind is thought and emotion evolved from the organism of our bodies; and since few, even in anthropomorphizing God, ever attribute to Him body and brain, it is utterly incongruous to conceive of Mind in Him—although it and all else that is, or is possible, be contained in Him—as corresponding with Mind in us. Shelley's line, is directed against this error. Our knowledge of Matter, too, is purely relative to ourselves. We know the phenomenal universe only as it is presented to our consciousness. Color is not in the leaf; it is the consciousness which bestows on it its hue, and apart from our organized perception it cannot be given. The beauty of a landscape consists in man's appreciation of it; if he were not, beauty would not be a sentiment. Everything to us exists in relation to our consciousness. But, nevertheless, it is a necessary inference that there must be something absolute and non-relative, which is thus transfigured to our conceptions—something, which, while it is both Matter and Mind, far transcends either of them as they are known to us.

"As if the Cause of thought could think and live!"

It follows, that, in this view, although the words God and Cause may still be retained in designating the ubiquitous Power with whose operations Matter is co-existent and co-eternal, they are not any longer used in the anthropomorphic sense. All the attributes usually ascribed to Deity—as wisdom, holiness, justice, goodness and truth—are qualities relating to man, and apprehended by his consciousness; so much so, that if humanity did not exist, the idea attaching to these words could have no application. They cannot apply to the Non-Relative. Moreover, to conceive of God as a person is plainly an absurdity when we consider that personality and individuality imply limitation and distinction. The Non-Relative must be inclusive of everything except the exclusiveness pertaining to personality. It is consciousness only, or the ego, which excludes each one of us from being at one with the Impersonal; or, in the language of Tennyson,

"Dark is the world to thee; thyself art the reason why;
For is He not all but thou, that hast power to say, 'I am I.'"

It is true, of course, that it is next to impossible for us to form any conception of Mind save in such wise as it is exhibited in ourselves—in volition, intelligence, emotion, etc. But we must rise to the recognition of the truth that Mind as applied to God—absolute and non-relative Mind—can have nothing in common with these affections of our consciousness. They, with the objective phenomena we perceive, are to be regarded merely as vague transfigurations of a perpetual Mystery. In this way, we come to reject the anthropomorphic Deity as but a projection of Man himself, and to accept the cosmical forces in the form of Law as synonymous with what have been apprehended hitherto as the Power, Wisdom and Goodness of God. God is, we say, universal Being, universal Order, universal Law, immanent in the far distant orb, whose ray, speeding from eternity, will never reach our earth; in the infinity of other celestial bodies preserving their measureless but definite paths in space; in the insignificant planet—a mere speck hovering in the sunlight—in which we dwell, and in the pulsation of the brain by which we aspire from the seen to the Unseen, from the known to the Unknown; and so realize that He must be, and is.

But humanly we think Of the eternal laws, If to design we link— Bedimmed with finite flaws, And swathed in mental swaddling-clothes—the omnipresent Cause.	We seek for a proof, Adapted for thought, Yet a part of the woof Are secker and sought; While both problem and proof save in human conceptions are nought.
Though purposed, to man Look the tracks of the spheres, And, everywhere, plan Throughout nature appears; Still purpose and plan are of us and the temporal years.	Not projected, are done, Was the world by its Cause; But eternally one His results with His laws:— Forthought and fulfillment at best are but merely mechanical straws.

I have to add, in concluding, that this is a view only to be obtained by the fullest freedom of thought and investigation; nor can it even be properly apprehended without a careful study and analysis of the nature of consciousness. It cannot even be realized in its natural import, where the preliminary steps leading to it have not been first carefully traversed. But to one who grasps it, it has all the force and assurance of demonstration. Its outcome is the relief of a final emancipation from superstition on the one hand, by showing that all the supernatural conceptions of Deity, and the "revelations" which have been referred to Him, have been merely wraiths of the human subject; and on the other, it terminates vain speculations, by clearly defining within the domain of the relative the limits of human knowledge. For myself it now wears the shape of the sublimest faith, in which religion is not the craven worship of a quasi-human Deity, but in which it is regarded as conformity with natural law; a faith which recognizes all pain, physical and mental, as the consequence of want of harmony with eternal order; and which, so far from expecting to carry consciousness, with its exclusive limits and distinguishing relationships, beyond the grave, awaits in calm assurance some inconceivable translation, surpassing all we can know, or think, on the parting of the veil, and the resolving of the finite into the Infinite. Neither can this be virtual annihilation, paradoxical as it may appear, but I fully accept on this point the declaration of one to whom even the most theologically inclined will be disposed to defer: "Behold, I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed."

A BRIEF COMMENT.

EDITOR COMMON SENSE: You say, Jenny Bonnet was arrested last week in San Francisco for wearing male attire. Did she do this for pleasure, or fun, or frolic? Not at all; it was a serious business with Jenny. It was done to enable her to get her own living in the way she elected to live—to follow out her ideas of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness in her own way. Better freedom on the hills, thought Jenny, than to sew ten or twelve hours a day in a store, or go through the mill-horse drudgery of housework. They manage these things better in France. A woman there can pay 300 francs a year to the authorities for the permission to wear male attire. Several of my women artist friends did. Rosa Bonheur does, and has done so for years. She could not go into cattle markets and horse markets and all over the hills to make her glorious sketches if she did not. It is too bad that the picturesque occupation of a shepherdess—the theme of so much song and poetry—cannot be as well represented here as in the Scottish Highlands, where the climate is so much more unfavorable. Is life to sink to one dull, dead level, ruled over by the august respectabilities of our metropolitan police? If women want to herd sheep, why should not they do so? Are they not as safe on the hills of California as on the Scottish heather? And if they are not, it becomes us and it becomes themselves to see that they are so. There are in this State many influential men holding large tracts of land, who are natives of the land of Burns; will they not, for the poet's sake and for Scotia's sake, inaugurate a new opening in this direction, and revive the shepherdess in California? E. HUGHES.

It is natural and beautiful that childhood should inquire, and nature should teach. Do not shut up young people against their will in a pew, and force the children to ask them questions for an hour against their will. Let us always draw a lesson from nature, which works short ways. —Emerson..

Mrs. Victoria C. Woodhull, it is announced, will lecture in Platt's Hall, Monday evening, June 1st, at 8 o'clock.

MRS. WOODHULL IN VIRGINIA CITY. •

BY MRS. H. F. M. BROWN.

The announcement was made, "Mrs. Woodhull is coming west, and may call in Virginia City." The wise ones replied, "She can't get a house in which to speak." Then Miss Tennie C. came (Mrs. Woodhull's advance agent), and, without saying "with your permission, good Virginia Cityites," she advertised a lecture to be given in the Opera House. "Well, yes," said the faithless and fearful, "Mr. Piper is glad to rent his house, but then it is of no earthly use; Mrs. Woodhull will have no audience." A few frightened "liberals" concluded that the coming of Mrs. Woodhull would "injure our cause." Just as if one woman could overturn any righteous cause. But the announcement was made, "I am not in sympathy with the free-love wing of Spiritualists." To which the ignored wing responded, "Amen and amen." Our three daily papers had no word of warning for the people. They simply said, "Let us listen and then judge." The result was, last night the Opera House was packed with as good souls as the place can produce. True, some men came to accompany their wives, and some wives to please their husbands. Such self-abnegation is not common, but commendable. Business men went in and paid a dollar for standing room; they only wished to get a glimpse of the notable woman. Having seen her they remained to hear what she had to say on the "Naked Truth." Standstillism is not in accordance with the world's creed. So these men, who stood still till the last word was spoken, rushed to the office to secure seats for themselves and friends for to-night. And those who were so shocked because Mrs. Woodhull, Good Samaritan like, decided not to pass us by on the other side, turned with the tide to hear the brave woman expound the new scriptures. Mrs. Woodhull, true to her promise, presented the naked truth, without even the adornment of fig-leaves. She unmasked hypocrisy; she called political thieves, land swindlers and corrupt Christians by their right names. She insisted upon civil service reform; she demanded the purification of our legislation; but she would begin these reforms in our homes—in the mother heart. She is right; so the thinkers in her audience said. One gray-haired man remarked, in leaving the house, "The woman has told us God's eternal truth." Another said, "We all know the world is over full of private as well as public corruption; but who expected to hear the facts from a woman?" A certain class will honestly curse Mrs. Woodhull, because they do not recognize the truths she tells, nor comprehend the woman; another class hate her for letting the light into the dens where they hide themselves; still another class sing hosanna and hail her as the sent of heaven.

The brains of people advanced in years would be greatly strengthened by habits of study. Old people should have their lessons, their mental culture, like children. It would be almost a cure for the decay of the mind as age advances.—Martin Luther.

SPIRITUAL PHENOMENA.

NUMBER THREE.

MR. EDITOR: Before proceeding to give further facts, which have come under my observation, I wish to make a few remarks upon those already given. I am no special pleader. I don't want to prove anything in particular. I am simply an inductive philosopher, seeking to arrive at the Truth. I don't care what the truth of things may turn out to be, I mean to get to it if I can, before I quit seeking it. I shall make it my business, throughout this correspondence, to relate to you and your readers simply and exactly the facts that have fallen under my own immediate notice, bearing upon the subject of spirit communications with us. Unless my memory is treacherous I pledge myself not to exaggerate one iota. Neither shall I withhold from you any counter facts which may seem to militate against the truth of those I bring forward; or any suggestions of my own mind which may seem to explain them sufficiently, without having recourse to the theory of spirit action. In fact, I wish you to see the matter just in the light in which I, looking sceptically at all things, have seen it myself.

With regard, then, to Florry Cook's mediumship, it is hardly, I think, credible that the very respectable persons who have had the management of her seances have been all the time parties to a stupid and senseless fraud, worthy only of children—that they have been duping the whole spiritualistic world knowingly. Neither is it conceivable that they should be themselves deceived by this child. There are only two ways in which deception is possible; either Miss Cook must introduce some other person into the room from behind a curtain, or through a secret door, to personate her double; or she must herself get free from the cords and come out of the cabinet to do so herself. The phenomenon takes place in a dimly lighted room; this favors deception, of course. We know that these phenomena “love not the light, and come not to the light,” but whether that is “lest they should be made manifest” is more than I can say. It is quite possible that they are brought about by some agency, whether magnetic, electric or odylie, of which we do not know the laws, and to the operation of which the actinic rays may be adverse. I think myself that after the extended observations of so many good witnesses we must give up the first hypothesis. But we know that—whether by the aid of spirits or otherwise—Miss Cook might be released from her bonds for a while, and yet be found ultimately secured and sealed just as before. Is this the secret of the double? I think not, because competent witnesses have repeatedly seen both figures at the same moment. The editor of the Medium, who at first managed her seances, told me that undoubtedly the figure that he had repeatedly seen and felt, was an exact reproduction of the physical appearance of Miss Cook herself. Others state that it is much taller. The gentleman who last had charge of the medium, said to me himself, that the thing was “too astounding for any one to take in at once; that it was necessary to see it repeatedly to be able even to believe in it;” to grasp it, as it were.

If a spirit can write on a slate, can undo knots in ropes, can lift a man with one hand off the floor—all which things we know these spirits seem to our senses to be able to do—there is no reason why it should not scratch a man's face and pull out half his beard. If we can grasp an apparently solid spirit hand—as we know we can—there is no reason why we should not be able to take a spirit round the waist and waltz with it.

With reference to the alleged transference of Mr. Henderson from out of a closed room, I would remark that this, it be a fact, is quite as astounding a fact as that of the materialization of Miss Cook's double, because it seems to involve the dematerialization of a very substantial body. It does not stand alone. Mrs. Guppy claims that she was once transferred suddenly from her own house to that of a friend at some distance, in a moment of time, and almost unconsciously to herself. This took place in the daytime when Mrs. Guppy was making up her accounts, and her friend found her in her room, in a half dazed condition, account book and pencil in hand. Mrs. De Morgan told me of a case, which she declared to be authentic, in which a gentleman was taken half dressed from his room at night, and deposited in a garden fifty miles off, in spite of his strenuous resistance, and to his very great disgust and subsequent injury. Readers of the New Testament will remember that several instances precisely parallel to some of the above, are related to have occurred in the lives of Christ, and Peter the apostle. The same thing has been told of Buddha, of Mahomet (I think), and of many Brahminical and Buddhistic saints; and if Spiritualism be, what its votaries assert, an established fact, there is little doubt that all great religious teachers have been great mediums. Perhaps there has been no better authenticated instance of the kind—although this one does not involve the dissolution of the material body—than when Lord Adare and a number of other gentlemen of undoubted veracity testified to having seen Mr. Home carried out of one of his own drawing-room windows, along the front of the house, and in again at another.

We cannot now be long left in any doubt about the truth or falsehood of these alleged occurrences. The decided but ingenuous action taken by the London Dialectical Society in the matter, and the unwavering and consistent testimony of such men as Mr. Crooks, F.R.S., and Mr. Varley, one of the first electricians of the age—who, years ago, at Mr. Home's trial, testified on oath to the fact of the occurrence of these phenomena in his own house, repeatedly, under the strictest test conditions—must of necessity force the most recalcitrant of the London scientists out of their lethargy, and oblige them to examine for themselves, in very shame, whether these things be so or no; to see whether they have yet touched with their philosophy even the hem of Nature's robe, or attained to a real and full knowledge of even the simplest of her laws.

With the crowd of excellent mediums for every kind of manifestation now to be found in the metropolis, who readily offer to scientific men their services gratis, willing to submit to the most crucial tests, it is impossible that a fair examination can leave them long in any doubt. The thing has got to be now decided by them very shortly whether they will or no; and however bitter a pill it may be for the Huxleys and the Tyndalls of the world to swallow, I fear they will find—as Sir David Brewster once said, on witnessing the levitation of D. D. Home—that “these things will upset the philosophy of a lifetime.”

San Francisco, May 17 1874.

MEDICUS.

COMMON SENSE.

W. N. SLOCUM, EDITOR.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, MAY 23, 1874.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—A very interesting letter from Santa Cruz, on the Local Option election, and one from Sacramento, arrived after our forms had been made up. They will be used next week. Several other interesting communications are also necessarily deferred. The long criticism on Forshey's book could not well be divided, and it made necessary also the publication of an extract from Herbert Spencer on the Properties of Matter. There is more food for thought in these articles than can be found in many pages of ordinary matter.

WE ARE NOT SURPRISED at the temperance news from Santa Cruz, which has been long known as a stronghold of earnest radicalism. Mrs. E. W. Farnham, years ago, sowed the seeds of spiritual truths which were afterwards kept alive by a free circulation of spiritualistic and reform literature. Charles G. Ames preached there for some years, and succeeded in uniting into a free religious society the various heterodox elements already existing, and by his simple, genial character and teaching was greatly instrumental in liberalizing the spirit of orthodoxy in that little seaport.

The papers of city subscribers to COMMON SENSE are now delivered through the carriers of the Postoffice Department, at the expense of this office. A few subscribers paid postage, when the first number was delivered, before the arrangement for pre-payment was found to be necessary. To save such annoyance to subscribers payment is now made in advance by the publisher. The paper should be delivered promptly on Saturday morning. In case of failure, subscribers will please notify us, or inquire of the P. O. carriers.

CITY SUBSCRIBERS will please call at our office with the amount of their subscriptions. By so doing they will save much useless running after small bills, widely scattered. A collector might call a half dozen times without finding some men in, business calling them elsewhere. This class of subscribers are particularly requested to call at our office, 236 Montgomery.

ADDIE BALLOU.—In a letter from Mrs. Ballou, which will be given next week, she says: "Notwithstanding you set me down at Stockton for the present month, I find myself instead cosily located in this capital city, where excellent audiences greet me and the utmost harmony prevails among the Liberal Thinkers."

THE SAN FRANCISCO SPIRITUALISTS UNION, on Sunday last, elected new officers, as follows: President, Mrs. E. H. F. McKinley; Vice President, L. W. Ransom; Secretary, J. M. Mathews; Treasurer, Wm. M. Rider. Trustees, A. M. Crane, Col. L. B. Hopkins, and Mrs. Lena Clarke.

MRS. DR. V. STALEY, a medium of San Francisco, has been giving seances recently in Oakland at the private residence of Mr. Mayberry.

MR. DUNN'S SERMON.

Among the articles prepared for last week's paper was one in reply to Mr. Dunn's sermon on Modern Spiritualism. It was crowded out; and now the able lecture of M. Lewis, the main points of which are given on page 35, renders it unnecessary. This much, however, may be said in addition to the arguments of Mr. Lewis:

Brother Dunn said he was willing to admit that evil spirits make the manifestations. If evil spirits can communicate, why not good ones? Does this "just" and "loving God" the priests talk about permit his creatures to be led astray in order that he may have an excuse for their eternal damnation? Such a conception of God is too horrible for any man in his senses to entertain. It is in direct contradiction with all the holy qualities they attribute to him. It is simply unworthy of belief. Mr. Dunn says, "the bible taught such things, and there is nothing in it that militates against Christianity." This is a confession that Christianity is worse than heathenism; it is, in fact, rank diabolism. Mr. Dunn goes on to say: "How people can consistently believe in the supernatural of the present day, and at the same time deny the supernatural of the bible, I cannot understand." No more can any man; for the simple reason that it is not true. Spiritualists do not deny that the manifestations mentioned in the bible were spiritual. They merely deny that we are bound to accept all as true, and just as interpreted by the Christian church. Strictly speaking, there is nothing and can be nothing super-natural Nature has no superior. Nothing is higher than it. The word, perhaps, may not improperly be used as equivalent to super-mundane. Custom has sanctioned this use of the word, and it would be over critical to find fault with it. We do not care to cavil about terms; but we think it unfair in the reverend gentleman to intimate that Spiritualists place reliance on modern and deny ancient Spiritualism. He knows better, as the very next sentence uttered by him proves; namely: that Spiritualists themselves admit that much that is given as spiritual is utterly unreliable. This is true. We know of no sensible Spiritualist who accepts without question the communications purporting to come from spirit friends. The first rule of all true Spiritualists is: Try the spirits; test them, and trust not, unless that which is received is sanctioned by the judgment. Mr. Dunn shows that this is so, by numerous quotations; then he argues (contrary to his former position,) that Spiritualists do not believe what they get themselves, and asks if it is best to give up the "Word of God," to set sail on a sea of uncertainty, without rudder or compass. It is best always to use our own judgment, and not accept as truth that which some one else foists upon us as such. The uncertainty that now surrounds Spiritualism is nothing in comparison with the confusion and doubt that attended the formation of the Christian bible and Nicene creed. Those who compiled the scriptures had the same task to perform that we now, with much better material, have to do for ourselves. The scripture of our day, is that which is written in the great book of nature, and the most intelligent men and women of our time can handle this material in the light of modern science a great deal better than it ever could have been handled in any former age.

[For Common Sense.]
THE NEW PLATFORM.

BY MRS. H. F. M. BROWN.

The "Independent Spiritualists," who worship in Charter Oak Hall, San Francisco, have a new platform with an odd plank. The old order of Spiritualists hold, with Martin Luther, to the right of self judging, and some of us have, like Thomas Jefferson, "sworn upon the altar of God eternal hostility to every form of tyranny over the mind of man." The Hindoo, the Hebrew, the Catholic and Protestant have come to our altars without let or hindrance. But the new order of believers has come with gags and gaggers. The corner-stone of their new temple is this: "Any question, subject or issue not strictly pertaining to Spiritualism shall not be discussed in the meetings of this society, except by authority of the Trustees and with permission of the President." Now, we have no right to censure the Independent Society for this new law. Any number of souls have a right to cherish what to them is truth, even if it be a lie. A good woman refused the dictionary a place on her parlor table because Mr. Webster insisted upon allowing some objectionable words place in his book. She was right; so was Webster. The new society is right, and I may be correct in asking a few questions. They are these: What is to be done in Charter Oak Hall? How? And who is to decide what is Spiritualism? Heresy to-day may be sound doctrine to-morrow. Supposing Mr. — should be moved to rise up, and, in righteous wrath, condemn political swindlers and Credit Mobilier frauds, would he be silenced on the ground of violating the eighth article of the constitution? Mr. — is a staunch apostle of temperance. Will he dare express his deep convictions upon this question so near his heart? Some risen or redeemed Magdalene may desire, through the anointed lips of Mrs. —, to unmask sin; to speak to souls who are still suffering in Gethsemane. What will the woman do? Will she say to the angel, "This matter must go before the Trustees and President, to be decided if it pertain to Spiritualism"? And then how will the President and Trustees decide what is of the heavens—what pertains to Spiritualism? Any guide in creed?

To some of us the old prophets, and risen image breakers have given hard and unwelcome tasks. In doing the work put into our hands, we have incurred and accepted the scorn and hate of fools and pharisees, knowing well enough that all the gods bid us deal with life's grand truths and solve its moral problems and teach divine and eternal justice. But who among the burden bearers have ever dreamed of iron bedsteads in our camp? Who is ready to outreach his free hands, and say "put on the thumb-screws"? Who is ready to say to his soul, "thus far and no farther"? I mistake, if the willing slave is found, even among the framers of the new creed. They who have turned their backs upon old dogmas, and inch by inch fought their way into the land of true thought, will never consent to be themselves bound or choked. Let us, of the Broad Church, throw down our battle axes, and cry out with Tiny Tim, "God help us, every one."

LECTURE AND SEANCE.

Mr. Denton's lecture last Sunday afternoon, was on the Philosophy of Death, in which he said, that to the true Spiritualist, the great change is no more to be dreaded than the sleep that comes to us every night. He described the process of death, as viewed by a clairvoyant, who is able to perceive it as the birth of a spirit into a higher state of existence. The reason why death is generally looked upon with dread is, that we see only the inanimate body. We do not see the new life. Following the lecture, was the regular medium's seance, during which, several manifestations of a remarkable character were given, but we have no space for a full report. The mediums were Mrs. McKinley, Mrs. Kerns and Mrs. Cummings. The following was the most remarkable manifestation: Just prior to the seance, a young man named Wilson, a stranger in the city, was walking along the street with Hon. Thomas Hanna, when they passed Mercantile Library Hall. Wilson, who had never attended such a meeting, wanted to go in, and offered, in a jocular way, to bet Mr. Hanna $100 to fifty cents that no spirit would come to him, adding, with a significant laugh:

"There isn't a medium in the city that knows me."

They took seats in the back part of the hall. Towards the close of the seance, Mrs. Kerns wrote several communications, one of which is as follows. She read it aloud:

My Dear Brother—I am with you to-day, and I wish you could realize my presence. I beg of you, treat not this subject with levity, but investigate it and learn its beautiful truth. Your brother,
N. T. WILSON.

"Great God," exclaimed Mr. Hanna's friend, and he sprang to his feet.

"Does the gentleman recognize the spirit?" asked Mrs. McKinley.

"Yes, yes! why, that is my brother, who has been dead for five years."

"Would the gentleman like the communication? If so, he can have it," said Mrs. McKinley. They are frequently written in a hand writing resembling that of the person communicating.

Mr. Hanna's friend went forward and took the paper. In a few minutes he walked out of the hall, saying, "Well, by G—! That knocks anything I ever heard."

AN EXPLANATION FROM CHARTER OAK HALL.—The Mediums' Seance at Charter Oak Hall, last Sunday, was well attended, and the usual messages and descriptions of spirits were received until twenty minutes to four o'clock, when what is called the "ballot test" was given. Several hundred slips of paper, each having a name written on it, were collected from the audience and placed on a stand on the platform, where they were manipulated by the medium, and names of spirits and messages announced. All the responses that were received appeared to be satisfactory to the writers of the papers.

The President then read from COMMON SENSE an article entitled A New Departure, and explained to the audience that the reason why the Society, in the Constitution, declare "religious worship" to be their leading object, is that they may thereby avoid possible annoyance, as by law and custom spiritual manifestations come under the head of public exhibitions, and a license might, without such protection, be exacted by the authorities.

THE RISING FAITH.

The thinking, craving intellect or spirit of man, is never satisfied; but is ever demanding more light, more truth, and all political economists tell us "the supply is always equal to the demand," so, "God, now and then, lets loose a thinker on the planet," who blesses aspiring souls with fresh life-giving thoughts. The Rising Faith, by C. A. Bartol, author of Radical Problems, is a collection of topics, revealing a spiritual beauty which underlies the words, like a light within an alabaster vase, filling every line with beauty, or like the Soul within us irradiating and transfiguring form and feature.

In this age of Materialism, when outward position, worldly power and pecuniary profit are the goal towards which the majority are aiming, these clarion notes come to startle us into consideration of the interior world of immutable and universal principles, underlying this world in which we live—in fact into the "Soul of Things." Like Swedenborg, Mr. Bartol seems to have penetrated the inner sanctuary of the Divine Spirit immanent in the universe, and everywhere pervading it, and has given us innumerable gems of thought. The following are specimens:

Character first, destiny afterwards.

Your deportment is more than your department.

Character is the diamond that scratches every other stone.

Not how or why, not where or when, but what, is the true inquiry.

Not whence I came, but what I become, is the question.

Quality, or what we are, is more than what we think of God or Christ.

I must rely on myself, on the rectitude of my intentions and whispers of duty in my breast, and nobody shall fix, nor will I fashion my final creed.

The fall of the lost star in Pleiades would raise less lament in heaven than when sincerity, honesty, a good name falls from the firmament of the humblest soul.

The soul is a spy-glass. Active faith can bring all Heaven before our eyes, and make it the region we are in—not one of those foreign parts, such as we call Russia, China, or Japan.

What service is the Lord's Prayer, to me when I know what I want? No man's words do justice to my mind; once spoken I tie not myself to my own, but wear eternal inconsistency with my past graven on my shield.

Some Holy of Holies, entrail of Jewish temple, minaret of mosque, corner of the dwelling, David's palace-top, Peters house-roof, Isaac's ramble, seclusion from all flesh, even one's own, the soul needs for its search.

The same motion of Infinity is in the smoke, the cloud, the tide, the throb in my heart, the water turning to wine in a thousand vineyards, and a million fold more than was held in those Hebrew jars; all movement but no mover. Nothing concerns the spirit but growth.

Keep good company, know the fine persons, read interesting biographies, analyze the poem and romance, but hark to the secret whisper above all the voices with which the horizon of history rings.

Bring no bushel to hide your light. Utter all your wisdom as Jesus did. Its superiority to common apprehension will, like an electric battery, guard itself from general touch or vulgar abuse; and in these reading and editorial days the fear that sincerity will shock arises only from conceit.

When what one can do, not have done for him, is the badge of nobility, will be the new era for every class. When an unworthy appetite dies and is buried, out of its interior sepulchre comes a better disposition. So every ill motive you get the better of has its wild energy refined into a better impulse.

The motto is service. Not for myself but for you! Can I say a word to teach, lighten a burden or heal a wound, roll the stone from the sepulchre, or unbury affections long dead; convince you that the shroud is nothing to you, as Socrates told his friend they might do what funeral piety they pleased, if they could catch him after the breath was gone; then that is what I am for, and myself is my sacrifice.

So we could continue to quote lustrous gems of thought, but we hope those we have given will suffice to incite our readers to purchase the book and enshrine its living truths in the most sacred chambers of their memory.

For sale by Bancroft, Libby & Swett, and by H. Snow.

THE COMING WOMAN.

Woman seems to be passing a transition period, and the question in the heart of every man and in the hearts of some of the women, too, is, what is she coming to? But this question is asked by different persons with different feelings. With some it is asked with hope and joy; with others in fear and alarm; with some in doubt and unbelief; with others in faith and confidence. The world moves forward with vast strides, and carries with it not only art, science, literature, government and society, but even the very construction of the human mind seems to be changed at times. A great overruling power seems to be bringing all the human family slowly and surely up to one common level. It is very plain that women are not to be slaves and drudges as among uncivilized nations. Neither are they designed to be shut up in the house and veiled from the sight of the world as things not to be trusted, but guarded sacredly and kept to minister to man's pleasure and passions. The periods when they were held in such positions have passed. Women who yesterday were guarded and shielded for fear the winds of heaven would blow upon them, to-day face without fear the tumult of the rabble, speak eloquently in public and pray fervently in the presence of their scornful enemy. What has caused this sudden change, and are the women less womanly since? Ask their husbands. No one will detect a waning femininity and a growing masculinity in a woman so quick as a husband. Or are they less gentle and loving? Ask their sweethearts. Or are they less tender and kind? Ask their children. No, these women, while they have grown in power, have not lost one womanly feeling or instinct. The coming woman, then, will be no less a woman and no more a man. She will be no less loving and no more bitter; no less lovely and no more hateful. The coming woman will be less trifling, more earnest, less oppressed, down-trodden and abused, more respected by the right and feared by the wrong, less circumscribed in her work and her duties, and more powerful to accomplish all the good that her heart prompts her to attempt. The coming woman will be set free from all the unnatural legal and social restraints under which she now labors. The coming woman will be free under God to exercise all the power with which she is so bountifully and so beautifully clothed. This is the coming woman.—Leavenworth Daily Commercial.

You feel the spirit in the sphere which encompasses every human being—in that undefined something which you call a sense of presence.—Ella F. Mosby.

SPIRITUALISM—IS IT OF THE DEVIL?

This was the subject of a lecture by George A. Lewis, at Charter Oak Hall, on Sunday evening. He commenced by saying that communications between the living and the dead (so called) have taken place in every age of man's history. In primitive times the communications were misunderstood, and the phenomena misinterpreted. Through the ignorance of man the seers were considered prophets and some even as Gods. All ancient nations and tribes were under the guidance of the spirits of departed men and women. The Hebrews drew the inspiration that moulded their national character from the same source, and the spirits were thought to be Gods or angels. The speaker said:

"Yes, the entire Hebrew theology and inspiration of the Jews, on which our orthodox friends pretend to stake their bodies and souls, was nothing more nor less than spiritualism misunderstood and misinterpreted. The Hebrew Gods, were the spirits of men and women who returned to earth to hold converse with mortals in the form. Through all ages of the earth's history, spiritualism was the foundation of all mythology and all theology. And to-day, when we find recurring among us, through the agency of the spirit world, the same kind of phenomena that in former ages was manifested through the Hebrew prophets, saints and mediums, when we find the same phenomena recurring through spirit agency, that Jesus Christ, the spiritualist and medium of 1800 years ago performed, assuming the record to be true, our friends in the churches, admitting the genuineness of the phenomena, can only attribute it to the 'devil.'"

Who is this devil? What is he? On what authority do you predicate his existence? and whence the source of his power?

"The monks and fathers of the Christian church," says Charles McKay, "in their plays and theatrical performances of miracles and mysteries, constantly brought the devil upon the stage as one of the performers. In their plays, the devil was an important personage. He was represented in accordance with the popular notions of him in those ages. He was represented as a large, ill formed, hairy sprite, with horns, a long tail, cloven feet, and dragon's wings." At these performances of the monks and fathers of the Christian church, "the great sport for the people was to see devil well belabored by the saints with clubs or cudgels, and to hear him howl with pain as he limped off the stage, maimed by the blow of some vigorous saint or anchorite. St. Dunstan generally served him the glorious trick for which he was renowned, catching hold of his nose with a pair of red hot pincers, till some of the saints spat in his face, and others chopped off pieces of his tail, which, however, always grew out again."

It was believed he endeavored to trip people up, by laying his long invisible tail in their way, and giving it a sudden whisk when their legs were over it. He used to get drunk and swear like a sailor, and raise storms, tempests and earthquakes, to destroy the fruits of the earth, and the barns and homesteads of true believers. For amusement he used to run invisible spirits into people, and used to pay his grog bills at hotels with gold, which, in the morning, would turn into slate. Sometimes he disguised himself as a large drake among the bullrushes, and frightened the wary traveler out of his senses. Such was the devil of the Christian church, and as such, the clergy palmed him off upon the common people.

As long as the church could hold the people in ignorance and superstition, it taught the personal existence of such a devil. The people, then in the power of the priesthood, believed it, and through the abhorrence and fear of such a devil, the priest-ridden people became the suppliant vassals of the church, and through ages past, were held in ignorance, and trodden down by the despotism of the church, and by the arrogance of the priest. But science and education laid hold of the time-worn shackles and set the prisoners free.

Yes, these were the days when men lived by faith—the days for which Brother Dunn, in his lecture last Sunday evening, upon Spiritualism, so earnestly pleaded. The days of Faith—when the down-trodden people, through ignorance and superstition, had faith in the church—had faith in the priesthood—had faith in the devil—body, horns, hoofs and tail."

Mr. Lewis referred to various authors who have written on the subject of the devil, as represented by the fathers of the Christian church, and then quoted from the bible to prove that there is no passage which shows the existence of such a being. Dr. Clark says the one who tempted Eve was a person, capable of speech, not a serpent; but the bible does not call it a devil. The same word, nahash, here translated serpent, is in Samuel and Job, translated steel, and in Amos, crocodile, though some commentators say it means whale or hippopotamus. Dr. Clark says, nahash means monkey; but be it whale, hippopotamus, crocodile or monkey, there is no evidence that it was a personal devil. The Greek word diabolus, means an opponent, and the corresponding Hebrew word, satan, is simply an adversary, and in this sense it was applied to David, to the sons of Zerniah, the Edomites, to the hostile tribes of Israel; to the angel that inteccepted Baalam, and to Peter, by Jesus. In each of these cases, satan means adversary, and by no possible construction can it be made to signify a fiend, the devil of the church. Dr. Adam Smith, Doctor Clark, and other commentators, say there are only four instances in the old testament where the word satan is used as a proper name; and if there is anywhere in the Hebrew bible a devil, he must be in one of these four passages. The first is in Chronicles: "And satan stood up against Israel, and provoked David to number Israel." The Chronicles contain only a repetition of events mentioned in Samuel and Kings. In Samuel this event is recorded as: "And again the anger of the Lord was kindled against Israel, and he moved David against them to say, Go number Israel and Judah." The same statement is made in Kings. So satan in this instance was the Lord of Hosts. He got mad, as usual, and in Chronicles, is very appropriately called the devil. In this manner Mr. Lewis proceeded to quote and argue at great length, to prove from the bible itself, that there is no such being. Concerning the passage in Job, where satan is represented as a personal being, in counsel with God and the sons of God, he said:

"By references, I shall now show you that the whole account is poetic imagery, in which the elements of nature are personified, and represented as under the direction and control of God. The 'Sons of God,' representing those elements of nature that produce harmony and prosperity, and 'satan,' representing those that produce discord and disaster, and the 'assembly' at which they met, was intended by the poet to represent the subordination of natural causes to the will of God. It is a Hebrew poem of the highest order, highly figurative and metaphorical, intended to illustrate human nature and human destiny, in days of affliction as well as in days of prosperity. And Job was no more an actual personage than 'Jack the Giant killer.' He was only the hero of the poem, for the word Job means persecuted, afflicted. He was the persecuted one—the hero of the poem."

In this manner Mr. Lewis proceeded at great length, to explain the meaning of various passages, as made by the most intelligent commentators on the scriptures, and those acknowledged as orthodox. He then proceeded to consider the Dualism of Persian mythology, after which he said:

"From these fabulous stories came the notions of a personal devil and legions of demons. Whoever traces out this Dualism of Persian mythology, will recognize the fountain source of all the devils and fiends, incarnate or infernal, that have been portrayed to man—that have been preached by the Christian church, or believed by Judaism, for 1800 years. This Persian Dualism, modified by other heathen mythologies, revamped by the Neo-Platonic philosophy, is the fount and progenitor of Christianity. In the days of Christ, and succeeding centuries, these were the prevailing doctrines and philosophies. In these isms, the apostles founded the doctrines of Christianity, and from these, the fathers of the Christian church drew their inspiration. Thus the Christian church was but the child of Paganism, which was only a corrupted form of ancient spiritualism. And the diabolism of to-day—the devils and demons of the Christian church are but the relics of Paganism and superstition, most fondly cherished, nourished and preserved by the church for over 1800 years. Without the devil the churches would be ruined. Their stock in trade would be gone. For all working purposes in the church, the devil is of vastly more importance than Christ; for the example set by Christ 1800 years ago, and his gentle words, utterly fail to draw men into the fold. It is only when they take their devil and shake him in the face of unbelievers that they are able to frighten effeminate men, timid women, and inexperienced children into the church.

With this array of facts, who will say that Spiritualism is of the devil? Spiritualism is a reality, its roots striking down deep into the foundations of the universe. The ultimate verdict of science will land us in Spiritualism, and nowhere else. The united testimony of all ages tells us that spirits survive the dissolution of the physical organism, and that disembodied ones return to earth and hold converse with those in the form. Of these facts we have a host of witnesses, not only through the historic ages of the past—but there is an innumerable host of living witnesses who, to-day can testify to what they have seen, and to what they know."

Mr. Lewis here quoted largely from historical writings, to show the communion held with spirits in ancient times. He concluded his address as follows:

"Now I don't pretend to believe every thing that has been said, either in ancient times or modern—either in sacred or profane history. But I do pretend to say that if anything can be established by human testimony, by statements of honest men and women then, we have an abundance of evidence to show that men have seen disembodied spirits and have conversed with them, both in ancient and modern times.

And, in reply to those who say 'delusion,' I have only to say, if intelligent people can be so easily deluded—if intelligent people can be so frequently mistaken in confounding their own dreams and fancies with sensations, how can there be any certainty of knowledge at all from sense?

When Jesus, Peter, James and John ascended the mount to hold that memorable seance, and to hold converse with departed spirits, was Jesus deluded, or was it the devil that appeared to Jesus and his apostles, and personated Moses and Elias?

If men are so easily deluded, who in the name of heaven shall decide whether you, who deny the testimony of all ages, and deny the testimony of my senses, are deluded, or whether I and the host of living witnesses, who, by our senses and judgments, corroborate the past, are deluded? Give us, if you can, an answer free from delusion."

DE LONG VERSUS MADDEN.

A few months since the daily papers contained an account of a seance held with the medium, Charles Foster, by Hon. Charles DeLong and others, during which information was received which led to the recovery of some land belonging to the estate of D. V. Vineyard, deceased, father-in-law of Mr. DeLong. The statement, as published, was uncontradicted, but Mr. Madden, who held the land, caused (or his friends did) an imperfect account of the transaction to be given to the public through the columns of the S. F. Bulletin, and the editor gave it a heading which the facts in the article itself did not justify, whereby readers were led to believe that the message received through Foster contained nothing not previously known by Mr. DeLong and family. The following statement, written for the Banner of Light by Mrs. H. F. M. Brown, a lady of unimpeachable veracity, gives an account of the affair as related by Mr. DeLong himself, at a friend's house in Virginia City:

Mr. DeLong joined a party in a visit to Mr. Foster.—During the sitting Mr. Foster asked, "Do any of you know Ida? I have an important message for her of a business nature." Mr. DeLong replied, "Ida is the name of my wife." Subsequently Mr. and Mrs. DeLong went for the message. Mrs. DeLong's father, Col. Vineyard, came and told his daughter the particulars of a certain undivided tract of land that belonged to him—now to his heirs.—"Who holds the deed?" Mr. DeLong asked. "Mr. Madden," was the reply. Col. Vineyard gave Mrs. DeLong directions in the matter. She faithfully followed the advice of her father, and sent for Mr. Madden to come and see her. She told him of the interview with her father. Mr. Madden denied squarely the whole story. When pressed with queries in regard to the land in question, he remarked, "If the deed was in my name and your father in fact owned half the land, it is outlawed." This seemed a tacit admission of Mr. Vineyard's claim. The widow (Mrs. Vineyard) was informed of the matter. She produced old letters and tax receipts, which bore strong testimony against Mr. Madden. So, when hard pushed with testimony from both worlds, he deeded to Mrs. Vineyard the land that belonged to her husband. The question now comes up—Why is ex-Minister DeLong silent when the public demand the truth? I do not know. One thing is positive: in private he is frank in his avowal of angel aid in the matter. The coterie where I heard the story was at the house of Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Baker, of this city. The small audience was composed of persons of various creeds. All of one accord declared that Mr. DeLong has good cause for believing in Spiritualism. What he does believe I do not know.

Prof. S. S. Baldwin is traveling over the country "exposing" Spiritualism. The Democrat, of Washington, Indiana, says: "Were he to give another entertainment here nobody could be hired to go. As an exposure of Spiritualism it was a miserable failure."

Mrs. Victoria C. Woodhull, it is announced, will lecture in Platt's Hall, Monday evening, June 1st, at 8 o'clock.

PROPERTIES OF MATTER.

You see this piece of steel, cold, motionless, and, as you suppose, insensitive to all that goes on around. An artisan uses a part of it for making the balance wheel of a watch. Immediately it proves itself modifiable by changes of temperature which our dull senses fail to appreciate. Though by no direct measures can we detect an alteration in the length of its beat; yet indirectly, by finding that it loses one beat in a hundred thousand, we get proof that an imperceptible increase of the molecular agitation propagated to it by surrounding things has augmented its diameter and expanded all its parts in the same ratio. Take another bit of this apparently inert substance; shape it appropriately; bring it under the influence of an adjacent magnet, and throughout the mass there is wrought, in some incomprehensible way, an invisible change which enables it to do—what? To point north and south, you will say. Yes, but to do more than this. Its perturbations will now show, to an instructed eye, the rise and progress of a cyclone in the sun.

And what is the constitution of this seemingly simple Matter, which tells of things near and remote that remain otherwise unknown? In the minutest visible fragment of it there are millions of units, severally oscillating with unimaginable speed, and physicists show us that their oscillations vary from moment to moment, as the temperatures of surrounding objects vary. Nay, much more than this is now inferable. Each unit is not simple, but compound—not a single thing, but a system of things. Spectrum analysis has now made it manifest that every molecule of this so-called elementary substance is a cluster of minor molecules differing in their weights and rhythms. Such being the complexity of matters we lately thought simple, judge of the complexity of matters we know as compounds. In each molecule of an oxide or an acid, the chemist sees one of these systems united with one, two, three, or more systems similarly involved. Ascending to orders of compounds successively more heterogeneous, he finds himself obliged to recognize molecular complexities unrepresentable in thought; until, on reaching organic matter, he comes to molecules each of which (taking into account the composite nature of its so-called elements) contains literally more atoms than the visible heavens contains stars—atoms combined, system within system, in such ways that each atom, each system, each compound system, each doubly compound system, has its motion in relation to the rest, and is capable of perturbing the rest, and of being perturbed by them.

This activity and this sensitiveness, which the investigator marvels at the more the deeper his discoveries reach, is possessed in common by ponderable Matter and by the seemingly imponderable Matter pervading space. That the ether, so extreme in tensility that we can scarcely represent it to ourselves as having materiality, is nevertheless composed of units which move in conformity with mechanical laws, is now a common-place of science. Hypothetically endowing these units with momenta, and assuming that in each undulation their courses are determined by composition of forces, mathematicians long ago found themselves able not only to interpret known properties of the light constituted by ethereal undulations, but to assert that it had unobserved properties, which were thereupon proved by observation to exist. Far greater community than this has been disclosed between the ponderable and the imponderable; the activities of either are considerably modified by the activities of the other. Each complex molecule of Matter operating as a whole—nay, each separate member of it independently oscillating, causes responsive movements in adjacent ethereal molecules, and these in remoter ones without a limit; while, conversely, each ethereal wave reaching a composite molecule, changes more or less its rythmical motions, as well as the rythmical motions of its compound clusters and those of their separate members.

Nor do the relations end here. The discovery that Matter, seemingly so simple, is so amazingly involved; the discovery that while it appears to be inert, it is the seat of activities immense in quantity and complication; and the discovery that its molecules, pulsating with almost infinite rapidity, propagate their pulses into the all-surrounding ether, which carries them through inconceivable distances in infinitesimal times, serve to introduce us to the yet more marvelous discovery that molecules of each kind are affected by molecules of the same kind existing in the farthest regions of space. Units of sodium on which the sunlight falls, beat in unison with their kindred units more than ninety millions of miles off, by which the yellow rays of the sun are produced. Nay, even this is a totally inadequate illustration of the sympathy displayed by the Matter composing the visible universe. The elements of our earth are thus connected by bonds of interdependent activity with the elements of the stars so remote that the diameter of the earth's orbit scarcely serves as a unit of measure to express their distances.—Herbert Spencer.

THE NATURE AND FITNESS OF THINGS.

A sectarian paper says, "The nature and fitness of things originated in the will and character of Jehovah." Whereupon B. F. Underwood, in the Truth Seeker, asks: "Why not suppose the 'nature and fitness of things,' comprehensively considered, eternal? Because they evince intelligence and design, says the theologian in reply. But if 'the nature and fitness of things' are proof of a designing intelligence that preceded and produced them, is not the 'nature' of Jehovah and the 'fitness' in his being which enables him to design and execute his designs, proof of a designing intelligence that produced him? No, says the theologian, Jehovah has existed from eternity. But if this be true, the 'nature' of the Divine Being and the 'fitness' of the Divine Mind are eternal, and therefore undesigned. If the 'nature' and 'fitness' of Jehovah exist undesigned, then a certain 'nature' and 'fitness' exist independently of design. If this be true, design cannot be inferred logically from the fact alone that a certain 'nature' and 'fitness' exists. May not the 'nature' and 'fitness' of this universe be undesigned and eternal?"

We must needs intermeddle, and have things our own way, until the sacrifices and virtues of society are odious. Our Sunday-schools and churches and pauper society are yokes to the neck. Why drag this dead weight of a Sunday-school over the whole Christendom?—Emerson.

For the very best Photographs go to Bradley & Bulofson's Gallery, with an elevator, 429 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

A. Provo Kluit's new style of Photo-crayon Portraits is only made at the Florence Gallery, No. 28 Third Street, San Francisco. Price from $20 to $30. Beware of imitations.

Drs. Ruttle & Streeter's "Prince of Blood Purifiers" eradicates all corrupt humors from the blood, however they may have been caused, rejuvenates the exhausted forces, and restores, unfailingly, the vigor of those debilitated by all excesses. Try it. Head office, 745 Mission Street, San Francisco.

A new style of inkstand has been invented, made of heavy glass, not liable to break, and so constructed as not to spill the ink when tipped over. Indeed, the way to keep the air out at night is to turn it upside down. It is more easily cleaned than any other inkstand, and needs cleaning less, and as it contains a receptacle for sediment, the ink is always clear and fresh. E. Carter, 636 Sacramento street Room 4, is the sole agent for this coast.

[For Common Sense.]
A MORMON BACHELOR'S SONG.

When daylight declines in the west,
I sit all alone in my glory,
With sentiments tender oppress'd,
And read some light romance or story,
Or wander in fancy away
With beautiful virgins to stray.
If, weary, I lay down to rest
Upon my lone bachelor's pillow,
My heart a long vigil doth keep,
Uneasy I toss, like the billow,
Pursuing some phantom, or shade,
That flits in the form of a maid.
Eyes sparkle and flash through the air,
Of blue, and of gray, jet, and hazel,
They peep thro' bright tresses of hair,
And mock, while they charm me and And oil, and new wine, and such fruit—
O luminous eyes of my dreams, [dazzle] All glowing with ruby and gold, [ah !
My senses run wild in your beams ! As grew not in Canaan old.

Haste, lovely ones ! haste from afar
With joy, to join Israel's daughters ;
Be each my " particular stat !"
By dear Utah's clear, rippling waters—
My heart, like an omnibus, waits
With longings untold at your gates !
***

[For Common Sense.]
SPIRITUALISM.

BY H. WINCHESTER.

In the great mysterious future,
Lying in the womb of time,
Light of truth is being gendered
For a purpose grand, sublime,
And will one day be projected
On this world of tears and pain—
Thrilling hearts with holy rapture,
Flashing from the human brain.
For long centuries clouds of darkness
Cast their shadows on the tomb,
And earth's children groaned in anguish;
Every face was clothed in gloom—
Till at last a small light sparkled,
Growing brighter day by day,
Bursting through the mist of ages,
Scattering clouds of doubt away.
Mankind from the sleep of error
Suddenly awoke to life—
Half bewildered, doubting, fearing
Scenes of murder, blood and strife;
Gazing wildly on the progress
Of the clear light brought to view,
By which loved ones, dead though real,
Came and pledged their love anew.
Lower Lake, May 26, 1874.

THE BEAUTIFUL GATE.

When mysterious whispers are floating about,
And voices that will not be still,
Shall summon me hence from the vanishing shore,
To the waves that are silent and still;
When I look with changed eyes at the home of the blest,
Far out of the reach of the sea,
Will any one stand at that beautiful gate,
Waiting and watching for me?

There are friendless and suffering strangers around,
There are tempted and poor I must meet,
There are dear ones at home I may bless with my love,
There are wretched ones pacing the street;
There are many unthought of, whom, happy and blest,
In the land of the good I shall see;
Will any of these, at the beautiful gate,
Be waiting and watching for me?

There are old and forsaken, who linger awhile
In the homes which their dearest have left,
And an action of love and a few gentle words
Might cheer the poor spirit bereft;
But the reaper is near to the long-standing corn,
The weary shall soon be set free;
Will any of these, at the beautiful gate,
Be waiting and watching for me?

There are little ones glancing about on my path,
In need of a friend or a guide;
There are dim little eyes looking up into mine,
Whose tears could be easily dried;
But Azrael may beckon the children away
In the midst of their grief or their gloom:
Will any of these, at the beautiful gate,
Be waiting and watching for me?

Could I be brought there by the manifold grace
Of that power that loves to forgive,
Though I bless not the hungry ones near to my side,
Only toil for myself while I live;
Yet I think I shall mourn o'er my selfish neglect,
If sorrow in heaven can be,
If no one should stand at that beautiful gate,
Waiting and watching for me.

BARBARA BRAY.

In a little low cottage, just over the way,
Half hidden by woodbine, lives Barbara Bray,
With a brow that is furrowed, and head that is gray,
Full three-score summers have brought their bloom,
And three-score winters have brought their gloom,
Since first to the light of that little room
Came Barbara Bray.

Day unto day, and night unto night—
Walking by faith as well as by light—
She seeketh the light for the sake of the right.
Plucking some thorn from the pillow of care;
Lifting some burthen not easy to bear;
To the cot or the palace—no matter where,
Goeth Barbara Bray.

A child of God; yet her portion is small
In the broad estate and paternal hall,
For the "eldest brother" had gotten it all!
And day by day, as he rideth by
In his gilded carriage, she wonders why
That never he turneth a kindly eye,
On old Barbara Bray.

Patiently, cheerfully, all the same
Turneth the wheel of the ancient dame,
Stopping never for 'plaint or blame.
What cares she for the sordid dance
Of men at the shrine of circumstance?
Gold can never the wealth enhance
Of old Barbara Bray.

Wealth that never can turn the dust,
Wealth of faith, and the holy trust
In him that giveth the daily crust.
Toiling away in the peaceful light
That shimmereth down from the gates so white,
Cometh there never unwelcome night
For old Barbara Bray.

Little she knoweth of doctrine; indeed,
"God and her neighbor," is all of her creed;
Short enough, truly, yet large as her need.
Dry stalks may be gathered, and tares, it may be,
But God is the Lord of the harvest, and He Will pay all His workmen, if faithful they be,
Saith old Barbara Bray.

Strange that she should be toiling alone!
Strange indeed that there should be none
To share the light of that old hearthstone!
Yet one there was, but he went before
Through the church-yard gate and marble door!
And he waiteth above, on the golden shore,
For old Barbara Bray.

Others there were, but they faded away,
Some at the dawn, in the twilight gray,
And some in the pride of their summer day.
Yet oft, when the sunset bath loth its bloom,
And the shadows take shape in the deepening gloom,
Sweet voices come back to that little room.
And to Barbara Bray.

And then, no longer alone, alone,
Old Barbara sits by her quaint hearthstone;
For the past with its treasures is still her own.
She dreams of love, and she talks with her mates:
She clasps her darlings and patiently waits
For the angel that cometh to open the gates
For old Barbara Bray.

Nor waiteth she long; for already afar
Through the gloom of the night, like the glow of a star,
Is shining the light of her homeward car.
Whirling along o'er the track of years,
Down through the valley of sorrow and tears,
Out from the field of the harvest it bears
Old Barbara Bray.

A moment, a breath! and the journey is o'er!
Her wheel at the window is seen no more;
But the tear-drops shall fall while the lowly and poor
Lay their garlands of love at the friendly door
Of old Barbara Bray.

COMMON SENSE.

A Journal of Live Ideas.

VOL. 1.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, JUNE 13TH, 1874.

No. 5.

Signs of the Times.

Stock companies of grangers have been formed in various States for the manufacture of agricultural implements.

A COUPLET suggested for the urn containing the ashes of "Dear William" when cremated:

"We can't have every thing to please us,
Little Billy's gone to Jesus."

The disease known as Egyptain inflammation of the eyes is spreading in various parts of the Eastern States. It is contagious, and the public are cautioned against the use of roller towels at hotels.

An investigating circle has been established in New York city by a number of judges, clergymen and scientists. The meetings are held in the parlors of J.V. Mansfield, the medium for answering sealed letters.

J.G. Holland says the Temperance crusade does not mean the ballot for woman; but that "It means that woman does not need the ballot and will not have it." Perhaps so, but we shall know better by and by.

A deputation of sixty women, many of them wives of clergymen and leading citizens, lately presented to the magistrates of Dundee, Scotland, a petition signed by more than 8000 women, asking the magistrates to grant no new licenses.

The plan urged by Mr. Proctor of occupying stations on the Antarctic continent for observations of the transit of Venus, is pronounced impracticable, for the reason that parties could neither be landed nor subsisted on such mere mountains of ice.

In London recently, at a seance at which the full-form materialized spirit appears through Miss Cook's mediumship, the spirit and the medium, differently accoutred, were distinctly seen by Mr. Benj. Coleman, Prof. Crookes, and four other witnesses.

The New York Tribune makes a great fuss because some one has sent a horned frog by mail. A pound of frog costs no more for transmission than a pound of Tribune, and certainly is no less interesting to the people of the East who never saw such a curiosity. California will continue to mail the frogs; so let the Tribune croak.

The London Medium and Daybreak publishes the statement that the infant child of Mrs. Kate Fox Jencken, of Brighton, has written spirit messages in presence of various witnesses, although the child is only five months old. Facsimiles of the messages are published. The child talked when three months of age, speaking its first words as distinctly as if it had years of practice.

The Christian Union says Mrs. Livermore "is endowed by God with all the requisites for a persuasive public speaker."

Mrs. Margaret Martin, of Dublin, has patented an improvement in the construction of balloons, by which their course is guided.

The Sovereigns of Industry, an institution similar to the Patrons of Husbandry, is extending rapidly among the mechanics of Eastern cities. The two orders are the mighty arms of a great body.

An arteisian well on the Insane Asylum grounds, St. Louis, is now 3,843 feet in depth, and the borers are still at work. At 3,523 feet the thermometer indicated 115 degrees Fahrenheit, while at 3,837 feet it was only 105.

A system of writing music by shorthand has been invented, by which a piece can be copied while it is being performed. Music can thus be written in one-tenth the usual time and space, and yet the legibility is not sacrificed, and the exact pitch and length of each note is indicated. The system, it is said, may be easily learned.

Beecher says if a man and wife are of differing religious belief, let them attend the church which will afford them most edification; or if they cannot agree as to this, let each go their own way. If their religion will not enable them to settle such a question harmoniously, it is pretty certain they have no religion worth quarreling over.

James T. Fields asks if it is not amazing that, since 1854, there has not graduated from any American college a man who has yet made any great mark either as a lawyer, an orator, a statesman, a poet, a preacher, an essayist or a historian. The Banner of Light answers, "No it is not in the least 'amazing,' when the fact is taken into consideration that all our sectarian colleges have continually stuffed their scholars with 'Old Theology.' It is enough to stupefy the finest intellects in the world."

The Banner of Light, referring to a series of articles in the Fortnightly Review by Alfred R. Wallace, says: "As a man of science Mr. Wallace's authority is quite as high as that of Huxley, Tyndall, Helmholtze, and Moleschott of our day. If Mr. Wallace were to publish an article on the great toe-joint of the gorilla, how eagerly would it be copied into the Popular Science Monthly, edited by Prof. Youmans! But as Mr. Wallace has published only a scientific paper on the stupendous facts revealed in Spiritualism, tending to prove that the dissolution of the earthly body is not the death of the man himself, his statements must be quietly ignored and set aside. Such is the liberality of men professing to be liberal men of science in our day!"

BUDDHISM AND SPIRITUALISM COMPARED.

BY A. W. BAYLIS, M.B.C.S.

An indefatigable missionary in Ceylon once took the trouble to study the Buddhistic religion—a task which most of that intellectual fraternity regard as quite superfluous; and after years of patient investigation published several works, which are the most complete treatises on the system of Buddha extant. His name was Spence Hardy. I have extracted from his Manual of Buddhism, which he compiled on the spot by the help of the Buddhist priests and their sacred writings, the information I am about to lay before your readers. This Manual of Buddhism is universally acknowledged by oriental scholars to be a reliable authority in all matters pertaining to the original teaching of Buddha and the present creed of the Buddhists in Ceylon.

Buddha, as is well known, was born in Behar, a province of northern India, and began to teach there some five hundred years before the birth of Christ. His religion spread rapidly on the continent of India, and has since extended over and embraced within its influences the following countries of the East: Ceylon, Burmah, Siam, Cochin China, China, Thibet, Chinese Tartary, the Corea, and Japan; thus holding under its sway a very large portion numerically of the human race, and those not by any means the less intelligent part of it; so that it is quite safe to state that there are many more Buddhists in the world than there are adherents of any other one religious creed. Buddhists, moreover, are really as a rule a religious folk, and not like the bulk of Christians, merely Buddhists in name.

Moses and the other Jewish sacred writers, whose works form by far the largest portion of that sacred volume to which, as before the voice of God himself, united Christendom has hitherto bowed down its heart and intellect, give us no information whatever about the future state of the soul after its departure from the body; indeed, it is quite uncertain whether they themselves had any information to impart upon this subject, or whether they believed in the existence after death of the man or any part of him. Solomon, in fact, who is stated to have been especially, above all other men, effused directly with divine wisdom, clearly says in Ecclesiastes that "there is no work, nor knowledge, nor device in the grave," and also that the man in this particular has "no pre-eminence over the beast, since both go to the same place," and suffer, as he gives us to understand he means, utter extinction.

That this was actually the case we also know from the fact that even so late as at the time when Christ was living and teaching, the strictest, most learned, aristocratic, intelligent and orthodox of the two great sects into which the Jews of his day were divided, the Sadducees, had no belief whatever in the immortality of the soul, or in the existence of angel or spirit. The Pharisees, who we are told "confessed both," were the innovators and reformers of that age. Christ himself evidently adopted the creed of the Pharisees, to which indeed most of the poor and ignorant belonged, and believed in and taught the future existence of the soul; yet all he tells us about its condition after death is quite vague, and amounts to this, that the souls of the good pass into a state of happiness, those of the bad into a state of misery, and that in "his Father's house are many mansions." As to the conditions of the universe, physical or spiritual, he positively volunteers no information whatever; neither do his ignorant disciples appear to have felt any curiosity upon this subject.

Buddha was far more explicit; his teaching contains a vast fund of information upon all these subjects; and although we know now his account of the physical universe is utterly incorrect, and may therefore very reasonably presume that his account of the spiritual universe is yet more so; still there are such very remarkable coincidences between his teaching on the subject and that of modern Spiritualism, that I am sure Spiritualists will be interested in knowing that just exactly what is told them now through their mediums of the state through which the disembodied spirit passes in its path to perfection, was taught to his followers by Buddha two thousand three hundred years ago. It is a curious fact that the information to which I refer has never, so far as I know, come to us through any but American and French mediums; and yet if we should suppose that it had been borrowed directly from the creed of the Buddhists, it is certain that this is much less generally known in these countries than in England. Again, a large portion of the French Spiritualists have adopted the theory of reincarnation, and I see that a considerable school of reincarnationists is now springing up in the Eastern States, since these principles are openly advocated by the most influential spiritualistic journal in the world, the Banner of Light. Now the doctrine of reincarnation is pure Buddhism; it is what we have all heard of before as the "transmigration of souls," a doctrine held in common by Brahmans and Buddhists. Buddha taught that each individual man was what he was, in station, in personal qualities, in relative prosperity and happiness, by reason of the balance struck between his good and evil deeds at the conclusion of his last previous state of existence; and again, that his state and condition in his next state of existence would be absolutely determined by the balance struck between his good and evil deeds in this present life. According to Buddha, then, and the reincarnationists, man goes through many ups and downs in his progress to perfection, or as Buddha called it "Nirwana;" his course is by no means one of constant progress. For example, a man who had been a miserable wretch here might by reason of his preponderating good deeds be born next into one of the six dewa-lokas, or even into one of the sixteen brahma-lokas or higher heavens; and on the other hand, a prosperous monarch might be born into one of the eight hells, or as an animal, or re-born into this world as a beggar, by reason of the preponderance of his evil. Again, a being in one of the places of torment might from like causes be born, when he died, into one of the highest heavens, or be born again as a man or animal; and an animal dying might, by reason of virtuous deeds, be at once born into one of the highest heavens, not as an animal, but as an angel. But to come to the point. With reference to the physical universe Buddha taught that there are innumerable systems of worlds, each having its own sun, moon and stars, scattered throughout space in systems of three and three. These systems are infinite in number. They are divided into three classes: those which appear to Buddha; those to which his authority extends; and those in which he may be born. Again, each of these infinite inhabited worlds is divided into the following systems: First—The lokas or spheres in which there is no perceptible form, i. e., the highest heavens. Second—The spheres in which there is form, but no sensual enjoyment. Third—The spheres in which there is form with sensual enjoyment. Every part of each sackwala or world is included in one of the following divisions: 1. The world of sentient being. 2. The world of space, the empty void. 3. The material world. Thus there are six dewa-lokas or lower spheres, situated in an ascending series around this world on which we now live; and sixteen brahma-lokas or higher heavens, whose locality is above or outside that of the dewa-lokas. In the six dewa-lokas there is sensual enjoyment; but as the series ascends this is gradually sublimated or refined away till in the higher spheres those of the opposite sex who love sexually are perfectly satisfied with being in each others presence. The Buddhists go into particulars about this matter, which of course I cannot do, showing how in each ascending sphere the spirit loses something of its coarseness and brutality. The earth is the lowest of the series of seven spheres in which sensual enjoyments are possible; and this systematic arrangement applies in all its details to each one of the infinite number of worlds in the universe; the arrangement in Jupiter, Saturn, etc., being precisely analogous. Above the six dewa-lokas are sixteen rupa-brahma-lokas or spheres, in which, while there is still bodily form, there is no pain, and no sensual pleasure at all. The spiritual body, still more spiritualized than in the highest dewa-loka, still exists. Above these sixteen spheres are four more, called arupa-brahma-lokas, in which there is no bodily form whatever. In the last of these, the nearest to Nirwana, or absolute perfection, to which the Buddhists give the unpronounceable name Newsannyanasanyayatana, the inhabitants are neither fully conscious nor yet altogether unconscious. The Buddhists themselves are divided in opinion as to the condition of souls in Nirwana, and it is probable that there are sects of Buddhists who regard it as a state of absolute extinction or unconsciousness; but as Buddha and his apostles repeatedly speak of it as a state of perfect bliss and absolute perfection, it is certain that this is a heterodox view, and that Buddha probably meant to express by his words an entire extinction of form and self-hood, and perhaps also of individuality and personality.

It would be quite too tedious to go into all the particulars given by Buddhist writers about the condition of these different states, although they give the most minute particulars of the enjoyments, pains and surroundings of their inhabitants. Suffice it to mention that from the lowest of the dewa-lokas to the highest of the arupa-brahma-lokas there is an ever ascending progression of happiness, intellectuality, spirituality and freedom from sin. I will only add that while in the lowest of the dewa-lokas the average age of a dewa is equal to nine millions of the years of men, the duration of average life in each sphere of the ascending series increases, until in the last of the arupa-brahma-lokas the average duration of existence is eighty thousand maha-kalpas; a maha-kalpa being the space of one cycle of mundane revolution, or the period during which the earth is once created, exists and is destroyed.

Connected with each world or sackwala are eight places of torment, and there are besides eight states into which disembodied spirits of a low order may pass; these are exclusive of the dewa-lokas altogether, and the spirits occupying most of them seem to hang about the earth amongst men, and to take the places now ascribed by Spiritualists to undeveloped spirits, whose vagaries they closely imitate.—(To be continued.)

DO HUMAN SPIRITS HAVE A CONTINUOUS INDIVIDUALIZED EXISTENCE?

ED. COMMON SENSE: Is modern Spiritualism a science or a philosophy?—I admit these terms are very much mixed—or is it a religion, as some insist? If religion is a belief in a personal God—no! but if religion means a belief in the presence of a universal intelligence, is not that the religion of the Spiritualist? If “the objects of philosophy are to ascertain facts and the cause of phenomena,” is not that the aim of Spiritualism? And what other object has science? It seems, then, as if Spiritualism may claim to be all of these three. Some Spiritualists are inclined to make of it a dogma. We need not be surprised at that, however, for scientists fall into the same error. For instance they tell us, by aid of spectral analysis, of what metals the burning sun and the distant stars are composed, without having first established the fact that these distant orbs are actually on fire. It is very easy to say that they must be, if spectral analysis is to be depended upon, but I apprehend that is putting the cart before the horse.

With this preface I will proceed to ask if Spiritualists are not going a little too fast? We must admit that spiritual phenomena—not new by any means—prove the presence of an intelligent force, not hitherto recognized by modern science. We must also admit that some individuals are better mediums than others for the transmission of this phenomena; but how much farther than this have we really got? I do not mean to disparage this phenomena; for it is so wonderful that the incredulous are driven to the alternative of denying their belief in its existence. Attempts to disprove have not only failed, but in many instances have made converts. But what real evidence have we of the existence of individual spirits? Everything in nature is resolved into its original elements. All matter returns to the fountain from which it sprung: why not that intelligence we call our soul, spirit or mind?

Many persons say, “my aspirations are an evidence that I shall remain eternally individualized.” This looks like carrying our selfishness beyond the grave. May not mankind well afford to lose their individuality after death to become part of God? I throw out these ideas, expecting an answer from some of your contributors. If the subject should prove interesting, I shall attempt to maintain the position here outlined. A discussion on this subject might prove interesting to your readers, and I think I shall be able to sustain my view of the question by testimony and logic.

C. B. S.

Spiritual phenomena are so contrary to ordinary personal experience, and so apparently opposed to science, that people cannot accept them on second-hand evidence, as they do other facts. Alfred R. Wallace, one of the leading scientists of England, says in the Fortnightly Review: “The thousands of Spiritualists represent to a very large extent, men who have witnessed, examined, and tested the evidence for themselves, over and over again, till that which they had at first been unable to admit could be true, they have at last been compelled to acknowledge is true. This accounts for the utter failure of all the attempted exposures and explanations to convince one solitary believer of his error.”

QUITTING TOBACCO: A SINGULAR EXPERIENCE.

BY PROF. W. H. CHANEY.

I commenced the habit of chewing tobacco when I was thirteen. I did not have to "learn," as most persons do, for I was a born chewer—worse than that—I inherited an appetite for it. My earliest recollections are associated with seeing my father both smoke and chew, when my "mouth would water" in sympathy, although I had only an imperfect idea as to the taste, for I was strictly forbidden ever to touch the weed. Perhaps my desire for it was increased because it was denied me, for such is human nature. Occasionally I would get a scale or crumb, just enough to afford a taste without provoking nausea, and I remember that the taste was very pleasant. And thus it was that I took to tobacco as naturally as a duck takes to water.

I have a purpose in narrating these circumstances, namely, to show that my appetite has been as strong as that of most any person, and that having used tobacco for forty years—used it to excess as hundreds can testify—still I have been able to give it up. Hence, I deduce that any person who has used it not to exceed forty years may also break off the filthy habit. Any one who has been a slave to the cursed weed more than forty years may not be able to quit it; but under forty, they should not be excused.

My friends often requested me to give up its use, but it seemed to me impossible. If by chance I could not obtain it, three hours abstinence would completely unfit me for business. I was obliged to forego its use while lecturing, and many a lecture I have shortened because I was so suffering for a "chew." But being a reform lecturer, I fully realized that my example was widely at variance with my precepts, and so kept on saying that I would quit "one of these days," which is equivalent to saying that I did not intend to quit. I tried various substitutes and cures, but had no patience with them. I wanted the tobacco and have it I would.

I returned to San Francisco on the 12th of March to attend Prof. Denton's lectures. Just before that, I remember that an Indian girl came to me through Mrs. Kimball, in San Jose, in the presence of the Drs. Joscelyn and Miss Stafford, and told me that I would soon quit tobacco, but I scarcely heeded it at the time. The flings of Denton against the filthy weed made more impression upon my mind than any one else had ever done. There was still another pressure urging me to quit, not necessary to describe. These influences, together with my own desire to gain my freedom, induced me to give up the filthy habit March 26th, 1874, since which I have not tasted it, and trust that I never shall again.

And now for the curious effects, to which I am desirous of calling special attention. During the first week my greatest discomfort arose from a ravenous desire for tobacco in my mouth. After that the appetite gradually subsided, but I discovered that my nervous system was getting more and more out of balance. It was nearly three weeks before this trouble culminated and I could feel sure of an improvement. At first I had a drowsiness of a peculiar nature; would drop asleep in the midst of a conversation, pause only for a moment, then as I dreamed, in an altered tone of voice speak of what I was dreaming. To illustrate: I was explaining to a lady a portion of Mr. Denton's lecture which she did not hear, when I said: "Granite was the primary formation, the three principal ingredients of which are felspar, quartz and mica. Segregated by the action of the water, they re-formed into the metamorphic. All this was accomplished during the untold millions of azoic years when—" At this point I drowsed, dreamed that, accompanied by the lady to whom I was speaking, I went into 828 Market street, bought some candy, as I had done a few evenings prior, paid for it, came out, and as I reached the sidewalk, felt so sleepy that I staggered, when, not only in my dream, but in reality, I said: "We didn't buy any sleep." The lady assures me that there was scarcely a pause in my conversation, although a marked change in my voice.

This drowsiness continued for more than a week, during which I did not sleep well at night, waking every hour, or sometimes every few minutes. Next came the effect upon both brain and nerves. My mind acted spasmodically, like a contrary horse, one moment springing forward with power, and the next setting back in the breeching. When I tried to lecture I would lose myself, forget the thread of my discourse, and more than once forgot where I was and what I was doing. This phase continued to manifest sufficiently to provoke comment from the reporters of both the Herald and Free Press, in Stockton, two months after I had given up tobacco, and after I had thought myself nearly recovered.

The effect upon my nerves was equally marked. I became impatient, irritable, restless, unable to sit and write, or in fact to keep quiet ten minutes at a time. A game of billiards or cards would fix my attention, but I would forget myself, growl, criticise, and make myself disagreeable generally. There are no doubt several gentlemen at the Yosemite House, Stockton, who will corroborate this statement. A dozen times a day I would go to my room intending to write, but such a repugnance, amounting almost to horror, would come over me that I could not bear to sit down, much less take a pen in my hand. In the mean time, however, my craving appetite had almost entirely subsided.

For the past two weeks, prior to this writing, I have been resting and recuperating, and am now nearly recovered; am able to write from four to six hours per day, and shall resume lecturing within a week. At first I was surprised at the effects upon my nervous system, but upon reflection I am surprised that I did not suffer more. For forty years my system had been fed with the cursed stimulant, thereby rendering it a necessity. Physicians and naturalists have discovered that the human system can accommodate itself to great extremes in all the conditions of life. The old king who feared being poisoned, upon the advice of his physician gradually accustomed his system to various poisons until he could, with impunity, swallow poison enough, daily, to kill fifty men. Nor was this all. He could not suddenly give up his poisons without endangering his life. So, too, with the drunkard: delirium tremens follow the sudden disuse of alcohol at the termination of a "spree." Then is it strange that the disuse of tobacco should have affected me so powerfully?

This article has been written chiefly for the benefit of the young, under the hope that they may be deterred from ever forming the filthy habit, which always proves a nuisance and an injury. As for the old chewers and smokers, I have no hope of reforming them. The most that can be done is to keep them comfortable in their nastiness until they die off; but we should try and save the rising generation from following in their filthy footsteps.

San Francisco, June 8th, 1874.

POOR COOKS.

BY MRS. H. F. M. BROWN.

The New York Nation has put on sackcloth, it has gone into weeds because the women of the world are not better cooks. Listen to the wail:

Women are not naturally good cooks. They have had the cookery of the world in their hands for several thousand years, but all the marked advances in the art, and, indeed, all that can be called the cultivation of it, have been the work of men. Few or no women cook a dinner in an artistic spirit, and their success in doing it is always the result of affection or loyalty—which is, of course, tantamount to saying that female cookery as a whole is and always has been comparatively poor. As a proof of this, we may mention the fact—for fact we think it is—that the art of cooking among women has declined at any given time or place—in the Northern States of the Union, for instance—pari passu with the growth of female independence. That is, as the habit or love of ministering to men's tastes has become weaker, the interest in cookery has fallen off. There are no such cooks among native American women now as there were fifty years ago; and passages in foreign cookery books which assume the existence among women of strong interest in their husbands' and brothers' likings, and a strong desire to gratify them, furnish food for merriment in American households. Bridget, therefore, can plead, first of all, the general incapacity of women as cooks; and secondly, the general falling off in the art under the influence of the new ideas. She imitates American women as closely as she can, and cannot live on the same soil without imbibing their ideas; and unhappily, as in all cases of imitation, vices are more easily and earlier caught than virtues.

What does all this twaddle prove? It proves, if anything, that Nature never intended that woman, the Lord's best creation, should waste her powers over pots and stew-pans. If her mission were, indeed, to boil and bake she would surely equal her brother in the divine art. Our good mother has for us other duties, for which we bless her holy name.

Women who have set fine dinners before men have done the work out of love to creation's lords! So the Nation tells the reading world. That is saying we women have no palate to please. Bitter, sour, sweet, salt and fresh are all the same to us. Our concern has been how will Mr. Black, White and Brown like the roast and pastry. Men, of course, love excellent coffee, with the addition of all good things. They love women too. Do they demand of them menial, uncongenial service? Not all, praise God. Commensurate with woman's independence "the art of cooking has declined;" no such cooks as the dear old world had fifty years ago! It is not complimentary to the men to say that we do not love them for love's sweet sake, but merely because of our dependence. I know one woman who would like to call the Nation a wicked defamer.

Isn't there some mistake in regard to the decline in cooks? Is not the change in men? The men of fifty years ago were temperate, honest, hard-handed and clear-headed. Our fathers looked homeward at set of sun. They turned from the plow, the woods, the workshop, as hearty and hungry as young bears. To them the steaming hominy and bean porridge were savory dishes. Where is the woman who would not delight in cooking for such men? But where are they? These old-time men did not weep and wail over the degeneracy of their wives and mothers; they did not rush into print with their complaints about cooks. The men of to-day congregate at clubs; meet at street corners, in free-lunch saloons, in gold rooms, on exchange. Wonder if they look backward and remember the sturdy men of fifty years ago, and murmur over the degeneracy of the race—over their own lost manhood.

Does the dear Nation or anybody believe that the good God endowed women with certain attributes, which are the ability to stew and brew, and that she is in league with the old serpent—has absolutely sold her birthright to the devil? Are the men ever and evermore to cry for good cooks? And must the answer be, "Woman has departed from the beaten track, and no amount of beating will bring her back"? Poor cooks! Poor cooks!

LETTER FROM MR. YORK.

ORGANIZATION OF A FREE THOUGHT SOCIETY AT SAN DIEGO.

EDITOR COMMON SENSE: I have delayed writing you longer than I intended; but you know my work is of a missionary character, and I find myself often in places without waiting for the formality of being sent for. I am satisfied to take men and things as I find them, and do my work as faithfully as I can, and wait for results. I have no reason to complain, although I meet with many obstacles in the promulgation of free thought, not from the orthodox, for they are a help, as they furnish me with thunder, but from people who should be my open friends, but who, to be respectable, are trailing along in the shadow of orthodoxy. This class affect our cause unfavorably, but they are lost sight of when I meet, as I do, so many others who give warm hearts and hands to aid me in the good work.

I am more than pleased with San Diego. There is a large liberal element here. We organized last Sunday under auspicious circumstances, with much good feeling and apparent desire to harmonize individual differences for the general good. A Board of Management was chosen, of which Mr. Veazie, formerly of San Jose, is President; M. A. Luce, Secretary; and Mrs. Hills, Treasurer. I have had good audiences, and have met with the utmost kindness from the San Diego people.

The San Diego Court-house, the banks, the Horton House, and many other fine blocks, would be a credit to any city on the coast. As to the climate, I believe no better can be found. The city site with its fine outlook over bay and ocean is perfectly beautiful.

The interests of religion have not been forgotten. There are churches, neat and commodious, representing the faith of Episcopal, Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian sects, and I must say society is good. The industries of the county are in a hopeful condition, and farmers are elated with the prospect of good crops.

Find within six names for your excellent paper. I hope the friends of truth will give Common Sense a welcome, and help to sustain it.

San Diego, May 30th.

Digitized by Google J. L. Y.

COMMON SENSE.

W. N. SLOCUM, EDITOR.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, JUNE 13, 1874.

THE business management and editorial work of this paper have heretofore been under charge of the same person; an arrangement which has interfered materially with the proper conduct of the editorial department. Readers will be glad to learn that arrangements are now in progress which will soon relieve the editor of other duties, and enable him to make a much better paper.

THE SERIES OF ARTICLES ON Spiritual Manifestations in London will be resumed next week; also, Mr. Mackie's articles on the Rise and Progress of Spiritual Ideas. An interesting essay on Money will be given also, and several communications on Spiritualism as soon as the space at our disposal will permit. There are so many of the latter that, in order to have a variety of matter in the paper, they are necessarily deferred.

FLORA WELLMAN CHANEY.—Although this lady has been in San Francisco but a few months, still she is already very favorably known as a successful teacher upon the piano. In addition to teaching music, she also gives instruction in elocution, and we learn that quite a prominent lady of this city has commenced studying with her, with the intention of taking the lecture field on the side of liberalism and reform. Miss Dora McCord, the young lecturer who is creating so much sensation in Oregon, received her only instruction from Mrs. Chaney. See her card in another column.

THE ORIGIN OF THE CROSS—A little work of 65 pages, entitled The Masculine Cross and Ancient Sex Worship, by Sha Rocco, has just been published by Asa K. Butts & Co., of New York. It contains within a limited space many facts with which the general reader is unacquainted. Only those who have perused Inman's "Ancient Faiths," Knight's "Worship of Priapus," Layard's "Nineveh," etc., are familiar with the subject. The cross is believed by the author to be a symbol of generation, and he gives many interesting facts to prove his position. The book is for sale by booksellers generally.

ASPIRATION AND REALIZATION is the title of a story in verse for children, written by George G. W. Morgan, and printed in very neat style by Winterburn & Co. It is of three brothers, one of whom was ambitious to be a soldier, the second a man of wealth, and the third "a pure and blameless life" would lead, helping the weak, and aiding every worthy cause. The story tells how the first died on the field of battle; the second grew to be a hard, selfish man, lived unloved and died unregretted, while the third walked in the paths of peace and all his ways were pleasantness. The story is pleasantly told, and conveys a good lesson, which is that virtue and happiness go hand in hand. For sale at the book stores.

LEGISLATION AGAINST WOMEN FOR THE PRESERVATION OF MEN.

The Evening Bulletin, in noticing the discharge of a number of women arrested for violation of the law concerning the employment of women in saloons, says:

The law does not affect women employed to wait upon customers, and can only intervene when females exhibit themselves, promenade, dance, or play upon musical instruments in any place where liquors are sold. Several arrests have previously been made under this Act, but, owing to defective complaints, no convictions have followed. The amended law passed by the last Legislature evidently intended that all women should be excluded from saloons; but the omission to insert the words "nor wait or attend" continues the privileges heretofore accorded to waiter girls. The Board of Supervisors can settle this matter effectually within one week, if so disposed, by passing an ordinance prohibiting women from attending saloons at night. This would immediately cause a suspension of business along the line of the Barbary coast, and result in great good.

If it would be beneficial to pass such an ordinance against women, how much more so would be one prohibiting men from visiting saloons and other places of vile resort at night. This would not only cause "suspension of business along the line of the Barbary Coast," but among all the midnight brothels in San Francisco. It is not true that if women were not allowed in these places, men would not go there. Bar-rooms were more numerous, in proportion to the number of inhabitants, and midnight brawls more common, before women came to this country than they are now. The converse of the proposition is, however, entirely correct, viz: If men were prohibited entering these saloons, the women would certainly not be tempted to go there, and the saloons could not exist. But who is the tempter, and who is the tempted, and which one shall receive the punishment for the crimes of both, has nothing to do with the question. We leave the discussion of such matters to those who settle their disputes in regard to moral questions on biblical authority; but, leaving the matter of simple justice, (which is due as much to a fallen woman as to a fallen man,) entirely out of the question, which is the better law; that which would prevent a few miserable women from committing an act which tends to injure only themselves, or that which would prevent thousands and thousands of men from committing the same act, by which they bring misery, not only upon themselves, but upon others dependent upon them for affection and support?

The ordinance proposed by the Bulletin is not a step in advance of the enactments of the male law-makers hundreds of years ago; in fact, the proposition bears upon its face the same stamp of dogmatic stupidity. When will people learn that laws made to bear against women, for the purpose of benefitting men, are not only grossly unjust, but are entirely inadequate to accomplish the desired result?

The Industrial Monthly suggests that the general adoption of cremation would lead to the effectual concealment of murders.

SUBSCRIBE FOR "COMMON SENSE."

A PERSONAL APPEAL BY PROF. CHANEY.

I send the present number of this new paper to several of my personal friends, and to others of whom I have only heard, with this item marked, hoping that each one will not only subscribe, but try to induce others to do so. And I hope that all who read this, although it is not specially addressed to them, will do the same. The healthy growth and perpetuity of Liberalism depend upon the dissemination of truth, and however important lecturers may be for this work, they are not superior to the press. Yet the masses do not seem to realize this fact, and hence will not do one-tenth for the support of a paper that they will for lectures. I do not mean by this that lecturers are overpaid, but that if either is neglected it is always the paper. I must even accuse the lecturers of not laboring so earnestly for the liberal publications as they should. Remember that I appeal to you for your own sakes and the sake of humanity, not that you should extend your patronage out of sympathy for the publishers, for they are only individuals. It is for the million, the victims of a false theology and contemptible superstition, that I ask your sympathy and your coin. Reader, I have no more pecuniary interest in this paper than you have, so my appeal does not originate from selfish motives. But, as one who loves his fellow man, I have a deep and abiding interest; hence this personal appeal. I shall contribute for its columns gratuitously, which will amount to far more each year than I am asking of you. Will you respond?

W. H. CHANEY.

SPIRITUAL CAMP MEETING.—The Spiritualists of Clackamas county, Oregon, are to hold a camp meeting on the 26th, 27th and 28th of this month. The Association has purchased a tract of five acres of land near the Willamette river, three-quarters of a mile from the Rock Island Station, on the Oregon and California Railroad, where they propose to erect buildings for holding spiritual meetings. The ground has been enclosed, and preparations made for the accommodation of all visitors. Article III. of the constitution of the Society says: "This Society shall never knowingly employ or retain in their employ any missionaries, lecturers, teachers or mediums who are opposed to, or whose teachings may conflict with, the present monogamic marriage laws of this State, or in the United States." * * * At a recent meeting of the Society, the following resolution was adopted: "Whereas, By the teachings of a few and the unqualified misrepresentations of many that Spiritualism is opposed to all marriage laws, and retains and upholds promiscuity between the sexes as a matter of right; therefore, be it resolved, That we, as Spiritualists, repudiate such propositions, and maintain that the monogamic marriage and family relation is not only the basis of happy, prosperous homes, as they should be mutual, sacred and protected, but the foundation alike of well-regulated society and good government." Mrs. Addie Ballou will leave for Oregon in time to be present at the camp meeting.

A TEST FOR CLAIRVOYANTS.

ED. COMMON SENSE: In accordance with your invitation I send herewith an envelope securely sealed with my own seal. It contains the names of one or more deceased persons, with one or more questions addressed to each. I have not the faintest expectation that any medium can make known to you the names and questions contained therein, so long as the one condition, that the envelope shall remain in your possession or within your sight, and unopened, is faithfully observed. I have read hundreds of accounts of spiritual seances within the last twenty years, but have never known of a well authenticated case of the delivery of messages in opposition to the proposition enunciated in my note last week, to the effect that the medium can communicate nothing, except by guess-work, not already known to the party in consultation.

The letter from "Old Man," in your last number, states very clearly the position of a large number of men who are willing to decide upon evidence, but who ask for more severe tests than the limited and monotonous ones furnished to the public in this vicinity.

In the writer's opinion, the common phenomena of Clairvoyance or Spiritualism are without any supermundane basis. They are, however, worthy of the serious attention of scientific people, for truth's sake. The test herein proposed has, you are perhaps aware, been previously offered to Spiritualists, with a reward of $500 dependent upon success; but the money has never yet been earned. X.

If any of our mediumistic friends feel disposed to give this proof of their powers, the editor will call on any of them with the sealed package, when notified to do so. If successful the publication of the fact will be an advertisement worth having.—[Ed. Common Sense.

SUBSCRIBERS who are interested in sustaining this paper can do a great deal by bringing it to the notice of their liberal acquaintances. In this way the subscription list could soon be doubled. There probably is no subscriber who could not, with a little effort, procure at least one new one. While it is now certain that the paper will grow into a wide sphere of usefulness, it is none the less true that its power for good may be impaired and the day of its prosperity greatly delayed by the holding back of radicals who appear to be waiting for its firm establishment before they do anything to aid it. Now is the time. If the Spiritualists and Free Thinkers of this coast really want an organ, let them make the fact manifest in a substantial manner. Pay your subscriptions, and ask others to do the same. Circulate the paper among your friends, and induce one at least to subscribe.

A CELEBRATION in commemoration of the inauguration of the Woman Suffrage movement on this coast will be held in this city on the 27th of July. The Committee of arrangements, selected at a preliminary meeting held on Tuesday, are as follows: Wm. M. Rider, Mrs. Sarah Wallis, Mrs. Adelia McComb, Mrs. M. Hill, Mrs. Olive M. Dawson, Mrs. D. T. Boyer, Prof. Kellogg, Mrs. R. T. Olmstead, and Mrs. A. Smith.

A WOMAN'S DEFENSE OF A WOMAN.

THE TRUTH ABOUT THE FIRST WOODHULL LECTURE IN SAN FRANCISCO.

EDITOR OF COMMON SENSE: I attended the first lecture of Victoria C. Woodhull at Platt's Hall on Monday evening, and I wish to call your attention to the untruthful report of the proceedings there, as rendered by all the papers in this city which condescended to notice it at all. Much capital has been made by these anti-Woodhull reporters, of the hisses, which are said to have been a distinguishing feature of the evening, and described as long, loud and persistent. There were a few faint hisses—no "cat-calls," nor anything approximating to a disturbance of any kind.

No credit was given to Mrs. Woodhull, by these one-sided reporters, for her grace and the splendor of her oratory. In tragic power she is a very Rachel, and there is absolutely no language that could be used in this connection that would be exaggerated. The reporters had evidently prejudged their case. If the Call and Chronicle men had written out their comments—I will not say reports—before they went to the lecture, they would have been quite as applicable and as truthful.

Another great injustice I would notice. The Post speaks of Mrs. Woodhull's "language becoming more and more coarse." In reply to this, I will say that if John Stuart Mill had been addressing an audience on similar subjects, he could not have put his ideas into more fitting and refined language. Mrs. Woodhull expressed herself in language in use among scientific and medical men. And why, let me ask, should any subject affecting the vital interests of humanity be considered unfit to be freely spoken of? If these subjects were more freely spoken of, if the unhealthy morbid mystery attached to them could be removed and they be thrown open for free discussion as any other topic of interest, would it not be to the benefit both of public and private morality? We think nothing of allowing even the young to hear the most obscene passages read from the Bible by clergymen from their pulpits, and yet—oh, glaring and absurd inconsistency!—we are shocked if people are told important physiological truths in the most scientific though plain language, and truths on which the very existence of the race depends.

One thing more. While these self-righteous newspapers are crying down this "Scarlet Woman," it is not irrelevant to remember that these "peculiar views," as they are called, which are advanced by Mrs. Woodhull, were not only held by John Stuart Mill, but are fully endorsed by many of the greatest thinkers of the age. The brightest living intellects look upon all our present institutions—social, political and religious—as merely provisional. They fit—alas! very imperfectly—to the present crude state of things, but just as sure as we are destined to rise higher and higher in the scale of intelligence and of being, so will we gradually cast aside all the trammels of the present, and rise at last to the perfection of glorified humanity.

Victoria C. Woodhull is a century at least in advance of the age. She looks with prophetic vision into the far-off future, and we, in our blindness and superstition, not only fail to comprehend her, but turn upon and persecute her.

There is no city in the United States where she has been so ungenerously and unfairly treated by the press as in this city of San Francisco. And why? Is there no grandeur in moral courage? Is there no sanctity in truth, even if it comes to us in unpalatable words? No one who saw Mrs. Woodhull on Monday night, with face aglow with intellect, with eyes literally burning with the fire of inspiration and of genius, could dare to say that she did not herself believe in the eternal truth of the doctrines she enunciated. She looked, as she walked that platform, like an inspired Pythoness—nay, like something better than that—like the great Apostle of Liberty that she is, preaching a new evangel to down-trodden humanity of every nationality and sex, and proclaiming that the truth shall make us free. Who can doubt that she has set herself apart, literally consecrated herself to her grand work—the work of redeeming man and woman kind from the ignorance and superstition of the ages? And for this, alas! she must pay the penalty of all great reformers. She must wear the martyr's crown, and be persecuted by those who are unworthy to kiss the hem of her garment.

But history will do her justice, and she who is hissed to-day for the noble efforts she is making to redeem suffering humanity, will one day be set upon a pinnacle for the world's worship; for the world has never witnessed a sublimer spectacle than her heroic courage in proclaiming unwelcome truths. She is the grandest woman of the century, if not of the centuries. And in the years to come, no nobler, and, I will venture to predict, no more honored name will figure on the historic page than the name of Victoria C. Woodhull. L.

DR. JOSEPH TREAT, for several months, has desperately besought Mrs. Woodhull to confess herself "a prostitute, a gambler and a black mailer;" in other words, he tearfully begs her to become "a free-lover like him." As other women have done, it is quite natural for Mrs. W. to decline the Doctor's proposals. "Black mailing" is unpopular, especially with the victims. As to that matter, we shall not fret until we hear from the "victims." As to "free-love," when it is to be defined and enforced by authority, as the Doctor and his aids propose to do, it will become an intolerable nuisance. Mrs. Woodhull has simply asserted the right of all, including herself, to manage their own affairs at their own cost. She never has stooped to vindicate herself and never ought to. In this exposure business Dr. Treat is not a success. He is much better fitted to make pills than to preach purity.—The Word, Princeton, Mass.

FRIENDS OF THE LIBERAL CAUSE who desire to take this paper, but do not feel able to spare the money, can assist us and help themselves by canvassing for it among their friends. We will give an extra copy for every club of five advance paying subscribers.

The power to go alone is essential to growth and peace. One cannot shake off personality, or run away from himself by joining a community. On the contrary individuality is developed and assured by free associations.

THE LAW POLICY IN THE POLITICS OF THE UNITED STATES.

OUTLINES OF A LECTURE BY MRS. ADDIE L. BALLOU.

Mrs. Ballou has been speaking during the past month to large audiences in Turnverein Hall, Sacramento, under the auspices of the Spiritual Society of that city. The following, furnished by a Sacramento correspondent, gives the points of her discourse on the Law Policy of this country. The writer says :

Mrs. Ballou's utterances, though bold and censorious in their criticisms, were enthusiastically applauded. The salient points were to the effect that the constitutional basis of the Government of the United States was, first, for the purpose of transmitting to posterity the blessings of liberty; second, to form a more perfect Union; and, third, to establish justice, to ensure domestic tranquility, and to promote the general welfare—otherwise, to secure "the right of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." She asserted that the recognized laws in the civil government of the separate States and of the United States stand impeached by all of the principles here set forth as the fundamental ideas of our government; first, by assuming to dictate how the subjects of the government shall be born, and by banning as "illegitimate" a large per cent. of subjects, whom it afterwards recognizes as sovereigns by granting to them the right of suffrage and conferring on them official position, to say nothing of the imposition of taxes. Under the divine law there are no "illegitimates." Government in the United States to-day also fails to fulfill the assertions of its founders, because it refuses to establish justice and equal rights to all citizens. The declaration that taxation without representation is arbitrary and tyrannical, is ignored. Taxation is made compulsory against woman, without the power of protest by the ballot. The law enforces the sale of her property to pay a compulsory tax, and imprisons or fines her for attempting to remonstrate by offering her ballot. Again, the law gives the ownership (in many States) of the woman, her children and property to the husband, and treats woman as an outlaw and a criminal if in her protest to own herself she becomes a mother while a femme sole. Again, the law inflicts penalties beyond the limit of the just power of lawmakers by inflicting capital punishment—taking life it cannot restore, thus contradicting its own declaration of the right of individuals to "life," etc.

The purpose of law in modern society is to protect society. The purpose of penalties is or should be, first, that the offender shall not repeat the offense; second, to deter others from like crime; and, third, for the reform of the offender. Instead of which, the law authorizes open violation of its purposes by willful and deliberate committal of murder for the unpremeditated committal of the same. It often imprisons and accepts the services of the condemned a length of time far in excess of the enormity of the offense, and in many cases retains in durance vile, awaiting trial and without compensation, parties proven to be innocent. It accepts the labor of convicts without a provision to guard against the suffering of their families, or to prevent their becoming criminals also, in consequence of poverty and the necessity of food. Thus, and in many other ways, does it fail to promote the "general welfare."

The lecturer closed by saying that government and law are not synonymous; that we are afflicted with a superabundance of law, but as yet we are not blessed with much worthy to be called government, and that we can never hope to fulfill the promise of our declarations until man's logical deductions are rounded into symmetrical proportions by the warm sympathy and tender humanity of womanly love.

The speaker gave a number of very pointed illustrations of her theme, and commanded the closest attention from first to last.

LECTURE AND SEANCE.

The first lecture of Mrs. C. Fanny Allen under her present engagement took place at Mercantile Library Hall on Sunday afternoon, the subject being furnished by the audience. Mrs. Allen has not yet recovered her health, and it is evident that her illness has somewhat impaired her voice. Before answering the questions, which were sent up in writing, she said: "We (the spirits) answer from our own experience, and from our own belief based on facts which have come to our knowledge, but we do not give any reply as a finality; the hearers are to analyze them for themselves, and accept only what seems to be true. Spirits are not infallible. In this age of reason it is useless to set up any standard with the expectation of bringing all to be guided by it." She then proceeded to answer various questions, such as: "Is the spirit affected by the disposition of the body—that is, by cremation?" "Can a person vampyrize another without the other's knowledge?" etc. The questions generally were not very good ones, and the answers nothing remarkable. As to vampyrization, the medium said that many persons draw upon the vital forces of others with whom they come into close relations. The person affected may not be aware of it, and may, if the evil is continued, gradually lose strength and vital force, until death ensues. Some who are said to die of consumption, are actually vampyrized to death. When the cause is known, the remedy is to drop the acquaintance of the person, but if this is not practicable, then avoid contact as much as possible. A large number of subjects were treated briefly and in an able though somewhat non-committal style. The spirits do not profess to be omniscient, and can only tell what they know. After the discourse, a seance followed, in which Mrs. McKinley, Mrs. Kerns and others took part. Most of the spirits described were recognized, and several messages, of a common-place order, were accepted by the persons to whom they were addressed.

In the evening Mrs. Allen spoke again on subjects given by the audience. The responses were applicable, and many good points were made and warmly applauded. Both meetings closed with a poem improvised on subjects handed in by the people in the Hall. Mrs. Allen will speak again on Sunday, the 14th, afternoon and evening.

COMMON SENSE.

THE EVIL LIES DEEPER DOWN.

A large mass meeting was held in this city a short time ago on the subject of the eight-hour law. There were bonfires, rockets and music, and some very good speaking; but what did it all amount to? Only this, that those who are able to protect themselves may do so, by organization, association, and by manufacturing public opinion to suit their own purposes; and that all the rest must suffer until they are strong enough to do the same. Now the very essence of this is to array society into a series of hostile camps, in which much time and money must be expended in guarding one against the other. This shows that the instinct of selfishness, the inbred wild animal in man, is not extinguished either in those who would prey upon others or those who would defend themselves from being preyed upon. It is almost as natural, pecuniarily and financially, to live on one another in our present social condition as it is for the Feejee Islanders to do the same in a more literal sense. The evil is greater than any eight-hour law can touch. It can be rectified only by checking the predatory and selfish instincts in ourselves. Could men and women (for to-day women cannot be left out) unselfishly combine, not in a cold, negative manner, to resist oppression, but in a positive manner, according to natural, divine laws, to live the right and the true, not as now, off from but for one another, the result would be moral and financial success. But the trouble is that the preying (not the praying) instinct has been so strongly developed that we are all afraid of one another, and everybody instinctively fears that his neighbor is going to get the advantage of him. It would be a good thing to establish a society for the promotion of faith, not on the beaten track of the church, which has almost forgotten the way itself, but on a new plan—to have faith in the good existing in every man or woman, however much covered up it may be, and to cultivate it by striving for the best possible conditions. The great battle is not between eight hours or ten hours work a day, but between selfishness and unselfishness everywhere.

E. HUGHES.

It has been my intention, for several years past, to publish my thoughts upon religion. I intended it to be the last offering I should make to my fellow-citizens of all nations, and that at a time when the purity of the motive that induced me to it could not admit of a question, even by those who might disapprove the work. * * * I believe in one God, and no more; and I hope for happiness beyond this life. * * * I believe in the equality of man; and I believe that religious duties consist in doing justice, loving mercy, and endeavoring to make our fellow-creatures happy. * * * But some perhaps will say, "Are we to have no word of God—no revelation?" I answer, Yes: there is a word of God; there is a revelation. The word of God is the creation we behold; and it is in this word, which no human invention can counterfeit or alter, that God speaketh universally to man. * * * It preaches to all nations and to all worlds; and this word of God reveals to man all that is necessary for man to know of God. Do we want to contemplate his power? We see it in the immensity of the Creation. Do we want to contemplate his wisdom? We see it in the unchangeable order by which the incomprehensible whole is governed. Do we want to contemplate his munificence? We see it in the abundance with which he fills the earth. Do we want to contemplate his mercy? We see it in his not withholding that abundance even from the unthankful. In fine, do we want to know what God is? Search not the book called the Scripture, which any human hand might make, but the Scripture called the Creation.—Age of Reason, 1794.

"ANONYMA;"

OR, COMMON SENSE'S "DEAD MATTER."

"Drowned! drowned!"—Hamlet.

It is a curious fact that those persons who are the foremost and the most bitter in denunciation of the theory of "Free Love," are ever precisely those who are the most zealous and constant in its practice.

"Virtue"—on "Open Letter's" page— Holds his blaspheming jaws, Whilst "Victory" from the "Social Pool" A smothered kitten draws.	Unfeline man! he now pretends To shun that kitten's scent;— 'Tis false,—to draw it out himself The hypocrite but meant.
A puss with sleek and silken hair, Soft purr, and pensive face; But poisoned claws, and tainted teeth, Like all her treacherous race.	To take it home; eat stinking flesh, Then stuff its hideous hide; And weep that with improving years His little cat had died.
And "Victory" plucks it from the pool, And shows that it is dead; Male "Virtue" hides his starting tears, —His joy, his darling's sped!	Flesh of his flesh this kitten was; Bone of his very bone; But then, you see, the sly dog wished To cat-er-waul alone.
Hired Prostitution, thou art gone— Anonyma, no more, [ing waves, Drowned in Free Thought's o'erwhelm- Thou'lt haunt the social shore.	He'd sworn no She should interfere With fellness so divine; That Male Humanity should stand Alone, at "Free Love's" shrine!
Yet why should "Virtue" be so moved At this cat-astrophy? Nay—'twas his own, his favorite cat That nestled on his knee!	Since he and "Open Letter" both, —However French and loose— Deem sauce for ganders such as they, No sauce for any goose.

ANONYMOUS AND SIN-ON-A-MOUSE.

In laying the corner stone of the new Tribune Building Geo. Ripley said: "The ceremony which is now about to be performed typifies the union of spiritual agencies with material conditions, and thus possesses a significance and beauty which anticipate the character of the coming age. The future which lies before us, it is perhaps not presumptuous to affirm, will be marked by a magnificent synthesis of the forces of material Nature and the power of spiritual ideas. About ten years before the establishment of The Tribune, dating from the death of Hegel in 1831, and of Goethe in the following year, the tendency of thought on the continent of Europe, which had been of an intensely ideal or spiritual character, began to assume the opposite direction. Physical researches rapidly took precedence of metaphysical speculation. Positive science was inaugurated in the place of abstract philosophy. The spiritual order was well nigh eclipsed by the wonderful achievements of the new order. A new dynasty arose which knew not Joseph, and the ancient names of Plato and Descartes and Leibnitz were dethroned by the stalwart host that took possession. I need not rehearse the splendid discoveries which have signalized this period. Such acquisitions to the treasury of positive human knowledge have never been made in an equal time in the history of thought. More light has been thrown on the material conditions of our existence on earth than has been enjoyed before since the morning stars sang together. But the signs of the times indicate the commencement of a reaction. The age accepts the results of physical research, but refuses to regard them as the limit of rational belief. In resolving matter into molecules, and molecules into atoms, the most illustrious cultivators of physical science cheerfully confess that they arrive at invisible forces which no crucible can analyze, no microscope detect, no arithmetic explain. The alleged materialism of Tyndall and Huxley thus affords an unexpected support to the idealism of Berkeley."

GEN. WINN is announced to speak at Dashaway Hall on Sunday afternoon, before the Society for Self-Culture. Subject, the Eight Hour Law.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE RECORDING SECRETARY OF THE CALIFORNIA STATE BOARD OF CONTROL.

The following report, recently made by Mrs. Mary Snow, Recording Secretary, has not been published in any report of the proceedings of the late convention :

During the past year the Board has held thirty-six meetings, four of which were quarterly, eleven special, and twenty-one adjourned. The preliminary action of the Board in coming together, was the election of additional members, and new officers in sympathy with our aims, who bringing with them fresh enthusiasm helped to strengthen and cheer the hitherto active members, who forthwith proceeded to the accomplishment of their work. Thus reinforced, with unabated zeal have we been legitimately though quietly pursuing the interests of the Society that were committed to our charge. Unity of purpose and unbroken harmony of action have characterized our sessions, which have been occupied in devising plans for the furtherance of the cause. Accordingly, at our meeting of May 9th, a brief circular, urging the suffragists of California to united action and seeking to arouse enthusiasm in our ranks, and to create public sentiment in favor of woman's enfranchisement, signed by the President and Secretary, was adopted by the Board, and circulated by postal card throughout the State. At our regular quarterly meeting of June 27th another comprehensive and carefully prepared official document, signed by all the officers of the Board, was adopted, designed more especially to influence the action of the nominating committees for the California Legislature. This also was extensively circulated throughout the State, and sent to each member of the several nominating legislative committees, accompanied by a brief note calling attention to the disabilities of woman, and expressing the hope that in their selection of candidates her claims would not be ignored. Frequently also the more prominent members were visited by special committees of ladies from our Board, urging upon them the importance of the suffrage movement; also the consideration of our educational and property rights; and generally an appreciative sympathy with our aims has been expressed, which is a pleasing indication of the rapid growth of public sentiment upon the subject. On October 4th a special meeting was called to listen to a communication from Lucy Stone, inviting us to send delegates from our Society to the fifth annual meeting of the American Women Suffrage Association, to be held in New York, and also requesting for that occasion a report of our work in California. We responded by the appointment of Mrs. E. C. Sargent, then in Washington, as our delegate, and by instructing the Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. Mary J. Collins, to furnish a synopsis of our labors in the past; also by a telegram of friendly greeting, signed by Mrs. M. A. Lewis, President of the Board of Control, and a letter from Mrs. Mary F. Snow, its Recording Secretary. This action resulted in the appointment of Hon. A. A. Sargent and Mrs. M. A. Lewis as their Vice Presidents for California, and of Mary J. Collins as a member of their Executive Committee.

At subsequent meetings of the Board woman suffrage petitions to Congress and the California Legislature were adopted, and finally forwarded to Washington and Sacramento. The petition to Congress was received and presented to that body by Hon. A. A. Sargent, and subsequently referred to an appropriate committee. The petition to our California Legislature was presented by Hon. Henry Edgerton in the Senate, and by Hon. W. A. Aldrich in the Assembly, and also referred to a joint committee of both Houses. It urged three points: Woman's eligibility to official position on educational boards and clerical offices; her property rights; and a constitutional amendment conferring the ballot. It was sent to Sacramento early in December. The Board asked for no oral hearing before the committee; yet through personal calls upon members of the Legislature, previous to their convening at Sacramento, by a special committee of ladies appointed for the purpose, and also by frequent correspondence with them during the whole period of their sessions, through our Corresponding Secretary, urging them to "respectful consideration" and action in regard to the claims of woman, aided by the efforts of an independent delegation of ladies from Santa Clara county, our legislators were induced to pass an educational bill, and also one in relation to our property rights. But so protracted was the discussion upon those points before the final assage, that no time was given to the clause in our petition referring to the ballot; other questions, to them of paramount importance, claiming the last hours of the Legislative session. Yet for the advocacy of our cause, so far as considered, we are especially grateful to Messrs. Edgerton, Roach and Pendegast, of the Senate, and to Messrs. Aldrich, Barton, Coggins and others, of the Assembly; and as patiently as we can we await the "good time coming" when the further privilege of the ballot, removing all our disabilities, shall be granted.

Early in January letters were addressed by our indefatigable Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. Mary J. Collins, to each of the Pacific Coast Senators repudiating the Frelinghuysen Utah bill, and urging them to energetic action for its defeat; and the closing effort of the Board was the adoption of resolutions opposing the Congressional disfranchising movement, to be forwarded to each member from the Pacific coast, and also a brief memorial thereon to Congress, to be presented to that body by our distinguished friend and coadjutor, Hon. A. A. Sargent.

Thus have we steadily aimed, according to our highest judgment, faithfully to discharge the duties devolving upon us, trusting that our labors may be ultimately crowned with success. Respectfully submitted by

MARY F. SNOW,

Rec. Sec. Cal. State Board of Control.

Children are shut up in the school-room as the place where knowledge is caught and confined for them to get. But near by is the record of the tremendous hammer that has pounded the hills into boulders, pebbles, gravel, sand; of the old ice-cap Mother Earth wore on her head for a million of years, melting with climatic change; of cakes of frost as vessels bearing cargoes of stone to scatter along the shore; of scratches from pre-Adamite avalanches on primeval rock. But the little human Adam is never taken to this show, knows not what a theatre bigger than his little stage with a green curtain he is always in; understands not the compass, and cannot tell the North Star. We say hush! little folks should be seen and not heard, with a sort of soul-murder quenching the spirit of curiosity, when their queries put our acquisitions of knowledge or character to the test. So they grow up after and like us, without chemistry enough to cook a meal, or skill to row a boat, or harness a horse in haste for the doctor, or knowledge to restore one from a fainting fit, or hold the blood in an artery, or rescue any mortal in body or soul.—Bartol.

England's latest glory is her triumph over a few unarmed, half-naked negroes in Ashantee—a war without just cause, and with no other result than the burning of an African city, constructed by a people slowly struggling towards civilization. Christianity gains nothing by such raids

[For Common Sense.]
MY MOTHER.

BY H. WINCHESTER.

To me there's no name on earth half as sweet
As mother, dear mother, whose kindness and care
Watched o'er my childhood and guided my feet
To Truth's living fountain each evening in prayer.
Thrice sweet to my soul is her memory now,
When age with its iron hand presses me down,
Has whitened my hair and furrowed my brow,
In breasting life's storms, its strife and its frown.
Now oft in the darkness of doubt and despair
I hear her dear voice of hope and of love,
And I know she is by me, for soft on the air
I hear a sweet strain from the mansions above.
The love of a mother no change ever knows;
In life and in death, 'tis ever the same;
O'er the child she has nursed love's mantle she throws,
Though sunk in the depths of sin and of shame.
Oh! mother! what hallowed memories rise
As I gaze through the mist of years passed away;
Though an angel of light in the summer-land skies,
Yet I feel thou art near me day after day.
Yes, mother, dear mother, I feel thy soft hand,
Leading and guiding my way on the land,
So gloomy and dark, to that beautiful land
Whose gates are ajar and whose maker is God.

Lower Lake, California.

[From the Golden Age.]
SOWING FOR ETERNITY.

Though humble be the field and the endeavor
O brother mine, thou sowest every day
Seeds, of which fruitage shall exist forever
To reproduce and reproduce, for aye.
Whate'er thy walk, whate'er thy social standing;—
Whate'er thy contact with humanity;—
Whate'er thy influence, less, or more commanding,
That influence is the germ of fruit to be.
Ah! if in love of truth thou grapplest error,
However popular that error be,— Accepting loss of favor without terror,—
Truth's harvest waits thee in futurity.
We're sowing seeds in high and lowly places;
We're sowing seeds of honor or of shame;
Of truth and goodness, from a moral basis;
Or else to falsehood and each kindred name.
If every word breathes love and hope and duty;
And every deed a thought beyond ourself;
A life so lived as blossoming in beauty,
Richer than millions of your hoarded pelf.
Thus living for the future; thought sublimest!
For the wide cycles of eternity
To human workers, impulses, the divinest,
For good, immortal, in earth's destiny.
How blest shall be the soul that lifts the lowly,
And sends sweet hope into the darkest cell
Scattering seeds, that germinate, if slowly,
And of an upward tendency shall tell.
What bloom, what harvest for such labor waiting
In the eternal destiny of man;
This is the seed time, in the present dating,
We all are workers in the general plan.
Workers for joy eternal, or for sorrow,—
As good we sow, or evil, every day,—
Working for a triumphant bright to-morrow,
Or for our own regret, reproach, dismay.
Oh! if we are inspired by holy feeling
With love of goodness for its lovely sake,
Sweet charity like sun-beams o'er us stealing,
What lovely lives such inspirations make!
May purest love from baser influence free us
And lift our spirits to that upper air
Where, by reflected light, the world shall see us
Transparent, as the truth, whose shield we wear.
That aspiration from the father given,
A thirst for goodness, all our souls for aye!
Loving and serving, thus begins our heaven,
And thus its kingdom in our hearts alway.

Washington, D. C. March 6, 1874.

M. A. B.

The sun set; but set not his hope:
Stars rose; his faith was earlier up:
Fixed on the enormous galaxy,
Deeper and older seemed his eye:
And matched his sufferance sublime

The taciturnity of time.
He spoke, and words more soft than rain
Brought the Age of Gold again:
His action won such reverence sweet,
As hid all measure of the feat.

FALLOW.

Above, below me, on the hill,
Great fields of grain their fulness fill;
The golden fruit bends down the trees;
The grass stands high round mowers' knees;
The bee pants through the clover beds,
And cannot taste of half the heads;
The farmer stands with greedy eyes,
And counts his harvest's growing size.
Among his fields so fair to see,
He takes no count, no note, of me.
I lie and bask, along the hill,
Content and idle, idle still.
My lazy silence never stirred
By breathless bee or hungry bird;
All creatures know the cribs which yield;
No creature seeks the fallow field.
But to no field on all the hill
Come sun and rain with more good will;
All secrets which they bear and bring
To wheat before its ripening,
To clover turning purple red,
To grass in bloom or mowers' tread—
They tell the same to my bare waste,
But never once bid me to haste.
Winter is near, and snow is sweet;
Who knows if they be seeds of wheat
Or clover, which my bosom fill?
Who knows how many Summers will
Be needed, spent, before one thing
Is ready for my harvesting?
And after all, if all were laid
Into sure balances and weighed,
Who knows if all the gain and get
On which hot human hearts are set
Do more than mark the drought and dearth
Through which this little dust of earth
Come sun and rain with more good will;
Must lie and wait in God's great hand,
A patient bit of fallow land?

THROUGH LIFE.

We slight the gifts that every season bears,
And let them fall unheeded from our grasp;
In our great eagerness to reach and clasp
The promised treasure of the coming years.

Or else we mourn some great good passed away,
And in the shadow of our grief shut in,
Refuse the lesser good we might win,
The offered peace and gladness of to-day.

So through the chambers of our life we pass,
And leave them one by one, and never stay,
Not knowing how much pleasure there was
In each, until the closing of the door
Has sounded through the house, and died away,
And in our hearts we sigh, "For evermore."

TREASURE.

Ben Selim had a golden coin one day,
Which he put out at interest with a Jew;
Year after year awaiting him it lay,
Until the golden coin two pieces grew;
And these to four; so on till people said,
"How rich Ben Selim is!" and bowed the servile head.

Ben Adhem had a golden coin that day,
Which to a stranger, asking aims, he gave—
Who went rejoicing on his unknown way.
Ben Adhem died—too poor to own a grave—
But when his soul reached Heaven, angels with pride
Showed him the wealth to which his coin had multiplied.

Nature never did betray
The heart that loved her: 'tis her privilege,
Through all the years of this our life, to lead
From joy to joy: for she can so inform
The mind that is within us, so impress
With quietness and beauty, and so feed
With lofty thoughts, that neither evil tongues,
Nor judgments, nor the sneers of selfish men,
Nor greetings where no kindness is, nor all
The dreary intercourse of daily life,
Shall e'er prevail against, or disturb
Our cheerful faith that all which we behold
Is full of blessings.

For the very best Photographs go to Bradley & Bulofson's Gallery, with an elevator, 429 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

A. Provo Kluit's new style of Photo-crayon Portraits is only made at the Florence Gallery, No. 28 Third Street, San Francisco. Price from $25 to $30. Beware of imitations.

Drs. Rutley & Streeter's "Prince of Blood Purifiers" eradicates all corrupt humors from the blood, however they may have been caused, rejuvenates the exhausted forces, and restores, unfailingly, the vigor of those debilitated by all excesses. Try it. Head office, 745 Mission Street, San Francisco.

A new style of inkstand has been invented, made of heavy glass, not liable to break, and so constructed as not to spill the ink when tipped over. Indeed the way to keep the air out at night is to turn it upside down. It is more easily cleaned than any other inkstand, and needs cleaning less, and as it contains a receptacle for sediment, the ink is always clear and fresh. E. Carter, 636 Sacramento street Room 4, is the sole agent for this coast.

COMMON SENSE.

A Journal of Live Ideas.

Vol. 1.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, JUNE 20TH, 1874.

No. 6.

COMMON SENSE,

ISSUED WEEKLY BY THE

COMMON SENSE PUBLISHING COMPANY

A. T. CLARK, BUSINESS MANAGER.

Three Dollars per Annum, In Advance.

OFFICE, 236 MONTGOMERY ST.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

Buddhism and Spiritualism Compared.—Dr. Baylis .....	64
Spiritual Phenomena (No 4)—Medicus .....	65
Letter from Another "Old Man" .....	65
Free Love—Mrs Woodhull .....	66
Spirits and the Inexplicable—J. W. Mackie .....	67
What Dr Cunningham Preaches—Ed'l .....	69
The Cressco Community .....	69
Mrs. Woodhull in San Jose .....	70
Mrs. Gore's Lecture .....	70
Thoughts suggested by reading Poe's "Eureka"—Catharine Windge .....	71
Character of God—R. ply to C.E.S. .....	71
Notes from Correspondents .....	72
Recent Publications .....	72
Capital and Labor—H. B. Brown .....	73
The Eight Hour Law .....	73

AGENTS FOR COMMON SENSE.

Contra Costa Co., E. H. Kimball, Antioch.
Montrey Co., W. M. Wilson, Salinas City.
Inyo Co., Mrs. L. Hutchinson, Bishop Crk.
Yolo County, J. G. Hudson, Woodland.
San Bernardino, Dr. J. P. Greves, Riverside.
Santa Cruz Co., Mrs. Georgiana B. Kirby.
Sonoma Co., Thomas Pollard, Stony Point.
Santa Barbara Co., Mrs. Clara R. Crane.
Contra Costa Co., E. H. Kimble, Antioch.
Sacramento, A. S. Hopkins, No. 70 J street.
Ventura, J. W. Stevens, San Buenaventura.
San Joaquin Co., W. S. Sturgeon, Stockton.
Travelling Agents: Abby W. Baker, Prof. W. H. Chaney, J. L. York, I. I. Ferres, Addie L. Ballou, H. F. M. Brown.

NOTICE OF REMONAL.

DR. F. S. VASLIT, of 515 Kearny St., desire: to inform his numerous friends, and the public in general, that, owing to the increase of his business, he has taken Rooms at

NUMBER 310 KEARNY STREET, which he will occupy on and after the 1st day of July, and where he will be pleased to meet all his former patrons; Office hours from 11 A.M. until 5 P.M. 6

THE UNITED STATES SHIPPING COMMISSIONER'S OFFICE, No. 118 Jackson st. N. E. cor of Front st.

H. G. FISKE,

METAL AND ASPHALTUM ROOFER, 809 Market St. (opposite Stockton), SAN FRANCISCO.

Standing Groove Roofing, of Tin and Copper. Galvanized Iron Pipes, for Artesian Wells and Miners' Use. Gutters and Chimneys, of Tin, Copper and Lead. Slate Roofs made in every style. Galvanized Iron Chimneys. Chimney-Tops and Ventilators. Job Work of every description in Metals. 4

Business Cards.

FLORA WELLMAN CHANEY,
TEACHER OF ELOCUTION
AND INSTRUMENTAL MUSIC,
409 Stevenson St., San Francisco, Cal.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,
PAPER MANUFACTURERS, 416 Clay street, San Francisco.

PRINTING, MANILLA, HARDWARE AND STRAW PAPERS.
PAPER BAGS, TWINE, ETC.

R. E. SWAIN. E. E. ROBINSON.
THE ORIGINAL SWAIN'S BAKERY.
Established, 1856.
No. 213 Sutter St., San Francisco.

STUDENTS' HOME,
—BY—
MRS. H. A. ANDERSON, SAN JOSE.

A Boarding House for Young Men of the Normal School.
At the foot of Third Street, South, in Reed's Addition.

ANTIQUARIAN BOOK STORE,
146 Second St., San Francisco.
I. N. CHOYNSKI,
Importer of Old and New Books, School
Books, Novels, Stationery, and Fancy
Goods, at Wholesale and Retail. Subscriptions received for all Eastern and European Publications.
Old Books Bought, Sold and Exchanged.

JAS. BATTERSBY,
WATCHMAKER AND JEWELER,
No. 13 THIRD STREET,
(Adjoining Nucleus Building)
San Francisco.

WOMAN'S PUBLISHING CO.,
STEAM BOOK AND JOB PRINTING,
No. 511 SACRAMENTO STREET.
All work done in the best manner, at the lowest rates.
EMILY ROBBINS, Supt.

L. H. VAN SCHAICK,
ATTORNEY AND COUNSELOR AT LAW,
ROOM 22 Sherman's Building, 606
Montgomery Street, San Francisco.
References: James Denman, City Superintendent of Schools; Jacob Salomon,
Broker, 502 Kearny St.; W. Warner Henry
& Co., Wholesale Grocers, 421 Clay St.

ALL KINDS OF PRINTING
Done promptly and in good style by
B. F. STERETT,
532 Clay street, over S. F. Market.
AGENTS WANTED IN EVERY TOWN on the Pacific Slope, to canvass for
"COMMON SENSE."

Miscellaneous.

PROF. W. H. CHANEY.
Permanent Address,
409 Stevenson St., San Francisco. 409

THE PROFESSOR LECTURES UPON
Scientific and Philosophical subjects generally, making a specialty of ASTRONOMY,
which he illustrates with Oil Paintings and Scientific Apparatus that cost over $1,000. He maintains that the characters of the Bible, even including Christ, never had an existence any more than Santa Claus. That there is not one line of history in the Illiad any more than there is in the sad account of "Jack and Gill."
That the Ancient Mythologies, among which the Bible ranks, are all founded in Astronomy and Astrology. Clergymen and Scholars are challenged to meet him in public debate on these issues.
Lectures directed as above, should he be out of the city, will be forwarded. The Professor is thoroughly learned in the science of Astrology, as practiced by the ancients. Persons giving the hour of birth correctly can apply for Nativities by letter; otherwise a personal interview is necessary. No charge unless satisfaction is given.

WOODWARD'S GARDENS

EMBRACING
The Marine Aquarium,
The Museum,
The Art Gallery,
The Menagerie,
The Conservatories,
The Aviary,
The Park and
The Amphitheatre.

Grand Performance and Concert every SATURDAY AND SUNDAY.
New attractions every week, which will be duly announced. The Trained Animals and Skating every day. 2*

AGENCY FOR A. BURDETT SMITH'S Paper Patterns, with Cloth Models.

MRS. H. N. NORCROSS,
Masonic Temple, 4 Post St.

Ladies can be accommodated with the latest styles, just received. Send Stamp for Catalogue.
Instant Dress Elevator.

DR. J. P. BACKESTO,
SAN JOSE.
OFFICE, 253 Santa Clara St., Residence,
91 First St. Special attention given to the cure of Chronic Diseases of either sex. Diseases of the Nose, Windpipe, Bronchial Tubes and Lungs, cured by medicated inhalations. Consultations held in the English and German Languages. Office hours from 9 to 11 A.M., and 2 1/2 to 5 P.M.

Medical.

AMERICAN
SURGERY AND DISPENSARY
(Established in 1863),
601 CALIFORNIA ST., SAN FRANCISCO,
Under the Management of
DR. S. HASTINGS HALL.

DR. HALL, HAVING LATELY REturned from Europe, where he has visited the principal hospitals and consulted with the leading minds of the medical profession, offers his professional services with confidence to those who are in need of a careful, experienced and reliable physician.
During his residence abroad Dr. HALL examined all the new curative agents and improved methods of treatment now being adopted by the medical profession. Prominent among these is the use of Electricity, as applied through the

HORSE-SHOE MAGNET, which has been found to be by far the best and safest mode of using this powerful remedial agent. Since his return from Europe Dr. HALL has had one constructed for him (by Mr. Fields, of this city), capable of sustaining a weight of five hundred pounds; and by which, when used in connection with his great constitutional remedies, he has obtained astonishing results, as a multitude of testimonials, now in his office fully prove. In cases of

RHEUMATISM, NEURALGIA, and kindred diseases (so prevalent in San Francisco), experience is daily proving its value; while in those cases (far from infrequent) of

PREMATURE DECAY
of mind and body, in which a relaxed state of the whole nervous system shows itself by the failure of some one organ to properly perform its functions, this mode of using electricity is found to be invaluable in restoring tone to the relaxed tissues and vigor to the system.

To ladies who desire medical advice, whether in relation to those diseases which all flesh is heir to, or those peculiar to their sex, DR. HALL'S long experience guarantees prompt and skillful treatment.
Persons living in the country can be treated by letter. Address,

DR. S. HASTINGS HALL,
601 California Street,
San Francisco.

WM. SHEW'S
—NEW—

Photographic Establishment,
No. 115 KEARNY STREET,
San Francisco.

This well known "Palace of Art," formerly located on Montgomery street, No.
417, is now on Kearny street, No. 115, and has no connection with any other. Strangers visiting the city will find it for their interest to patronize this establishment for any kind of pictures, from miniature to life size.

N. B.—The very best Rembrandt Cards, album size, $2 per box; equal to any that cost $4 per doz. on Montgomery street;
other sizes equally low in proportion.

COMMON SENSE.

Fire Extinguisher.

ABSOLUTELY THE BEST PROTECTION AGAINST FIRE!

Over 2,000 Fires Put Out!
More than $10,000,000 of Property Saved!

THE BABCOCK
FIRE EXTINGUISHER

THE FIRE DEPARTMENTS IN THE PRINCIPAL CITIES use them daily. Adopted by the Government.

Invaluable for Railroads, Ships, Mines, Hotels, Factories, Stores, Dwellings, and to Farmers. For the latter it is also a sure Exterminator of Squirrels and Gophers. Are safe, simple, and always ready.

Entirely DIFFERENT and SUPERIOR to any other machine ever introduced on this Coast.

BABCOCK
SELF-ACTING ENGINES.

From 70 to 200 gallons capacity. Cost $2,000 to $3,500—one-half the cost and weight of a steamer. Require no water-works. Over 200 of them sold in the United States. Send for their Record.

BABCOCK
HOOK AND LADDER TRUCKS
For Towns and Villages,
AN ENGINE AND TRUCK COMBINED.

MURDOCK, TAYLOR & CO.,
General Agents for the Pacific Coast.

CROFUTT'S LIFE
Protector for Firemen, Miners, Foundries, Spice, Lead and Plaster Mills.

DOWNER'S
CLEANING AND POLISHING OIL,
For all kinds of Bright Metals. Gives a bright lustre that remains for a long time. Superior to any other oil or polish in the world. Valuable to Fire Departments, Ships, Factories, and Families.

Hose, Buckets, Lanterns, Uniform and Fire Supplies of all kinds on hand and made to order, at the lowest figures, by

MURDOCK, TAYLOR & CO.,
312 California Street.

Sewing Machines.

ENTIRELY NEW.

HOME
SEWING MACHINE.

SO PERFECTLY SIMPLE THAT A child can understand and run it. The Best because the simplest, the lightest to run, and the easiest to understand.

ALWAYS IN ORDER. GUARANTEE PERPETUAL.
Send for a Circular.

Mme. Demorest's reliable Paper Out Patterns. Send for a Catalogue.

E. W. HAINES, Agent,
17 New Montgomery St.
(Grand Hotel Building.) 2-14

WILSON
SEWING MACHINE.

HIGHEST PREMIUM

AT THE WORLD'S FAIR, VIENNA, 1873.

THE WILSON SEWING MACHINE is the oldest Machine in the market, and has been thoroughly tried and tested; it stands to-day the acknowledged leader of the great army of Sewing Machines, and is prime favorite in the hearts of the people. It is simple to handle, as durable as iron and steel can make it, unexcelled in price. See that you get the genuine article from the authorized agent, as unauthorized parties are making an inferior and fraudulent Machine. All genuine Machines have the PATENT TRADE-MARK riveted on the arm.

THE WILSON EXCELSIOR is the best Cloth and Leather Manufacturing Machine in the World, none excepted. We court and defy competition.

G. A. NORTON,
General Agent for the Pacific Coast,
337 Kearny St., [2] San Francisco.

THE NEW IMPROVED
Florence Sewing Machine.

Agency established on the
THE NEW IMPROVED
FLORENCE
SEWING MACHINE.
Pacific Coast in 1863.

SIDE FEED AND BACK FEED.

The lightest running, most simple, and most easily operated Sewing Machine in the market.

ALWAYS IN ORDER AND READY FOR WORK.

If there is a Florence Machine within one thousand miles of San Francisco not working well, I will fix it without any expense to the owner.

SAMUEL HILL, Agent,
19 New Montgomery St.,
(Grand Hotel building) San Fran.

New Books.

The Great Literary Wonder!

THE MYSTERY OF EDWIN DROOD.

By the Spirit Pen of

CHARLES DICKENS.

THE MOST FASCINATING AND ABSORBING Novel that ever came from the pen of the eminent novelist.

This great story, begun by the gifted author while still among us, has been finished by Thomas P. James, of Brattleboro, Vermont. He affirms that the

SPIRIT OF CHARLES DICKENS

Finished the story through him as a medium; and if this is not true, the book is the greatest

LITERARY CURIOSITY

Extant—the latter part being in no way inferior to the first, and written in the peculiar and inimitable style which has always distinguished the works of that brilliant writer.

TWENTY-SIX THOUSAND COPIES Have already been sold, and the demand continues unabated.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

The style, to the very minutia of chapter headings, is thoroughly Dickensian.—[Boston Traveler,

It is a deeply interesting psychological phenomenon, to say the least—explain it how you will.—[Christian Union.

Whatever the truth may be concerning the authorship of the larger portion of the work, the fact that it is so thoroughly in Dickens' style as to almost defy criticism, is admitted by many of the ablest critics. [Toledo Journal.

The interest of the story is well sustained. The characters are generally consistent with themselves and in harmony with the peculiarities ascribed to them in the first part; while the new characters introduced are strongly drawn, standing out clear before the mind's eye like living persons.—[S. F. Bulletin.

The imitations are striking; the characters, as foreshadowed by their author, well sustained, and the new personages introduced are in each and every case admirably drawn. The working out of the plot is, under the circumstances, a marvel of ingenuity and cleverness, and there are many touches of real feeling scattered throughout the second half of this book almost worthy of the great man himself. [Inter-Ocean.

The great lesson of the book is, that a man's sins are sure to find him out, and that men ought to forgive rather than avenge with their own hands the crimes perpetrated against them. It thus teaches the highest Christian lesson that can be taught on the subject. And no book that I have ever read presents more beautiful and hopeful views on the subject of death. [Aurora Advertiser.

If Charles Dickens, in propria persona, wrote The Mystery of Edwin Drood up to a given chapter, and then if Thomas P. James in his persona propria took up the tale where Mr. Dickens left off, I will hazard my reputation as a critic on the internal evidences of authorship, by challenging the world, or the shrewdest man in it, to tell, if he did not know beforehand, where Dickens left off and James commenced.—[Prof. T. B. Taylor, of Chicago.

Each one of the dramatic persons is as distinctly, as characteristically himself and nobody else, in the second part as in the first, and in both we know them, feel for them, laugh at them, admire or hate them, as so many creatures of flesh and blood, which, indeed, as they mingle with us in the progress of the story they seem to be. Not only this, but we are introduced to other people of the imagination, and become, in like manner, thoroughly acquainted with them. These people are not duplicates of any in the first portion; neither are they commonplace; they are creations. Whose creations?—[Springfield Union.

We have seen several "notices" of the book, all of which spoke of it disparagingly, and all, we venture to say, were penned without reading a single chapter of the portion condemned. We have no hesitation in saying that we do not believe the most intelligent person, not having read the first portion of the story, can commence it and in going through tell where the live Dickens left off or where Mr. James (for the dead Dickens) began. [Vox Populi, Lowell, Mass.

The great literary sensation of the season seems to be the completion of the Mystery of Edwin Drood, by the spirit of Charles Dickens, through a medium, at least so claimed. The admirers of Dickens find themselves in a strange puzzle. The best and most intelligent admirers and critics of the great author find it impossible to determine where Dickens alive stopped writing, and where Dickens dead commenced. Is it not a little remarkable that those most familiar with Dickens' style cannot detect at what point—what chapter—the "medium" begins the continuation of Edwin Drood? The style, the headings to chapters, the names of characters, are all Dickensian. If it is a fraud it is more marvelous, mysterious and puzzling than any phenomena of Spiritualism that we have ever been asked to believe. There can be no denying the fact that the portion of it written since Dickens' death has the real Dickens flavor. [Lawrence Tribune.

The Mystery of Edwin Drood, purporting to have been completed through the mediumship of T. P. James, is before us, read and digested. Resting upon an assumption of its continuation by the great novelist, we expected to meet with some evidence of Mr. James' own individuality. We are not sure but this may be apparent, yet when we consider how smoothly and consistently the undeveloped plot is brought out, and the mystery solved; how admirably the characters are sustained, on the whole; how the Billickin and Twinkleton warfare seems so characteristic of Dickens; how wonderfully suggestive of him the great shadowy something that clothes with Jasper and sends him forth from the presence of his child a maniac, and how the death-bed of the precocious Beesie reminds us of little Nell, though very unlike—when we reflect upon these things, we can at least say that if we were so bigoted, or knew so little of spirit control, as would not permit us to acknowledge this for Dickens, we should, with Mrs. Sapee, be forced to appreciate mind, not as manifested by a bapsee, but a James.—[Cleveland Lyceum.

THIS INTERESTING BOOK

Will be sent by mail, postpaid, from this office, on receipt of the dealers' price, $2 25 coin. A Postoffice Order for $2 50 in currency will pay for book and postage.

Address
W. N. SLOCUM,
Office of COMMON SENSE,
236 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

BOOKS! BOOKS! BOOKS!

ARRANGEMENTS HAVE BEEN MADE
by which I can furnish,

At Publishers' Retail Prices, ANY BOOK

which can be purchased in this city, adding only postage to the dealers' regular rates. Orders sent to me at the office of COMMON SENSE, 236 Montgomery St., will receive prompt attention. A partial list of radical books and prices will be

W. N. SLOCUM.

LOOKER & MONTAGUE, IMPORTERS of Stoves and Metals, and Dealers in Plain, Japanned, Planished and Stamped Tinware and House Furnishing Hardware, 112 and 114 Battery Street, San Francisco.

COMMON SENSE.

A Journal of Live Ideas.

VOL. 1.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, JUNE 20TH, 1874.

No. 6.

Signs of the Times.

The Sacramento ordinance requiring the payment of a license by lecturers is to be repealed.

Elizabeth Peabody has commenced the publication at Cambridge, Mass., of a monthly, called the Kindergarten Messenger.

Of twenty-five liquor saloons in Hollister all but three have discontinued business. A combination has been made to test the law.

Count de Saint Croix, in order to provoke Gambetta to a duel, struck him in the face. Gambetta did not challenge him, but a court of justice sentenced the Count to six years imprisonment. Times change.

A book entitled "What is Darwinism?" has appeared, the design of which is to show that the evolution theory excludes design in Nature, and is therefore atheistic, and, per force, exceedingly dangerous.

In proportion as the fashionable bonnet rises and recedes to the back top-knot of a woman's hair, so the frizzly curls come down over the eyes, until the most foolish of the sex at last look like the idiots they really are.

Judge Morrison, of the Fourth District Court, who was petitioned to reinstate certain members of a secret society, who had been expelled by their associates, has decided that the courts have no control over such matters.

The theological press are commending the book recently printed by B. P. Brown against Herbert Spencer and his theories. The book is a very weak affair, and full of misrepresentations of Mr. Spencer's views and arguments.

People whose opinions on most subjects are not worth the having often imagine themselves competent to criticise public journals in a masterly manner. Whatever else they may not know, they are very sure they know all the shortcomings of the press.

Rev. L. Beecher, D.D., of Nyack, New York, kissed pretty Mrs. Wessels. She told her husband, and he called the Reverend to account at a public "tea party" in the parlors of the Y. M. C. A. Mr. Beecher denied the story, and the enraged husband slapped him in the face, saying—"Then you say my wife lies!"

Prof. William Denton was arrested in Sacramento, at the close of his lecture on Saturday evening, and lodged in the city prison, for refusing to pay a license, $20, for giving an exhibition. The following day he was released on bail, and has since left for the southern part of the State, without paying the demand. The action of the authorities does not meet public approval.

There is talk of the appointment in England of a government minister whose duty it shall be to look after the interests of Science.

During excavations at Ilkley, England, recently, an ancient burying ground was found, containing several urns filled with calcined bones and charcoal.

The New York Independent now consists of 32 pages a little larger than Common Sense, about half being filled with advertisements. It is a very profitable paper.

What is to be done about the publication of a report of the committee on the Oakland spiritual manifestations? Is it not time the public were informed of the result of the investigation.

Beer and whisky pay 55 per cent. of the internal revenue taxes, while tobacco is next highest on the list. This is as it should be, and it would be still better if these products could be taxed out of existence.

Somebody says the only visible functions of the Republican leaders now are to fill the offices and handle the public money, and that the manner in which they perform these duties is not above criticism.

It is a notable fact that in every locality in this State where the prohibitionists won a victory under the Local Option Law, women labored earnestly at the polls; and in all places where they did not take part the license party succeeded.

The Boston dress reformers have invented a combination garment for female wear which includes in one piece, chemise, waist, drawers and stockings. On this foundation are buttons to attach the rest of the rig. It is said to be neat, cheap and convenient.

The recent Swing trial in Chicago, in one of our most narrow and bigotted churches, shows that the old dogma of damnation for disbelief, can no longer be maintained. Dr. Swing had said in his sermons, that good and wise heathen, might have as fair a chance of heaven as some devout believers. He was charged with heresy, and yet the Synod cleared him of the charge.

The Industrial Palace at Guise, in France, is an institution built by Mr. Godin for his workmen, in which from twelve to fifteen hundred persons are provided with a healthful, comfortable and agreeable home, where may be found the conveniences and enjoyments which are generally only within the reach of those who are rich. While involving no elements of mere charity, it respects individual freedom, and maintains capital and labor in relations of perfect amity, and at the same time of perfect justice, while securing to the capitalist an adequate return for his outlay.

BUDDHISM AND SPIRITUALISM COMPARED.

BY A. W. BAYLIS, M.R.C.S.

[Concluded from page 53.]

It is quite unnecessary for me to point out to Spiritualists in this country the many singular analogies between this system of the Buddhists and the various accounts that come to us imperfectly filtered through modern mediums. I cannot procure Dr. Hare's book, which I read many years ago, but I am perfectly sure that those who can will find that his deceased sister or brother, or both, in telling him of the condition of spirits in the other state, say that they know that there are six lower heavens, in which there is a gradual progression towards perfection; and that they are aware that there are sets of heavens above these, but know nothing of the condition of spirits occupying these higher spheres. A month or two ago, in London, a spirit calling himself Jimmy Nolan, speaking with an audible and distinct voice through the mediumship of Mrs. Hollis, of Memphis, Tenn., told me that he was in the sixth sphere, and that he knew there were higher spheres than the seventh, because he had had communication with the spirits in them by means of mediums, just as we were having communion with him. He also gave me precisely the same account as the Buddhist teachers gave two thousand years ago of the gradual decrease of sensuality and growth of spirituality in these six lower spheres, dewalokas; with which he was personally acquainted, going into particulars, which absolutely coincided with those detailed by the Buddhists as to the relative degrees of sensuous and sensual pleasures, and substantial surroundings of the different states. Moreover, he located the different spheres somewhat as they did, saying, I think, that the lowest commenced about sixty miles above the earth's surface: the Buddhists make them extend from near the earth's surface to forty-two thousand leagues (of five miles each) above the earth; the remaining five lying in layers above it. Now I do not believe that either Dr. Hare or Mrs. Hollis knew anything whatever about the Buddhistic creed in this particular; nor do I think it likely that the French and American reincarnationists have been merely borrowing; yet between modern Spiritualism and ancient Buddhism we have these curious points of agreement on matters the knowledge of which is utterly unattainable to humanity except through some direct revelation. Both believe in the transmigration of souls; in the soul's pre-existence; in the possibility of re-birth into this world again in the form of men or animals; in the existence of undeveloped spirits, wandering about their old haunts and located in no particular sphere; in the division of the lower heavens into six grades, differing from one another in their physical and spiritual conditions; which both parties, however, describe independently with consistency and minuteness, in their location, relatively to the earth. Further than this our mediums do not profess to go, nor do spirits communicating seem to be able to enlighten us; but they all concur in stating that there are higher systems of heavens; and these the Buddhists name, locate, and describe with the same minuteness with which they have painted the lower heavens; until the last state of all,

Nirwana, or absolute perfection, is reached, where the soul, freed from all material encumbrances, and all stains of sense, rests forever without form or self, or personality, in a state of calm and perfect bliss. Till the soul actually reaches Nirwana it is not freed from the circle of existences, but is liable at the end of any one existence to be plunged again into any one of the lower states, according to the balance of good and evil deeds. Nor is it necessary for the soul to pass through any of these intermediate conditions, but it may be born again upon the death of this body into any of the twenty-eight heavens, or as Buddha and some of his saints, into Nirwana itself.

The Buddhists describe distinct places of torment, but so do some mediums. The Buddhists are all reincarnationists; only a portion of modern Spiritualists are so. But on the whole the points on which they agree are so many and well defined, and those on which they differ so few and so ill defined, that I think the Buddhistic religion deserves far more respect and attention from Spiritualists than it has hitherto received, and to every thinking Spiritualist the subject cannot fail to be an interesting one.

I will conclude this already too extended article with one other curious fact, which I suspect very few of the readers of Swedenborg have ever noticed. It is this, that in several of his visions, he describes the Buddhists, and especially the Thibetians, as occupying a heaven far higher and more exalted than any to which the best of Christians had yet attained, and they explained this to him by declaring that they had possessed from time immemorial more direct and perfect revelations from God than any other race of people in the world. Now is it not a very singular thing to find a Christian publishing such a fact as this as a revelation made to himself?—a Christian, too, who as I take it had very little practical knowledge of the Buddhists or their creed. Those who are curious to see this for themselves will find it repeatedly mentioned in Swedenborg's "Christian Religion." It will no doubt be a little amusing to those of your readers who think that reliance may be placed upon the oft repeated descriptions given by advanced spirits of their states and conditions in the other world, to find this excellent missionary finishing his very clear and accurate delineation of the Buddhistic account of the same post mortem states of the human soul with these remarks:

"The moment that man loses the aid of induction and enters into the unseen world, his littleness becomes manifest; and yet in no department of investigation has he pursued his course with more complacency, or allowed his imagination a revelry more unrestrained * * * There is, therefore, no part of heathenism that is less interesting than its description of other worlds; and in no light does it appear so absurd as in its accounts of the creatures by which they are inhabited."

San Franciscans are generally prejudiced against Buddhism because they know it as the creed of the Chinese, whom most of us hate and despise; but leaving on one side the question whether the Chinese, even as we see them here, are actually more vicious than our own people of the same class, which is perhaps an open one; they may be reminded that there is no race amongst whom Buddhism has become so corrupt as the Chinese; it is with them mixed up with Rationalism and Confucianism, and a low kind of Spiritualism; for be it known unto you, oh! Spiritualists, that your Chinese brethren are Spiritualists to a man, whether in creed they are Rationalists, Moslems, Buddhists or followers of Confucius; and this fact was stated several years ago by a missionary of ample experience in all parts of China, in some lectures delivered by him on the subject and published in the North China Mail.

and Spiritualists they have all been from time immemorial; the different phases of their mediumship being precisely similar to those now in vogue amongst yourselves. This is also true, I believe, of all Buddhists in every land: and it is also true that in Siam, Nepaul, Burmah and Ceylon, where Buddhism still exists in considerable purity (except where "rum and true religion" have been imported from Christian countries, and the faith of the nations has been shaken, and their tastes vitiated) it is impossible not to admit that there is infinitely less vice and crime of every sort to be discovered by careful search for it than stares the most careless observer in the face in every Christian capital in the world. I have been in Burmah, and lived in Ceylon for many years, and speak from personal observation; but I wish it to be fully understood that what I say has no application to the coast towns of these countries, or to those parts of them where converts in any large numbers have been made by the missionaries; since in Ceylon it is notorious to all government officials that the statistics of crime and drunkenness and those of the spread of Christianity in that island have progressed pari passu.

FROM ANOTHER OLD MAN.

ED. COMMON SENSE: I beg leave to state, for the individual benefit and instruction of an "Old Man" who desires proof of the truth of Spiritualism, that my inability to convince a child that I can measure the distance to the sun or moon, or to a distant mountain peak, from where we may be standing, by a rule of mathematics, does not by any means destroy or set aside the fact that it can be done. Investigation will eventually demonstrate the problem to his understanding. Men and women are but grown-up children, and knowledge acquired by experience, and not by the number of years a person may have lived, gives wisdom and the ability to partially understand the laws of life.

I presume my venerable brother will not disagree with me when I assert that life is coeternal and coexistent with matter; and as matter is indestructible, life is also indestructible. Science teaches us, or at least it does me, that matter, whatever form it assumes by the laws of attraction and repulsion, is simply a combination of certain elements or primates, of which there are sixty or more, each one of which is a simple, and does not admit of a chemical analysis, for the reason it is not a compound. The physical organization of man is a combination of more or less of these primates of matter, and by virtue of such combination life demonstrates itself from the minute infusoria to the more harmonious combinations in man. The destruction of such form does not, nor can it, work a destruction of the identity and individuality of such life. After the life has gone out of the form it is called spirit. That spirit, by virtue of its life, attracts to itself the refined elements of the matter in which it first became conscious and individualized; but it is nevertheless the same out of the form it was in it. While in the physical form of humanity it gave evidence by thought and intelligence of its selfhood. When out of the form it would be none the less capable of giving testimony of itself.

ANOTHER OLD MAN.

Lower Lake, Cal., June 9, 1874.

[For Common Sense.]

SPIRITUAL PHENOMENA.

NUMBER FOUR.

MR. EDITOR: There is a medium living in Lamb's Conduit street, Holborn, London—a Mr. Williams—in whose presence the materialization of the form of a spirit, who calls himself John King, is said to take place; in a manner similar to the materialization already mentioned by me, as witnessed in connection with Florry Cook. On Saturday evenings Mr. Williams holds a seance for Spiritualists only; those held on other evenings being open to the general public. X. and I attended one of these Saturday evening seances. We neither of us knew Mr. Williams at all. On knocking at his door, at the time appointed, we were shown up stairs into a double drawing room on the first floor; in the back portion of which, besides the ordinary furniture, was a cabinet with a window in it, similar to that used by the Davenports. The rooms were already crowded: we knew but one person present, Mr. H., editor of the Medium. Within a few minutes of our entrance the rooms were both crowded to excess: the doors were then locked, and all further admissions stopped. Upon the round table, in the center of the front room, lay a guitar, a tambourine, a musical box of the largest size, and several paper trumpets. Mr. Williams, the medium, sat in a chair at the table, around which a circle was formed; the people joined hands with each other, and with him. Outside the circle the visitors were so crowded as to press inconveniently upon the medium, and upon each other. Those nearest to Mr. Williams placed their hands upon him, or on his chair; all others were requested to join hands as completely as possible; so as to account for every hand in the room. These arrangements having been completed, and all present having been requested to hold themselves passive, the gas was turned out.

The luminous appearances, which I have before likened to fireflies, in a few moments began to flit about the room; a rustling was heard overhead; and suddenly a loud, cheery, hearty voice began to address many persons in the room by name; speaking apparently from the ceiling, and changing its locality momentarily from one side or corner of the large room to another. Suddenly, the voice said: "Somebody has snatched away my trumpet." The gas was now turned on; and the person who had committed the larceny was requested to acknowledge it, and leave the room. For a long time no one would plead guilty; at last a little nervous man said that he had done it, but promised not to offend again. He was allowed to remain, and the gas again turned down. X. and I were jammed close against the wall, by a sofa on which a number of ladies were seated. John King soon began to operate again in all parts of the room, over our heads, addressing folk by name, with hearty and jocose remarks. Suddenly the voice came over us, and said: "So you mean to go to California next week? I don't know that you will." I said: "Do you know that I will not?" "No," it answered, "I don't say that." As many people had been shaking hands with Mr. King, I called out after the voice had begun to speak again at the furthest corner of the room: "Won't you shake hands with me, John, before I go?" "Certainly," the voice answered instantaneously, over my head, "with pleasure. Stretch out your hand—higher!" I leant forward, raising my right hand as high as I could towards the ceiling: in a moment my open palm was struck twice, with the paper trumpet, and then my hand was grasped firmly by a strong fat hand, unlike my own—although warm—perfectly dry. I grasped it strongly on my part: the hand gave me a good shake, and then sought to withdraw itself. I held on. "Don't grasp—don't grasp," said the voice, in an irritated tone. I did not let go. The hand then raised me with the greatest apparent ease off the ground, and had I not let go, would have dragged me over the ladies on the sofa before me. If this was imposture; if a confederate were maneuvering near the ceiling by means of any sort of machinery; I don't understand how he continued to dash about so quickly in that oppressive atmosphere, and yet to keep so cool; whilst we were all perspiring profusely, although at rest.

John King talked a good deal, but said nothing worth recording. All he said was hearty, jolly, and jocose. He seemed so have a good deal to say to one Sir John and Lady Campbell, who sat just in front of us. After a while the guitar and tambourine were played in the air, near the ceiling, in all parts of the room; the musical box, which was not wound up, was set a going by unseen hands; and then heard to be playing whilst it flitted about over our heads, and occasionally struck against the ceiling and the chandelier. We were warned not to strike a light whilst this was going on, because the box would at once fall to the ground were this done, and as it was very heavy would hurt some one. Luckily no rash sceptic tried the experiment. Some of the persons present from time to time continued to converse with J. King. At length the phenomena ceased; the gas was turned up; and those persons close to Mr. Williams asserted that they were positive he had not moved from his chair during the darkness.

The gentleman who had been addressed by J. King as Sir John Campbell, now told us that all the most wonderful phenomena of Spiritualism had long been familiar to himself and Lady C. Lady C. had a maid in whose presence these phenomena had occurred spontaneously, and without her knowing that she was in any way the cause of them. When it was discovered that they only happened in her presence, the girl was so disgusted that it was only with the greatest difficulty she could afterwards be brought to be a party to them.

After Mr. Williams had taken a rest, he was securely bound in the cabinet by a committee, and the knots sealed: the room was once more darkened, and we waited for the materialization to be manifested to us. In a short time a great wind seemed to blow through the room, and to shake the cabinet with a noise like suppressed thunder. The medium shuddered audibly from time to time. Luminous hands appeared at the opening in the cabinet, several at a time, and were shaken at us. John King again began to speak, now always near the cabinet. Sometimes the noises produced by the successions of the walls of the cabinet filled the room with peals of theatrical thunder; I can compare it to nothing else. At length, outside and in front of the cabinet, I saw distinctly the outline of a human figure, and the features of a face form themselves in lines of phosphoric light. "Do you see me? do you see me? Do you see me, Sir John?" shouted J. King, in stentorian tones. We did see him, or some one, certainly; but only for a moment. The form flashed into light once or twice, and then died feebly out. The face I saw was that of a big, jolly-looking man. Williams was a thin, cadaverous individual. The medium now requested to be released; and was found tied and sealed as before when the gas was turned up; he was much exhausted.

Almost all these effects might have been produced by machinery and the aid of a clever confederate; but there were no signs of either. If this was the modus operandi, how did one so actively employed keep his hand so cool?

John King used a trumpet, yet when it was snatched out of his hand he spoke as well and as loudly as before; so did he when materialized; why then the trumpet? How could he, unless a spirit, contrive in perfect darkness, at once and without fumbling, to strike with the trumpet the hand of any one stretched towards him?

Mr. H., editor of the Medium, tells me that he has repeatedly seen J. King materialized above his head, whilst he has had hold of Williams in the chair; and yet that the figure he saw was the fac simile of Williams; and that on several occasions having seen Williams enter a room which he knew to be empty, he has at once heard within it a furious quarrel between him and John King, which could have been heard in the street, King threatening to thrash Williams unless he did his bidding.

Williams' health is very bad, and some time back he determined to quit giving seances, and to gain a livelihood by copying for lawyers; but whenever he had finished a deed or other paper the spirits smudged and blotted it all over, declaring that if he would not do their work he should do no other.

Whether the phenomena are genuine or no, it is an undoubted fact that in almost every case the mediums for violent physical phenomena are persons of indifferent moral character. Spiritualists say such attract about them spirits of a low and violent nature, the kind who generally give physical manifestations. The mediums themselves say that if they were good enough ventriloquists to produce the effects we witness, they could make a far more profitable investment of their powers than by pretending to be spirits.

My friend X. was not in the least relieved of his scepticism by this experience; which was called by experts present "a most unsatisfactory seance." Yours truly,
MEDICUS.

FREE LOVE.

To show that Mrs. Woodhull has for years advocated substantially the same views on the social question now held by her, we copy the following from the Golden Age, of April, 1871:

At the National Convention of Spiritualists, held in Troy, New York, Mrs. Victoria Woodhull replied to an attack of the Troy Times. We copy the closing portion of her remarks: "If I am asked, Do you believe in promiscuous intercourse for the sexes, I reply I don't believe anything about it. I know that it exists to an alarming extent; and more, I know that a great many of those editors who write me down are among its best representatives. But if you ask me if I believe such a condition a high one, I will say, I think it to be that which the Times calls 'nastiness.' I hope it does not view my doctrines through colored glasses. I believe promiscuity to be anarchy, and the very antithesis of that for which I aspire. I know that there are all degrees of lust and love from the lowest to the highest. But I believe the highest sexual relations are those that are monogamic, and that those are high and spiritual in proportion as they are continuous. But I protest, and I believe every woman who has purity in her soul protests, against all laws that would compel them to maintain relations with men for whom they have no regard. I honor that purity of life which comes from the heart, while I pity the woman who is pure simply because the law makes her so. If to hold and practice such doctrines as these is to be a Free Lover, then I am a Free Lover."

A State Convention of the Liquor Dealers' Party will be held in Sacramento on the 23d inst., to take measures for concert of action of all opposed to prohibition.

[For Common Sense.]

SPIRITS AND THE INEXPLICABLE.

BY J. W. MACKIE.

With all our knowledge, our comparative ignorance is very great. Ignorance has been at all times the grand barrier to human happiness, yet never have mankind been willing to admit that they did not know the "reason why" of things. When forced to admit that they knew of no mundane cause sufficient to produce apparently inexplicable phenomena, they transferred the source of causes from this world and man to the domain of spirits and gods, for

"Human pride
Is skillful to invent most serious names
To hide its ignorance."

In the Israelitish legend of the Egyptian plagues, the magicians exclaim, "This is the finger of God," when defeated in the trial of magical skill with Moses, illustrating the human conceit that they had reached the ne plus ultra of human knowledge—all beyond belonged to God. Thunder belonged to Jove; it was his language of wrath to an ignorant people; and he who first ascribed its cause to things terrestrial was in danger of losing his life. This was not strange, for human knowledge once permitted beyond priestly limits might endanger the whole fabric of priestly invention. For priestcraft is only ignorance gilded over with the tinsel of pretended knowledge. Through the influence of this spirit solution of questions, put by inquisitive humanity, the human race has been reduced to a state of willing, abject slavery. What Draper says of the Middle Ages has been more or less true of every age:

"In its opinion the earth, the air, the sea, were full of invisible forms. With more faith than even by Paganism itself were the supernatural powers of the images of the gods accepted, only it was imputed to the influence of devils. The lunatic was troubled by a like possession. If a spring discharged its waters with a periodical gushing of carbonic acid gas, it was agitated by an angel; if an unfortunate descended into a pit and was suffocated by the mephitic air, it was by some demon who was secreted; if the miner's torch produced an explosion, it was owing to the wrath of some malignant spirit guarding a treasure whose solitude had been disturbed."

The witch mania like a blast from hell spread over Europe for three centuries, immolating thousands of victims on the fiery altars of a superstitious belief in spirits. The finest minds in Europe were carried away by the dreadful spell. At last it burnt itself out. The advocates of witchcraft became ashamed of themselves; and to confess to a belief in ghosts, fairies and witches was to open upon the foolhardy confessor the dread artillery of ridicule and ready-made jests. In the end of the eighteenth and first half of the nineteenth century Science was jubilant over the death of her ancient foe, but while singing songs of victory she was doomed to be annoyed by the re-appearance of her enemy in a new form. In fact, her foe had never really been far off. The basis of investigation and study of occult mysteries simply changed. The mystecisms of Paracelsus and Cagliostro were followed by the magnetic experiments and fantastic pretensions of Mesmer; and they simply attempted to resurrect the almost forgotten principles of ancient magic. The inner light of George Fox; Swedenborg's dreams, indorsed by actual clairvoyance; the experiences of Wesley; the doctrines of Gall and Spurzheim, gave rise to ideas foreshadowed in the preaching of Edward Irving and the visions and pretensions of the Mormon prophet. These ideas are now embodied in Spiritualism, the result of the reaction from the terrible witch delusion which held spell-bound the votaries of religious faith in spirit power.

If the experiences of the past be of any material use, if they convey any lesson to us, it is to be careful in ascribing to spirits what is otherwise inexplicable, in covering our ignorance with the mantle of spiritual pretension; thereby stultifying science and rendering useless the faculty of reason, of which we are so proud.

Spiritualism is spreading quite as rapidly as did a belief in witches. There is something fascinating in a belief in future immortality. It flatters our conceit. It soothes the crushed affections bruised by the hand of death. It is so pleasant and desirable that it is hard to even suppose the possibility of its being false. Reason is silenced by our self-conceit whenever an attempt is made to disturb our pleasant dream. Thus we are prone to a belief in spirits—that we are spirits destined to live forever.

Much which has transpired during the last twenty-five years and is now actually occurring around us is of a strange and inexplicable character, setting at perfect defiance the resources of scientific research. But is it wise to adopt the spirit hypothesis simply because we cannot otherwise explain? Upon this very rock have all the churches, priesthoods and superstitions of the past been built. Would it not be better to suspend judgment, and invite science to add to her domain in physical and psychical research a few of the things which go to make capital for priests, who hate science? Science commits a grave folly in either denying the existence of phenomena patent to every one who cares to open his eyes, or pooch-pooch it away by a wave of her dignified hand. This has done much to strengthen the faith of many in Spiritualism. As Auguste Comte says in his Positive Philosophy: "We are too apt to treat as imposture exceptional sensations which we have long ceased to understand, but which have always been well known to magicians and fortune-tellers in the stage of fetichism." Perhaps between the lofty scorn of of Scientists and the too ready belief of many Spiritualists the golden mean may yet be reached. Perhaps science, fully aroused to the full importance of the subject, may yet place another laurel upon her brow. For, before the steady advance of science, gods and spirits have hitherto receded, as barbarous nations vanish before the advance of civilization.

It is admitted that Christianity is making no progress whatever in India; still an expensive missionary establishment is kept up.

COMMON SENSE.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, JUNE 20, 1874.

PUBLICATION OFFICE.....236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

WILLIAM N. SLOCUM, EDITOR.

AMANDA M. SLOCUM, ASSISTANT.

Common Sense Publishing Company.

Office of COMMON SENSE PUBLISHING COMPANY,
236 Montgomery st., San Francisco, June 16th, 1874. }

The cordial welcome extended by the public to "COMMON SENSE," the only Free Thought journal on this Coast, and the numerous applications for job work made at the office by those who approve the principles the paper represents, have encouraged the Company to enlarge the business, and lay the foundation for a Liberal Publishing House. To this end a joint stock company has been organized, with a nominal capital of fifty thousand dollars; and in order to extend as much as possible the sphere of the Company's operations, as well as to enlist the active support of the people, it is desirable that the stock shall be held by a large number of owners; and for this purpose it has been divided into ten thousand shares of five dollars each, which is offered to the friends of Free Thought, not alone to enable them to show their regard for their cherished principles, but as an opportunity for safe and profitable investment, it being our design to build up a strong, permanent, useful, and paying institution.

The advertising in the weekly journal published by the Company can be made to yield sufficient for its current expenses, leaving other receipts as profit; and by the addition of a Book and Job Department, a lucrative and constantly increasing business can be built up. The employees of the Company are engaged at reasonable rates, and a large portion of the wages are payable in stock of the Company; consequently their interests are the interests of the Company, better service being secured thereby, with less expenditure of cash, than is usual in industrial enterprises. This arrangement secures all the benefits of co-operation, and at the same time all the facilities of management and other advantages of ordinary joint stock companies.

The stock, although nominally five dollars per share, is issued at one dollar, which furnishes capital necessary to conduct the business to a dividend-paying point, without asking the payment of the remaining four dollars on each share. Only five thousand shares will be sold at one dollar, for the reason that after that amount is disposed of, the stock will command a higher price.

The proceeds of sales of stock are to be invested in the purchase of printing material; therefore every dollar will have its equivalent in the available assets of the establishment—the current expenses being met by current receipts, with a fair prospect of soon accumulating a surplus returnable to stock holders in the form of dividends.

Applications for stock should be addressed to "Common Sense Publishing Co., 236 Montgomery street, San Francisco."

ALBERT KENDRICK, President.
AMANDA M. SLOCUM, Vice President.
AUGUSTUS W. BAYLIS, Treasurer.
A. T. CLARK, Secretary.

OUR READERS will be glad to see by the announcement made in this issue that COMMON SENSE is at last on a firm basis, and that its future prospects are bright. Now we trust that our friends will make renewed efforts to extend the circulation of the paper, and that all who are indebted to the publishers will at once pay their subscriptions. There are on our books the names of a few persons who have never ordered the paper. These will please notify us at once whether they wish it continued or not. Except where special arrangements have been made, the names of all who have not paid in advance will now be erased from the books. There are a few prominent Free Thinkers to whom the paper has been sent as a matter of course, who have not, as yet, expressed any intention to assist in sustaining it, although they well know that a radical Free Thought journal is greatly needed on this coast. Eastern publications of the kind will, of course, continue to be taken, and it is right they should be; but, first of all, sustain your own.

SOCIETY FOR SELF-CULTURE.—The Sunday afternoon discussions at Dashaway Hall are frequently interesting. There are a few people who talk without having much to say, but occasionally spicy speeches are made, and the new programme, by which a portion of the time is devoted to music, readings, recitations, etc., gives general satisfaction, and should be the means of attracting a crowd. Mrs. Julia Melville, President of the Society, presides over the debate in a fair and genial manner, besides contributing greatly to the gratification of the audience by vocal and instrumental music. The price of admission has been fixed again at ten cents. To-morrow the subject for discussion is the Local Option Law, and some able speakers are expected to show that prohibition of the sale of liquors by law is an infringement on individual rights.

NO. RESPONSE.—There is now at this office, and has been for a week past, a sealed envelope containing the names of deceased persons, and questions which any medium or clairvoyant is invited to answer, being permitted to handle the letter in presence of the editor of this paper, but not otherwise. If correct answers can be given in this manner, the fact will be freely advertised, and the increased business of the successful medium, in consequence of such recommendation, will no doubt repay for the time and trouble. The "great Foster" is in town again, and this little business is just in his line; but will he respond? If no medium will do this thing, will not some of them gratify the public by telling why they will not? Our columns are open to you. Do not all speak at once.

TO-DAY, Saturday, June 20th, the children of the Progressive Lyceum are to have a happy time at Berkley. The school will take the 9 o'clock boat, so as to reach the picnic grounds before 11. It is hoped that many adult friends of the youngsters will go also. Take a holiday, if possible, and assist in making the way smooth for the enjoyment of the little ones. Go for their sakes, if not for your own. Carry the lunch; set the tables; take care of the babies; swing the children, and make yourselves generally useful. Remember, you were children yourselves once.

HON. CHARLES E. DELONG, of Nevada, announces in the papers of that State that he is a candidate for the office of United States Senator, to succeed William M. Stewart. His letter is a manly, frank statement of his position, and the causes which led to his defeat for the same position previous to his acceptance of the mission to Japan. The opposition to him was organized by the Railroad Company, because he had strenuously opposed the granting of a subsidy by the State. The fight will be DeLong versus Sharon, which means, a man against money.

GREAT ATTRACTIONS are promised at Woodward's Gardens on the Fourth of July. It is just the place to spend a quiet day, without going into the country.

"Tell It All," is the title of Mrs. Stenhouse's new book on Mormondom. It is said to be exceedingly interesting.

WHAT DR. CUNNINGHAM PREACHES.

At the "Tabernacle," on Sunday evening, Dr. Cunningham took for his text the inquiry put to Jesus by the young man who, professing to have fulfilled all the requirements of the law and the prophets, asked "What lack I yet?" The Doctor, cunning man, did not read Jesus' answer: "Sell all thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven." His text stopped short at the question, thinking possibly that his bejewelled and befeathered hearers, his fine coated, money-making church members, would not relish such advice as Jesus gave; so he substituted that oft repeated promise, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and rely on him, and thou shalt have heaven itself." He went over all the old ground about the "filthy rags" of doing good, of being wise, moral or charitable, of how utterly inadequate these things are to secure "salvation," and represented that the one thing needful is belief in the bible as the word of God, and in Christ, the only begotten Son of God, as the Savior. He urged the necessity of submission to this requirement, this unquestioning faith, as though these dogmas were facts "everywhere acknowledged," while he knows that every one of his statements are disputed by nine-tenths of the inhabitants of the earth, and by more than three-fourths of Christendom itself; and that he and his clerical brethren are called upon every day for proof, and that they are unable to afford a shadow of evidence, and dare not whisper such things outside of the churches, where there is an opportunity for reply; yet to the babes and sucklings of the "Tabernacle" this man makes these statements with as much complacency as though they were axioms of geometry. The time has been when they were admitted, on slender testimony. They never could have been proven, on any rational rule of evidence. This is an inquiring age. It demands a new trial of all the old dogmas. It will conduct that new trial in its own way. It will insist upon cross-examining the witnesses, upon rejecting documents that are forged, incompetent or insufficient. Nay, it has already made the trial, and decided in the negative, and the Doctor knows it. The age no longer believes that the bible is the inspired word of God. There is not a man of learning that dare assume such a position, and throw himself into public debate upon it. Can Doctor Cunningham find such a one? That Roman Catholic councils have so asserted; that the Bishops of England have so stated; that the paid clergy of the United States so uphold, is no proof of its truth, and there is no other than their assertion. Nay more, that any such belief is essential to salvation; that God has ever made such a requirement; that it would be just and reasonable so to do, or that any number of sensible men of this age hold to such a doctrine, is without the least foundation. The very contrary is now held by all men of science and common honesty, and is the guide of our daily practice. John Locke well expressed the idea of this age, when he said, "Whoever sincerely desires to find out the truth, and to do what is right, though he should miss the right path, will not miss the final reward." This is the modern religion. This is the religion of science and practice. This is the religion of every day life. This is especially the religion of California. We have among us men of every nation and of every creed. We have mingled with them, dealt with them, lived with them, and found them good, earnest and sincere. Our preachers tell us that because these men do not believe in the bible, a Christ, and the atonement, they must be damned, that God has condemned them to everlasting torment. Men and nations, as they have become wise, have ceased to persecute each other on account of religious belief, and those who believe in God cannot longer believe that he has not the same kindly consideration for his creatures. The preachers could not face the outer world and say that all who are good, and noble, and true, and heroic among men must be lost in hell unless they believe in certain dogmas. They dare not assert that heaven is only for the devotees of blind faith. They know, in fact, and Doctor Cunningham knows, that a man's faith comes from his character and the peculiarities of his organization. Nothing could be more unjust than to permit a child to be educated in unbelief, and then to damn it for not believing. It cannot be that a wise and just being ever could have entertained so foolish and wicked a thought; yet Doctor Cunningham, with the truth burning itself into his own brain daily, it may be against his will; meeting him in every intelligent friend and acquaintance; assailing him on the corners of the streets; attacking him in every newspaper he reads; challenging him in every scientific lecturer that visits our city; found more or less in every new book he peruses, is not ashamed to stand before his church and say that virtue, and honor, and patriotism, learning, self-sacrifice, charity, and human love, are "filthy rags," and belief in his unproved dogmas the only one thing needful. Bah! It is driveling childishness!

THE "CORESCO COMMUNITY" is the name of an association recently organized in this city, the object of which is said to be to establish an institution based upon "common property;" "equal rights for all, men, women and children;" "individual sovereignty," etc. All are to have an equal interest in the community, without reference to their material contributions to it. They have "no creed, no constitution, no by-laws," but are to change their methods and regulations "as increasing wisdom shows a better way." We do not know any member of this singular society, but are informed that it embraces quite a number of very worthy people. The company have the exclusive control of a machine for the manufacture of peat, which business, it is claimed, can be carried on with great profit, and to a large extent, in the San Joaquin Valley. In order better to raise money for the prosecution of this business a joint stock company is to be formed, which probably will embrace many who do not sympathize with the ulterior objects of the society. The name would also indicate that the community when formed is to engage principally in agricultural pursuits.

MRS. GORE'S LECTURE.

About three dozen persons collected together in the upper hall of the Y. M. C. A., on last Saturday evening, to hear Mrs. Gore advocate Christianity as against Infidelity, and to review the Woodhull platform. Mrs. Gore is an elderly lady of comfortable rotundity and matronly proportions. Her lecture appeared to be addressed principally to "erratic" Spiritualists; the lecturer complaining that so many of this new and important body of religionists—as we must now admit them to be—have wandered away from the great center, God, and are now without circumference or orbit. The whole lecture pivoted upon this point, that everything must have a center; without center there could be no circumference; without centripetal force, we would be forever wandering off like comets; the centrifugal force would carry us off at a tangent into what we used to call, before the recent discoveries of science, "empty space." This, I may say, is what geometricians would call a self-evident proposition, so the point of debate really narrows down to the question, "Shall we have the God of Theology for our center, or Nature, which is law?"

Late in the evening, the lecturer rang in an agreeable change in the way of a triangle for illustration. She sketched it imaginatively, with the point of a parasol, upon the wall in the rear of the platform. Drawing the base of the triangle, she assumed that one end of it represented this new "Religion of Humanity," without any God, and the other end represented Christianity and conservatism (and I mentally added, and the worship of money-getting and Mrs. Grundy). On this ground, she said, the great battle is to be fought in the coming revolution, which she declared is impending, and even now knocking at the door. And here was naturally introduced what little was said upon the Woodhull platform. The lecturer was evidently not at all unfriendly to Mrs. Woodhull, though having brought us together to hear the latter's views combated, she must per force say something. We were therefore told that Mrs. Woodhull's especial object was to subvert the government and bring about a revolution; that her views upon the marriage question would be the destruction of the home; that homes being the center of governments, whatever undermines the one must destroy the other, and that therefore total anarchy and chaos must be the outcome of the Woodhull platform.

This closed the lecture, but at this point occurred the feature of the evening. Mrs. Woodhull's young daughter had slipped in a little while previously, to the back part of the hall, and taken a quiet seat there. When the Woodhull platform was taken up, however, she changed base and came to the front, sitting where she could both see and be seen, her expressive face beaming meanwhile with interest and animation. The scene began to assume a dramatic interest. As Mrs. Gore finished, Miss Woodhull arose. Her manner was modest but self-possessed. Every eye was turned upon her, as she said:

"You say, Mrs. Gore, that Mrs. Woodhull's doctrines are destructive of home. Suppose I, a young girl, have lost my father; suppose my mother dies also; what becomes of my home? Does society provide me with one? No! I may starve, or go into the street—society cares not! Hence I must be self-reliant, self-dependent. Neither must I depend on marriage for a support or a home, but upon my own exertions."

This is the substance and meaning, if not the exact words that this brave little girl said, and when she sat down, it was amid a round of applause from within the hall and from the crowd who had collected outside around the open door, and were standing on tiptoe and peering over each other's heads to catch a glimpse of the strange scene. L.

VICTORIA C. WOODHULL IN SAN JOSE.

ED. COMMON SENSE: This noted lady appeared before a San Jose audience on the evenings of the 9th and 10th inst., giving her two lectures, "Reformation or Revolution—which?" and "Woman—the Wife and Mother." Her audiences were fair, but not large, composed of the best and most intelligent of our citizens, who listened with profound and respectful attention, frequently applauding her most radical utterances.

Mrs. Woodhull, unlike all reformers who have preceded her, descends from the world of effects and grapples with causes. No pen can truthfully report her. The eloquence that she sometimes pours forth from her impassioned soul, as she paints in vivid flashes the wrongs of her sex, startles her audiences like the lurid lightning's glare across the gathering darkness of a coming storm. Again she seems to stand in awful majesty, hurling in vindictive torrents forged thunderbolts at the systems that bind and fetter and torture both soul and body. But in her appeals to the better natures of her hearers for respect and appreciation, for womanhood and motherhood, does she stand forth in all the grandeur of transfigured womanhood, a very goddess of love and beauty. 'Tis then she wins all hearts and melts them to tears.

It is the unanimous verdict of all who heard her that she is sincere and terribly in earnest, however much they may differ with her in her social theories. No lecturer has been more respectfully received in this city than was Mrs. Woodhull. Even the lecture which called forth the virtuous "hisses" of a San Francisco audience was listened to here with the most respectful attention, owing, no doubt, to our rustic ignorance of metropolitan manners.

I am not so sure but the treatment the lady received at San Francisco is a compliment to her ability, although not intended as such. When our nakedness or deformity is revealed we instinctively try to hide it, but if our garments are too meager we seek to put out the light that reveals it; so the virtuous people of that benighted city of sandhills, groping in the darkness, were startled when the Woodhull like a blazing meteor flashed upon them, revealing the rottenness of their social life, causing them to instinctively seek to hide their corruption; which, failing to do, they vainly tried to put out the light that makes their deformity transparent.

Let the people everywhere give her a respectful hearing, and if her teachings are erroneous, meet them with arguments and overthrow them. Those who persecute have read history to little purpose if they think they can overthrow even an error with such arguments as San Francisco has offered in answer to her theories.

San Jose, June 13, 1874.

A. C. STOWE.

How different to-day might the social and moral condition of the race have been, had the founder of our religion, instead of teaching dogmas and leading men to waste their energies in speculating on the unknown and unknowable, taught them the value of wealth, rather than to despise it, and made the incentive to its acquisition the good that could be accomplished with it for humanity, and not simply the selfish and individual ends that it might subserve.

CHARACTER OF GOD.

A REPLY TO "C. B. S."

ED. COMMON SENSE: A correspondent of your live paper, in No. 5, over the initials "C. B. S.," asks the the question, "Do human spirits have a continuous individualized existence?" I do not propose to answer this question in full; but will simply reply to the closing paragraph. "All matter," says C. B. S., "returns to the fountain from which it sprang." True, but not without a change in its quality and condition. To say our aspiration for eternal life is proof of its existence he says looks "like carrying our selfishness beyond the grave." This is all right. The time will never come in spirit life when we shall cease to be selfish, in the highest sense of the term. We never shall cease to be natural beings, and it is perfectly natural for all to pursue that course which each believes will yield the greatest amount of happiness. Jesus and Socrates were quite as selfish as Judas or Nero. They were all pursuing happiness from their individual standpoints of perception.

But, says C. B. S., "May not mankind afford to lose their individuality after death to become a part of God?" Are we not a part of God from the moment we have life? Can we become more so by dying? To me such an idea is an absurdity. What kind of a God must it be who could add unto himself by the annihilation of his own children? He could not be perfect, or he would need no such additions, and he must possess a thousand times more selfishness (low at that) than the mortals he "gobbles up," for they are content to retain their own identity and let others do the same. Truly God has not made man, but man has made God, and a curious one he is. Most of men's errors in doctrine arise from a false conception of the character of that force we commonly call God; and I hope your correspondent will make plain some of the glaring inconsistencies herein set forth before he goes any farther with his proof against the continuous existence of man.

B. F. F.

San Francisco, June 14, 1874.

Right here it may not be out of place to say a word to contributors. COMMON SENSE is not designed to be a controversial journal. Each article written for it should stand upon its own merits; and we desire to avoid that kind of contention which may degenerate into personalities, or even into an effort to get the better of an antagonist in an argument, knowing that in such cases principles are easily lost sight of, and quibbles are apt to take their place. We, perhaps imprudently, permitted "C. B. S." to invite a discussion. If he continues it, we trust he will do so in the spirit of an unselfish seeker for the truth.—[ED.]

The opponents of the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating drinks in this city are organizing a strong party to defeat the temperance people. They have organized a "Personal Liberty League," and are confident of success, having much more money at their command than the other side.

THOUGHTS

SUGGESTED BY READING POE'S "EUREKA."

ED. COMMON SENSE: I have lately been studying Edgar A. Poe's "Eureka," and I notice, among other startling things in it, he asserts that "Space and Duration are one." Kant, John Stuart Mill and others have announced that time and space have no real existence, but are merely "forms of human thought;" but Herbert Spencer denies this Kantian view, and disproves it, showing that they are something real, but like everything else we know, are presented to us delusively through our consciousness, wherein the multiform phenomena of Mind and Matter are simply transfigurations of One Supreme Mystery.

This "Eureka" of Poe's, when I read it, some years ago, was one of the first things that led me to serious reflection upon the enigma of creation and existence. What a wondrous mind Poe's must have been to have so long previously anticipated truths that are only now being enunciated by the great professors of philosophy and science. He was the intellectual peer of Shelley in respect of his advancement beyond his day; and, poor fellow! it was absolutely enough to make him drink himself to death as he did, having to associate with a generation so far behind him as to be utterly incapable of appreciating him. In "Eureka," he shows Matter to be nothing but Attraction and Repulsion—that is to say Force, which is now accepted by thinkers and scientists as the final word of human research, the Cause of All; and what Force is independently of our recognition of it in consciousness, what it really is outside of consciousness which creates all the material panorama for consciousness and the mind also, or consciousness by which it becomes an object of our perception, we can never know, just because we know nothing that is not given us in consciousness.

CATHARINE F. WINDLE.

THE SPIRIT ART GALLERY.—The strange collection of "Spirit Pictures" is still on exhibition at 420 Kearny street, and the curious of whatever faith should pay them a visit. The most remarkable thing about them is the large amount of artistic work in the drapery of the figures and the very brief time, less than two hours, required to finish each of the pictures. The critic will notice that of the thirty portraits in the room twenty-five are taken from the same point of view—three-quarter, left—while only one is taken with the face turned in the other direction. Four are front or nearly front views. The style of execution is so precisely similar that any one of the pictures would be instantly recognized as by the same artist, if it could be seen apart from the collection. There is a striking similarity also in the form of the forehead and the shape of the mouth of most of the pictures; yet the expression of the countenance varies greatly, and several of the heads represent persons of strongly marked characteristics. The price of admission is but 25 cents, not enough to deter any one from the satisfaction of a visit.

RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

E. H. Heywood, a vigorous and original thinker, editor of The Word, Princeton, Mass., has just published an essay the object of which is to show that financial monopolies hinder enterprise and defraud both labor and capital; that panics and business revulsions, caused by arbitrary interference with production and exchange, will be effectually prevented only through free money. He maintains that whatever Nature creates, water, land, coal, etc., man cannot rightly sell. It belongs to the human family, and should be as free as air; adding only the cost of fitting it for human uses. He asserts that the elements indispensable to a sound currency are security, choice and cheapness; it must be reliable, unmonopolizable and obtainable at cost. Restricting money to the narrow basis of coin values he deems bad policy, and wholly unnecessary. The credit of the Government is sufficient for the security of the holder. This currency should be receivable for all dues to the Government; and the people should have just as much of it as they require. It does not come within the province of Government to limit the circulating medium of the country. We have as yet had no time to give the work a careful reading. Address Co-operative Publishing Co., Princeton, Mass.

The Religio Philosophical Publishing House of Chicago favors us with copies of several works published by that company, including "The True History of the Man called Jesus Christ," a work purporting to come from spirits who were living men at the beginning of the Christian era. It is given through the mediumship of Alexander Smyth, and is a 16mo. of 356 pages, fine print. It speaks of Jesus as a man, whose traits of character were amiability, justice, truthfulness and benevolence. The price of the book is two dollars, on receipt of which the publishers will mail to any address.

Same publishers send copies of The Biography of Satan, a historical exposition of the devil and his fiery dominions, disclosing the oriental origin of the belief in a devil and future endless punishment. Price 60 cents.

A pamphlet of 100 pages, containing a discourse by Parker Pillsbury on the Observance of the Sabbath, and fifty pages of self-contradictions of the bible, all for 25 cents, is published by S. S. Jones, Chicago; also, The Vestal, a collection of articles in prose and poetry, through the mediumship of M. J. Wilcoxson, same price.

Mrs. C. FANNIE ALLYN continues to speak to large audiences in Mercantile Library Hall, on Sundays, afternoon and evening. Her discourses are entirely extempore, and many of them contain good thought well expressed. The great variety of subjects furnished by the audience, all woven into one discourse, necessarily make the addresses of this speaker somewhat desultory in character, and as such they are unsatisfactory to those who delight in clear, logical, and connected reasoning; yet many sensible ideas can be gleaned from her improvisations, and the poetical portions certainly contain many fine passages.

NOTES FROM CORRESPONDENTS.

The following are brief extracts from letters received at this office. The first is from a town which shall be nameless, and our readers can judge with how much force it applies to their own section:

"The mass of the people here are in the sphere of utter indifference, so far as intellectual or spiritual growth is concerned. If you can suggest any way of making money you can command their ears at once."

Mrs. H. C. Nichols, writing from San Diego, June 7th, says: "Brother York has been lecturing to us for the past six Sundays, and while so doing organized a society called 'Unity Society.' Bro. York is an earnest speaker, and his lectures are replete with fresh, vigorous thought. His audiences have been large and appreciative. Many orthodox people have been to hear him, and no doubt some of the weak ones felt hurt to hear their pet dogmas stripped down to plain facts. If one half the time spent in trying to save souls was spent in scientific lecturing, and upon subjects relating to human welfare, much good would be done and many more souls saved. To know God's laws and obey them is all we need, for time and eternity. Wishing you a grand success with your paper, I am most truly yours, etc."

Mr. A. C. Stowe, in a private letter written to the editor several weeks since, says: "I consider the Social Question the most important, the most momentous question of the age. It is the question of all questions, because the very life and perpetuity of the race hang upon it. The health, the intellectual vigor and the social harmony hang upon it. Do we need a better political system, a better religious and a better social structure? Give us better men and women. Do we need a well developed and rounded manhood and womanhood? Give us better children; give us the conditions for better children."

No one can reasonably find fault with this position; but this is not what is generally understood as "the social question," although it is connected with it. The writer continues:

"The question of human improvement demands our careful consideration. Men rack their brains and spend their fortunes to improve their stock—cattle, horses, sheep and swine; is it not time that some attention was directed to the genus homo? Some of the same kind of wisdom and intelligence in behalf of mankind that lower forms receive?"

The following notice appeared under the marriage head in the Gardiner (Maine) Fountain in 1843:

"We, the undersigned, have pledged ourselves to each other for life, or as long as we can live in harmony and sustain the conjugal relations. This we do without conforming to the laws and customs of this nation in regard to marriage, believing it to be an affair exclusively our own, and that no others, whether of friends, church, or state, have aught to do or say in the matter. We deem it necessary to give this notice, that our friends and the public may know of our union, that we may not be exposed to slander. (Signed) Benjamin F. Shaw, Harriet N. Howard."

Alfred Russell Wallace estimates that it required 500,000 years for the deposits in the Kent cavern to cover, to the depth at which they were found, the articles of human workmanship which have been exhumed there.

THE EIGHT HOUR LAW.

A discussion on this question took place at Dashaway Hall Sunday afternoon, Gen. Winn opening the debate. He made few points, and none that were new. He characterized the employees of the Government as slaves who dare not say their souls are their own; who vote as they are directed, and who never get up public meetings to sustain the eight hour law. That is always done by mechanics and laboring men. He closed by claiming to be a hard worker himself.

Here followed fifteen minutes of music and literary exercises. Mr. Davis sang a song, with piano accompaniment by Mr. Currier. Mrs. Olmstead read Chiquita, in excellent style; Mrs. Melville sang and played; Mr. Healy read "The Grocer," in a serio-comic style, and Mr. Waldron gave Drake's Address to the Flag.

Then Mr. Healy made a very amusing address in reply to Gen. Winn. He said he knew Gen. Winn could not be a shirker of work, as he must have worked more than eight hours a day to have produced the sensation he has in this State. It is true, he said, that the men in Government employ do not agitate. They do their agitating before they get in, leaving the independent mechanics outside to agitate till they in turn get on the inside. He thought the eight-hour men better pay some attention to the bakers, car-drivers, and some other workmen who are employed fourteen to twenty hours a day.

Brief remarks were made by Mr. Lund and Mr. Mills, the latter getting in a fling at the woman crusaders, whom he characterized as poor, ignorant things, who do not know what they are about.

Capt. Smith said as machinery now does much of the work formerly done by human hands, men really ought not to work more than four hours a day, and need not, if all would do their share. He spoke a few earnest words in favor of making temperance men of the working classes, and driving the whisky sellers into the ranks of the laborers.

Mr. Battersby, after a few remarks on the manner in which the employees at the Navy Yard and on other public works are marched to the polls to vote, spoke highly in favor of shorter hours for labor, in order to give the working man time to cultivate his mind. He then reminded the audience that the fifth anniversary of the organization of the Society for Self-Culture is at hand, and should not be allowed to pass without notice. He then gave a brief history of the Society, told of the good it has accomplished in securing opportunity for the utterance of radical thought, and closed with good wishes for its future usefulness.

The question selected for debate to-morrow afternoon is the Local Option Law, Dr. Merrick being expected to take a leading part in the discussion.

Property, not Man, is king, and lawgiver, and judge. It owns everything but Man, and has but just relinquished ownership of him. Its control over earth and every material thing is absolutely unlimited.

John Stuart Mill remarks about rents, that "if air, light, electricity, and the chemical agents, could like land be engrossed and appropriated, rent would be exacted from them also."

The effect of land monopoly on labor is instant and constant. It accompanies labor wherever it goes, and hedges it in by obstructions which yield not until the laborer is compelled to part with the fruits of his effort.

Whatever takes or consumes wealth, without returning an equivalent, by just so much impoverishes mankind, and this loss must be restored by those who work.

CAPITAL AND LABOR.

BY HUGH BYRON BROWN.

The great problem for solution and settlement in the fifteenth century was that of religious liberty as against authority, as embodied in Romanism. The great achievement of the eighteenth century was the solution by our fathers of the question whether there could be a church without a bishop, and a state without a king; and that of our own time, was the abolition of chattel slavery, and the repudiation of the principle of the right of property in man.

The next great question that challenges the attention of the world, and which will not down at the bidding of a subsidized press, a wealth-serving pulpit, or of incompetent and pur-blind statesmen, is, the equitable adjustment and honest division of the profits arising from the joint efforts of labor and capital—in a word, the labor question. That labor has never received an equitable share of the wealth it creates is a fact that few will deny and none can successfully disprove. That a monstrous injustice is daily being done everywhere to the real creators of wealth needs no other proof than that furnished by a comparison of the condition of the laborer, everywhere, with that of the capitalist.

Wealth being the product of labor, it would be natural to suppose that its creators would be its principal possessors; but this is not the case, anywhere, and never has been. By cunning legislation, and for the want of any equitable measure of equivalents in the commerce of mankind, the wealth of the world centralizes in the hands of a few persons, who did not and could not give an equivalent for it.

There is not, and never has been, in the public conscience a just conception of right in the matter of the remuneration of labor; and in consequence, all our laws, customs and usages discriminate in favor of the capital class as against the laboring.

No science has made less progress, and has been studied to so little purpose as that of Sociology. The principles governing the exchanges of mankind are as imperfect and as inequitable as were those known and used by the people of antiquity. For the want of such a measure there is not, and cannot be a fair and equitable exchange made between men in any direction. And in the absence of such a principle and with the certain knowledge of the tendency of wealth to centralize in the hands of a few, it has never occurred to legislators that while protecting men from robbers and assassins they should also protect them by legislation against human selfishness, which is the greatest of all robbers!—Truth Seeker.

SUBSCRIBERS who are interested in sustaining this paper can do a great deal by bringing it to the notice of their liberal acquaintances. In this way the subscription list could soon be doubled. There probably is no subscriber who could not, with a little effort, procure at least one new one. While it is now certain that the paper will grow into a wide sphere of usefulness, it is none the less true that its power for good may be impaired and the day of its prosperity greatly delayed by the holding back of radicals who appear to be waiting for its firm establishment before they do anything to aid it. Now is the time. If the Spiritualists and Free Thinkers of this coast really want an organ, let them make the fact manifest in a substantial manner. Pay your subscriptions, and ask others to do the same. Circulate the paper among your friends, and induce one at least to subscribe.

The office of "Common Sense" is at 236 Montgomery st.

A FACT.

The only men of any note who have openly advocated the principles of what is unfortunately misscalled "Free Love," in modern times, are Percy Bysshe Shelley, John Stuart Mill, and perhaps the poet Goethe: than whom it would be difficult to find in the annals of history or literature any three men of more exalted intellect, more refined benevolence, of purer minds, or of more perfect lives. Nor are there any three who in their several departments have left deeper marks upon the thought of their age. Men are just now beginning to find out what inspired poets Shelley and Goethe were, how infinitely superior to all others, as poets, in any age; and John Stuart Mill will be a far greater name a century hence than it is now. In his introduction to the "Revolt of Islam"—one of the greatest poems ever written—Shelley says to Mary —, to whom he dedicated it:

Alas that love should be a blight and snare
To those who seek all sympathies in one!
Such once I sought in vain; then black despair,
The shadow of a starless night, was thrown
Over the world in which I moved alone —
Yet never found I one not false to me,
Hard hearts and cold, like weights of icy stone
Which crushed and withered mine, that could not be Aught but a lifeless clog, until revived by thee.

Thou Friend, whose presence on my wintry heart
Fell, like bright Spring upon some herbless plain;
How beautiful and calm and free thou wert
In thy young wisdom, when the mortal chain
Of Custom thou did'st burst and rend in twain,
And walked as free as light the clouds among,
Which many an envious slave then breathed in vain
From his dim dungeon, and my spirit sprung
To meet thee from the woes which had begirt it long.

No more alone through the world's wilderness,
Although I trod the paths of high intent,
I journeyed now; no more companionless,
Where solitude is like despair, I went.
There is the wisdom of a stern content
When Poverty can blight the just and good,
When infamy dares mock the innocent,
And cherished friends turn with the multitude
To trample; this was ours, and we unshaken stood!

SAN FRANCISCO—A PREDICTION.

BY H. WINCHESTER.

Queen city of the western world!
Proud Empress of the Sea!
Thy matchless growth has ever been Triumphant as the free;
Thy destiny in years to come
Will onward ever be.

The mighty cities of the past,
Old Thebes, and Tyre, and Rome,
And Troy too, with her hundred gates,
Have vanished like the foam
Of waves upon thy seagirt strand—
Fair Freedom's land and home.

The marts of commerce and of trade,
And cities old and grey,
That had their birth in centuries past,
Are rotting in decay,
Whilst thou, proud city of the west,
Wert born but yesterday.

The children of the world are thine,
And nations bow the knee
And worship at thy golden shrine,
Proud city of the sea;
And millions yet unborn will aid
Thy future destiny.

To thee the Orient tribute pays
In jewels, gems and gold;
Her silks and satins, richer far
Than worn by kings of old,
Lie on thy wharfs as tribute paid
And in thy marts are sold.

When on thy brow a hundred years
Have left their impress there,
Thy streets by millions will be throng'd
And on thy altars swear
To guard thee well, lest tyrant hands
Forge chains for thee to wear.

In coming years thy schools of art,
Of science, logic, laws,
Will teach the old, instruct the young,
By Nature's works and cause,
Till from the graves the learned of yore
Will echo their applause.

The northern wilds, the orient,
And islands of the sea,
And sunny France, proud England too,
Their youths will send to thee;
And in thy schools o'er science pore,
Proud city of the sea!

Thy march is onward, upward too;
No powers of earth can stay
Thy progress; as the centuries roll
Like mists they pass away,
Whilst thou, Queen City of the Earth,
Will mightier grow each day.

The empires of the earth will fall,
And cities great and grand
Will pass away and be forgot,
Whilst thou wilt proudly stand
In regal form, Queen of the World,
And pride of Freedom's Land.

MY CREED.

BY ALICE CAREY.

I hold that Christian grace abounds
Where Charity is seen; that when
We climb to Heaven, 'tis on the rounds
Of love to men.

I hold all else named piety
A selfish scheme—a vain pretense;
Where centre is not, can there be Circumference?

This I moreover hold, and dare
Affirm where'er my rhyme may go;
Whatever things be sweet or fair,
Love makes them so.

Whether it be the lullabies
That charm to rest the nestling bird,
Or that sweet confidence of sighs,
And blushes without word.

Whether the dazzling and the flush
Of lofty sumptuous garden bowers,
Or by some cabin door, or bush
Of ragged flowers.

'Tis not the wide phylactery,
Nor stubborn fast, nor stated prayers,
That makes us saints; we judge the true
By what it bears.

And when a man can live apart
From work, on theologic trust,
I know the blood about his heart
Is dry as dust.

UNDER THE LEAVES.

Under the leaves is the scorn sleeping,
Waiting the summons to wake and rise;
When into life, from its covert peeping,
The sapling rises in mute surprise.
Years pass away, and the oak in its glory
Heavenward its giant branches heaves;
Yet the "King of the Forest," so grand in story,
To-day is sleeping under the leaves.

Under the leaves are the violets dreaming—
Meekly bowed is each delicate head,
Waiting the vernal sun, whose gleaming
Can call them forth from their lowly bed.
Soon will they crown, in peerless splendor,
Fit for the garland that Love fondly weaves,
Yet Spring's best gifts, so sweet and tender,
To-day are dreaming under the leaves.

Under the leaves we soon shall be lying,
Caring for naught that Mortal may do!
Done with the Living, yes, and the Dying!
Through with the Old, and awaiting the New.
Few brief days—very brief at the longest,
For Health can grant only short reprieves—
And then the weakest, not more than the strongest,
Will all be lying under the leaves.

For the very best Photographs go to Bradley & Bulofson's Gallery, with an elevator, 429 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

A. Provo Kunit's new style of Photo-crayon Portraits is only made at the Florence Gallery, No. 28 Third Street, San Francisco. Price from $20 to $30. Beware of imitations.

Drs. Rutley & Streeter's "Prince of Blood Purifiers" eradicates all corrupt humors from the blood, however they may have been caused, rejuvenates the exhausted forces, and restores, unfailingly, the vigor of those debilitated by all excesses. Try it. Head office, 745 Mission Street, San Francisco.

PATENT FIRE AND WATER PROOF ROOF.

AFTER THIRTY YEARS EXPERIENCE in the Roofing Business, and carefully noting the weak points in the different styles of roofs, and the different materials composing them, I believe that I can offer to the public a roof that will combine all the qualities and points requisite to constitute a permanently Water-tight Roof, while at the same time it shall be the ne plus ultra of Fire-proof Roofs. Strong language; you will say, "Can you prove it?" I answer, Yes, and still make a roof in which expense will be saved in the construction of all brick buildings, and in all buildings of whatever class or nature when ten years of the future is taken into consideration. These points will be proved on trial; yet at the same time they are so plain on their face that by an examination of my plans and model they will be patent to all mechanics. The plan of this roof has received the endorsement of some of the principal Architects and Builders in San Francisco. It cannot leak while the building holds its position. NO Fire can burn through it from the outside, and only with the greatest difficulty from the inside. It will not require repairs or expense of any kind while the building retains its position. It will not deteriorate with age. In other words, these roofs remain the same after twenty years as when first constructed, if the building is made sufficiently well to retain its form and position. Every inch of the house-top can be utilized for yard purposes, without injury to the roof in the least. A garden may be made upon it with the same exemption from risk, around which an ornamental fence, or imitation of another story, may be constructed which would not only shield from winds, but add to the external appearance of the dwelling.

Swimming baths, where children could learn to swim, can be constructed on this principle with entire safety in certain parts of a residence, and the surplus water drawn off to the grounds. Models of these roofs can be seen at my office. Inquiries by letter, or otherwise, will be cheerfully answered.

H. G. FISKE.

809 Market St., San Francisco

COMMON SENSE.

Business Cards.

MRS. M. J. UPHAM HENDEE,
PSYCHOMETRIST,
AND TEST MEDIUM, MAGNETIC and ELECTRIC PHYSICIAN.
No. 230 Kearny street, San Francisco.
Circles—Tuesday and Thursday evenings

MRS. M. A. CUMMINGS,
CLAIRVOYANT
AND TEST MEDIUM.
262 Minna street, near Fourth.
Circles—Monday, Wednesday and Friday
Evenings, at 7½ o'clock.

PRIVATE SITTINGS—10 to 12 and 2 to 9 o'clock.

MRS. C. E. HUBBARD,
PSYCHOMETRIST,
CLAIRVOYANT PHYSICIAN,
BUSINESS AND TEST MEDIUM,
769½ Mission St., near Fourth, Room 1.
Circles TUESDAY and THURSDAY Evenings
at 7:30.
Very successful in the examination of Minerals. 2-5

MRS. SPROUL,
BUSINESS CLAIRVOYANT,
AND TEST MEDIUM.
No. 112 Fourth street, room No. 2,
San Francisco.
Communications strictly confidential.
Office hours: 9 A.M. to 9 P.M.

MRS. DUNHAM,
CLAIRVOYANT AND PSYCHOMETRIST,
26 STOCKTON STREET,
San Francisco.
Fee, $2.

MRS. M. M. PEARSON,
CLAIRVOYANT AND TEST MEDIUM,
No. 111 ELLIS STREET,
San Francisco.
Developing Circle every Wedn'day even'g.

MADAME AVERY,
HOMOEOPATHIC AND MAGNETIC
PHYSICIAN
314 BUSH ST., ROOM 13.

Healing by laying on of hands. Particularly successful in Rheumatic and Neuralgic Complaints.

PSYCHOMETRIC READINGS for persons who send their hand writing to
J. MURRAY SPEAR, 1114 Callowhill st.
Philadelphia, Pa. Fee $2.

J. V. MANSFIELD, TEST MEDIUM,
J. answers sealed letters, at 361 Sixth Avenue, New York. Terms, $5 and four 3 cent stamps. REGISTER YOUR LET-TERS.

SEALED LETTERS ANSWERED BY R.
W. FLINT, 39 West Twenty-Fourth St.
New York. Terms, $2 and three stamps.
Money refunded if not answered.

Public Meetings.

SAN FRANCISCO SPIRITUALISTS' UNION.
Meetings in Mercantile Library Hall, every Sunday afternoon and evening.—
Lecture by C. Fannie Allen, one hour, from 2 till 3 P. M., followed by a Seance, conducted by Eliza F. McKinley, Louie M.
Kerns and other mediums. Admission, ten cents. Lecture by Fannie Allen in the evening, at 8 o'clock. Admission, 10 cents.

THE SAN FRANCISCO SPIRITUALIST
Society. Every Sunday at Charter Oak
Hall, Market Street, near Fourth. Lyceum for spiritual improvement at 10½ A. M.
Admission free. Medium's Conference at 3 P. M. Doors opened at 1 o'clock and closed at 3 P. M. Admission, ten cents.
Lecture at 7½ P. M.

THE LYCEUM FOR SELF-CULTURE
Meets every Sunday at 2 P. M. in Dash-away Hall, Post Street. All who attend are, for the time being, members, and are entitled to speak, limited, of course, by the ordinary rules of debate. The time allowed each speaker, after the opening address, is ten minutes. Music by Mrs. Melville.
Admission, Ten Cents.

CHILDREN'S PROGRESSIVE LYCEUM
at Mercantile Library Hall, Sunday morning at 10½ o'clock.

THE SPIRITS ARE OUT OF PRISON.
Those Wonderful Pencil Paintings composing the Spirit Art Gallery are now on public exhibition at 420 Kearny street, on the east side, near California.
ADMISSION, TWENTY-FIVE CENTS.

THE MASOULINE CROSS
and
ANCIENT SEX WORSHIP,
BY SEA ROCCO.

A curious and remarkable work, containing the traces of ancient myths in the current religions of to-day. It is full of the deepest researches and soundest scholarship, high toned and cleanly withal, but it is not designed for immature minds.
It contains an original chapter on the Phall of California, which will be new even to scholars. The work is handsomely illustrated.

For sale by Payot & Upham, and by H.
Snow; also sent by mail from this office.
Price, Fifty Cents.

SPIRITUALISTS,
AND OTHER LIBERAL THINKERS, will find a full supply of acceptable books and papers at

H. SNOW'S
Liberal and Reform Bookstore
No. 319 KEARNY STREET,
Up stairs, west side, a few doors north of Bush.

Also a select CIRCULATING LIBRARY.
Spence's Positive and Negative Powders,
Storer's Nutritive Compound, and other
Specialties in medicine for sale as above.

POST OFFICE BOX 117.

CANVASSERS WANTED.—A good canvasser, male or female, is wanted for this journal in every town on the coast.
Liberal commissions allowed to those who devote time to the work.

Radical Publications.

RECENT RADICAL READING.

The Essence of Religion.

GOD THE IMAGE OF MAN. Man's Dependence upon Nature the last and only source of Religion. Translated from the German of Ludwig Feuerbach, by Prof. A. Loos. 12mo. cloth, $1; paper 60 cents.

Materialism;

ITS ANCIENT HISTORY, ITS RECENT Development, Its Practical Beneficence.
By Dr. L. Buchner, author of "Force and Matter," "Man in Nature," etc., etc.
Translated from the author's manuscript by Prof. A. Loos. 25 cents.

The Childhood of the World;

A SIMPLE ACCOUNT OF MAN IN
Early Times. By Edward Clodd,
F.R.S. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents. Cloth,
75 cents.

The Religion of Humanity.

BY O. B. FROTHINGHAM. SECOND
Edition, with Fine Steel Portrait.
12mo. cloth. Price $1.50.

Christianity and Materialism Contrasted.

BY B. F. UNDERWOOD. A HAND- some forty-five page pamphlet. 15
cents.

The Influence of Christianity on Civilization,

MR. UNDERWOOD'S BEST LECTURE.
Eighty page pamphlet. Price 25 cts.

The Religion of Inhumanity.

A CAUSTIC CRITICISM OF "LIBER- ty, Equality, Fraternity." By Frederic Harrison. Price 20 cents.

Lecture on Buddhist Nihilism

BY PROF. MAX MUELLER. Translated from the German. A brilliant defense of Buddha. Price 10 cents.

The Relation of Witchcraft to Religion.

BY A. C. LYALL. Price 15 cents.

A Positivist Primer.

A SERIES OF FAMILIAR CONVERSA- tions on the Religion of Humanity, dedicated to the only Superior Being man can ever know, the great but imperfect
God, Humanity, in whose image all other gods were made, and for whose service all other gods exist, and to whom all the children of men owe Labor, Love and Worship.
Price 75 cents.

The Truth About Love.

A PROPOSED SEXUAL MORALITY,
based upon the Doctrine of Evolution, and recent Discoveries in Medical Science.
Price $1.50.

Any of the above books sent free by mail upon receipt of price. Address,

ASA K. BUTTS & CO.,
36 Dey St., New York.

Medical.

DR. ABORN,
OULIST AND AURIST,
CATARRH, THROAT AND LUNG
PHYSICIAN,
No. 213 Geary St.

ALL who have suffered for years or a lifetime, and whose diseases have resisted or baffled the ordinary modes of treatment, are invited to call for a free consultation.
Office Hours;
10 ¼ A. M. to 3 P. M., and 6 to 7 ½

GARLAND'S VEGETABLE COUGH DROPS.

WE call the reader's attention to this valuable preparation, which is the GREATEST KNOWN REMEDY for all Throat and Lung Complaints.

For Asthma and Consumption it has no equal.

It is warranted to cure Coughs, Colds,
Whooping Cough, Sore Throat, Hoarseness, Influenza, Bronchitis, and Inflammation of the Lungs.

M. H. GARLAND,
828 MARKET ST.,
San Francisco.
For Sale by all the principal dealers in medicines. 1-13

THE ALDEN FRUIT PRESERVING CO. OF CALIFORNIA,

IS NOW PREPARED TO SELL RIGHTS and furnish the necessary machinery for using the "ALDEN PROCESS," acknowledged to be the best method known for preserving Fruits, Vegetables, Meats, etc.
For full particulars call at the company's office,
Room 5, 402 Montgomery St.

San Francisco.
G. W. DEITZLER, President.
W. M. WHERRY, Vice Pres.
FRANK PYLE, Sec'y and Sup't.
BANK OF CALIFORNIA, Treas.

STOCK RANCH FOR SALE—THIRTEEN hundred acres of hill land, well watered and a portion wooded. It is one of the best and most reliable stock ranges in the State.
It is also an excellent locality for fruit, and several fields are suitable for grain. It has a good fence, and is actually worth double the price for which it will be sold. The title is without a flaw, and the only reason for selling is that the owner is in debt, and has too much land to manage. The entire tract consists of fifteen hundred acres. A living stream of never-failing water runs through it. The land is situated in Santa Clara county, on the Little Llagas, eighteen miles from San Jose, and four miles from New Almaden. It is about six miles from the railroad.
Address A. E. Anderson, San Jose; or apply to W. N. Stocum, 236 Montgomery street,
San Francisco.

COMMON SENSE.

CATALOGUE

OF STANDARD, RADICAL AND SPIRITUALISTIC BOOKS

For Sale by W. N. SLOCUM, and forwarded by mail, postage paid, at the following rates. Payment may be made by Post Office order, in currency, by adding ten per cent. to the price.

Address
W. N. SLOCUM,
236 Montgomery st.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

Antiquity of Man, by Lyell	$3 00
Autobiography of J. S. Mill	2 25
Age of Reason and Examination of the Prophecies	85
Alice Vale, by Lois Walsbrook	1 50
American Crisis, by Warren Chase	25
Apocryphal New Testament	1 50
A Peep into Sacred Tradition, by Orin Abbott	50
Age of Reason, Thomas Paine, cloth	50
Age of Reason, Thomas Paine, paper	25
Arcana of Nature, by Hudson Tuttle, Vol. I. Philosophy of Spiritual Existence, and of the Spirit World	1 50
A B C of Life, by A. B. Child	25
Apostles (translated from the French), by Renan	2 00
Astronomy and Worship of the Ancients, by G. Vale	20
Astro-Theological Lectures, by Rev. Robert Taylor	2 25
Allegories of Life, Mrs. J. S. Adams	1 25
Bible in the Balance, by J. G. Fish	1 50
Bible in India	2 25
Beliefs of the Unbelievers, by Frothingham	20
Better Views of Living, A. B. Child	1 00
Brotherhood of Man, and what follows from it	25
Both Sides, or, God and the Devil's Prophecy, a discussion between Moses Hull and Rev. J. F. McLain	25
Book on the Microscope	25
Book of Religions, by J. Hayward	2 00
Bible Chronology, by M. B. Craven	1 25
Baileys's Festus	1 25
Buechner's Man, English Edition	2 50
Boccaccio's Decameron	1 50
Buddhist Nihilism, by Max Muller	50
Buechner's Materialism	25
By-and-By, by E. Maitland	1 75
Bible Exposed, Erasmus	2 00
Buechner's Force and Matter	2 50
Bastians's Modes of Origin	1 25
Beginnings of Life, by Bastian	5 00
Buckle's History of Civilization	6 00
Birds and Reptiles, by Pigler	4 00
Body and Mind, by Maudsley	2 00
Burrough's Notes on Walt Whitman	1 00
Correlation of Forces, by Youmans	2 00
Cooper on the Soul	90
Clodd's Childhood of the World	50
Cranial Affinities of Man and the Ape, by Professor B. Virchow, of Berlin	25
Comte's Philosophy of the Sciences	2 00
Confucius and Chinese Classics	2 20
Child's Book of Religion, by Frothingham	1 00
Confessions of an Inquirer, by J. J. Jarves. Very interesting	1 50
Curious Myths of the Middle Ages, by Gould	2 50
Confucius' Life and Teachings, by Legge	4 00
Clergy a Source of Danger, by Jamieson	1 75
Christianity before Christ by M. B. Craven	25
Critical History of the Doctrine of a Future Life in All Ages and Nations, by Wm. B. Alger	4 00
Contrast: Evangelism and Spiritualism Compared, by Moses Hull	1 75
Criticism on the Apostle Paul, in Defence of Woman's Rights, etc., by M. B. Craven	25
Conjugal Sins against the Laws of Life and Health, by A. K. Gardner, A.M., M.D.	1 50
Constitution of Man, by Geo. Combe	1 75
Common Sense, by Thomas Paine	20
Christ Idea in History, by Hudson Tuttle	1 75
Christ and the People, by A. B. Child, M.D.	1 50
Christianity and Materialism Contrasted	15
Christianity no Finality, or, Spiritualism Superior to Christianity, by Wm. Denton	10

Criticism on the Theological Idea of Deity, by M. B. Craven	1 25
Christianity, its Origin and Tendency considered in the Light of Astro-Theology, by D. W. Hull	25
Claims of Spiritualism, embracing the Experience of an Investigator, by a Medical Man	25
Christianity, by S. B. Gould	2 00
Descent of Man, by Darwin, 2 vols. ($2 per vol.)	4 00
Diagnosis, by Rev. Robert Taylor, written by him while imprisoned for blasphemy. This work is an account of the origin, evidence and early history of Christianity	2 25
Devil's Pulpit, by Rev. Robert Taylor, with a Sketch of the Author's Life	2 25
Deluge, by Wm. Denton	12
Death and the After-life, by A. J. Davis	1 00
Debatable Land, by the Hon. E. D. Owen	2 00
Dr. Bartol's new book, the Rising Faith	2 00
Essay on Man, by Pope, cloth gilt	1 00
Early Social Life of Man	25
Errors of the Bible, demonstrated by the Truths of Nature, by Henry C. Wright, paper	25
Enigmas of Life, by Gregg	2 00
Exeter Hall, a Theological Romance, paper	60
Empire of the Mother over the Character and Destiny of the Race, by H. C. Wright	50
Elective Affinities, by Goethe	1 25
Footfalls on the Boundary of Another World, by Robert Dale Owen	2 00
Free Thoughts concerning Religion; or, Nature vs. Theology, by A. J. Davis, paper	50
Good Sense, by Baron D'Holbach	1 00
Gist of Spiritualism, by Warren Chase	1 75
Gospel of Good and Evil, by Silver Great Harmonia, by A. J. Davis, 5 vols., viz., Vol. I., The Physician; Vol. II., The Theatrical; Vol. III., The Seer; Vol. IV., The Reformer; Vol. V., The Thinker, each	1 75
God Life in History, by Hudson Tuttle	1 50
Geology of the Stars, by Prof. A. Winchell, of the University of Michigan, author of Sketches of Creation	25
Greg's Creed of Christendom	2 50
Harmonial Man; or, Thoughts for the Age	50
History and Philosophy of Evil, paper	80
Hayward's Book of All Religions	2 00
Helen Harlow's Vow, by Lois Walsbrook	1 75
History of the Intellectual Development of Europe, by J. W. Draper, M.D., L.L.D.	6 00
Human Physiology, Statistical and Dynamical; or, The Conditions and Course of Life of Man, by J. W. Draper, M.D., L.L.D., 650 pp., cloth	6 00
History of European Morals, by Lecky	6 00
History of Rationalism in Europe, by Lecky	4 00
Higher Law, by Maitland	1 75
Hegel's Philosophy of History	2 00
Half-hours with Modern Scientists, cloth, 12mo., reduced to	1 50
History of American Socialism, by J. H. Noyes	3 00
Historic Americans, by Parker	1 50
His Marriage Vow, by Mrs. Corbin	1 50
Injurious Influences of Schools	25
Influence of Christianity on Civilization	25
Is Romanism Real Christianity?	10
Is the Bible Divine? by S. J. Finney, paper	4 00
Is there a Devil? The argument pro and con	25
Infidel; or, Inquirer's Text Book, by Cooper	1 25
Is Spiritualism True? by William Denton	15
Irreconcilable Records of Genealogy and Genealogy, by Wm. Denton, paper	20
Incidents of Life, second series, Home	1 50
Junius Unmasked; or, Thomas Paine the author of the Letters of Junius and the Declaration of Independence	1 50
Jehovah Unveiled; or, the Character of the Jewish Deity delineated	35
Joan of Arc, a biography	1 00
Kant's Critique of Pure Reason	2 00

Key to Political Science, by John Senff	1 25
Koran, with explanatory notes, by George Sale, 8vo., 670 pp. Best edition yet published	3 00
Looking Beyond, by J. O. Barrett	1 00
Life Line of the Lone One, by Warren Chase	1 00
Life of Thomas Paine, with critical and explanatory observations of his writings, by G. Vale	2 00
Life of Jesus, by Renan	2 00
Lyrics of the Golden Age, by T. L. Harris	2 25
Legalized Prostitution; or, Marriage as it is and as it should be, by C. S. Woodruff, M.D.	1 25
Living Present—Dead Past, by H. C. Wright	2 25
Library of Memorism, by Wells	4 00
Life of Fourier, by Shaw	1 50
Life of Parker, by Weiss, 2 vols.	6 00
Modern Thinker, Nos. 1 and 2, each	1 00
Mental Medicine, by Evans	1 50
Ministry of Angels Realized, by A. E. Newton	25
Manual for Children (for Lyceums), by A. J. Davis, cloth	25
Married Woman; Biographies of Good Wives, by L. Maria Child	25
Modern American Spiritualism, 1848—1888, by Emma Hardinge	3 00
Moral Physiology, by E. D. Owen	65
Myths and Myth-makers, by John Fiske	2 00
Mystery of Matter, by Ficton	3 50
Morning Lectures (20 discourses), by A. J. Davis	1 75
Martyrdom of Man, by Reade	6 00
Man's Age in the World. London edition	2 00
Man and his Dwelling-place	1 50
Man in the Past Present and Future, by Dr. L. Beuchner, elegant English edition	3 50
Mill's Autobiography	2 25
New Physiology, by Wells, gilt	5 00
Nature's Laws in Human Life; an Exposition of Spiritualism	1 75
New Testament Miracles and Modern Miracles	60
Nature's Divine Revelations, by A. J. Davis	4 00
Night and Day, by Crowe	1 50
Oriental Religions, by Johnson	5 00
Origin and Development of Religious Belief, Heathenism and Mohammedanism, by S. B. Gould	2 00
Old Theology Turned Upside Down, by T. B. Taylor, A.M., paper	75
Origin of Species, by Darwin	2 25
Origin of Civilization and Primitive Condition of Man, by Sir J. Lubbock	3 00
One Religion, Many Creeds, by Winans	1 75
Pilgrim and Shrine, by Maitland	1 50
Paine's Political Works, 2 vols., of about 600 pages each	6 00
Philosophical Dictionary of Voltaire. Fifth American Ed., 876 octavo pages, two steel plates. Largest and most correct edition in the English language. Contains more matter than the London edition, which sells for ten dollars.	6 00
Philosophy of Spiritual Intercourse, by A. J. Davis, paper	75
Positive Primer, being a series of familiar conversations on the Religion of Humanity	1 25
Plato's Phaedo on Immortality	1 25
Plato's Divine and Moral Works, by Lizsle Doten	2 00
Poems from the Inner Life, by Lizsle Doten	1 50
Philosophy of Creation, by Thomas Paine, through Horace Wood, medium, paper	40
Poems of Progress, by Lizsle Doten	1 50
Parturition Without Pain, by M. L. Holbrook, M.D.	1 00
Pentateuch—Abstract of Colenso	25
Progress of Religious Ideas through Successive Ages, by L. Maria Child, 3 vols.	7 50
Physical Man, his Origin and Antiquity, by Hudson Tuttle	1 50
Radical Discourses, by Denton	1 50
Radical Rhymes, by William Denton	1 25
Rabelais' Works, 2 vols.	3 00
Religion of Humanity, by Frothingham	1 50
Religion of Inhumanity, by Harrison	20
Religious Demands of the Age, by Miss Frances Power Cobb, paper	50
Radical Problems, by Bartol	2 00
Strauss' The Old Faith and the New, preceded by the author's Prefatory Postscript. 12mo.	2 00
Songs of the Sun-lands, by Miller	1 50
Supernatural, History of the, by

Wm Howitt, 2 vols.	3 00
Spirit Works; Real, but not Miraculous, by Allen Putnam	40
Soul Affinity, by A. B. Child	25
Satan, Biography of, by A. K. Graves	60
Sermon from Shakespeare's Text, by Denton	10
Sacred Gospels of Arabula, by A. J. Davis, cloth	75
Sunday not the Sabbath	25
Sexual Physiology, by R. T. Trall, M.D.	2 00
Self-Abnegationists; or, The True King and Queen	50
Soul of Things, by Elizabeth and William Denton, 3 vols. for	4 00
Social Evils, by Mrs. M. M. Ling	25
Spiritual Philosophy vs Diabolism, by Mrs. King	25
Spiritual Delusions, by D. D. Lum	1 50
Science of Thought, by Prof. C. C. Everett	2 00
Secret History of the French Court	1 25
Sartor Resartus, by Carlyle	75
Songs of Life, by S. W. Tucker	20
Science of Evil, by Joel Moody	1 75
System of Nature; or, Laws of the Moral and Physical World, by Baron D'Holbach	2 25
Startling Ghost Stories, from authentic sources	50
Self-Contradictions of the Bible	25
Sefena; or, The Mental Constitution, by Merton	1 00
Spiritualism, Discussion of, Fish and Dunn	40
Science of Knowledge, by Fichte	2 00
Science of Rights, by Fichte	2 00
The Past and Future of our Planet, by Wm. Denton	1 50
The Sun, by Guillemin, illustrated	1 50
The Essence of Religion, by Feuerbach	60
The Essence of Christianity	3 00
The Patriarchs, by Frothingham	1 00
The Parables, by Frothingham	1 00
Thoughts of the Emperor Marcus Aurelius	1 00
Tyndall's Fragments of Science	2 00
Tyndall's Light and Electricity	1 25
Tyndall's Forms of Water	1 50
Tyndall's Heat as a Mode of Motion	2 00
Religious Ideas and Beliefs, Origin and Development of, by Morris Binswanger	1 75
Tyndall on Sound	2 00
Tyndall on Radiation	50
Tyndall's Six Lectures on Light	1 00
The Masculine Cross and Ancient Sex Worship, by Sha Bocco	50
The Voices, by Warren Sumner Barlow	1 50
Theological and Miscellaneous Writings of Thomas Paine	2 75
Thomas Paine's Pilgrimage to the Spirit World	75
Tobacco and its Effects, by H. Gibbons, M.D.	20
The Temple; or, Diseases of the Brain and Nerves, by A. J. Davis, paper	1 00
To-Morrow of Death, by Figuier	1 75
The Hereafter, by Hull, paper	65
Testament, New, shown in its true light, by J. P. Whipple	50
Unwelcome Child, by Henry O. Wright, paper	30
Unity of Natural Phenomena, by Salgy	1 50
Universology, Basic Outline of, by Stephen Pearl Andrews	6 00
Universology, Primary Synopsis of, by S. P. Andrews	1 50
Vestiges of Creation	75
Vital Force, How Wasted and How Preserved, by E. P. Miller, M.D.; paper, 50 cents; cloth	1 00
Volney's Ruins; or, Meditations on the Revolutions of Empires, with Biographical Notice by Count Daru	1 00
Vivid Truths, by A. B. Church	50
Walt Whitman's Leaves of Grass	3 00

"COMMON SENSE,"
AN ADVOCATE OF HUMAN RIGHTS.
DEVOTED TO LITERATURE, ART, SCIENCE, TO THE Educational and Industrial Interests of the day, and to
SOCIAL CIVIL & RELIGIOUS PROGRESS
OFFICE, No. 236 MONTGOMERY ST.

COMMON SENSE.

A Journal of Live Ideas.

VOL. 1.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, JUNE 27, 1874.

No. 7.

Signs of the Times.

The Pullman palace cars have been introduced into England.

A report is soon to be made on the resurvey of routes for a ship canal across the isthmus from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Recent explorations on the coast of Peru have revealed the existence of guano beds richer and more extensive than those of the Chincha Islands.

Rev. Mr. Swing swung far away from the Orthodox belief, but the Presbytery, by a vote of forty-five to fifteen, gave him a clean bill of health.

The women of the country have in their hands the power to bring about healthy social reforms, and many of them are working with a will to that end.

Rev. Dr. Bellows is to be married on the 30th inst. to Miss Annie Peabody, of Boston. This marriage is said to be like that of Dorothea to Cassabon.

Jersey City, Chicago, Cleveland and San Francisco are growing more rapidly than any other cities of the Union. San Francisco has quadrupled her population in fifteen years.

Grace Greenwood says she has repeatedly received aid from George W. Childs for charitable undertakings, and that he always thanked her for the opportunity she afforded him of doing good.

Garters are going out of fashion, because it has been ascertained that tight garters below the knee interrupt the circulation, cause varicose veins, and sometimes bring on ulcerous sores.

Two young women have been arrested in Chicago for swindling. They collected from benevolent persons large sums of money on the pretense that it was to be used for the support of an orphan asylum.

Four thousand five hundred characters of the Egyptian hieroglyphics are now intelligible to scholars, and they reveal the evidences of a theological system, based upon a profound philosophical apprehension of the forces of Nature.

All have heard of the man who was too poor to marry, but we know of a couple who, after a short engagement, thought themselves too poor to wait longer, when by marrying they could save the expense of maintaining separate establishments.

Another cavern containing bones of pre-historic man has recently been discovered in Dalmatia; also one in Switzerland. The latter has furnished the best specimens of carvings of pre-historic animals yet brought to light.

The 137th asteroid was discovered recently by an astronomer at Berlin.

Two Scotch missionaries are trying to evangelize Chicago. They have a hard task.

The intention is to have the Paine Hall Building, Boston, completed by next January. It will be a handsome and commodious edifice.

The project of making a type metal statue of Horace Greeley, by aid of contributions, has been revived. The amount as yet contributed is about one-half the quantity required.

The Sunday Herald says all the denominations are becoming liberalized and out-growing their creeds, which are taken for what they are worth, and not as inexorable guides of belief.

It is now settled that Egypt had her written language long before the pyramids were built, together with the main features of her religion, and a well developed political organization.

Any geography in use ten years ago would be very poor authority to-day. The changes, not only in the United States, but in Europe, are actually startling in magnitude. Just compare a new map with an old one.

The woman suffragists of Michigan ask pecuniary aid to assist in canvassing that State. More than one-half of the newspapers favor the ballot for women, and it is believed the proposition will be approved by the people at the polls. Mrs. Dr. Lozier, of Lansing, is President of the State organization.

Father Terry, a Catholic priest in Chicago, recently lectured on Genesis, taking the ground that Moses did not write all of the books, and that none of them are to be considered as historical, but merely as poetry, the crude notions of a fanciful age. He ridiculed the story of the creation, the deluge, etc., and favored the development theory. In consequence he has been deposed by the Archbishop, and assigned to curate's duty in Ottawa.

During the present century steam locomotion by car and vessel has been introduced; also communication by telegraph; the establishment of cheap newspapers and a cheap postal system; the running of expresses; the introduction of sewing machines, reaping and threshing machines, photographs, steel pens, matches, and a thousand other articles of daily convenience. Advance steps have followed each other in rapid succession. Great changes have taken place in the religious and social opinions of the people; spirit communication has become an established fact, and the way has been opened for a revolution which is bound to come, peacefully or otherwise, which will be the basis of a great moral reformation.

CHRISTIANITY AND INTEMPERANCE.

BY DON FULANO.

There is just now a great excitement all over this State in consequence of the Local Option Law; and for the most part the very people most interested in favor of prohibition are the pious women and the clergy. They would shut up all our saloons and have us all become teetotalers. It is questionable whether in the present state of the world it would be a good thing for them to have their will; although I quite agree with them that, as far as we can see, the world would be a great deal happier and less criminal if no drop of malt liquor was ever allowed to ferment, if no alcohol was ever distilled. But as a man of common sense I cannot understand their consistency, as Christian men and women. Christ drank wine freely on all occasions, for the Jews called him a "wine bibber." The very first miracle he ever wrought was that at the marriage feast of Cana in Galilee, where he turned all the water that was at hand into wine. You good people who are now so excited about the anti-liquor movement; you who would shut up every saloon in the land and burn every distillery; you believe that Christ was God himself, or at the very least his inspired prophet. You will therefore give him credit for foreseeing the future and for knowing what he was about in all he did. As an inspired prophet and the founder of a great religion, which, as he said, was ultimately to subdue to itself all the nations of the earth, he must have been aware that every act and expressed thought of his would influence throughout all their lives—nay, through all eternity—millions of his future subjects. At the last supper, Christ solemnly enjoins upon all his disciples to take wine as "often as they meet together in remembrance of him," and they were "all to drink of it." So well did the early Christians carry out this injunction that we find St. Paul chiding the Corinthians for leaving the Lord's supper intoxicated, and doubtless many relapsed drunkards of our day were led to break their pledge by the taste of the sacramental wine.

God, for good reasons no doubt, has allowed various creeds to rule the hearts and souls of men; they have differed according to clime, race and age. There are, however, now in existence only these, which have ever held any very widespread sway over the habits and thoughts of mankind: the Hindoo, the Buddhistic, the Mahomedan, and the Christian. Now in whatever other ways these may differ from one another, the three first all agree with one another and differ from the Christian in the one point, that whereas the Christian religion encourages and enjoins upon its followers to take wine freely; the other three, each of which numbers more real followers than it, all most strictly forbid their votaries to touch fermented or intoxicating drinks under any circumstances whatever, nor can they be prevailed upon to do so till their faith in their own creed has been undermined by Christian influences; and the great superiority of Christian races to all others in the arts of civilization, even when no religious change is produced, is frequently sufficient to lead the simple Hindoo, or Musselman, or Buddhist, to adopt Christian vices which seem pleasant.

The Scotch coffee planters of Ceylon, like Scotchmen everywhere, are terrible fellows for whisky. Each of them employs four or five hundred coolies. The missionaries and the colporteurs labor hard amongst these coolies, who, entirely removed from heathen influences and thinking to please, are often apparently converted. When they have been baptized, I have often known those of them who stood high enough in favor to do so, send to the bungalow, saying: "Will master give me a bottle of brandy and some beer? I Christian now; must drink same as master." And I am quite certain from my own observations—I had 20,000 of them under my medical charge for ten years—that they look upon the imbibition of alcohol, if not upon intoxication itself, as one of our solemn sacred rites. Why not? They see our clergy, i. e. our priests, solemnly handing round the cup of wine in our temples, and they see their Christian masters finish every convivial meeting singing "Auld Lang Syne" in anything but steady, harmonious voices, with one foot upon the table and the other no where in particular. These natives, and it is the same all over India, both in the Buddhistic and Hindoo portions of it, become incorrigible drunkards as soon as the missionaries and the influences around them have destroyed their reverence for their old religion.

As to what is nearer home I need not speak to you or your readers. You all know, who know anything of the present state of Heathendom and Christendom, that all heathen countries were once absolutely sober; that all heathens were once, what you now want us to become, "Good Templars." You all know as well as I do that drunkenness is now the rampant sin, the great grandmother of all vice, and violence, and wrong, all over the Christian world. You all know that wherever missionaries carry the religion of Christ—to India, to China, to the islands of the fair Pacific—there somehow or other they carry drunkenness too. You all know that as soon as a heathen continent or a savage island becomes christianized and civilized, as you call it, it just as soon becomes a drunken continent and a drunken island, and indeed in that exact proportion.

There is one other curious fact connected with this matter; it is this: Protestant countries are more drunken than Catholic lands, Protestant proselytes than Catholic proselytes, and Puritan communities than Episcopal ditto. Is this because Catholics do not take the sacramental wine, or is it because most Catholic countries are wine growing countries, where little spirit is distilled? I cannot tell. I never saw so much drunkenness in my life as in the Australian colonies, and I never was in any land where folk are so parson-ridden, so orthodox, or so intolerant of advanced opinions. Why just after I left Melbourne, not five years ago, a man was imprisoned for blasphemy who lectured against the authenticity of the books of Moses! I ask you, is there no connection between that cause and this effect, and if there be, what are you going to do about? What's the good of asking us to sign the pledge of total abstinence on your sacramental tables, with your sacramental alcohol in its tasteful tankard, witnessing and solemnizing our sacred bond; the marriage feast of Cana of Galilee, the waterpots of wine before our mind's eyes, and the last words of our Savior, "Drink ye all of it," ringing in our mind's ears? This is probably how the missionaries have tried to teetotalize the Sandwich Islanders, and now instead of the 500,000 Good Templars that Captain Cook found in that earthly paradise, there are about 50,000 liars and drunkards!

I am of the opinion, Mr. Editor, that the Christian ladies and the clergy who are for prohibition would do well to reconsider things a little by the light of the above facts before they go to extremes.

MONEY.

[For Common Sense.]

The lever of our present material progress is Money. The writings of editors, to say nothing of the numerous works on political economy, the speaking of orators, the legislating of congresses and assemblies, all go to prove that the problem of money is uppermost in the minds of the actors upon the present stage of being. And if confirmation were needed to more fully demonstrate this position, it would be furnished in the every day conversation of the masses. But the evident quandary of the kings of finance is as demonstrable as our first proposition. The anomalous condition created by the vast expenses incurred in the late civil war, is one which these money savans cannot understand. Their ignorance, however, is if possible more than matched by their egotism. They write and talk as though nothing were more simple or more easy of adjustment, and yet no settlement of the question is reached; nor will there be until it is discovered that there must be progress in financial matters as well as others. Until it is conceded that a scientific solution can be given; and, as a result, such solution be sought in accordance with the rigid methods of science, we shall continue to flounder about in the uncertainties of ignorant experimentalism, shadowed by the prejudices of the past. In the meantime it behooves those who have studied the problem, and penetrated beneath the crust of the subject, to throw what light they can upon the matter. And it seems to us that the first thing in this investigation is to ascertain the

ORIGIN OF MONEY.

How came man to use anything which we call Money? There could have been no money, no conception of the idea, till there had first been commerce, or traffic. The first commerce was, of course, a simple barter, or the exchange of one thing of necessity or use for another. Time soon created conditions where this could not be done, and jewels and trinkets of the primitive man were used as an offset or equivalent for the goods of his fellow. The expansion of trade, growing out of the multiplied wants of man, necessitated a more enlarged currency, and to meet the necessity the metals and other substances heretofore used for ornaments were made into money. This was the origin of money, and shows why metals like gold and silver were among the primitive materials of money. Numerous reasons are at hand to show why they have so long continued to maintain the position of exclusive money. But we leave that part of the subject for the present.

PRIMITIVE MONEY ESSENTIALLY VALUABLE.

This specie, or metallic money, possessed of itself an intrinsic value, for it was limited in quantity and difficult of procurement. For these reasons a small amount could be made to represent and measure, as to value, very large quantities of other and more plentiful commodities. It measured the value of other commodities by the attributed value possessed by itself. Being itself a commodity, its measuring power depended upon its relative scarcity or plenty. Hence there was, there could be, no fixed standard of value. The first use of the material of money (specie) as an ornament fixed its estimated value upon the basis of caprice, just as gems are now valued. It had no real, no scientific basis. It was no representative of a given amount of labor performed, or goods produced by the performance of such labor. The crude notion of barbarism is the predominant idea of so-called civilization. Theoretically it allows nothing but metal to be money, and attaches value thereto in the same empirical and ignorant way as did the crude barbarism of four thousand years ago. In theory we have made no improvement upon the men of bygone nations and ages. We have a commodity money, subject to constant and incurable fluctuations. Hereafter we shall see why the money kings cling so tenaciously to this twin sister of aristocratic despotism.

ITS UTTER FAILURE.

But the fact of its being a commodity itself, and very limited in quantity, ensured its final and total failure. The expansion of commerce outstripped the capacity of the metals for a currency, or medium of exchange. There was not enough in the world, or by any means procurable, to meet the necessities of trade. But the same wisdom which put a stone in one end of the bag to balance the grain in the other insisted on keeping up the pretense when the reality had vanished. Paper, in various forms, was substituted for specie, but it was only a representative of money resting on a specie basis, not real money itself. It should be remarked, in passing, that prior to the invention of paper substitutes the monarch used to debase the coin with baser metal. This, however, was too transparent a swindle, and soon failed to answer the purposes of its authors. The bank paper accomplished the same end and effectually deceived the people. They were lulled to sleep by the specious though false pretense of a specie basis and specie redemption. The potent spell is not yet broken, and men talk and dream of "specie payments," as though it were an easy matter, when no bedlamite ever dreamed more wildly.

USURY.

Money, as we have seen, is a result, a necessity of commerce, or the exchange of commodities, and originally these commodities were articles of necessary use. One of the results of human acquisitiveness, using commerce as a means, is speculation. Out of this, as a legitimate effect, has sprung usury, or, as we term it, interest taking. Honest commerce needs no system of interest; it is a safe pursuit. Speculation deals in desperate chances and ventures, and aims at robbery, though under the stolen garb of equitable traffic. Not being the natural child of productive toil, but the incestuous offspring of reckless avarice and miserly greed, the practice of interest taking is strictly germane to its nature. The speculator is the licensed robber of civilization, and has become so respectable that usury, his progeny, is honored both by church and state, by priest and politician, and it is hard to say which gives the most hearty approval. Consequent upon the legalization and sanctification of this species of robbery, money has become the power of the world. It fixes arbitrarily all values, and, by means of interest, reproduces itself, or rapidly gathers all values into the hands of the few; and so it will and must do, until the old is swept away and star-eyed science brings in the new.

FINANCE.

INTERVIEWING A DEAF MUTE.

BY PROF. W. H. CHANEY.

His name is W. Delevan; he is a photographer, living at Santa Rosa, Cal., is thirty-seven years old, has a wife and two children in Pennsylvania, and has a female canine as deaf as himself. It is curious to see how perfectly these two are enabled to understand each other, by a sign-language, invented by the necessities of the occasion. She was lying under the table, apparently asleep; he made a sign and she instantly approached, when he took one of my posters and gave to her which she held in such a way that a person standing in front could read it. One hour after, she still had it in her mouth, having carried it about for persons to read.

He gave me his data of birth and I gave him a brief delineation, describing that he had a mole, mark or scar on a particular part of his body. He replied that my descriptions were correct, that he had a wart on the part of the body mentioned, of which no one but his mother and wife knew. This was at the Mapes Hotel, in the presence of several witnesses. He was greatly interested, never having met an Astrologer before.

At our next interview the subject of immortality came up, involving queries touching the origin of man. I copy and condense from our written discussion, commencing his paragraphs with a capital "D.," and mine with a "C."

D.—Do you think animals have souls?

C.—Everything, even the mineral, has a germ of immortality.

D.—I have not got so far as that, but it seems to me that all life should have.

C.—The kernel of wheat which has lain three thousand years in the Egyptian sarcophagus— [He took the pencil from my hand and wrote:]

D.—Will germinate. That I have seen tested on a small scale by the planting of corn taken from an Indian grave. So it is very possible that Time itself has no effect on the Life of the grain and its power to germinate. It is only chemical change.

C.—If only chemical change, then the corn would germinate after the kernel had been ground to powder. No, each grain contains a germ, aye, a spirit, just as much as man.

D.—I have noticed in several instances, in California, that a wheat field, allowed to "volunteer," will often turn to oats.

C.—No; wheat never turns to oats. I have searched in vain for such evidence. There must have been oats among the wheat, and for some cause unknown to us, the wheat perished but the oats survived. Everything is true to its nature and conditions; rye never turns to barley, apples never grow in the ground, nor potatoes on trees. The different races of men all had a different origin. Climate makes some difference in color, but not all the difference. Claudius Ptolemy, born in the first century of our present era, tells us of white people in Africa who were then known to have lived there, with their ancestors, for a thousand years. Their descendants still live in Africa, but are no nearer being negroes than their ancestors, three thousand years ago.

D.—But negroes sometimes turn white, as albinos.

C.—True, but this is a diseased condition.

D.—Why diseased, since children are born to them, and they live to mature age?

C.—Still I think it a diseased condition because so rare, forming the exception rather than the general rule. The red soil of earth has a different origin from the black, and never changes to black any more than felspar changes to quartz. So with the races of men; they are composed of different primates, and however much they may progress, one cannot turn into another. For thousands of years they may live side by side, breathe the same air, live on the same food, yet never become the same. Illustration: A goose, pig, calf and sheep in the same pasture, eat the same grass, yet by some occult law, unknown to man, each will assimilate the same nutriment so that it shall produce feathers, bristles, hair and wool respectively, so that neither would ever turn into one of the others.

D.—I do not expect to make a white man out of a Chinaman, but the sudden changes in the color of people has often made me wonder at the original cause. I have seen children of eighteen or twenty, born in this country, of dark Swedes, who (the children) were very fair blondes, Also pure Spanish the same way, and vice versa in many families.

C.—Prof. Wm. Baird Powell saw a family of eight children, born from the same parents, both of whom had dark hair and complexion, being good types of the bilious temperament. The four elder of the children had complexions like the parents, while the four younger had reddish hair and complexion to correspond. The four elder were born in Florida; the four younger in Pennsylvania. All were coarse, raw-boned and muscular, the red-haired ones showing none of that symmetry peculiar to the sanguine temperament. They were substantially the same type of the genus homo, differing only in color, like the dhalia. Both sets of children were of the bilious temperament. The climate effected a change of color, but substantially there was no change.

[I omit some lengthy explanations of the beautiful spiritual philosophy which I made to him, and resume:]

D.—I have been thinking about what you say about beginning the next life just where we leave off here. Do you believe, then, that this life is expressly for the next?

C.—That is my opinion. I also hold that this earth was formed expressly to be the abode of man. Millions of ages elapsed, after the untold millions of azoic years, before the earth was capable of producing the first animal bearing a resemblance to man. A hundred thousand years more have elapsed, during which this original savage monster has been developing, until now the highest types have become partially civilized. An eternity of progression is before man, and at each advance he will look back to all previous advances, realizing that each was expressly for what succeeded. To illustrate: The caterpillar is made expressly as a condition precedent of the butterfly, and having fulfilled the mission of grub-life, he spins and weaves his shroud, makes his will and falls asleep to wake up a butterfly. Just so it is with man. The Greeks taught immortality under this very figure, Psyche meaning both a butterfly and a human soul.

D.—Your answer to me is rather startling. I had thought that our main trouble in solving the future has been our blind way of trying to find our origin.

C.—Immortality cannot be proved inductively, save through spirit communion, which is doubted by scientists; therefore we must reason a priori, thus: Nature never gives a desire which she cannot gratify; every race and tribe of men have an idea of and desire for immortality; ergo, man is immortal. I confess that this is rather poor logic, but the best that can be offered to those who deny spirit communion. The Bible does not afford us one iota of proof on the subject.

D.—The greatest proof, and to me conclusive, is the very fact that we not only desire, but question Nature itself upon the matter. Our wishes are our gods and our prayers. To me, the very best of all religions is to see two little, loving children, choosing some star as a home, peopling it and fashioning their Eden. Surely they know nothing of the Bible, only they have been told they will go to heaven if good. They know not how to theorize, and have no dread. So, so far as they are concerned, their religion is not only pure, but to my mind really practical. I do not at times think that human life began on this earth any more than I doubt that aerolites are particles of space condensed. It is proved to my satisfaction that they have molecular action, and as I learn more of my God, the more I demand of him. It is sheer folly in any human soul to think that as soon as he dies he is going straight to the captain's office and get a job as first mate.

C.—I have not yet learned your name. Please favor me with it, and allow me to copy some of this conversation for the "COMMON SENSE," a new paper just started in San Francisco. The editor will send you a copy when published.

D.—I have no ambition to be known as a philosopher, but my name is W. Delevan. You are welcome to all that we have written. I have very radical ideas about some things. My life has been such as to direct my train of reasoning into different channels from those of most men, and I have accepted no teachers on any side of a question of this kind. I sum up the whole matter in these words, it is simply education, and when, many billions of years hence, if ever, when I know as much as God knows, then I shall be part and parcel of God. I have read no really infidel book in my life, and never will. I have read but few of the many theories, and don't believe in Spiritualism as a physical teacher of the future. If I have any bias I incline more to Swedenborg. As I believe in worlds immensely superior to ours, so I believe in inferior ones.

There must be gradations in worlds, the same as in other departments of Nature. Each species just fills the bill and no more. So, after all, the only way I can express myself is, the worlds are only a series of departments, with schools and class-rooms for training immortal souls to enter the vast college of God.

Here the interview ended, for, having begun in the character of teacher, I suddenly felt myself metamorphosed into a pupil. Here is a natural man; one who has not been perverted by teachings of any kind, save on the side of Christianity. But he has never heard a howling parson; has never listened to the awful groans and other appliances of a revival meeting, and so, without knowing it, is really a respectable cross between an Infidel and a Spiritualist. The Christian's God is to him something horrible, and in writing about him he said: "If there is a man on earth who has cause to hate God it is me!" Poor fellow! No wonder he feels that way, in view of his terrible affliction and no sin on his part. Christianity is more than he can stand.

MORE PROOF WANTED.

However venerable "Another Old Man" may be, it is evident that he has not lost his relish for a little pleasantry; it is almost impossible that a man who handles the pen with so much ease should intend his communication for serious reasoning. It is very likely that many things are true which he can't prove; but it don't follow that Spiritualism is true because he can't prove it. I hate to trespass on your space, Mr. Editor, which I know is devoted to more valuable matter, but his article is so ingeniously worded and so cleverly put together, that I earnestly desire to make a few remarks.

Science teaches that there are some sixty substances which, in the present state of our knowledge, we cannot decompose; it does not follow that they never will be, and cannot be, and that none of them are compounds. "Science teaches him" no such thing. He says: "Life is co-eternal and co-existent with matter; and as matter is indestructible, life is also indestructible." To say that life is eternal, is simply begging the question; that is, if by "life" he means our consciousness of individuality and identity; if he does not mean that, it has nothing to do with the subject. "Life co-exists with matter," is a platitude. We all know there is a something we call life and a something we call matter. It is not certain that what we call matter is indestructible, and the inference drawn from that alleged fact is worthless. That we cannot annihilate it, does not justify his assertion.

"Life demonstrates itself by virtue of the combination of these primates." Now if this is so, the fair inference is that it will no longer demonstrate itself when the combination is destroyed; which is just what I am afraid of. If he can convince me that I am immortal, I will go down upon my knees to him as to a benefactor. His assertion that "the identity and individuality of such life remains after the form is destroyed," is as cheeky an assumption as I ever read, and of which he does not give an atom of proof.

THE OLD MAN.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

AGENTS IN THE INTERIOR.

Contra Costa county..... E. H. Kimball, Antioch.
 Inyo county..... Mrs. L. Hutchinson, Bishop Creek.
 Monterey county..... W. M. Wilson, Salinas City.
 Sacramento county..... A. S. Hopkins, No. 70 J street.
 Santa Barbara county..... Mrs. Clara R. Crane, Santa Barbara.
 San Bernardino county..... Dr. J. P. Greves, Riverside.
 Santa Cruz county..... Mrs. Georgiana B. Kirby.
 San Joaquin county..... W. S. Sturgeon, Stockton.
 Sonoma county..... Thomas Pollard, Stony Point.
 Ventura county..... J. W. Stevens, San Buenaventura.
 Yolo county..... J. G. Hudson, Woodland.

TRAVELING AGENTS, Abby W. Baker, Prof. W. H. Chaney, J. L. York, I. I. Ferree, Addie L. Ballou, H. F. M. Brown.

COMMON SENSE is furnished to subscribers for Three Dollars per annum, in advance. Letters intended for the Business Department should be addressed:

A. T. CLARK, BUSINESS MANAGER, 236 Montgomery st.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

Christianity and Intemperance—Don Fulano .....	76
Money.....	77
Interview with a Deaf Mute—Prof. Chaney.....	78
Nore Proof Wanted—Old Man.....	79
Mrs. Van Cott—Ed .....	81
Christ as a Leader—E. Hughes .....	82
Spiritualism; Its Mission—A. D. Stowe .....	83
Poetry .....	86

COMMON SENSE.

WILLIAM N. SLOCUM, EDITOR.

AMANDA M. SLOCUM, ASSISTANT.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, JUNE 27, 1874.

MRS. WOODHULL is to give her farewell lecture in this city, at Platt's Hall, Monday evening, July 6th; subject, "Woman's inhumanity to woman makes countless millions mourn."

The design for the new Pioneer Building, prepared several months ago by Wright & Sanders, has been adopted by James Lick and the Committee. Its cost will be over $300,000.

The students of the Art School go to the fields once a week on a sketching excursion. Some of the out-door sketches made by them are indicative of much artistic ability.

On the evening of the Fourth of July a grand illuminated balloon ascension will take place at Woodward's Gardens. There will also be a grand ball of the German Garde Fusilier, with the usual attractions during the day.

An entertainment is soon to be given at Mercantile Library Hall in aid of the Children's Progressive Lyceum, at which we are promised speaking, singing, tableaux, and a performance of "Nau, the Good-for-nothing," with Mrs. Allyn as Nan. Other particulars in due course.

MRS. ADDIE L. BALLOU left on the last steamer for Oregon, and we bespeak for her a kind reception from the Spiritualists of that State. She is a good speaker, an estimable lady, and in every respect worthy of the support of the people. Furthermore, she is the agent for COMMON SENSE, which alone is proof that she is "one of the chosen."

ASTRO-THEOLOGICAL LECTURES.—Professor Chaney commences a series of lectures at Charter Oak Hall on Thursday evening next. He is a very entertaining and instructive speaker, and a radical reformer. Spiritualists especially should give him a good support. His lectures are as interesting as Denton's, while his style of speaking is more pleasing.

ROBERTS ON MARRIAGE.

In the Board of Supervisors, on Tuesday evening, Mr. Roberts proposed the passage of an ordinance, which he said was designed to prevent immoral lectures. The proposed order declares that—

"It shall be unlawful * * * to publish or utter in a public place or in the hearing of two or more persons any blasphemous words or language, or any words or language tending directly to lower public morals, or to weaken public respect or the respect of any person, whether married or not, for the obligation of the marriage contract," etc.

The offense is made a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or by both fine and imprisonment. Mr. Roberts stated that he introduced the order by request of "citizens of the highest character and standing," and he favored its passage. The order was referred to the Health and Police Committee, several of the members speaking of it with contempt, and perhaps this is the only proper mode of treating it; but it may be well to inquire who are to decide what language is "blasphemous"? And what is it that is to be considered marriage? When a young girl sells herself to a rich old roue, whose very presence she detests, but whose money provides her with a luxuriant home, is she a wife or a prostitute? And when people who really marry with good motives, after a brief dream of happiness, awaken to the realization that they have made a great mistake, and the flame of love dies to ashes on the family hearth, indifference if not hatred taking its place, is their continuance in such relation to be considered marriage? In short, is it the law merely that constitutes marriage, and do these "citizens of high character" seriously propose to put such law beyond criticism under penalty of fine and imprisonment? The men who could make such a proposition may be "citizens of high repute," but they certainly are not persons of good COMMON SENSE.

THE OVERLAND for July contains a choice and varied selection of matter, poetry and prose. One of the sweetest pieces of metrical composition we have recently seen is "A Song of the Summer Wind," by Ina D. Coolbrith. Charles Kingsley contributes a portion of one of his lectures, "Our Norse Forefathers." Mr. Muir continues his admirable series of papers, and J. P. Widney, has an article written in his easy flowing style, a fine price of poetical prose—strong, vigorous and striking, it evidently suggested the verses which follow it, "Out from Eden," by the new editor, Walter M. Fisher. Mrs. Victor has an article entitled "The Pioneers of Oregon," and Joaquin Miller contributes a characteristic poem, "In Arizona." The "Romance of a Sleeping Car" is a good story, and "411" by Amalie La Forge, is exceedingly well told, though not calculated to make the reader any happier or better satisfied with life as it is; for, though a story, it reads like the truth, and the truth is sad. The editorials are excellent. Mr. Fisher, the new editor, will superintend the next number, as Mr. Avery leaves for China on the 15th of July. Mr. Avery's great usefulness in this State has been somewhat obscured by an excess of modesty, but it is none the less real, and will one day be fully appreciated.

MRS. VAN COTT.

This lady is again exhorting the people of San Francisco to repentance, and as impartial chroniclers of the times, it becomes our duty to let our readers know something of her style of speaking and the drift of her discourses. It is impossible to speak of her person, manner and address, other than in terms of admiration. She is a tragic queen of eloquence, with perhaps excessive emphasis and action. She is the Daniel O'Connell of womanly oratory. Large, full, fine in figure, with flowing robes of black, relieved only by a bouquet on her bosom, she stands before her audience the embodiment of feminine majesty. When she speaks it is with an abandonment that seems unstudied, and yet that is nicely adapted to the purpose and the occasion. Her voice is of great power, and rather masculine in its tone, but modulated with the skill of a songstress, and with as wide a compass. She touches the chords of the human heart with a master's hand, and conquers all but those of cool, rational judgment. When she concluded her discourse on Monday evening, we felt that had Mary Magdalene, or the other Mary, come straight from the crucifixion, with the blood of Christ still fresh upon her garments, and his love still clinging round her heart, she could not have spoken in more glowing terms, or with a deeper consciousness of truth, than did Mrs. Van Cott of the sacrifice of Jesus, and of the glorious prospects promised as the results. In fact she is well calculated for a leader among women, and indeed among men for that matter. Her organization is of the first order, physically and intellectually. Did she therefore convince us of the truth of her teachings? No. She, like thousands of others, has allowed her mind to fall into a local groove. She has accepted, without a thought, the dominant creed of her age and nation, and uses all her ingenuity, not to discover whether it be true or not, but how to present it in the most acceptable form. And she does present it forcibly, feelingly, and in a manner well calculated to overcome all who have not looked beyond; who have not seen the clear horizon of pure light that is above all creeds, that is above all local surroundings; the universal knowledge that knows no nation, and no clime.

During her discourse Mrs. Van Cott presented, and professed to answer, thirteen reasons or excuses that men give for not immediately becoming Christians. One was expressed thus: "Oh, I do not understand these things; they are not clear to my judgment!" Her reply was magnificent. It was sublime! Only a devoted woman could give expression to such perfect trust and abiding confidence. "Not understand!" she exclaimed, "not understand God and his plans. Oh, I never expect to understand! I kneel, I trust, I worship, I obey; I do not question God, I adore Him. I cannot worship what I understand. These gentlemen, reverend divines, who are here around me, I respect, I love; but I do not kneel and worship them. I cannot, because I fathom their utmost thoughts; I scan their motives; I even perceive their errors. I am with them, on the same plane, and cannot worship or adore. I kneel only to God, whose inscrutable mystery I dare not unveil, lest the ineffable glory slay me where I stand. If you wait to understand God, you wait forever; and your day of grace may be closed to-night. Let the impossible alone. Will you take no food till you understand all its effects upon your system? How, then, will you refuse salvation because you do not comprehend God's plan in bringing it about?"

She had evidently seen the brokers on the corner of California and Montgomery. She did not like the sinners; their sharp worldly pursuits; their eagerness for gain; their utter neglect of the great pearl of price, and their devotion to filthy lucre. But she did admire the avidity with which they sought the temple of their god, and the promptness and alacrity with which they bought the rising stock. Oh! they would not wait, no, not a minute; it might go up beyond their reach, and in a moment all be lost. Sinners stand waiting, halting, hesitating to accept salvation, without money and without price, the entire capital stock, a clean profit; while these wicked brokers risk their fortunes for a mere margin, which may often all be on the losing side.

Others, she said, will not have religion because they say it is not a pleasant thing; that it is gloomy, sorrowful, and a constant trial. But she assured them that it is otherwise; and with a countenance beaming with delight she pictured the joy of the saints; her own life of joyous devotion, and referred to a thousand promises that to those who seek the Lord and his righteousness all other things shall be added; and so sunny and bright was her smile, so elastic her step, so joyous and glad the tones of her voice, that even the writer began to sympathize with one so earnest, so evidently honest and truthful; but when she called around her the faithful from among the audience, and we saw the solemn gravity that rested on their countenances, the awful responsibility for sin reflected from their rueful faces, and then thought of the jolly, rotund visages of the wicked brokers, it became evident that their joy at least had not begun, and that the personal magnetism of the speaker had much more to do with the effect produced than had the truth of her discourse.

When the mourners were called, she had a word for all. She walked and talked among the people, led the singing, led the prayers, spoke to the indifferent, laid hands on the hesitating, and with a magnetic power and self-possession rarely displayed, was yet dignified and appropriate everywhere. No wonder sympathetic people love, admire and follow her. Yet, notwithstanding all this, the mass of the congregation was not much moved. A few only went up to the altar, and these chiefly of the young. The day of revivals is passed. The judgment of people is in the ascendant, and must be convinced, before any permanent impression can be made. This was well illustrated even in this meeting. Mrs. Van Cott espied a gentleman who had hung with deep attention on her discourse, and making her way towards him, invited him to the praying circle. He modestly refused to go. She would have some reason. She demanded some explanation. Had he not a good mother? Did she not pray? Why should he not do so, then? "Yes," he replied, "I had a mother, and a grandmother. The latter was a Catholic; the former knew more, and became a Protestant; I know more still, and am neither. Have I not the same right to change that they had? Shall the world stand still? Then let us go back and be Druids again? Shall we not change as knowledge advances? Are we free to become from Druids Catholics, from Catholics Protestants; but not from Protestants to something else? Who shall set the outer wall of thought? I have gone beyond you here. You must come to me. I cannot go back to you. You are groping in the dark. I am out in the sunshine." She left him with an expression of deep and doubtless real sorrow. He said to the writer afterwards: "She is a noble woman, with most eminent natural gifts, and capable of a world of good. But she does not rise above her sect. All her ideas are circumscribed. They are local instead of universal. She has not risen above the fog and mist of her native village. She is a giantess in a dungeon. Give her light and liberty and she will work wonders; but under this cloud she can do nothing for me. Perhaps I do not know any more of God than she does, yet I trust Him just as much. But I do not trust those who say, 'Lo, here is God,' or 'there is God!' This is to put my trust in man, and not in God."

Mrs. Van Cott is a great woman, and delightful to listen to, but she is of the past. She needs another conversion which shall be better than her first. Charles G. Ames used to say the two bright days of his life were, first, when he joined the church, and second, when he finally cast off its shackles and stood a free man among men. Mrs. Van Cott needs this second regeneration. She would make a glorious Spiritualist, and as such would be a far greater power for good than she now is. She would then lead the way to a better life here, knowing that the hereafter depends upon the character here formed, and not upon mere faith in a higher power. That sin cannot be forgiven is a philosophical truth, as evident to the thinker as any self-evident fact can be. Let Mrs. Van Cott once become convinced of this, and fully realize how utterly futile is the hope of salvation through any power outside of ourselves, and she would awaken to a new life. Then, if her eyes could be opened to the glories of the Spiritualists' faith, and she could know that death is but the portal to a higher life for us all, the beginning of a purer, better state, and that there even as here is opportunity for improvement, she might indeed become an apostle of reform. She need lose none of her enthusiasm; none of her deep reverence for God; none of her love for man or her hopes of eternal glory; on the contrary, all that is good in her present faith would shine the brighter; all that is absurd and repulsive would pass away, and she might truly be hailed as a savior of men.

Prof. Patton has prepared an appeal to the Presbyterian Synod of Illinois from the decision of the Chicago Presbytery acquitting Prof. Swing.

CHRIST AS A LEADER.

I find that Mr. Lewis condescends to admit that our Lord Jesus Christ was a spiritualist and a medium. That is a little improvement. Some gentlemen of Mr. Lewis' way of thinking call him a vagabond and a bummer. It is time we called things by their right names. That is one of the great good things V. C. Woodhull has done; and any breath of the fresh air of truth that can be let into the atmosphere of our worn-out society, poisoned by so much corruption, does a great deal of good. Who was Christ? What was he? Where is he? Who he was my own soul tells me better than Mr. Lewis' words. I recognize in him, not simply a spiritualist and a medium, but a master of spirits, a ruler of the lower forms of spirit life. To the grand status of Christ we Spiritualists of to-day have none of us yet come, and every day's experience of my inner spiritual life brings me new assurance of this. Was it mere words when he said that he would open to us a way to the Father—to the inmost, highest circle of love? Was it mere words when he asserted that he was one with him? It was the profoundest truth, lived out in his life and sealed by his death—truth which the spiritual experience of to-day will only make plainer when we come up high enough to see it. He did open to us the way to the Father by the divine love and unselfishness which was the essence of his whole being. He was one with the Father in this divinity of love and light; and so in the most philosophic sense was the at-one-ment. The hosts of spirits that had passed from our earth, very many of them, indeed most, taking with them their selfishness and love of worldly interests, hung over this world like the dense fog that sometimes overhangs the great city of London. He, that bright, transcendent one, could go beyond this, and elevated on the cross of agony, to which they had condemned him for blasphemy, could yet draw to him the hearts of all who long to tread the way which he, the great captain and standard bearer, has pointed out to them.

The way to-day is no smoother than it was then. The church has ceased to be a guide; the people are beginning to feel it. Every man in this day of conflict must take up his own burden, and see that his own house is founded on a rock. It has pained me to see the puerile attempts to ridicule the greatest spiritual revelation ever given to man—I mean the great Christ idea—on so-called spiritual platforms. There is too little hero worship to-day; perhaps there used formerly to be too much. Which do you think would be likely to gain the most correct idea of the whole surroundings of a battlefield in a case of dire emergency, he who on a commanding height can sweep the whole field, spyglass in hand; or he who when running along with a pail in his hand reverses it on the ground and just jumps on the top of it to see what he can see? Who would you rather trust—since the conditions of mortal life are that somebody must lead? Give me him who has already scaled the mountain, and on whose brow beams the auroral promise of the coming day.

SPIRITUALISM—ITS MISSION.

BY A. C. STOWE.

In view of the many attempts of late by professed followers of Spiritualism to define it and its mission, and the confusion into which they are led in narrowing it down to a specialty, induces me to take a hand at defining, in the hope that if I am unsuccessful in definition, I may at least spread it out on a broader basis. Any system of religion, morals or philosophy must be understood as the most liberal construction of its doctrines, ethics, facts and phenomena or rules shall interpret it, and not always as the literal definition of the name by which it has been christened would imply. A system that has passed a quarter of a century of zealous and enthusiastic advocacy, and through the ordeal of the most searching and rigid investigation that its friends could court or its enemies demand, cannot be misunderstood, at least by its intelligent advocates; and the late attempts to define Spiritualism are made not so much that its friends may the better understand it, as that its enemies may not misunderstand it, or rather may not deny that some of its practical issues are its legitimate offspring.

The first work of Spiritualism is to tear away the crape and all the habiliments of mourning; to light up the dark and shadowy valley to the tomb and strew the pathway with flowers; to roll away the stones from the million sepulchres and rend the veils from human temples, and transfigure the lost and loved ones to the enraptured vision of the weeping beholder; to demonstrate a continued existence, not of eternal torture for the many and eternal bliss for the few, but an endless life of activity, of progress and growth for all—a life where the earth-engendered faculties develop and unfold through culture, education and experience, as in this life, into higher and nobler characteristics; where aspiration and the longings of the soul shall meet fruition; where through latent forces and energies the grandest possibilities of the soul are outwrought.

What Spiritualism has done and is doing in demonstrating an after life, in correcting our theology, in establishing a science and philosophy more grand and beautiful than the ideals of the Orient and more practical than the utilitarianism of the Occident, is a more glorious work than that of all the religions and theologies that have preceded it. Yet its past work is insignificant compared with that which it is yet to do, with the future history it is yet to make. To demonstrate that we shall live after the dissolution of this organic structure is a glorious achievement; but if this is all, Spiritualism might as well have remained unborn, for of this we should have learned in a few short years. It is the how to live that most concerns us; how to grow and develop a fully rounded, noble manhood and womanhood, that shall be worth the living here, and make the country to which we are going the better and richer for our presence there. This is the grand mission of Spiritualism. Any system of religion or philosophy that shall fail to teach this is unworthy of our attention. It is an insult and mocking to all our hopes and aspirations to tell us of this possible attainment—the grand and glorious heights we may climb, without pointing out the pathway to that lofty eminence. Spiritualism has made no such mistake. Its angel fingers have pointed out and illumined this glorious highway. To the present generation, regeneration through education, growth, experience and experiment; for that which shall succeed us, generation—i. e., generation of attributes or qualities of soul that shall need no regeneration. Qualities of mind may be educated and greatly improved, but qualities or attributes of soul, if changed at all, are so slowly that it takes a lifetime to make the change perceptible. They may be somewhat modified or diverged into new channels, but generally no improvement in the qualities. For instance, the child kleptomaniac cannot by any amount of education overcome the desire to steal; some cannot except by force be kept from the indulgence in this propensity. This class generally find their way to the penitentiary. Others through family and society restraints are kept from outward and illegal acts of thieving. This class usually go to Congress.

Men and women must be born; they cannot be made or grown with any degree of success after birth. The good and beautiful qualities that shall transform men and women into angels and the earth into a paradise cannot be engrafted into character after the germs have hardened into manhood and womanhood, but in the pre-natal life, when all the elements of being are plastic and pliable and sensitive to the most delicate and subtle impressions; like the sculptor's plastic clay which he models into grace and beauty and almost animates with life, so this pre-natal clay must be modeled into beings of such transcendent qualities that it shall need but one birth to make them both human and angelic. Love must be the element and freedom the condition in which these glorious citizens shall perform their labor of love. This is practical Spiritualism and this its grandest mission. All systems based upon any other theory for uplifting humanity must utterly fail. Then all hail to Spiritualism, the angel of hope and of progress that is paving the way for future generations.

Another marriage by agreement has been decided legal in Brooklyn, New York. Peter Simmons in 1851 agreed with a Miss Cornelia Potter to live together as man and wife, and in 1865 they were formally married, their only child having been born in the interim. This child, when three months old, was adopted by a Mr. and Mrs. Gibbs, and believed them to be her parents until recently she was summoned by the executor of the Simmons estate to appear as one of the heirs. Her father, who died in 1872, bequeathed some pictures to Selma Gibbs, declaring her in his testament to be his daughter; therefore the executor of the estate sued to ascertain whether Peter's share should not pass to Selma as his surviving heir. The question to be determined was the fact of her legitimacy, the Court holding that an agreement to live together as man and wife, if faithfully executed, constituted a lawful marriage. The jury returned, after mature deliberation, a verdict in favor of Miss Gibbs, who loses her name but gains $50,000.

SPIRITUAL PHENOMENA.

NUMBER FIVE.

MR. EDITOR: I wish to give you an account of some interesting seances held with Mrs. Hollis by X. and myself; but I find that I can only make these intelligible by relating first an incident which happened to me many years ago in Ceylon.

Whilst practicing in Kaudy, the mountain capital, as a physician, a cousin of mine came out from London to seek his fortune. Arthur Jones was a clever fellow, and had long been engaged in journalism in England; but he had the misfortune to be quite blind from amaurosis. He and I agreed to start a progressive weekly paper in Kaudy, which we called the Kaudy Herald. We took a house on Trincomalee street. It contained two rooms on the ground floor, and three small rooms overhead. One of the ground floor rooms was very spacious, and was intended by us to be our press room; the other, which opened into it by a glass door, was the sanctum. The rooms above were reached by a wooden stairway leading up from the yard at the back. Until we could get presses and type we had to print our paper at the press of the Ceylon Times in Colombo, distant seventy miles by rail. The upper rooms of the house were occupied by Jones. Before he had lived many months in Kaudy, my cousin was seized with a virulent malarious remittent fever; treatment was of no avail, and at a consultation of all the physicians in town it was decided to send him down to Colombo as a last chance. I took him down, left him with his brother, and returned to Kaudy. In a few days, getting a telegram to say that he was worse, I went down to see him, and found him with ice on his shaven head, semi-comatose, and evidently dying. A few mornings after my return to Kaudy, on my going to the office at 9 a. m., the Cingalese clerk said to me: "The peon says he must leave, sir." "Why?" "He does not give any reason, but he is bent on going at once." Now the peon was a steady, honest heathen, whose business it had been to run our errands, carry out our papers, and wait on my cousin. He had excellent pay, easy work, and since Jones' illness very little to do. I knew that he thought himself a most fortunate man. He slept in the house at night as watchman. I sent for him, and asked him through the clerk what was amiss. "Well," he stammered, "his mother was dead, and he wanted to bury her." "That," I said, "is a lie; tell me your real reason." He beat about the bush for a long time, and then said, that he had been undisturbed in the house, until the previous night; but that then, after he had lain down, an English gentleman had come into the house, opened and banged the almirah doors, and made so much disturbance that he could get no sleep; and nothing would induce him to stay another night. "Did you see him?" "No, it was too dark." "How do you know it was an English gentleman?" "Because his boots creaked so." "Who do you think it was?" "Mr. Jones." "Nonsense; Mr. Jones is ill in Colombo." I continued: "I can't listen to this nonsense." The man offered to forego the pay due to him. I said he must fulfill his contract. At length he consented to stay, on condition of my allowing him to have companions. "Bring as many as you please; but be surety for their honesty." The man went away delighted. At 12 m. the morning train arrived from Colombo. A friend who had come by it, stepped into the office, and said: "Your cousin Jones died last night." On my going to the office next day, I asked the clerk how the peon had passed the night. The man laughed, and said, "Worse than ever." I had him called. He declared that in the middle of the night Mr. Jones came up the stairs—they were burning an oil lamp—banged the doors, opened the cupboards; and noticing the strangers lying on their mats on the floor, kicked them, and ordered them out. They rushed out of the house frightened out of their lives. I asked the peon if he had remained. He said that Mr. Jones took no notice of him. "The night after this, precisely the same thing occurred with a different set of men; for the same men could not be induced to try it again. I intended fully to have slept in the house myself, but a press of patients prevented me till it was too late.

On the following day I was seated alone in the sanctum about midday, the clerk having gone to his lunch. It was a blazing hot day, with the thermometer at about 90 in the shade. No one was in the street. The house was as still as the tomb. I was writing an editorial, with my back to the glass door opening into the press room, and beside a window opening upon the front verandah. Absorbed in my work, I had nevertheless been aware for some time that some one was walking on the floor above. If I thought about it at all, I took it to be the clerk or some friend. Presently I heard footsteps passing down the creaking stairs, and coming into the press room; as they approached the door I turned in my seat to see who it might be. To my astonishment, my cousin, clad in his ordinary light linen suit, with a solar helmet on his head, a meerschaum pipe in his mouth and a stick in his hand—just as he went about in life—walked slowly past the glass door with his profile, which was a striking one, turned towards me; never once looked my way, but marched straight into the verandah. I sprang to the window; he was just passing down the steps into the street. I vaulted out of the window, and would have run after him had I had my hat. But I stood in awe of sunstroke; so I contented myself with watching him cross the street, smoking vigorously, walk down the length of the block and disappear round the corner. He walked in the gutter on the opposite side of the way most of the distance, with that uncertain gate which was the result of his blindness, yet with a determined air, as though bent on a purpose. He never once looked back. He often used to walk in the gutter when alive. I saw his profile for several minutes. His was a singular face, and he dressed peculiarly. There was not a man in Kaudy, or in Ceylon, a bit like him. I am sure I was not mistaken in his identity. Jones never again made himself audible or visible about the premises, and I had no more complaints of bad nights' rest from the peon.

MEDICUS.

We are obliged to omit the account of the seance with Mrs. Hollis until next week.—[Ed.]

THE LOCAL OPTION LAW.

BRIEF ACCOUNT OF THE DISCUSSION AT DASHAWAY HALL.

The question whether or not the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating drinks is not an infringement upon individual rights is under discussion before the Society for Self-Culture. On Sunday last the debate was opened by Dr. Merrick, who showed by figures that whisky drinking does not pay financially, and that the license money collected there is no absolute liberty consistent with any form of government. Civil liberty and natural rights are two different conditions. The social compact is possible only in each one sacrificing some of his natural rights. He likened our social structure to a vast building with a leaky roof. Let us stop the multitude of little leaks, and after a time we can direct our attention to the great five gallon leak in the center.

lected by the city is no compensation for the evil. He said the whisky trade cannot be considered as legitimate business, and any community depending on such commerce would starve, no matter how large the figures are.

Dr. O'Donnell charged this crusade with ulterior motives, hinting that it was got up in the interest of a certain religious party.

Prof. Chaney, alluding to O'Donnell's tirade against women, said if the women can come out of their seclusion, take an interest in politics, it is just what we want; and if the Local Option crusade will furnish them the incentive, then he went for it with all his might. He thought politics had been one-sided long enough and hailed with delight the new element in our elections. Our polling booths would in the future be erected amidst bowers of roses, presided over by our mothers and sisters, and he challenged a comparison with that state of affairs and the present management of elections.

Mr. Lund said that allowing a man five gallons of whisky would never sober him, and he thought some of our women would be better employed at home than in praying at saloons.

Mr. Healy could see that there are two sides to the question; he took the temperance side, and thought he could afford it. He said if the Local Option Law was not perfect, let us amend it; we do not expect perfection in any human law, and as for curtailing our personal liberty,

Mr. Farrell, Sr., spoke against the Local Option Law as being inconsistent with a free government, a patchwork unworthy of a thinking people, and which at best would only approximate towards reform. He was, however, glad to see the women take part in the movement, and predicted a great result from that phase of it.

The meeting now closed, the subject to be continued tomorrow, when the "license" men will have the opening.

TO PLEASURE SEEKERS AND INVALIDS.—Dr. A. W. Baylis wishes to lease his cottage on Clear Lake, for a season, or to exchange it for the use of a furnished house in town. It consists of three good-sized, roughly furnished rooms, and a kitchen; and is situated on a lovely peninsula, on the most romantic part of the Clear Lake shore. The climate is singularly healthful; deer, game and fish are plentiful. The use of two boats, shot-guns and a rifle, fishing tackle, etc., as well as that of some dozens of chickens and a milk cow, go with the house. The steamer connecting with the stage will set the passengers from Lakeport or Lower Lake down at the door. Apply to Dr. A. W. Baylis, No. 6 Montgomery street.

REINCARNATION.

MR. EDITOR: I regret to notice that my article in your last number bears several marks of careless writing. Amongst others, I state that Buddhists and Spiritualists both believe in the transmigration of the souls of the dead into the bodies of future men and animals. The French Spiritualists and the party in the East represented by the Banner of Light both proclaim the doctrine of reincarnation, which is to my mind a hateful and detestable creed. But I do not think I am justified in charging them with believing that human souls ever pass into the forms of animals in any of their new births; although I have more than once heard mediums describe individuals whom they professed to see in the spiritual world as occupying the forms of the lower orders of creation; but I never myself thought that much value was to be attached to such descriptions, which seemed to me to take rather the shape of fantastic dreams than of any actual and truthful vision.

I should be very glad indeed if some reincarnationist, of whom there must be several who see this paper, would let us know exactly what is the orthodox creed of those of his order as to this matter. Yours faithfully,

A. W. BAYLIS.

THE OAKLAND MANIFESTATIONS.—The voluminous evidence taken in the matter of the spiritual manifestations at the house of T. B. Clark, Oakland, shows conclusively that it was utterly impossible for the persons in the house to produce the manifestations testified to by the twenty-five witnesses examined, yet the following conclusion has been arrived at:

"The Committee, after a careful examination of the house and location of the furniture with respect to the persons present, after a patient hearing of the witnesses, and, as we believe, an impartial weighing and comparison of the testimony, find the evidence insufficient to indicate the action or presence of any supernatural or any occult agency whatever. (Signed) Joseph LeCount, W. W. Crane, Jr., J. K. McLean."

The testimony taken is sufficient to make a large volume. It is in Mr. Clark's possession, and will probably be published, in order that the public may pass its own judgment. In the summing up of the testimony the committee contradicted their own conclusions by admitting with regard to the unhinging of the front door, that "the weight of testimony as to this event seems to be overwhelming in support of the theory that it was caused by supernatural and occult agencies."

THERE was the usual attendance on Sunday at Mercantile Library Hall, the chief attraction being the lectures of Mrs. C. Fannie Allyn. Among the questions answered by her in the afternoon, were: In the future life will the sheep be separated from the goats? Do the planets exercise an influence upon man and his destiny? Will a Christian minister, in the future life, start out afresh to preach Christ? These subjects were handled by the lady in a style which elicited the frequent and warm applause of the audience.

Theodore Tilton offered last week to waive the plea of honorary membership in Plymouth Church, and to appear before its Examining Committee for trial on the charge of slandering Beecher. The proposition was declined.

PEACE.

[For Common Sense.]

BY E. B. PLACE.

By all our hopes, by all our fears, confessed,
 A poise of action is the natural rest.
 Name it not peace where stirs no moral breath;
 'Tis fatal ground—sominic cave of Death!
 No peace, when people starve, that lords may stuff;
 Less given to less, and more where now enough;
 Nor when the low, by poverty depressed,
 Send up no murmur of divine unrest,
 Forget their heirship of all Truth and Good,
 And asking only for their dole of food;
 Nor when a throne o'ertops our manhood's crown,
 And pride and titles ride true merit down,
 And coats-of-arms draw bright admiring eyes,
 While countless arms they see not, or despise;
 Nor when a people, with tumultuous rush,
 On pleasure bent, the young or weaker crush,
 Or blind directors, to high-score their gains,
 Pack the scant cars, and "telescope" the trains!
 Nor when the cry, "More gold is found—more gold!"
 Sets on the run the halt, lame, blind and old,
 And he who wins, discovers, as he must,
 His golden "pile" is, after all, but "dust;"
 Nor yet when bigot, with his loveless creed,
 Hath blocked all roads to other shrines that lead,
 To man-made Sunday pious vows doth pay,
 And strip our souls to overdress a day,
 Whereon he'd choke, with violence direct,
 All songs not found in "Watt's and Select;"
 Bar all the doors of Library and Hall—
 "To church or hell," the given choice of all—
 Smite the kind wheels that roll to breezes pure,
 Where Nature's free dispensary waits to cure;
 Belay the ferries, and switch off the track
 The poor man's car—but not the rich man's hack!
 That all may rest—no more the man than beast—
 All walk to church—but Dives and the Priest.
 That sumptuous these may dine, two maids remain
 To bake and roast (have they no heav'n to gain?)
 So Dives salts the pulpit's vapid fare
 With dreams of good things Maggie will prepare,
 And Levi whips his "lastly" into place,
 That Martha's cares may sanctify his grace.
 Thus "times" and "seasons" worshiped without jostle,
 In contravention of the old apostle,*
 Lost is the day where natural life expires,
 And pious pomp subdues all free desires.
 Lost, did I say? 'Tis worse than lost, oh! worse,
 To greet the wholesome uses with a curse!

A peace thus founded sleeps o'er hate's abyss;
 Not that way shines the city of our bliss.
 When pinching poverty shall grind no more,
 And work and worth bring plenty to the door;
 When dealt the bread of justice round the land,
 And each to each puts forth a helping hand;
 When man o'er man his greed of power shall cease—
 The key-note sounds! hail, universal peace!
 To this we're growing; or earth's dust and mold
 Symbol more truth than ever prophet told.

* Gal. iv. 10, 11; Rom. xiv. 5, 6.

The Soul that rises with us, our life's Star,
 Hath had elsewhere its setting,
 And cometh from afar;
 Not in entire forgetfulness
 And not in utter nakedness,
 But trailing clouds of glory do we come
 From God, who is our home.
 Heaven lies about us in our infancy!
 Shades of the prison-house begin to close
 Upon the growing Boy,
 But he beholds the light and whence it flows,
 He sees it in his joy:
 The Youth, who daily farther from the East
 Must travel, still is Nature's Priest,
 And by the vision splendid
 Is on his way attended:
 At length the Man perceives it die away,
 And fade into the light of common day.

TO MY COUSIN'S BABY.

[From the San Jose Mercury.]

BY HELEN BAKER.

Two years ago we had no thought of you—
 You dimpled child, with eyes so wide and blue,
 From which a deathless soul now shimmers through.

Your mother was a girl as I am now,
 No deeper shadow rested on her brow
 Than that which silken curls may cast; but now—

Her face has taken on a deeper glow,
 Like willow margined stream whose darkened flow
 Baffles the gaze that fain would pierce below.

How strange it seems that she should be a wife—
 A mother too; oh! words with meaning rife,
 Showing the mystery of her deeper life.

Some one to love. O baby dear 'tis true—
 Love's lightning stroke from two fond hearts gave you
 The soul soft shining through those eyes so blue.

What miracle of love and life is this?
 What is it hovers twixt the lips that kiss,
 And out of transient, brings an endless, bliss?

To be a mother! How my fancy teems
 With eddying thoughts, like leaves on summer streams;
 And how I long to see him in my dreams.

But now this sunlit day my lover lies
 Concealed from me. I know not if his eyes
 Have looked on mine, and thrilled with glad surprise.

What happy traits with which he is endued
 I cannot tell. But it is understood—
 Whatever else, he must be wise and good.

Some day I'll meet him. Fly my wishes wide
 On wings of hope. Hasten the viewless tide
 Of things unseen that bears him to my side.

Then in some sheltered home, baptised anew
 Each day with love from happy hearts, I too
 Shall heavenward rear such dimpled things as you.

Lower Lake, California.

WHAT I LIVE FOR.

I live for those who love me,

Whose hearts are kind and true;
 For the heaven that smiles above me,
 And awaits my spirit too;
 For all human ties that bind me;
 For the task that God assigned me;
 For the bright hopes left behind me,
 And the good that I can do.

I live to learn their story

Who've suffered for my sake,
 To emulate their glory,
 And follow in their wake;
 Bards, patriots, martyrs, sages,
 The noble of all ages,
 Whose deeds crown History's pages,
 And Time's great volume make.

I live to hold communion

With all that is divine;
 To feel sure there is a union
 'Twixt Nature's heart and mine;
 To profit by affliction,
 Reap truths from fields of fiction,
 Grow wiser from conviction,
 And fulfill each grand design.

I live to hail that season

By gifted minds foretold,
 When men shall live by reason
 And not alone by gold;
 When man to man united,
 And every wrong be righted,
 The whole world shall be lighted
 As Eden was of old.

I live for those who love me,

For those who know me true;
 For the heaven that smiles above me,
 And awaits my spirit too;
 For the cause that lacks assistance;
 For the wrong that needs resistance;
 For the future in the distance,
 And the good that I can do.

For the very best Photographs go to Bradley & Bulofson's Gallery, with an elevator, 429 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

A. Provo Kluit's new style of Photo-crayon Portraits is only made at the Florence Gallery, No. 28 Third Street, San Francisco. Price from $20 to $30. Beware of imitations.

Drs. Rutley & Streeter's "Prince of Blood Purifiers" eradicates all corrupt humors from the blood, however they may have been caused, rejuvenates the exhausted forces, and restores, unfailingly, the vigor of those debilitated by all exosmes. Try it. Head office, 745 Mission Street, San Francisco.

A new style of inkstand has been invented, made of heavy glass, not liable to break, and so constructed as not to spill the ink when tipped over. Indeed the way to keep the air out at night is to turn it upside down. It is more easily cleaned than any other inkstand, and needs cleaning less, and as it contains a receptacle for sediment, the ink is always clear and fresh. E. Carter, 636 Sacramento street Room 4, is the sole agent for this coast.

COMMON SENSE.

A Journal of Live Ideas.

VOL. 1.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, JULY 4, 1874.

No. 8.

Signs of the Times.

Prof. Tyndall claims to have demonstrated that vapor mixed with air is the cause of obstruction to the transmission of sound.

Englishmen drink beer because their water is impure, and fermentation with hops, etc., clarifies it; but there is no such excuse for beer guzzling in America.

It has been suggested that a cause of certain mysterious fires in factories may possibly be traced to the electric spark, the electricity being generated by the friction of the leather belting on the pulleys.

Rev. Joseph Bradley Cleaver, of the Sixth Avenue Baptist Church, Brooklyn, was recently on trial, charged among other heinous offenses, with driving a fast horse in Prospect Park! He was acquitted.

The refusal, the other day, of the students of Bowdoin College to join in the military drill required of them, is in the right direction, although the reasons that led to the opposition may be other than those peace advocates would urge.

The election in San Jose on prohibition of the sale of liquors resulted in a victory for the license party by a large vote, indicating a reaction in public sentiment on the question. The treatment of the women was in some instances disgraceful to the city, where such wanton insults were permitted with impunity.

In Douai, France, recently, four young men were sentenced to fine and imprisonment for amusing themselves with an image of Christ, which they buffeted and spat upon after the manner of the Jews, as the story goes, prior to the crucifixion. Their offense was characterized by the court as "an outrage on the established religion of the country."

Mr. Beecher says his engagements to lecture, to write editorials for the Christian Union, and to prepare sermons for his congregation, will not allow time to deny the truth of Mr. Tilton's charges! He has time to attend prayer meetings, conference meetings, and to visit his farm on the Hudson, and even time to receive calls from his parishioners; but he has no time to say: This story is false.

Rev. Mr. Blyden, of Liberia, says of Mohammedan morals, that in many respects they are superior to Christian morality. Intoxicating drinks, he says, are sometimes drunk in Liberia, but never by Mohammedans. It is the Mohammedan religion alone, he says, which has thus far protected Africa from the introduction of Christian rum.

Dr. Nathan Allen, of Lowell, a celebrated investigator in medical sociology, says the Yankee race is rapidly degenerating, and is likely soon to die out. He says marriage has become a mere business partnership, based upon the selfish traits of human nature. Of course that is not marriage, and no good results from it.

Houghton's bill to authorize the Texas Pacific to issue mortgage bonds on portions of the road as fast as completed has passed both Houses, and is claimed to have the effect of insuring the prosecution of the work at both ends of the road, and more particularly to the advantage of San Diego.

James Francis Clark recently took occasion to eulogise Francis E. Abbot of the Index, closing by saying that on the last day, when the Master would say "Well done, good and faithful servant," Mr. Abbot would be astonished at finding he had been a good Christian all the time without knowing it. The editor of the Index says in reply: "It is astonishing how ready Christians are to claim all goodness, and sweetness, and purity of life as the result of Christian teaching and influence! But all this seems to us human rather than Christian. A Mohammedan might as well claim it as Christian. But it belongs to neither; it simply belongs to humanity and to God.

KATIE KING, a spirit, who for three years has attended on a Miss Cook, of London, has, in accordance with her prediction, disappeared, to return no more. A large number of scientific men attended her closing seances, but a few personal friends only were admitted to witness her final farewell. The account given in the London Spiritualist is exceedingly interesting, but it reached us too late for use this week. The spirit cut off portions of her hair and dress, as parting gifts to her friends. When asked to mend her dress, from which she had cut several pieces, she held up the portion containing the holes, gave it a flap, and it was instantly as perfect as at first. The pieces taken from it were retained by the visitors. Unimpeachable witnesses testify that they saw the medium and the spirit at the same moment in the same room. When the spirit took leave of the medium the visitors were in the adjoining room. They heard the medium beg of the spirit to stay a little longer. The reply was, "My dear, I can't; my work is done. God bless you." They then heard the sound of the parting kiss, and the spirit was gone. Of course it is not expected that people generally will believe this story. It is in fact quite beyond the ordinary bounds of credibility. The photograph of the spirit, Katie King, can be obtained by sending fifty cents to the Banner of Light, Boston.

SPIRITUAL PHENOMENA.

NUMBER SIX.

MR. EDITOR: Whilst living in Palermo, Sicily, a few years ago, I fell in with some Spiritualists from Boston, who showed me several spirit photographs, which, being likenesses of relatives of their own, taken under test conditions, they considered genuine. Hearing that a Mr. Hudson of London was successful in taking such also, X. and I paid him a visit. He instructed us to bring any article we had that had belonged to or had been much used by the person whose photograph we desired to get. Having twice been told by clairvoyants who had never before seen me—once in London and again in San Jose—that I was always attended by the spirits of my mother and brother, whose appearance they described with apparent accuracy, these were the only spirits I expected to obtain likenesses of. The only article I possessed that had any connection with either spirit was a half finished water color painting of a wreath of flowers, on a card, done by my mother shortly before her death. I tried to get this; but I had given it into the charge of my sister-in-law, who had gone to Brighton. I wrote for it; it did not arrive in time. On the appointed morning X. and I found ourselves in Mr. Hudson's studio, a miserable little out-house in a dirty garden on the outskirts of London. The medium, who took entire control of the proceedings, burned some incense on a little side table, in a Japanese incense burner, and went through the form of a prayer or incantation; all which looked to us very much like hocus-pocus. Mr. Hudson allowed X. to make a thorough examination of his dark room, camera and plates. I sat for the first picture. The exposure—determined by the medium—was inordinately long, lasting, I should think, a quarter of an hour. When the negative had been developed, we saw upon it a figure, over which a loose cloth like a sheet was thrown, surmounted by a trailing wreath of ivy. The features, a three-quarter face, were visible. The figure appeared to be seated behind me. I expected the face of a woman—my mother; but after a careful examination I said to X.: "Well, if that is the likeness of any one I ever knew, it is that of Arthur Jones." I had had no thought of Arthur Jones at the time; had not thought of him for months. It was nearly five years since I saw his ghost in Kaudy. We sat several times more, but only got a satisfactory picture once, although drapery covered with wreaths, or patches and blurs, appeared on the plate each time. X. and I sat together once; and then a distinct figure was seen standing over each of us, clad in the same strange fashion as before, the hoods of the drapery which concealed their forms covering the heads but not the faces. The figure nearest to X. showed the sweet features of a lovely woman, bending over him; that one behind me had Jones' profile without a doubt. X. sat again, and this time the female figure appeared alone, with its hand stretched out over X.'s head, in the attitude of blessing him. The faces, however, were not distinct and clear, as many others taken by Mr. Hudson have been, and both he and the medium were dissatisfied with the result, and wished us to come again and have a free sitting.

Now the question arose with us, Are these photographs genuine or are they shams? On the one hand, there was evidence to show that such had been manufactured before by the photographer; he cannot ensure a spirit photograph; he was very poor; folks would come bent on getting one, and lest they should be disappointed and he should lose their custom, he is believed to have made them to order. But this does not prove that they are never genuine, even with him, any more than it follows that a man who sometimes lies should never speak the truth. Indeed, it is easy to detect a sham spirit photo, since the only way of making them is by a double exposure, in which case the plate will show, either some evidence of erasure, or else the pattern of a carpet, or the indistinct form of something extraneous overlying one or other of the figures. In our photographs, imperfect as they were, nothing of the sort was visible. As I was taking off my clothes that night in Crawley's Hotel, it suddenly occurred to me that I had worn to the photographer's a pair of Jones' pants and his vest. I at once went into X.'s room—he had just got into bed—and standing by his bedside, said: "It's a curious thing, X., and if the medium's theory is sound, may account for Jones' presence to-day instead of my mother's; I find that I was wearing Jones' pants and vest. I have a rug of his at Blackheath; we will go again, and I'll take the rug with me too, and see if we cannot get a better likeness of Jones."

Next day, having heard of Mrs. Hollis, the American medium, I called on her, saw her companion, Mrs. Holmes, and made an appointment for the following morning at 11 o'clock. X. and I were punctual. We found Mrs. Hollis seated in her drawing room; a pleasant, placid looking woman, of about thirty apparently, dressed in black. She did not seem disposed to talk, but proceeded at once to business. She had never set eyes on X. before, having only just arrived from Paris; and I do not think she knew the names of either of us, certainly not his.

Mrs. Hollis showed us a small skeleton table, about three feet by two, made of very thin light wood; folding on hinges in the center, and having four slim legs fitting into sockets, for the convenience of carriage in a box. She allowed us to inspect it as we pleased; we satisfied ourselves that mechanism in connection with it was impossible. She unfolded it, fixed the legs, and set it up in the full light of the windows, before the fire. She then threw over it a thin red cloth, which fell on all sides nearly to the floor. She next took up an ordinary school slate, threw upon it a piece of slate pencil, with the point broken off; allowed this to roll to the further end of it; grasped the slate with the thumb and fingers of the right hand; and turning up her sleeve a little, so that we could see the wrist, introduced the slate beneath the cloth, and held it there. The cloth she allowed us to turn back, so that the muscles of the ball of the thumb were exposed to view, and it was impossible for her to use them without our seeing it. Her left hand lay upon her lap in our full view. She allowed us to sit as close to her as we chose; to put our ears close to the table, and to do anything but lift the cloth. I asked if there was any spirit wishing to communicate with us. Almost at once there was an audible scratching on the slate; when it ceased Mrs. Hollis drew it out, and handed it to me, remarking coolly, "Pretty fair writing for a beginner." On the slate was scrawled, in very bad writing, and with no attention to the horizontal these words: "Arthur Jones, your cousin; Baylis, this is me," Mrs. Hollis rubbed it out, after I had transferred it to paper, and reintroduced the slate. I said: "Why do you come?" Again the pencil began to scratch along the slate. Holding our ears to the table, it was impossible not to believe that a human hand was writing; yet Mrs. Hollis' muscles were absolutely motionless. The scratching ceased, and we heard the pencil thrown down. We read: "You have on my pants, they are bound; my vest, and picture." It was true, I had at that moment Jones' pants and vest upon me, and I had his photograph in my pocket, which I had received that day by post from a relative to compare with Hudson's photos. I knew Jones' pants, because my wife had bound them at the bottom with braid. It was impossible for Mrs. Hollis to know any of these circumstances. The pencil scratched and wrote: "The rugy (sic) would do no good, when you had the clothes." We could not make out the word "ruggy," and asked what it meant. It wrote: "You wanted to get the rugy to take my picture." And again: "You wanted to get my rug from first." Mrs. Hollis insisting that we should make him explain himself, there was written: "Yes, that is what I wrote; rug is the word." Evidently referring in all this to my conversation with X. the previous night, when Jones must have been present; for it is clear that Mrs. Hollis could know no more of what took place at 12 m. in X.'s bedroom, in Albemarle street, than the man in the moon. We asked: "Why do you write and spell so badly?" Answer: "I could not see to do better; but am blind when I am martyred." Not being able to make this out, we made him write it over and over till the word "materialized" was distinctly written. In answer to another query, after several failures, he wrote: "You have no more telegraph." Having been kept awake the night previous by raps on my walls and on my pillow, after retiring from my talk with X., I asked if this had been done by him. He wrote: "Yes, I was raping (sic). I do not wear my hat on the back of my ——" A remark I had made to X. about the supposed spirit which I saw in Kaudy. Wishing a test, I now asked the name of the paper we published together. He wrote: "Kind—Knd—" And this was all we could get. The name of the paper was the Kandy Herald. Mrs. Hollis could not have guessed as near as Knd. I asked if he would come and rap again. He wrote: "I will be sure to come. You did not shave my head, did you? It was not you? Aunt Ana is here with me." "Who?" "Anna." I asked: "What was the name of the paper we bought in Ceylon? Was it the Observer?" Answer: "Times, not Observer." This was correct. "Do you dislike to write the name of the paper we started?" "Yes, that paper was the cause of my death. I know all about it; you have my pants—am going now." "Is the photograph taken by Hudson yours?" "Yes, it is mine. I can write you a long letter when I practice more. I am doing the best I can." "How did the paper cause your death?" "Bi—Bicau—Because I took the fever. I have no more now. A. A. J." "Where did you die?" "You took me to my brother. Cool—Col—Columbo. They said the air would do me good." "How long is this ago?" "Seven years ago?"

All these answers were correct except the date. It is just five years now since his death. His remark that he was blind when materialized is very curious. His signature, A. A. J., X. declared and I believe to have been a fac simile of Jones writing when in life. But I thought the repetition of the A. a mistake. The whole of the handwriting was just Jones' blind scrawl. On the other hand, the errors in spelling and grammar were not like him, nor would he have used the words "pants and vest" unless he were merely copying my words. The difficulty he seemed to have in writing all names was suspicious, but then he was always nearer to them than it was possible for the medium to have got. I don't know why he should make such a mistake about the date of his death. He told me by raps with the pencil on the slate that it was he who had disturbed the peon in the house in Kaudy, and whom I had seen there. It seems clear that in this, as in all other manifestations, the communications of spirits are colored and altered by the conditions of the medium through whom they pass. This is natural.

When Jones had ceased to write, X. said: "I wonder if any one would like to speak to me." The pencil scratched away as before, and on the slate appeared one short sentence, written in a neat, diminutive, female hand, and scrupulously straight; only this: "Not to-day, Charles. Your Aunt Mary." X.'s scepticism was a good deal shaken by this seance; he could not account for Jones' handwriting, nor for the correctness of his answers, except on the spiritualistic theory; neither could he understand the "Charles." But he denied that he had ever lost an Aunt Mary. When we got back to Crawley's, however, he came to me, and said: "I'm not certain about my aunt's name. I had an aunt who died. I'll write and ask my sister." He simply inquired the name of the aunt in question. Next morning the answer came: "The name of our aunt was Mary."

That I was wearing clothes that had belonged to Jones was the merest accident in the world. When he died in Kaudy a box of his with his name upon it remained with me. It contained some black clothes, almost new. Of these, a pair of pants and vest were put by my wife in my box when I left for England, and I put them on without noticing that they were not my own, for they exactly fitted me.

The other day as I was dressing in my room at home, my eye fell on Jones' big chest, painted blue, with his name on it in large black letters—A. A. Jones. I was forcibly reminded then of this and the seance to be detailed in our next; on both of which occasions the spirit communications, first on the slate and then viva voce, declared and insisted upon it that his name was A. A. Jones; whilst I would have it that he mistook, and that his name was simply Arthur Jones. On the whole, I do not see how a better test was possible. I had just arrived from California, X. from Borneo, Mrs. Hollis from Paris. I an Englishman, X. an Irishman, and the medium an American from the South, who could know nothing whatever of our belongings or antecedents; whilst in both X.'s case and mine, the theories of thought-reading and unconscious cerebration are shut out by the fact that the spirits gave several names correctly which we were at the time fully persuaded were mistakes. Yours,

MEDIOUS.

A gentleman of advanced opinions, walking once through the streets of Bristol, was attracted by a violent crowd trying to break into a baker's shop. He inquired the cause. "Why," said an excited bystander, "this beast of a baker had a dog which was an incurable thief, and in a moment of rage he cast him into his red-hot oven and burnt him to a crisp." "Is that all?" said the gentleman; "and what are you going to do." "All!" cried the crowd; "do you defend him? Why, we mean to trounce the cruel wretch." "Why, are n't you Christian men and women?" inquired the other. "Of course we be," said the crowd, "and therefore we be going to give it to that baker soundly." "Well," said the first speaker, "you Christians are a curious folk; you want to punish this poor baker for burning his wicked dog for five minutes, and ygt you believe that your perfectly good God is going to burn the wicked for ever and ever." The crowd acknowledged the corn and let the baker be.

INTERVIEWING A DEAF MUTE.

BY PROF. W. H. CHANEY.

NUMBER TWO

In the following, as will be seen, Mr. D. strikes out with some very original ideas, and although in the argument I have opposed him, still I am not prepared to assert that I am right. Here are his thoughts in his own language:

D.—I never read Darwin; never even saw his work on the origin of man. But taking his view I can easily accept his theory. I will go farther; and I think more rationally so than he himself. He has not yet got down to the source of life. All his speculations end in gases, the origin of which we can explain only from a chemical basis. We claim to reduce the whole of a substance to gas, but cannot make good this claim, for there is the original organic form! Can we reduce this to gas? Or can we from gas reconstruct the “original organic form?” To illustrate: We can reduce a diamond to gas, but not gas to a diamond. So I do not think this question fully settled.

We are still mixed up regarding our elemental theories. So I will go at Darwin, admitting his theory to be true, putting my proposition this way: Suppose, except six men and six women, sound and healthy, that all animal life dies today, leaving not even a germ, down to the deepest coral. These twelve persons are well educated in science, mechanics, physics, agriculture, etc.; in a word, an epitome of all that exists among men and women of today. The men, are men! The women are women!

C.—I like your proposition very much because it suggests thought and investigation. Darwin may be right, yet there is one point which he makes that I cannot accept, namely, he maintains the unity of the origin of all the races of men; that is, that all are descended from the same original pair. I can no more accept this than I can the story in Genesis. Plurality of origin is, to my mind, the only rational theory. The only ground on which I can accept the unity of origin is this: Granite is the primary formation; all other rocks owe their origin to the granite; so does the soil; so does all vegetable life; so does all animal life, from the zoophyte to man. In this sense the granite is considered as a unit. But the granite is not the original cause of these manifestations. We look beyond, to the great ocean of fire which has cooled down to form the granite, and then we must dismiss unity for plurality. Thus we become lost in the infinite.

Now let us consider your proposition for reversing Darwin's theory, and first, the arguments in its favor. Stock-raisers prove that under unfavorable conditions, animals which have been greatly improved by “breeding,” will deteriorate—what they call “breeding back,” that is, the offspring resembles its ungainly ancestors, of several generations anterior, more than its direct ancestors.

The same law has been observed in the cultivation of fruit and fruit trees. So, too, in the human species. Sometimes a quadroon will be darker than a mulatto; sometimes lighter than an octaroon. In the former case he inherited more of the African primates; in the latter, more of the Caucasian. Of this law we know nothing beyond the facts. Thus, we know that the Prince of Wales bears a far more striking resemblance to George III. than he does to either father or mother, but science does not attempt to show why this phenomena. I cannot answer “why,” but I can point out to parents the law whereby they may avoid “breeding back,” and whereby the offspring may be superior to the parents. I cannot do this in my public lectures, because decency and propriety are at such a high standard that society would rather have a progeny of criminals, monkeys and idiots than be shocked with “coarse vulgarity.”

I have barely touched upon the many arguments that can be brought to bear on the affirmative of your proposition, and admit that there are others still stronger than any that I have adduced. Still I doubt its correctness, and for the following reasons:

First—Causes produce effects, but you cannot reverse the rule and have effects produce causes. Man is an effect; millions of causes produced him. Can you segregate man into primates and thus discover each one of these causes? Try it in any case. Light, heat, moisture, soil, etc., produce the peach. Destroy all these causes and you cannot afterwards derive them from the peach. Planks may be produced from trees, but not trees from planks; butterflies from grubs, not grubs from butterflies; the mule from the ass and horse, but neither ass nor horse from the mule. So you see that the old proverb, “It is a poor rule that will not work both ways,” originated in the mind of an ignorant person. This proverb may be applicable in pure chemistry, but life, whether animal, vegetable or human, involves much that is outside the scope of chemistry.

Second—We must never attempt to prove one fact by another. The proof of any fact rests upon its own merits, regardless of the merits of all other facts. Each fact is governed by its own laws, regardless of the laws which govern other facts. Hence, the fact that a diamond can be resolved to its original element, or elements, does not prove that man can “breed back” to the beast. But if this is once admitted, where can we find the limit? I see none this side of the granite, and indeed I am half inclined to think that this may be true, as I contemplate the amount of cruelty, wrong and oppression there is in the world. Surely, some people act as though their hearts had turned to granite. But irony aside. The phenomenon does not belong to the same class of facts as the phenomenon of the diamond, and hence we find the two subject to different laws and conditions.

Third—It may be laid down as a general rule, that the tendency of everything, having life, growth and development attached as conditions, is to rise and not sink, go forward and not backward. I grant that there are exceptions, but they rather prove than disprove the rule. These exceptions may be compared to the retrogradation of a planet which is only apparent, for the planet never really goes backward in its orbit. No, my friend, retrogradation belongs to the same family of facts as annihilation, for nothing can be annihilated. Everywhere the philosopher sees progression, all the way from granite to man. Pope expresses the idea most beautifully: “All matter quick and bursting into birth.” Matter never rests, but is constantly struggling to take on higher conditions. For immense eons of time the lower have been producing the higher, and “there is a great gulf fixed” so that the higher shall not produce the lower, as a general rule.

Your proposition is truly an original one, and one which I hope others besides myself will discuss. I am greatly obliged to you for suggesting it, and shall be glad to learn your views farther upon the subject. I am not the least prejudiced in favor of my own theories, being ready to abandon them the moment they succumb to criticism; so lay on and spare not, for you and I are such earnest seekers after truth that we cannot afford to have any pet hobbies.

When we are not too solicitous as to happiness or the want of it, but devote ourselves to the strict, unsparing fulfillment of duty, then happiness comes of itself.

WOMAN'S ERA.

BY MRS. C. F. WINDLE.

In regard to the "Woman Suffrage" movement, I am not a "Woman's Rights" advocate in the ordinary sense, though holding withal that most of the evils of society thus far in the world's history, are traceable, as their final cause, to the misconception of woman's true sphere in Nature, and her consequent desecration in all the social systems which have hitherto existed; not excepting her position in the privacy of the marriage relation under the most refined civilizations, and where she has been apparently most honored. But this—being at the basis of all the ills of social life—will be the last to come to the surface to be rectified. A tremendous moral and spiritual advance will have to be made before the true character of her misappreciation will be recognized. I do not think that the present point of issue—that of woman's legal "equality" with man, or her "equality" as a worker in the industrial fields, or intellectually—touches the radical point of woman's depreciation. Nay, inasmuch as this tends to the ignoring of her sexual difference from man, and the functional superiority of the feminine to the masculine type, it rather diverts the attention from an apprehension of her real status. Yet I am willing to concede that the female suffrage movement may be—nay, I really believe that it is—the round-about step by which woman's true recognition in the far future is certainly upon its commencement. But seeing the true point of issue—as yet totally unperceived by the "Woman's Rights" claimants—I cannot be so untrue to myself as to compromise for a false point. Not "woman's equal rights," but "woman's higher right," should be my watchword, were there any to raise the banner with me; and this, too, founded on the time-honored principle, hitherto so perverted in this as in every other case, namely, that "Might is Right," this might being "Woman's Sexual Power"—a weapon she has never yet known the value of, save in using it to the detriment of herself and of man, but which she is ultimately destined to wield to her own salvation and that of her masculine subject.

In that great "Woman's Era" of the future, which is prophetically portrayed by Mrs. Farnham, the privilege will be claimed and accorded for every married woman to have her own private room as a sanctum, the entrance of her husband into which will be held by him as a pure matter of especial grace and favor on her part at any time. Think what an influence woman could hold were her personal favors thus removed and reserved as the highest and holiest of rites—sacred Eleusinian mysteries—accorded only at her religious will and pleasure, and only to the worthiest and noblest of the opposite sex, by whom their grand artistic end and purpose should ever be held in no less prominent view than by herself! And what would not man also become when his most grovelling instinct should be thus elevated into a holy sacrament! And that there will be this period in the future I no not myself doubt—a time when all the reverence and worship hitherto bestowed upon unknown gods will be transferred to woman, as the veritable creator of the true humanity, whose "seed is destined to bruise the serpent's head."

Marr's Bluff, S. C.

HELPING THE CHRISTIAN'S GOD.

I see that Supervisor Roberts introduced in the Board of Supervisors an order providing for the punishment by fine and imprisonment any person who shall "publish or utter in any public place, or in the hearing of two or more persons, any blasphemous words or language," etc.

Now this is as it should be. It reminds me of that trite saying in the primer: "Help such as want help and be kind." The Christian's God wants help, in the opinion of Mr. Roberts, not being able to protect himself against the wicked sinners of this ungodly city, and so the Supervisors are called upon to come to his aid, as we do to the assistance of the Louisiana sufferers. By all means they should pass this order. We have laws to protect the weak and innocent in every conceivable condition. Even laws to protect dumb brutes, and yet no law to protect the Christian's God. If the poor brutes were capable of protecting themselves, there would be no necessity for a society for the prevention of cruelty to animals. Then why not organize a society to protect the Christian's God from blasphemy? Such was the case in the golden age of superstition when they hung witches, and why not now? In those days the man that would dare to utter the slightest insinuation against the Christian's God was hustled off to the rack, the dungeon or the burning stake. Even Galileo, the blasphemous wretch, was sent to prison for "publishing and uttering in a public place" the damnable heresy that this earth turned upon its axis. Those were the good old days when God's children were quick to resent any insult offered to his holy name; but now, alas! there are none so poor as to do him reverence. I am in favor of organizing a society for his protection without delay, but being a stranger in the city do not propose to do anything more than plan the work. The office of President could be ably filled by either Napthaly or Charles De Young. Men of their type have ever distinguished themselves by their zeal on the Lord's side. The average kind hearted, generous, charitable man would never answer. We want such a man as Constantine the Great, the murderer of his sisters' husbands, his father-in-law, his nephew, his friend, his son, his wife whom he drowned in a bath of boiling water, and a few others. * So well pleasing were these acts in the sight of God that he afterwards appeared to Constantine in a pillar of light, in the form of a cross, with the inscription, In hoc signo vinces. Perhaps neither Napthaly nor De Young have as yet sufficiently distinguished themselves to be so highly favored as Constantine was, but from their acts it is evident that they have "got it in them." What we want for a President of this society is one utterly regardless of human life—one ready to stone a man to death for gathering sticks on the Sabbath day. Vasquez might make a good President, but for the fact that he has other engagements which demand all his time. I will conclude by repeating my wish that this society may be organized without delay.

W. H. CHANEY.

The true man asks no favors of Fate or of Fortune.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

AGENTS IN THE INTERIOR.

Contra Costa county..... E. H. Kimball, Antioch.
 Inyo county..... Mrs. L. Hutchinson, Bishop Creek.
 Monterey county..... W. M. Wilson, Salinas City.
 Sacramento county..... A. S. Hopkins, No. 70 J street.
 Santa Barbara county..... Mrs. Clara R. Crane, Santa Barbara.
 San Bernardino county..... Dr. J. P. Greves, Riverside.
 Santa Cruz county..... Mrs. Georgiana B. Kirby.
 San Joaquin county..... W. S. Sturgeon, Stockton.
 Ventura county..... J. W. Stevens, San Buenaventura.
 Yolo county..... J. G. Hudson, Woodland.

TRAVELING AGENTS, Abby W. Baker, Prof. W. H. Chaney, J. L. York, I. I. Ferree, Addie L. Ballou, H. F. M. Brown.

COMMON SENSE is furnished to subscribers for Three Dollars per annum, in advance. Letters intended for the Business Department should be addressed:

A. T. CLARK, BUSINESS MANAGER, 236 Montgomery st.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

Spiritual Phenomena (No. 6)—Medicus.....	88
Interview with a Deaf Mute (No. 2)—Prof. Chaney.....	90
Woman's Era—Mrs. Windle.....	91
Helping the Christian's God—W H Chaney.....	91
Common Sense—Ed.....	92
Calvary Church—Infidelity Demolished.....	94
Liberal Book Business.....	95
Beecher-Tilton.....	95
Local Option—Dashaway Hall Discussion.....	96
Woman Suffrage Celebration.....	96
A Prophecy.....	97
Prohibition—Remarks before the Society for Self Culture—Dr Lockwood.....	97
After God's Own Heart.....	98

COMMON SENSE.

WILLIAM N. SLOOUM, EDITOR.

AMANDA M. SLOOUM, ASSISTANT.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, JULY 4, 1874.

THE FRIENDS of Free Thought, and especially the friends of COMMON SENSE, are earnestly requested to come to the assistance of this enterprise. We want an increased subscription list, prompt payment of dues, and more than all we want to put the stock of COMMON SENSE in the hands of a large number of persons. Read the prospectus of the Company on the second advertising page of this paper.

PROF. W. H. CHANEY on Tuesday evening gave the first of a course of lectures on the bible viewed in the light of astronomy. Although introductory, and designed merely to lay the foundation for those to follow, it was exceedingly interesting, and gave entire satisfaction to the audience. At the close of the discourse the Professor cast the horoscope of a gentleman the date of whose birth was given to him in writing by one in the audience, neither Mr. Chaney nor the one who handed in the date knowing the person designated. A description was given, together with several events of the unknown man's life, with entire accuracy. The gentleman described arose in the audience, and acknowledged the fact, stating also that no one excepting himself knew that the date given was that of his birth. Prof. Chaney had no knowledge of it, and no acquaintance with him. The second lecture given on Thursday evening was better attended, and more interesting than the first. The third of the course is to take place on Tuesday evening next. Those of our readers who fail to attend will miss a rich treat.

MRS. F. A. LOGAN, a lady recently from the East, a lecturer on Temperance, Spiritualism and Woman's Rights, is now in Stockton, and it is said will soon give lectures on her favorite topics.

COMMON SENSE.

Common sense is that sound practical judgment which from truthful premises leads to just conclusions. It is not misled by false assumptions nor driven from its course by fallacious reasoning. In short, the dictates of common sense are the instantaneous decisions of unperverted reason. Not many years ago it was the special delight of writers on science to use language so obscure and unmeaning to the masses that they could comprehend nothing of what was meant. Indeed, it had become a matter of study how to entangle the path of knowledge with the briars and weeds of rhetoric, so that none but regular students could find the trail. There is hardly any modern thought in theology or metaphysics that is new. All has been set out over and over again by the ancients, but in such crabbed phrase and tiny morsels that the traditional search for the needle in the haystack is more profitable than their perusal. Within a few years this practice has been discarded; and with cloudy words, cloudy systems also have gone into disuse. The ultimate conclusions of the most profound scientists, when so expressed as to meet the capacity of the unlearned, are the acme of good common sense. The tendency of the age is to simplicity. Our greatest thinkers now speak in language plain and straightforward, leaving only the petty and pedantic to obscure their meaning by learned words and involved sentences. Abstruse complication is now as much as possible avoided, and we are finding the shortest cut to every needed result—the quickest solution of every problem; yet there are those who still adhere to obsolete methods, and will have none of this simple plainness—this common sense. They seem to think that nothing can be scientific that is not exceedingly complicated and difficult to comprehend. We have these pretenders in religion, politics, finance, law, medicine, and in every branch of our public and private affairs; and the result is fraud, and loss of time and money, and general imposition upon the common people. The relations of capital and labor, the science of government, the just principles of taxation, the rights of the State and of individuals, the proper limits of legislation, and a hundred other things are so muddled and purposely entangled by these pseudo-scientific bunglers that common people despair of comprehending their rigmoroles, and the majority become resigned to the idea of allowing these self-constituted "teachers" to do their thinking for them.

This is nowhere so remarkable as in our religious ideas. If a committee of sensible men were to-day to sit down to devise a plan of salvation, would they ever think of the round-about, technical, red-tape system taught in our churches? We opine not. If they believed in a personal God—which we do not—they would say God is good and wise and great, and full of love to all his children. He desires to see us like himself, loving and doing good to each other. He will reward those who do so; he will punish those who wickedly do otherwise. And we shall find in heaven all the great benefactors of their race, the heroes, martyrs, philosophers and philanthropists of the earth, enjoying their reward. All who have yearned for good and truth and suffered for their sake, will wear the crowns of glory. And the humble and peaceful, and loving and good, will all enjoy the reward, without regard to creed, color or nation. But the theologian says: "No such thing, sir; God has a plan, a complicated plan, a technical system, by which he selects his own, and unfortunately your heroes and statesmen, philosophers and philanthropists, martyrs for good and lovers of peace, are not in the bill. There is another test altogether. Have they believed in certain books and dogmas? Have they attended our ministrations? Have we received them into our fold, and given them their certificates? If not, they are lost. This is not a question of goodness at all. The wretch whom you see in that dungeon, who will be hanged to-morrow for robbery and murder, has confessed and received the sacrament, and goes to Paradise direct; while your Washingtons and Jeffersons and Lincolns are not in the book of life. Heaven will be crowded with the weak, wicked, loathsome and abject, the degraded and debased, who have thrown themselves upon the merits of the Savior, because they had none of their own; while the great and noble and wise and good will be found in the place of torment." And this technical cheat, by which virtue and manliness are discarded by God himself, and vice and deformity accepted in their place, is set before us as moral and just religion. The stamp is accepted, though it be found on the vilest metal; the gold is refused, however pure and bright.

In finance our Government is doing the same thing. It must have a complicated system which the people cannot understand, where a plain course is indicated. The same simple rules that suffice for the guidance of an individual are the very ones to adjust affairs of State. If John Jones owed a million of dollars on notes bearing interest, and on others bearing no interest, he would have as many of the no-interest notes out as his friends would accept. He would put out the entire million, if he could, and pay no interest at all. And if he could not manage all, yet he would have as many non-interest paying notes out as possible. This is precisely what Congress has not had the good sense or honesty to do. Government repudiates its own currency, and then, to keep it from depreciating below safe shaving rates for the shylocks, it buys up, every month or so, a portion of its own paper at a discount; and in order to show that it is able to buy at any time, it keeps constantly on hand (beyond the requirements for accruing liabilities) a hundred millions of dollars in gold idle in the Treasury. Think of John Jones keeping a hundred thousand dollars idle in his safe, when he might use it to pay his debts and stop the accumulation of interest! If he did so foolish a thing his relatives would have him sent to the insane asylum, as incompetent to manage his own affairs; yet that is just what our Government has been doing for years.

The country needs a certain amount of paper money, and instead of Government supplying every dollar and saving so much interest, it sells bonds to bankers, pays them interest on the bonds, and then allows them to supply the paper it might itself supply. The bankers make the money which the public purse loses. Let the Government have all paper but its own withdrawn from circulation. Let it pay out currency, bearing no interest, always convertible into bonds at a low interest. Let it do this, and we shall have a financial system at once simple, economical, safe and efficient. It would have many advantages. First—It would save a vast fund of interest. Second—It would give the country, by a fixed law, all the paper it wanted, and no more. Third—Inflation and contraction would no longer be under the control of any man or set of men for purposes of speculation. And, fourth—It would soon show a very interesting fact to the political economist, namely, how much paper the country can take without undue inflation. But this system would be COMMON SENSE, and therefore will not suit those who do not want plain dealing and direct truth. The people alone can insist upon its adoption. They must get common sense first, and force it on the churches and the Government.

A DISAPPOINTMENT.—During the recent visit of Charles H. Foster to this city many persons in the habit of attending the Mediums' Seance, at Mercantile Library Hall, have expressed a desire to see Mr. Foster on the stand; and in response to this general wish, the President of the Society called upon him and he readily consented to join the other mediums in conducting the seance. He told several other persons that he had made such engagement; so there was no mistake about it. He was advertised, and the admission price placed at 50 cents, in order that the Society might derive some benefit. At this price the Hall on Sunday afternoon was crowded, but Mr. Foster did not appear. He was sent for, and it was ascertained that he had accepted an invitation to dine with some friends, and in spite of his prior engagement, he absolutely refused to attend the seance, giving no other reason except that he did not want to leave his turkey. Comment is quite unnecessary. The man seems to have no moral sense. After announcing to the audience that Foster would not be present, and stating that the money would be refunded at the door, the usual seance was held, the principal tests being given by Mrs. Kerns.

We have received a copy of Social Life, a Story for the Times, by Marion Todd, formerly of Grass Valley, which we will notice more fully as soon as time will permit. Mr. and Mrs. Todd conduct a department in Lois Waisbrooker's paper, Our Age, besides which they not only find time to lecture two or three times a week, but Mrs. Todd has written this volume of 142 pages, which she will send by mail for 50 cents, postage paid. Address the author, Marion Todd, Ypsalanti, Michigan.

It is easier to admit than to examine; and, for this very reason, the mentally ignorant are credulous, and disinclined to make the effort necessary to arrive at scepticism.

CALVARY CHURCH—INFIDELITY DEMOLISHED.

Last Sunday evening we attended Calvary Church on Powell street. In the pulpit was a young man fresh from the shady cloisters of some theological seminary, and had come out into the world to air the wisdom there acquired. He was a brave young man, and evidently knew no better than to encounter the Goliath of scepticism and infidelity, with the little sling and stones the seminary had provided him, confident of complete success. He little knew the strength, vitality, prowess and abundant resource of his giant adversary. He had read of David's victory, and promised himself an equal success, with as trifling means. His opening words were bold, and fair and candid enough. He said he loved the bible; loved it because he believed it to be true, to be God's word. Should it prove otherwise, he must reject it; he could no longer love or defend it. Infidels, sceptics, said it was not true, that science had so revealed; and if it should so appear, it must be discarded.

Here was the basis of a fine sermon, and we listened attentively to what followed; but what a falling off was there. The reverend gentleman (Robinson by name) simply set up the flimsy straw infidel of the theological seminary, cuffed him about with the greatest ease, and ended like David, in chopping off his head. But the healthy robust and lively infidel of the outer world is not so easily handled, and is not even aware of the triumphant overthrow of his clerical effigy. The reverend gentleman said he found a perfect agreement between real science and the Mosaic account of creation; that on all general points they are in perfect harmony. Moses spoke of a God, a beginning, a time when God made life, and gave man dominion over all the beasts of the field; and science, to-day, says that Moses was right in all these things, hence his firm belief that Moses was inspired of God.

Science does not, as the gentleman seemed to think, content itself with saying that there was a time when there was no beautiful earth, no life, no man; it inquires into the time when, and the manner how, the present state of things was brought about. It pursues with laborious research all the minor processes, and it discovers order, and law and regularity in all. Now, does Moses (admitting him to be the author of the Pentateuch) agree with modern science on this subject of creation, in any particular? We opine not.

If Moses says anything distinctly, it is that the world was made about six thousand years ago; and the names and ages of men are given down to historic times, so there can be no mistake. No scientist believes this. Moses also says that the world was made in about six days, which made him very tired, so he had to rest on the seventh day; but that it required only a part of one of these days to make all the planets, the sun, and stars, and that these were created to give light to this little speck of creation where we live. No intelligent person believes this story.

Moses says that after God had made the animals, male and female, he made man without woman, and then took the woman from man's side, as the result of an after thought. It is derogatory to any sensible idea of God to think that he should have made such a blunder, and it is against all the analogies of science that the male and female were not produced together, as in other species.

Moses says that on one of the six days God made man and brought the newly made animals to him to be named; but after the revelations of geology, the disclosures of the fossil world, and the wide spread knowledge of the globe, with its varied races and climates, who believes this story? Certainly no man of science.

Moses says there was a tree planted, whose fruit could open the eyes and teach a knowledge of good and evil. How preposterous! There could have been no such tree, not even figuratively. Knowledge comes only of observation and reason, and not by the eating of any kind of fruit; nor, as the bible elsewhere intimates, by eating butter and honey; nor, as Mr. Robinson seems to think, by study in theological colleges. It comes from research into the laws of Nature.

Moses represents that man was made pure and good and innocent, and by eating of this fruit he fell, became wicked and depraved, was scattered over the earth, changed in form and feature, and degenerated to the deformity in which we now find him. But science tells us that he never fell; that he progressed upward to be what he now is, and that the progression is still going on.

Moses tells us that God selected a particular race of people (his race, of course), and favored them, and ordered them to slaughter men, women and children of their enemies, in sheer wantonness, saving only the young virgins for themselves. Common sense tells us that it is degrading to God to attribute to him such orders.

We might cite a hundred other passages from the books of Moses, which are not only repugnant to infidel geologists and scientists, but utterly inconsistent with any sensible theory of God and humanity. We conjure the gentleman to look back over his discourse and see if it be not utterly lame and inconclusive. Let him take up the few points we have here given! Let him ask himself, Does the bible say these things? And if it does, Are they true as generally believed? (We admit some of them may be true as riddles in ancient astronomy. By the way, Robinson should attend Prof. Chaney's course of lectures.) Let him come again before that intelligent congregation, read these propositions, and make away with them, and he will prove that he is fitted to feed men with strong meat, to lead in the van of Christian philosophy. At least we trust he will not again, as he did last Sunday evening, administer skimmed milk, to what he must have supposed were purblind puppies. It is time the churches of San Francisco were converted into temples of light. It is disgraceful to our age and nation that we present to the opposite shores of Asia, with the one hand modern science and with the other the ancient superstitions of Egypt and Hindoostan.

The success of a human life is commensurate with its usefulness. Never let your dignity or pride prevent you from descending to perform whatever duty circumstances impose upon you.

THE LIBERAL BOOK BUSINESS.

LETTER FROM HERMAN SNOW.

The Banner of Light of the 20th June contains the following:

DEAR BANNER: I write now for a special and somewhat personal object, but one in which, as I think, you as well as myself will feel a personal interest. After a long and careful consideration of the subject, I have at length made up my mind to sell out my business here as soon as I am able to secure a suitable successor. It is not necessary for me to trouble you with the special reason for my course. I will say, however, that it is not because there is a want of fair business prospects. Oh the contrary, there is such a constant and strong tendency toward enlargement, that, with a person of firm health and good mercantile capacities, a very large business in the Liberal Book Trade might soon be established in this grand and rapidly advancing region of the Pacific. Already, during my nearly seven years of effort, I have been able to concentrate the Spiritual and Liberal patronage of almost the entire country—from the British territory on the north, to Mexico and even South America at the south, and from the Salt Lake valley on the east, to many of the islands of the Pacific, and in some cases to China on the west. And I do not wish to surrender my important foothold in this far West of our country, unless it be to some one fitted to do the work at least as well as myself. And it is such an one that I am now anxious to secure as my successor—a desire in which, as I doubt not, I shall have the hearty sympathy and co-operation of the Banner firm, who, perhaps, more than all others, must be interested that an efficient and reliable person be found to take my place. One thing more should be said, to prevent unnecessary trouble to all concerned: A cash capital of from $3,000 to 4,000 will be necessary to maintain the business in its present shape; but a considerably larger capital might, nay, ought to be employed in order to the proper enlargement of the business in the hands of some enterprising person well posted in the general book trade. Most cordially and fraternally yours,

HERMAN SNOW.

San Francisco, Cal., June 1st, 1874.

The reason why Mr. Snow desires to sell is that his health is gradually failing, and he is unable to devote that attention to the business which is required to maintain it in its present prosperous condition. After spending years in building up a good trade it would be unwise to discontinue the business, which to a fit successor cannot fail to be profitable. The Common Sense Publishing Company is undoubtedly more favorably situated for conducting such a trade than any private individual can be, and the only reason why the Company does not purchase the stock and good will of Mr. Snow is the lack of capital for such an extension of its business. Mr. Snow wants cash; while all the available means of the Company are now required to carry on its own legitimate business, that of publishing the paper, and job printing. As soon as sufficient stock is sold to enable the Company to enter actively into the book-selling trade, arrangements will be made to do so either under Mr. Snow's good will or otherwise. Meantime whoever may purchase from Mr. Snow will have a good field for business, and will undoubtedly be able to make it as it has been a profitable one.—Ed.

BEECHER-TILTON.

Some of the most wishy washy stuff that has appeared in our trashy San Francisco press has been vented on the Beecher-Tilton scandal, of which the Evening Post has put forth the most boshy. The explanations of Beecher's conduct given by the Post might be taken for the emanations of an idiot, did they not so plainly bear the marks of a man who knows better than he says. The fact is, these papers dare not tell the truth; and they attempt to cover up Beecher's guilt by foul aspersions on the character of the man Beecher injured. The following, from the Post, is a specimen:

"Theodore Tilton, it is said, has more damaging things against Beecher in reserve. If he has, it will be a pity if they don't choke him before he gets them out. The way in which this admirer of the Woodhull peddles out his own shame is far more disgusting than any charges he can make against Beecher."

How is it one man's crime becomes another man's shame? Beecher, while professedly Tilton's friend, was for years his secret foe, and when finally Tilton learned the truth, and had the magnanimity to forbear personal vengeance; aye, even, out of consideration for others, to conceal the crime, Beecher allowed this much injured and long suffering man to be branded as a slanderer, in order that he himself might escape the just condemnation of his acts. Bad as was Beecher's seduction of Mrs. Tilton, his heartless treatment of the husband of his victim was infinitely worse. It was cowardly in the extreme, and no amount of abuse of Tilton now can gloss over this fact. An honorable man would at least have called off his dogs; and a high-souled man would have come out boldly and declared that Mr. Tilton was blameless. The matter had two years ago reached that point where such a declaration was demanded, be the consequences what they might. There are times when the truth may well be concealed; but when the worse comes to the worst, then let the truth come out, and those stand or fall who may. Mr. Tilton deserves great credit for bearing in silence for years the foul imputations cast upon him; and no honorable man will now blame him for turning upon his persecutors. It would have been better if Mrs. Tilton had saved him the necessity; but if she would not, it was his right to defend himself; and to do so in his own way. If he chose to tell a portion of the story first, and let his enemies squirm themselves into a corner where he can pin them fast with the facts he still retains, that is his right, and we are glad he has exercised it.

BUSINESS MEN who are friendly to COMMON SENSE should aid it by advertising in its columns. Our circulation is now 1,200 copies, and is constantly increasing. The paper circulates among the best classes of people, and advertising in its columns will pay as a business investment, to say nothing of aid to the cause. If you have nothing else to advertise, you can at least put your business card in the paper.

LOCAL OPTION—DASHAWAY HALL DISCUSSION.

Notwithstanding the recent defeat the Prohibitionists have sustained at the polls, the discussion of the subject still continues, with increasing interest. Dr. Rockwood opened the debate before the Society for Self-Culture on Sunday last, the points made by him being given on page 97 of this issue.

Mr. Rosenbaum contended that if alcohol was as bad as represented, it should be abolished altogether; he would not temporize with a positive evil. He did not think it bad; on the contrary, he asserted that alcohol as a beverage is a positive good, and cited Greece and Rome and other wine growing countries as examples of progress and refinement! Compare the wine-consuming Caucasian race with the heathen abstainers. He admitted the evil of its abuse, but we can abuse the best gifts of heaven, and that would be no reason for their abolition. He contended that the rise of free thought under Luther was favorable to sociability and Sunday enjoyment, and maintained that personal liberty in that respect is essentially German. He considered the Calvinistic school as detrimental to personal liberty, and stigmatized the emotionalists as worthy successors of the bigoted Genevan.

Mrs. Fanny Allyn believed both sides, partially, because she was of an inquiring disposition, and wanted to go to the bottom of things. It has done much good already. It has made timid women know their power; it has shown them that they can mingle with the roughest of California male bipeds without being contaminated. It will do more than that; it will bring people to think. We must go back of Local Option for the causes that produce the present condition of society; we must investigate antenatal conditions, and if we cannot have religious regeneration, let us have right generation. Let us not make this temperance question a finality. It is only the means of developing the godlike that is in man and woman. Let us have free amusement, free art galleries and theatres, everything that tends to expand and cultivate the mind and body.

Mr. Loyd gave his experience as a tippler. He almost despaired of returning to total abstinence when every other door is a grogshop.

Prof. Chaney reviewed Mr. Rosenbaum's alcoholic proposition. He wanted to know, if wine indicated such a high civilization as Greece once enjoyed, why doesn't it work that way now? Look at Greece to-day, and see what two thousand years of wine drinking has done for her! The Professor described the effects of alcohol on the human system. He admitted that the law in question is not perfect, but it is the best we can do under the circumstances.

Mr. Healy endeavored to prove that the Option Law is not inconsistent with the fullest enjoyment of constitutional liberty—that kind of liberty which implies mutual restriction and protection. Natural liberty, which the savage enjoys, is quite a different condition.

Mr. Lundy, Dr. White and others spoke briefly. The subject will be continued next Sunday, when Sally Hart is expected to tell what she knows about optioneering in San Jose.

My morality inculcates honorable and manly struggles for the right, however, slight the prospect of immediate advantage to the actors or even to the cause.—Charles O'Conner.

Men often act as they have been accustomed, only because it requires, to break the chain of habit, an effort which they feel disinclined to make.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE CELEBRATION

Mrs. Sarah Wallace writes to Laura De Force Gordon concerning the celebration of the 27th of July, "that being the fifth anniversary of the first Woman Suffrage organization on the Pacific Coast, and from which association sprung the present Incorporated State Society." Mrs. Wallace says:

The friends are enthusiastic and most sanguine of a united, successful and glorious good time on the 27th, and regard the occasion the California woman's Fourth of July. It is true she is not yet emancipated from long years of slavery and unrewarded toil, but the hour of her glorious transition is near, as is brightly shown in the events of the past few years, and the cheering prospects of women's political future. Let the Suffragists on the coast unite in consecrating the occasion of the 27th to the great principles of equal rights and human justice, and in the future, to work to that end.

Dr. BARLOW J. SMITH, of the Allo-Hygienopathic Home on California street, last week Wednesday gave the first of a series of lectures, intended solely for women. It was better attended than was anticipated, and much interest was evinced. The Doctor said four-fifths of the diseases physicians are called upon to treat, are the result of impure food, or the too free use of good food. He acknowledged that men have gone as far as they can in physiology, and if they go farther they must learn from the experiences of women. The Doctor invited the ladies to ask any questions, or advance any idea they saw fit, and quite a lively discussion on dress reform ensued. The Doctor said he did not blame women for following the dictates of fashion, when it is against the law for a woman to wear in the street a costume that would be as comfortable for her as his own; and farther, said he doubted whether women could change their dress very much until their political status is changed. The lecture was entertaining and instructive, and was delivered in an easy, conversational style, which made his hearers feel at home with him and his subject.

SACRAMENTAL WINE.—Some Christians do not use fermented wine at the sacrament, and deny that the wine taken by Christ was fermented; but we know that this is a mistake, and I can testify, from personal observation on the spot, that the Syrian wines are particularly heady and alcoholic, so much so that I was one of a large party who were all much the worse for drinking freely of a Syrian wine which appeared to be as mild as milk, and resembled a light burgundy. In fact all wine-growing countries where the sun is powerful, such as Spain, Persia, Syria and California, produce wines containing a very large percentage of alcohols. The most charitable view to take of Christ's rude answer to his mother, "What business is that of yours?" is that the wine had got into his head.—Don Fulano.

Every law passed sustaining usury or interest for money encourages speculation, gambling and idle living; renders honest toil despicable, conflicts with the right of the laborer, and under it money, instead of aiding the worker, becomes his competitor and his most deadly foe.—Toledo Sun.

PROHIBITION.

At the Local Option debate before the Lyceum on Sunday last, Dr. Lockwood opened in the negative. He said the strongest objection to the Local Option Law is that it is the entering wedge of prohibition. The measure is notably an effort to destroy the traffic in stimulating drinks, in all its ramifications, and calls on the public to vote for a measure that shall not only close all wholesale and retail liquor houses, uproot every vineyard in California, destroy all distilleries and breweries, drive out of the State all coopers and glass-blowers; but say to the Portuguese, French and Spaniards, "You shall not use, as an article of diet, the light wines you and your ancestors have from time immemorial used as we use our tea and coffee;" to the Germans, "You shall forego all the recreations and amusements of your faderland—the light wines of California, reminding you of those of the Rhine, which your temperate ancestors have for years partaken of, without suspicion of evil; nay, even that mildest of stimulating beverages, lager beer, you must abandon at once at our caprice." Is this a hospitable return to the friends of free institutions who have come at our solicitation to partake of our boasted liberty and aid us to develop the resources of our country? If the advocates of total abstinence should succeed in banishing all alcoholic drinks from commerce, is it certain they will stop there? Once admit that a minority has no rights which a majority is bound to respect, and there will be no limit to the mischief which such a principle would expose us to. The vital objection to all this coercive legislation is its infringement on personal liberty and on the freedom of trade. John Stuart Mill says that "a majority, or the State, cannot coerce an individual, even for his own good." Every man is intrenched in the citadel of his personal rights. He yields to society only so much as is necessary for the proper regulation of society; all others he retains. To forcibly deprive him of any of these is an act of tyrannical force. Further, it is notorious that the Maine Liquor Laws have, after years of trial—not in one, but in numberless places—proved wholly ineffectual in repressing the sale and use of stimulating drinks. Dio Lewis, who has been investigating the effects of this prohibiting law in Maine, says: "There is no doubt that the traffic has been driven under cover, and there is not a shadow of doubt that the consumption of drinks in the State of Maine is enormous." Now, to have enactments on our statute books that cannot be enforced must exert a most pernicious effect on the public morals. But again, teetotalism is not conducive to the public welfare. We find that those nations who are most advanced in civilization, whose social relations are on the best status, and whose political rights are the best defined, are precisely those whose use of alcoholic stimulants is the greatest. Compare the United States and European Christendom with Turkey and the Principalities of Asia, and it may be safe to declare it as a law of civilization, that public morals and political rights among governments are in direct ratio to their consumption of alcoholic stimulants. Another argument against coercive measures to stop the sale of alcoholic drinks, is, that as a hygienic system it is pernicious; neither the health nor happiness of the community would be promoted by it. The moderate use of stimulants is favorable to health; distilled spirits are injurious, but the use of beer and light wines is not only conducive to health, but promotive of the cause of temperance. All alcoholic stimulants are placed by them in the same category, and when social temptations or the natural craving for stimulants induce the novice to take his initiatory drinks, he selects by these teachings, whisky, lager, or claret, indifferently. Teetotalism is thus the practical abettor of whisky drinking. Let the laws discriminate as far as they have the constitutional and moral right in favor of the venders of these innocuous beverages. Impose no tax on the license for the sale of beer and light wines, and let the temperance advocates give them countenance and encouragement. Thus whisky drinking over saloon bars, and the vulgar practice of bar treats, will find by degrees less and less favor.

A PROPHECY.

EDITOR COMMON SENSE: There is a remarkable paragraph in Margaret Fuller's "Woman of the Nineteenth Century," written more than twenty years ago, to which I wish to call the attention of your readers. It is not, I think, generally known, and certainly it is very curious, if only as a coincidence, though many persons will regard it as a prophesy, and Margaret Fuller as a spiritual seer as well as philosopher. She speaks of the noble inheritance that is woman's birthright, were she only wise and grand enough to claim it, and looks forward prophetically to the time when in every wife will be united a virgin soul, with maternal wisdom and conjugal affection; a soul ever young, ever virgin. Then comes this strange paragraph:

"And will she not soon appear—the woman who shall vindicate their fit right for all women? who shall teach them what to claim and how to use what they obtain? Shall not her name be for her era, Victoria?" L.

THE TEST OF OUR TRUE VOCATION.—For each there is an appealing task, with which each must rise or fall, commissioned to bind or loose on earth that which shall in every world be so bound or loosed. We know—the humblest know—the up-hill work of doing what is against the grain of us, and the lightness of the labor we love. For each individual all wisdom consists in discovering this assigned task, all religion in accomplishing it. All reading, all teaching must be determined by the mental hunger arising from it; all worship is humility before it, all joy is to be found at the core of it, all sorrow attaches to the infidelity which abandons it.—Moncure Conway.

A correspondent of the Banner of Light, writing from Stockton, says: "There are but few places in California where lecturers can be sustained, and the great number now drifting this way cannot all hope to be successful. California wants test mediums—mediums for physical manifestations. Argument is of but little avail, unless the evidence can be seen. Money-making and gold-digging have been too long the passion of our people to give way before any mere theory. They must see for themselves, and doubt and see again. No one will yield to the first evidence offered, unless it be a stroke of lightning which strikes down their doubts."

The Boston Investigator says: "Journalism busies itself now with everything that affects the public welfare. It trenches upon the province once sacred to the scholar, and supplies the defects of an inefficient government. Year by year its ambition becomes larger, its purpose more beneficent, and its means more abundant; and we can hardly doubt that it is destined in a very short time to be the foremost of all the secular professions—the most powerful in its operations, the most brilliant in its rewards, and the most useful to mankind."

[For Common Sense.]

"AFTER GOD'S OWN HEART."

The name of Beecher Stowe bids fair to become a by-word and a scoff in the mouth of every honest and generous hearted man and woman. When the saintly Harriet published her foul and filthy charges against a dead poet, for whom there was none to plead; since it was a saint who spoke thus of a sinner, the pious either nodded approval or held their coward tongues. She had no indictment for libel to fear. The statement this literary ghou! falsely made about Byron and his sister involved conclusions far more filthy and obscene to the right thinking mind than Mrs. Woodhull's broadest utterances; infinitely more vile than anything she ever charged to Henry Ward Beecher. Yet no sooner was the Pastor of Plymouth Church attacked by a "woman that was a sinner"—in the eyes of the "just made perfect"—than the pious lifted up their clean hands and modest eyes in saintly horror, and an orthodox jury sent the sinful libeller to the Tombs. Harriet's slanders were inconceivably vile, unutterably false, and dastardly in the extreme, since there was none to reply. Victoria's charges have turned out to be absolutely true, and they were made boldly to the face of the holy and hoary criminal, with all the saints in New England, nay, with all the respectable and orthodox world to aid him in hurling anathemas and legal penalties at the head of his relentless but despised accuser. There is nothing to show that Victoria Woodhull did not deliberately dare the detestation of the whole orthodox world, the loss of esteem, position, wealth and liberty in the interests of public morality and virtue; whilst we know positively that Harriet Beecher Stowe simply evolved from her inner consciousness—ye gods, what a cesspool—a foul, lying and cowardly slander, in the base hope of fame and filthy lucre. When this first reached California in the Atlantic Monthly, amongst many far more bitter utterances we penned this doggerel:

DE PROFUNDIS.

FROM THE DEPTHS OF THE ATLANTIC.

There was an old lady of Boston, An angel, of course, but a lost one, Who, with pious frantic, Defiled the "Atlantic," Till the reader grew sick as it tossed one.	More power to ye, New England ranters, Who, weary of slandering the planters, Must drive Uncle Tom's cab in To befoul the white alab in That abbey, where sacrilege canters.
'Twas no heathen old Ciroean syren, Who strummed this grim tune her foul But a saint with soft cant, (lyse on, —A l'enfer—sance piquante— Who thus hashed up the ashes of Byron.	Oh! Atlantic, how dare you do so— Such a horrible tale to be Stowe— Pray, did e'er young Al. Swinburne, That lewd child of sin, earn As much by a scribble as low?
You'll remember how brave old Ulysses Fought shy of those treacherous kisses, Yet he'd scarcely have found, —With his brains above ground— That Ciroe as fatal as this is.	The libel of course is a lie; [why For if true, pray them, how, when, and Did the Poet—please say ma'am— Ape naughty old Abram; And was some Abimelech by?
For her victim recovered his body, But this hag, with pathos so godly, Turns heroes to hogs When they've gone to the dogs Their fair fame's everlastingly shoddy.	Ooy Prudence, let's hope that thy gains Have saved o'er the deep Christian pains That it must, Saint, have cost thee To pocket thy last fee For hitching this tale to those manes.

Twice born! plunged beneath the red fount,
—Which must now form a lake near that mount—
I'll be hanged, child of Jesu,
If your Lord when he sees you
Elected, wont claim a recount.

It is now our painful duty, in recording the apotheosis of another pure and pious Beecher Stowe, to append to this the following as a codicil:

A DEEPER DEEP.

(Extract from Rev. Henry Ward Beecher's letter to Theodore Tilton.)

"I ask Theodore Tilton's forgiveness, and humble myself before him, as I am (sic) before my God. * * * I can ask nothing except that he will remember all the other breasts that would ache. I will not plead for myself—even wish that I were dead."
H. W. BEECHER."

There reigned a monarch once of yore, A very pretty Prince, Whose deeds, performed high heaven be- Make modern sinners wince.	By him who held concealed the wrong, [fore, Until the patient back Broke 'neath the tales of slander flung From those who wrought the rack.
This King once saw his neighbor's wife Undressed, and wondrous fair; Her charms exuberant, half revealed, Half veiled 'neath streaming hair.	Nay—can we blame the pious cuss? Think! When a little child, By tales of good King David's deeds His infant heart beguiled;
Desire his pious bosom seized; In his imperial arms— Per fas et nefas—he must fold Her ripe and rosy charms.	Dwelt on the wonder of the thing How such a wretch as this— Stained by the foulest crimes we know— Should yet be worthiest bliss!
Her husband he is at the wars; A brave and loyal slave, Covering his breast with glorious scars, Or seeking patriot's grave.	In pictured page beheld how God Upheld, as holiest men, Wretches whom now the sheriff's rod Would punish;—worshiped THEN!
She's won:—no Royal suitor waits Long for a maiden coy; Full soon the matron's chaste embrace Completes the monarch's joy.	Saw Jacob's treachery approved; And Jael's hammer kissed; And Joseph's fiscal smartness loved; And Ehud's dagger blessed!
The husband comes, a messenger, Yet will not tarry long, Nor taste rich meats, nor seek his fair; —Thoughtless of any wrong—	Learnt Moses' lies to Egypt's King; And Abram's murder thought; How Sol. by God with wisdom dowered, A thousand women bought!
Knowing his fellows in the field Afar from bed and board, Were set, their lives and loves to yield Up, for their treacherous Lord.	Till all confused 'bout right and wrong, His infant mind astray, Divinely drawn through devious paths, Missed quite "the narrow way."
Untouched by these too generous traits, The King, with scarce a sigh, Writes, "Set him in the foremost fight, And see thou that he die."	Sure 'tis no wonder that thus taught, A parson, now and then, Should take the road he "didn't ought," —A monster amongst men!
This King, of all the Kings that e'er Have made the nations smart, God's holy Word assures us, bare "Most likeness to God's heart."	The wonder is that ANY priest By such examples led, And sought by silly women so, SHOULD SPARE his neighbor's bed.
And History but repeats herself, For now, to-day I sing The self same tale, in self same strains Of saintdom's mightiest King.	You "wish to die"—alas! alas! And dost thou, Parson, trust [pass, That through those crystal gates thou'lt Apotheosed in lust?
The faithful slave, the broken trust, The friend deceived, betrayed; The triumph of parsonic lust; The generous soul displayed	Beecher, a Dieu! Till sense shall cease, And mind and memory part, I'll think of thee and David too As "AFTER GOD'S OWN HEART."

San Francisco, June 26th, 1874.

DON FULANO.

Those suffering from that most annoying of the minor miseries of human life—a cold in the head— or from catarrh in any form, should try Dr. Evory's Diamond Catarrh Remedy. Just try it—that's all. Sold at this office, and by all druggists.

For the very best Photographs go to Bradley & Bulofson's Gallery, with an elevator, 429 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

A. Provo Knitt's new style of Photo-crayon Portraits is only made at the Florence Gallery, No. 28 Third Street, San Francisco. Price from $30 to $300. Beware of imitations.

Dr. Ruttle & Streeter's "Prince of Blood Purifiers" eradicates all corrupt humors from the blood, however they may have been caused, rejuvenates the exhausted forces, and restores, unfailingly, the vigor of those debilitated by all excesses. Try it. Head office, 745 Mission Street, San Francisco.

A new style of inkstand has been invented, made of heavy glass, not liable to break, and so constructed as not to spill the ink when tipped over. Indeed the way to keep the air out at night is to turn it upside down. It is more easily cleaned than any other inkstand, and needs cleaning less, and as it contains a receptacle for sediment, the ink is always clear and fresh. E. Carter, 636 Sacramento street Room 4, is the sole agent for this coast.

COMMON SENSE.

A Journal of Live Ideas.

VOL. 1.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, JULY 11, 1874.

No. 9.

Signs of the Times.

A new Presbyterian church in Milwaukee is to cost $200,000.

A new prophet, claiming to be the Messiah, has made his appearance in Arabia.

Mr. Colfax is smiling on the Grangers. He says he advocated their principles years ago.

Mrs. H. B. Stowe is about to commence yet another story, under the title of "We and Our Neighbors," illustrating the Temperance agitation.

Another musical prodigy is announced in Dayton, Ohio. She is not yet five years of age, but plays on the piano without instruction, and has composed several pieces of music.

Mr. Gilkee, in his new book on the glacial period, says the climate of Europe has totally changed many times since the formation of the globe, passing through alternate periods of heat and intense cold.

"A man in a Pennsylvania lunatic asylum," says an exchange, "imagines himself a woman, and for that reason parts his hair in the middle." Several young men outside of the lunatic asylum do the same thing.

Miss Lavinia Goodell, of Janesville, Wis., was admitted to the Bar, June 17th, after a thorough examination. In Milwaukee five years ago a Miss Peckham passed examination with great credit, but was refused admission on account of her sex. The world moves.

A novel adaptation of electricity has been applied to some of the coaches of the London Omnibus Company. By a very simple piece of mechanism, placed under each seat of the passengers, a tell-tale or dial is made to register the number of passengers entering the carriage, and the distance which each travels. It is the invention of Sir Charles Wheatstone.

Henry Ward Beecher says the idea that we are held to an eternal penalty because of the offence committed by Adam and Eve is so contrary of God's justice, that every one should regard it with repugnance,—adding, that men who believe the world was made in six days are brothers of Egyptian mummies, and that the mummies are the better men of the two.

Jasper Meyers, a farmer, living about three miles from Madison, Iowa, excavated, according to a telegram in the Chicago Times, a vault containing a number of skeletons larger and heavier boned than the present human frame. Men of science, who have visited the place and obtained specimens, say they belong to the race known as the Mound Builders.

The Worcester Palladium is edited by two sisters, daughters of the former editor.

A bill has been introduced in the House of Commons for facilitating the admission of women to the Scottish universities.

Geo. William Curtis and Col. W. T. Higginson are to stump the State of Michigan in favor of the Woman Suffrage clause in the proposed Constitution.

The New York Independent says the impression, prevalent a year ago, that the "source" of the Beecher-Tilton trouble was some other man than Beecher, has been rudely dispelled by the late revelations.

The Maine Universalists have adopted an amendment to their by-laws, which forbids the Committee on Ordination to make any discrimination against candidates on account of sex.

A fund is being made up for the relief of Hans Christian Andersen, who is poverty stricken in his old age.

The Baptist Theological Seminary graduated a class in June, and after the young men had received their diplomas and retired, the President said he was authorized, by the Faculty, to present a diploma to Mrs. Hale, through her husband, she having prosecuted the entire course of study with the class.

The Mediums' Seances at Charter Oak and Mercantile Library Hall continue to attract large audiences each Sunday afternoon. Last Sunday Mrs. Foye closed the meeting at Charter Oak with the "Ballot Test." Judge Pratt acted as a committee of one to open the slips of paper and read the names after they had been announced by Mrs. Foye. Every name given was correct, as were also all the answers to questions.

E. H. SWARTHOUT, a member of the Madison Square Presbyterian church, a man of ability and excellent character, has been forbidden to speak in the meetings of the session, because he says he has come into possession of great truths, which will change the present order of things and bring about the millennial reign of Love and Peace. He thinks that a feature of the New Dispensation is that all will be rich, and without care, sin or suffering, which will, undoubtedly be a very pleasant and happy feature in the programme to the care-worn slaves both rich and poor. He says he has the solution of all our difficulties and sees how the changes will be brought about which he will elucidate in his coming discourse on Liberty, or What it is to be Free. One of his speeches on "What is Truth?" recently published, is an evidence of his ability. He says we are threatened and are on the eve of another civil war, and nothing can save this people from bloodshed but the truth. It is this that impels him to come before the public to dissolve and harmonize the antagonistic forces, so that love and not the law of force shall be fully recognized as the only governing power.

SPIRITS AND THEIR REVELATIONS.

BY J. W. MACKIE.

We live in a world of mystery. Every step in life is simply an effort to solve an enigma. Every human being is an interrogation point. "I want to know" is the legend of the heraldry of the human family. Yet never has the human mind been left free to reply to its own questions. Science has been crippled and degraded by spiritual and theological charlatanism and conceited bigotry. Those who have dared, without a license from spiritual authority, to investigate the phenomena of life and death, have been so harassed by priests and their satellites that only half the freedom they have won has been enjoyed by them. History is almost nothing else than a record of man's slow but continuous effort to free himself from the entailed spiritual ideas of the preceding age.

As in the last century Materialism stood up the only foe of spiritual and theological superstition, so in the present century Spiritualism may be considered the active aggressor in the realm of ideas. Materialism is now on the defensive. The spiritual ideas communicated in this age resemble the spiritual communications of other ages in this: Spiritual revelations always are in accordance with the ideas and mental culture of the age in which the revelations are made. It was impossible for Andrew Jackson Davis to have given in Nature's Divine Revelations the demonology of the sixteenth century, just as the sorcerer of the sixteenth century could not have produced Nature's Divine Revelations. In this age, while the mental world was agitated with the development theories, while every step taken in search of truth was pushed forward by the idea of the supremacy of man and the all-sufficiency of Nature, spiritual revelations could assume no other shape. Never before in the history of spiritual ideas do we find them in a form so human and so natural. We are no longer surrounded by gods and demons. Devils, imps and hobgoblins have departed. Neither Pluto, Jove nor Apollo condescend to salute the mortal ear. Jehovah, whether in the thunders of Sinai or the still small voice, is heard no more. Only the spirits departed, those of our own household, the noble of all ages, the frivolous and foolish, those of the brotherhood of man, communicate to the intelligence of the nineteenth century. Jupiter and Jehovah with their gods and angels have given place to the spirits of Tom, Dick and Harry. It may be very plausibly claimed that communion with the dead is not a new theory. Nor is it. But it was never so thoroughly democratic as now. To the Sibyll or Pythia only the spirits of gods and heroes spoke. Like the canonized saints of Rome, only the few were worthy of apotheosis. But now the spirit of John Jones, as far as the right and opportunity is concerned, is on an equality with Napoleon Bonaparte, the Pope of Rome, or Julius Cæsar; though some mediums will have nothing less than Theodore Parker, Swedenborg or Bacon to use their organism.

Necromancy and sciomancy in the olden times claimed to communicate with the lowly dead, but in a different sense from the use we make of the term. The life of man was a fourfold state:

"Four things of man there are, spirit, soul, ghost, flesh;
These four four places keep and do possess.
The earth covers flesh, the ghost hovers o'er the grave,
Orcus hath the soul, stars do the spirit crave."

Necromancers claimed, through infernal ceremonies, to re-animate the dead body and make it utter wonderful things. The sciomancer called forth the ghost or shade of the dead, which was not considered the living, active spirit, but rather an emanation from the dead which yet retained the impress of living thought, an idea akin to modern psychometry. Another idea obtained with the ancients, that revenge, hatred, murder and other heinous crimes or violent deaths prevented the escape of the soul to hades, causing them "to revisit the glimpses of the moon."

"My angry ghost, arising from the deep,
Shall haunt thee waking and disturb thy sleep;
At least my shade thy punishment shall know,
And Fame shall spread the pleasing news below."

I am not aware that communion with the dead ever assumed a higher form. If such had been the case, would Socrates or Plato have been ignorant of it. Had it been known, would Socrates have failed to advance it in his immortal conversation with his friends before his execution? If he had known that all spirits of the recent dead could return and manifest themselves, he would not have related the passage of the spirit to hades where it remained till judgment was passed upon it, to suffer a reincarnation, or in case of extraordinary merit to take its place among the gods. Yet Socrates was a "medium," and professed a knowledge of the spirit-land or hades.

Clairvoyance, mesmerism or fascination, and other psychological mysteries, were familiar to the ancients. Tripods were constructed, on the outer rim of which the Greek alphabet was engraved, through which the gods as such communicated in poetry. How did it happen, with all these opportunities, that the spirits failed to communicate as the brother or sister, father or mother, as now?

In the Dark Ages, the devil, the angels of God and the saints governed the spiritual ideas of Christendom. Then, to the devout, only a saint or the "mother of God" appeared, excepting when His Satanic Highness deemed it worth his while to offer a temptation. To the witch, only the devil as master appeared. Solemn oaths by solemn saints are recorded in the courts of justice that phenomena as strange and mystical as modern Spiritualism occurred. The bewitched flew in the air, spoke in strange languages, prophesied, were grievously afflicted in a strange and occult manner. Balls of hair, wool and pins would be vomited by them; knives, etc., would inexplicably be found on their person. Yet the devil had credit for it all, not only by the priests and their ignorant dupes, but by the media, the witches and the bewitched.

Works written in that age are full of demoniacal stories and arguments. They were so well acquainted with the spirit-world that its divisions, subdivisions and classifications, with the names of the principal angels and devils governing their respective places, were well known, and formulae by which they were evoked were familiar to magicians and sorcerers. Yet not one hint is given that these demons were "our dear departed." It has been advanced that care for the media prevented the spirits from telling the truth as to who they really were. But as burning usually was the fate of witchcraft, they could not have suffered more by telling the truth, besides being much more creditable to die for a truth than a lie. And further, when danger of death or even persecution ceased, witchcraft, except in isolated regions ceased. Because the world had outgrown it.

In the medley of the influx of images from without the diseased or extatic mind forms its own spiritual world in the image of its own ideas. Or, in the words of Enne-moer: "The Oriental seer contemplates the world in Brahma's light; the Moslem sees the houris in Mohammed's heaven; the rude schaman hears in his ecstasy terrible spirits under the roof of his hut, and the witch of the Middle Ages even her communication with the devil; in short, science here only supplies conjectures, not certainties. But these conjectures at least make this in science a certainty, that spirits and supernatural appearances have no objective existence in fixed shapes, for they must, if such were the case, always appear in the same manner; there are therefore spiritual appearances without spirits."

MATERIALISM AND SPIRITUALISM.

BY JESSE H. BUTLER.

'Tis a strange world, this. The wise man grumbles at the philosopher, and the fool laughs at the scientist! The Materialist is compassionate of the dreamy Spiritualist; and the dreamer, in turn, is sorry his matter-of-fact brother cannot see anything beyond this vale of tears, where we are but transient, passing shadows. But at last all men may take comfort in the latest and best discovery, that "spiritual pretension is stultifying science, and rendering useless the faculty of reason;" and, per contra, "science is denying the existence of phenomena patent to every one;" and again, "God and spirits have hitherto receded before the steady advances of science." If this is true, alas poor world! And cannot we, who use our reason, put a stop to this "spiritual pretension," and make this "steadily advancing science do her duty in consummating this grand work of annihilating gods and spirits?"

To all who can and do read the papers it may be known that science in England recently tried to take the likeness of one of these gods or spirits, by the aid of the photographic camera and artificial light, the medium being tied and guarded in a separate room by men of science, and the trial was crowned with success. We of this western world may soon see for ourselves how a spirit can materialize itself, so as to be seen and recognized by its friends, and by strangers who testify to the fact; and also that these materialized spirits sing different parts and play different instruments of music simultaneously.

Now science hurry up, or else these gods—these spirits will again fill this world with the "hell blast of the old witch mania!" The spirits will knock, and tip, and turn tables over, without breaking the lamps, "putting out the light," or spilling the oil! Something will take Home out of one window and bring him into another; and when questioned, a voice answers to the astonished listeners, "We who do this are spirits;" and when science, which has persistently ignored the subject, does investigate and try to stop "this delusion," along comes Katie King and gives it her picture on the silver plate, before many unimpeachable and sceptical witnesses! We, in our ignorance, must think, must believe something. Why can we not see and hear without believing, and allowing it to "flatter our conceit, and soothe the crushed affections, bruised by the hand of death?" Why will we allow it to make us "believe that we are spirits, destined to live forever?" Is it this that "stultifies science and renders useless our reason?" Ye gods! what is reason? Is it reason to be determined not to believe anything we cannot see, and even not to believe in spirits now we can see them? Is it reason to be determined to shut out the light, and aspire to know no more than the beast that lives only for his bodily wants? Is it reason to believe that sand and flint cease to exist, because we find them refined into the beautiful, indestructible glass? Is it reasonable, in spite of all the evidence we now have, not to believe that our friends, taken from us by death, still live, and that, as a consequence, we shall live also? Again, is it reasonable to assert that "spiritual pretension is stultifying science," when every Spiritualist and every medium is urging all men to thoroughly examine and investigate the phenomena in all its various phases? Is it reasonable to witness the writings and speech of the five months old child of Kate Fox and Jencken, which purports to come from departed spirits, and call it the "terrible reaction of the witch delusion which held spell-bound its votaries in spirit power?" O beautiful Reason! what shallow, hypocritical fudge is proclaimed in thy name! How proud man does labor and toil and twist and squirm, so as to find out how not to know, how not to see, how not to believe the truth which is blazing all around us in its simple and useful charms! Tell us, O ye who are wise above your fellows, what is reason? What is truth? If Spiritualism is not Spiritualism, what is it? If science is not doing its duty, how shall she do it? If these millions of people are all wrong, please instruct them; it is your duty; tell science how to get at the truth; tell Spiritualists what this "delusion" is, and prove it to them, in your own grand, material way. Show men how they may become better, nobler, happier, and more useful to themselves and others by denying the evidence of their own senses, and that when a man dies that is the last of him. Take away this "visionary self-conceit," and make man happy by proving to him that this body is all he has to care for;—make him noble by this magnificent thought!—civilize and elevate the world by this stupendous idea! Make men love one another more by being quite sure that a future life is all a delusive humbug. Make men and women sweeter, truer, and purer, towards their parents, their brothers and sisters, their husbands and wives, to their children and to their friends, by assuring them that they shall never see them again, and will never be seen by them, "after this life's fitful fever!" Verily, some cannot become as children, and such cannot enter the kingdom of heaven. He that denies all things cannot become a learner in the great storehouse of loving Nature; but oh! why should he scatter poison in the cups of her beautiful flowers, so that the toiling bee in its search for the sweet nectar shall find nothing but bitterness and death?

There are on our books the names of a few persons who have never ordered the paper. These will please notify us at once whether they wish it continued or not. Except where special arrangements have been made, the names of all who have not paid in advance will now be erased from the books. There are a few prominent Free Thinkers to whom the paper has been sent as a matter of course, who have not, as yet, expressed any intention to assist in sustaining it, although they well know that a radical Free Thought journal is greatly needed on this coast. Eastern publications of the kind will, of course, continue to be taken, and it is right they should be; but, first of all, sustain your own.

Dr. Channing has said that if armies were dressed in a hangman's or butcher's garb, the false glare of military enthusiasm would be destroyed, and war would be seen in its true aspect as butchery.

SPIRITUAL PHENOMENA.

NUMBER SEVEN.

MR. EDITOR: As I was about to leave for California, two days after the seance last described with Mrs. Hollis, and as both X. and myself were anxious to see more of her extraordinary mediumship, and to get still further proofs of Jones' identity, we made an appointment with Mrs. Hollis to attend her dark circle the same evening. On our entering her drawing room we found there Mrs. Holmes, a lady residing in the house, and two strangers, a father and daughter apparently. As we were a little late the door was locked as soon as we had entered, and the gas turned down. Two more visitors came knocking for admittance before anything had been done, but Mrs. Hollis said she made it a rule never to open the door again after the gas had been once turned down, as it "disturbed the conditions." I was seated beside the stranger lady on the sofa; her father next to her on my left; X. at some distance on my right, and Mrs. Hollis on the opposite side of the room. The only preparation the lady made was to put a long tin speaking trumpet on the floor in the center of the circle. The ladies, after chatting a little, began to sing some simple songs; such as, "Home, Sweet Home," the "Last Rose of Summer," etc. Mrs. Hollis said she could not sing. Spirit voices, or voices extraneous to the circle, and apparently over our heads, joined in the melodies almost at once, and sang in tune, but with great uncertainty; sometimes rising high above any other voice, and sometimes sinking almost to a whisper; but all the time possessing a peculiar and unnatural timbre, which distinguished them from every other voice, and made them audible when quite low in tone. After a while, upon the cessation of the singing, a strong, distinct man's voice, speaking more loudly and distinctly than persons ordinarily do, wished us all "good evening." Its peculiar tone and reverberation made it evident that the voice came through the trumpet, which we had heard moving and scraping on the carpet before the voice addressed us. The voice called itself James Nolan, and said that on earth he had been a soldier in the Army of the Potomac during the war, and had died of fever in hospital. He kept up quite an animated conversation with us for more than an hour, I should think; answering all our queries with promptness, alacrity and point, sometimes quite smartly and wittily. As I am dealing only with tests, I cannot repeat here all he said. There was, however, nothing said by him which could not have been said by a smart woman, well acquainted with the spiritual philosophy, with equal effect and accuracy. Mrs. Hollis did not give me the idea of a person who could have, by any possibility, kept up such a conversation. It is said that the voice of Jimmy is like what her's would be imitating a male voice through a tin trumpet. I do not think so. In speaking, he turned instantly towards the person who addressed him, and seemed to put the mouth of the trumpet pretty near to his face. As he did not seem to be a Christian, I asked him, "Who was Christ?" To our astonishment he answered at once, "The son of God," adding, after a pause, "in the same sense as you are the son of God—no other." We asked him to explain how the spirits passed material objects through material obstructions. He said he did not believe he could do so in any way that we could understand; but that it was done by resolving the object into its ultimate atoms, passing it through, and condensing it again on the other side of the obstruction. We inquired about the life and powers of spirits in the other world, the different states into which they passed, etc. He said that there were six states or spheres above the earth, the lowest commencing about sixty miles above its surface; each of these states excelling the one below it in beauty, happiness, goodness and intelligence. That spirits as they left the body were drafted off to one or other of these states, according to their relative goodness or intelligence, and after remaining usually for a short time in a sort of intermediate condition. That the surroundings of each of these states were just as real and objective to its inhabitants as those of our world are to us. That in each was found beautiful scenery, flowers, herbs, trees, lakes, rivers, houses and cities. That spirits ate, talked, possessed sexual instincts, and amused and employed themselves somewhat as we do here, but with the difference that they cast off gradually all the baser and lower qualities of their natures as they rise in progression through the spheres. The sexual passion, for example, he stated, exhibited itself in a more and more refined manner, and attended by higher and purer bliss, in proportion as the sphere became further removed from earth. We asked how he knew so accurately that there were just six of these spheres. He told us that he had been through five himself, and was now in the sixth; but he was quite aware that there were still higher series of spheres above his present abode, because its inhabitants had communication with spirits far removed above them, just as we were having communication with him, through mediums. He knew nothing, however, concerning these higher states beyond the mere fact of their existence. [This account, if I mistake not, will be found to agree in its most minute particulars with accounts detailed in Dr. Hare's book as given by his deceased brother and sister to himself; and both accounts accurately tally, as far as they go, with those published by the Buddhist apostles two thousand years ago. The Buddhist philosophers, or mediums, however, describe altogether twenty-one states above the first series of seven—including the earth sphere; the next being a series of sixteen, then one of four, and highest of all, Nirwana.]

At length Jimmy said that his medium was getting tired, and he must go. As soon as his voice ceased I heard a loud whisper on my left, apparently close to me; and the lady and gentleman began to converse rapidly and eagerly with two voices, speaking to them in distinct but whispering tones. I did not try to listen to what was said, as it seemed to be private matter, but I heard both these people addressed by name several times; and they were evidently talking quite as naturally and as much at their ease with these voices as though two old friends had just dropped in upon them. Presently a faint whisper came close before my face. The lady said, "There is a spirit speaking to you." I bent forward and listened. I could distinguish no words, but a sound like my name. I said, "Who are you?" I heard a sound which ended with "Jones." "Speak louder." "A. A. Jones." "Try to speak as distinctly as you can." Then I heard quite clearly whispered in an agitated voice, the breath of which seemed to fan my face, "A. A. Jones—J-o-n-e-s," spelling the Jones. "You mean A. Jones." "No; A. A. Jones," with an accent on the second "A." "I am not blind now." "Are you happy?" "I am very happy—I can see here. I have no more power; come again and I will speak better."

The seance then closed, as no more voices came, and the gas was turned up. The trumpet stood on the floor in the center of the circle. Mrs. Hollis sat in her chair, looking pale, and very much exhausted. The lady and gentleman turned to me, and said that they had been here twice before; that they were quite unknown to Mrs. Hollis, from whom they had concealed even their names; that from the first several spirits whom they recognized had come and talked with them, addressing them correctly by name, and mentioning several events of their earth lives known only to themselves. The lady was herself a medium, and at their first seance with Mrs. H. a relative had come, and promised, in evidence that she was ever near them, to bring a foreign flower from the East and place it in their sitting room during the night. They had found the plant, as promised, fresh and flourishing, with earth about its roots, lying on their dining table, on entering the sitting room in the morning; they had planted it in a pot, and taken it to Covent Garden, where it was recognized by a florist as a rare annual, which he said he did not know where, in England, to match. These good folk were evidently quite excited about the flower; wished us to come and see it, and offered to bring it to show Mrs. Hollis.

Neither to X. or to myself was this seance half so satisfactory as a test as was the direct writing on the slate in the daytime. Except in the case of the lady and gentleman who had concealed their names from the medium, and who were perfectly satisfied by a crowd of tests that they had been conversing, evening after evening, with departed relatives, nothing had been done which a clever ventriloquist could not have effected with a long tin trumpet. The ventriloquist might be Mrs. Hollis or a confederate. But Jones had again insisted upon it that his name was A. A. Jones. Meeting my father next day, I asked him, "What was Arthur Jones' full name?" To my astonishment he replied, after a moment's consideration, "Arthur Augustus Jones." Yours, MEDICUS.

[For Common Sense.]

LETTER FROM AUSTIN KENT.

TO "C. B. S."

No discussion, but a word of testimony. Horace Seaver was not more mentally organized for an Atheist than Austin Kent. Yet A. K. is sure "individual existence" does "continue" after the death of the grosser body. But wholly from his experience in a life of sixty-five years, "Bibles" and "desires" one side. From the age of nineteen to thirty-one I talked with unseen intelligences, often, and as understandingly as I could talk with C. B. S. if he was present. (I found them useful and reliable, though many do not; all are not reliable.) Thirty-four years ago I learned that these "intelligences" were men and women who had left their bodies in our graveyards. Since that I have sometimes conversed with them through some of the best mediums I have ever even read of. During the past two years I have conversed from twenty to fifty minutes each with my father, mother, one brother, two sisters, and two daughters, as easily and as clearly as I can and do talk with wife and living son. I am sure of their identity. I do not think it possible for any stranger spirit to make me sure of his or her identity. I have very good evidence in some such cases. Now, friend S., my evidence of this is the same, with one exception, and as good as your evidence that you can converse with your neighbors. I could give as good proof, and nearly all of the same kind. When you will make a deaf man understand exactly how you converse with your neighbors, I promise to make you understand just how I converse with spirits through my own mediumship. Fraternally,

AUSTIN KENT.

Stockholm, N. Y., June 24, 1874.

CALVARY CHURCH.

A pleasant place is Calvary Church, and yet it is a solemn name!—the raised cross; the scoffing soldiers; the world's utter rejection! Why did you give it that awful name? Beulah would have been better, or some name suggestive of pleasantness and peace. But this Calvary Church is really quite delightful; the softest seats, the sweetest music, and a sermon in the best of taste; old Presbyterianism toned down to the port and form of a modern gentleman—and such you are, my reverend John; and if your prayers are the placid breathings of a contented spirit, rather than the cry of a soul that, like Laocoon, is struggling with the serpents about to destroy it, they may be none the less sincere for that, from your standpoint. It was a very delightful thing for me to drop into your Calvary Church one evening. I have rarely enjoyed myself better at the opera. Indeed, the delightful calm of the sacred music was far better suited to my frame of mind than the passionate melodies of the secular composer. Reverend John, and trustees of Calvary Church, I return you my sincere thanks for the pleasant evening I enjoyed. I was impecunious, and you gave me the treat. Who shall say there is no Christian charity? And yet, John, there are souls agonizing, doubting, despairing, in hand to hand conflict with the fierce necessities of the hour, that even this does not satisfy. Not that it is not good of its kind; but, oh! John, what if your lovely symphonies should be drowned in battle music before you know it? And then, John, if you were to come to primitive conditions, the bedrock of society, where we are, you might find it something more like a real Calvary than that softly cushioned, pleasant church of yours. I like you, and I like your church, John. I don't doubt but a kind heart beats under your fine broadcloth; but the problems of life, the issues of to-day, are to be met and faced; and how are they to be settled?

E. HUGHES.

City subscribers are informed that the postage on this paper is paid quarterly in advance by the C. S. P. Comp'y.

Mrs. Logan is to speak in Central Hall, Sunday afternoon.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

AGENTS IN THE INTERIOR.

Contra Costa county.....E. H. Kimball, Antioch.
 Inyo county.....Mrs. L. Hutchinson, Bishop Creek.
 Monterey county.....W. M. Wilson, Salinas City.
 Sacramento county.....A. S. Hopkins, No. 70 J street.
 Santa Barbara county.....Mrs. Clara B. Crane, Santa Barbara.
 San Bernardino county.....Dr. J. P. Greves, Riverside.
 Santa Cruz county.....Mrs. Georgiana B. Kirby.
 San Joaquin county.....W. S. Sturgeon, Stockton.
 Ventura county.....J. W. Stevens, San Buenaventura.
 Yolo county.....J. G. Hudson, Woodland.

TRAVELING AGENTS, Abby W. Baker, Prof. W. H. Chaney, J. L. York, L. I. Ferree, Addie L. Ballou, H. F. M. Brown.

COMMON SENSE is furnished to subscribers for Three Dollars per annum, in advance. Letters intended for the Business Department should be addressed:

A. T. CLARK, BUSINESS MANAGER, 236 Montgomery st.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

Spirits and their Revelations—J. W. Mackie.....	100
Materialism and Spiritualism—Jesse H. Butler.....	101
Spiritual Phenomena—Medicus.....	102
Letter from Austin Kent.....	103
Calvary Church—E. Hughes.....	103
Advance of Spiritualism in England—Ed.....	104
Prof. Chaney's Lectures—Ed.....	105
The Roman Catholic Church—Ed.....	105
Astrology.....	105
Dr. Stone's Church—Ed.....	106
The Naked Truth—L.....	107
Dr. Treat and Mrs. Woodhull.....	107
State Woman Suffrage Society.....	108
Dashaway Hall Discussion.....	108
Materialization of Spirits—E. P. Jour.....	109
Common Sense—J. M. Spear.....	109
At Home with the Lyons—Don Fulano.....	110
Reputation.....	110
Mother Shipton's Prophecy.....	110

COMMON SENSE.

WILLIAM N. SLOCUM, EDITOR.

AMANDA M. SLOCUM, ASSISTANT.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, JULY 11, 1874.

All persons indebted for subscriptions to this paper are requested to forward the money with as little delay as possible.

The Oakland Manifestations and the verdict of the Le Conte Committee will be the subject of a lecture by Geo. W. Lewis, at Charter Oak Hall on Sunday evening.

Mrs. AMY POST.—At the opening of the meeting in Charter Oak Hall, on Sunday afternoon, Mrs. Amanda Wiggins paid a feeling tribute to the memory of Mrs. Amy Post, who died in this city on Friday last. The announcement of the sudden decease of this estimable lady came upon many of her old friends as a most painful surprise. She has been long known as an earnest Spiritualist; a woman of genial nature and noble qualities. She had a large circle of devoted friends.

J. M. SPEAR.—In a letter from this gentleman, who has many friends in California, we learn that he is living in Philadelphia, resting quietly after a life of active labor in the field of reform. He says: "I have now closed my missionary labors, in which I have been engaged more than twenty years, and have in this beautiful city secured to me a permanent home. My health is good, never better; and with great satisfaction I see that the ideas which have been given me by persons associated for beneficial purposes in the spirit world are taking hold of the public mind and being put into life by Spiritualists and others."

ADVANCE OF SPIRITUALISM IN ENGLAND.

When Mrs. Lyons adopted D. D. Home as her son she made him a gift of 60,000*l.*; and afterwards, when she brought suit to recover the money, on the ground that he had deceived her in pretending that he enabled her to communicate with her deceased husband, Mr. Varley, the great electrician, came forward, with other eminent men, to testify on oath that Mr. Home's mediumship was genuine, and that he really had the powers he claimed to have. The judge, however, charged for the plaintiff, and an English jury decided that it was more probable that a number of scientific gentlemen of unimpeachable character should be liars, than that phenomena with which they were unfamiliar should be true.

This is precisely the condition of mind now of the bulk of sensible persons who continue to reject the overwhelming mass of testimony crowding in upon us daily from on all sides, in support of the truth of phenomena ever increasing in strangeness. But Spiritualism in London holds a very different position at the present day than it held then. Faraday, Brewster and other eminent scientists had treated the matter with contempt, and refused even to examine into the phenomena, save under conditions which were impossible. This was the weakest thing these eminent men were ever guilty of, and most unworthy their character as inductive philosophers. Now, the Dialectical Society, after two years careful investigation, has published its acknowledgment of the facts claimed as such, whilst Messrs. Varley, Crooks, Wallace and other eminent scientists are daily bearing testimony to facts more amazing than anything then dreamed of as possible. Messrs. Varley and Crooks have just now, by a succession of carefully planned experiments, indisputably proved the truth of the phenomenon of the materialization of a disembodied spirit—to an extent which rendered it palpable to all their senses, and under conditions which made all deception impossible. That spirits should now be able to walk amongst us, to touch us, and be handled by us, is sufficiently strange. To this possibility they seem to have worked up by successive efforts during the last twenty-five years. But they will not rest here. What new wonder are we to expect anon? It would seem as though the hour was at hand when the two worlds, the material—as we call it—and the spiritual, would be mingled and become one in perception, as they have always possibly been in locality. After all—if the numerous tales of apparitions in all ages are not lies—these phenomena are only new in the sense of our being able, to some extent, to command and control them. We are learning gradually the conditions under which they may occur. Mr. Varley, as an expert in electricity, is pre-eminently fitted to show us the road. He is now probably the first electrician in the world; no dreamer, but a practical man, who is consulted by all the great English cable companies. He has been an earnest Spiritualist for many years, and is himself a clairvoyant. Mr. Wallace is one of the first living naturalists, and conjointly with Darwin recognized as the originator of the theory of evolution by natural selection, some modification of which is now accepted by most scientists. Mr. Crooks is a chemist of no mean ability and fame, whose authority was considered conclusive, in his line, by his brother scientists, until he showed the incompetency of his powers of observation by acknowledging the truth of spiritualistic phenomena. The time is evidently close at hand when all scientists, both here and in England, will be forced to look into this question, and as soon as they can be got to do that their conviction of its truth is a foregone conclusion.

PROF. CHANEY'S LECTURES.

The interest in these lectures increases with each evening. No report that we have space for would do them justice. On Tuesday evening, the Professor explained the story of Joseph, the travels in the wilderness, and many other things. On Thursday evening, he spoke of "the Deaths of Judas" and the "Beasts of the Revelations." This evening (Saturday the 11th), he treats of "Hell and Damnation," and "The Summer Land." Last of the course, Tuesday, 14th inst., "Birth and Crucifixion of Christ," in which will be represented a storm scene, with thunder and lightning.

On Saturday, July 18th, he will give an extra lecture, on "Freemasonry," wherein many things are "brought to light" that were lost during the persecution by Christians. During the lecture he will explain "Wisdom, Strength and Beauty," showing that the ancient symbols for this trinity were not three orders of architecture, as now represented; also the cabalistic letters, "I H S." He will also explain the hieroglyphics employed in ancient Egypt, as interpreted by Champollion, tracing symbolical characters in their growth into letters of the alphabet, etc.

To CORRESPONDENTS.—We are always glad to receive brief, well written communications, no matter how crowded may be our columns; so we trust none of our good correspondents will discontinue their favors when we say that there is now one large drawer and two or three pigeon holes full of manuscript, awaiting attention. These articles will not be used in the order of their reception, nor even in the order of what we may consider to be their merit; but they will be so culled as to give a variety of matter in each number of the paper, the shorter articles always having the preference. Occasionally, as manuscript accumulates, we shall select articles and abbreviate them, giving the substance only; but always preserving the original for the author. This is the only way in which we can satisfactorily dispose of a large class of writings with which we are favored.

An interesting lecture by Prof. Chaney on the Union of Church and State, with a supplement, "The Christian Plan of Ethics a Failure, with Hints at Something Better," can be obtained at this office, price ten cents. Also a little book of astrological definitions, price twenty-five cents. The celebrated "Prayer to the Devil" can also be supplied.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.

And now comes a voice from Rome, telling us that the American pilgrims have interviewed the Pope. They knelt, they kissed his hands, they declared their faith in his infallibility, they deplored his dethronement, they denounced what they called the braggart defenders of liberty, and the persecution of the church. What shall we have next? American sovereigns trail their high honor and the dignity of the great republic at the feet of a pretender to monarchy; they endorse his claims to put the church above the civil law; they deplore the overthrow of an ecclesiastical despotism in Italy, a thousand times more odious than the British rule in Ireland; and they denounce the devotees of liberty as braggarts and pretenders! What will become of this Catholic Church, this chameleon, this Protean shape, that is all things to all men, and in every country has a different doctrine and policy? Here in the United States they affect to be republicans, and to admire and accept our ideas of liberty. In France they want the Bourbon or the Empire. In Spain they rally round Don Carlos. In Mexico they crave a monarch, and an established church. In Ireland they denounce the established church, while in Italy they would enthrone the Pope. How long can this rope of sand hold together in this age of newspapers and travel? Can the Catholics of America view with favor the efforts of their church to establish monarchy in Spain, France and Mexico? Can the monarchists tolerate the idea of the Irish Republic? Can we, who have set the civil power above all, who ignore the church, and tell our army that it must be obedient to civil rule—can we look with complacency upon people who would re-establish the Papal crown? Can we, who have declared that all power rests upon the will of the people, be silent, when some of our citizens kneel before a foreign priest and avow the faith that he is infallible, and the hope that he may soon be restored to despotic rule? We predict for these diverse elements, dismemberment. These contradictory views and objects, when plainly set before the different branches of the church, must disgust them with each other. The great binding power, the Papal throne, is gone, and the rope of sand will soon crumble to pieces.

ASTROLOGY.—In a little book written by Prof. Chaney, giving astronomical definitions, we are told: "Birth itself is no accident, nor are the planets responsible for the children being depraved. The fault lies with the parents, or their parents, or perhaps a remote ancestor, while Nature, always true to herself and her children, simply causes the child to be born at a time when the planets will indicate the manner of being he is, either hastening or retarding the period of gestation. Nature knows no mercy, has no 'freaks,' makes no mistakes, but administers strict justice. When a murderer has been conceived, she permits him to be born a murderer, merely causing his birth at a time when her watchmen are pointing out his character. Nor does her warning cease here. She stamps 'murderer' all over his brow! Nature never makes a murderer—it is his parents—Nature only MARKS him!"

DR. STONE'S CHURCH.

Last Sunday evening we strolled about in search of one of those eloquent shams known as a modern preacher, and soon found ourselves seated in the above named "house of the Lord." We expected to listen to the glittering nothings of the incumbent fossil, but the domestic Stone gave place to a rolling specimen of the same genus from Sacramento, a D. D. and reverend professor of modern theology. He was not a youth, like the valiant Robinson of the Calvary temple. He did not profess to meet the Goliath of scepticism face to face, and lay him out cold and stiff in a few seconds. No, no! J. A. Benton, D.D., of Sacramento, has been in California since '49, and felt the stings and rubs and buffets of the sturdy old giant too often to venture on any voluntary encounter. So far from coveting any controversy with modern science, as it affects religion, he ignored it altogether, and spoke as one who had slept on that subject for an indefinite period. His sermon turned on the changes of the past twenty-five years, peculiarly the California epoch; and he showed that he had read and noted all those little scraps of history that pertained to his subject. He described the triumphs of science, in the steamship, the railroad, the telegraph, and in all our manufacturing and agricultural tools and implements. He glanced at our progress in politics towards a more free and enlightened form of government, and the wide spread advance toward a better educational system. But when he came to apply this progressive spirit of the last quarter of a century to his own specialty, to theology, to that branch of knowledge in which his hearers must have been most deeply interested, he touched the subject with the lightest finger; he glozed it over; he withheld from that intelligent and expectant people all the truth, and contented himself with a little paltry sophistry. He said the "Christian religion" was never so wide spread, so well supported, so much respected in the world as now; that it courted investigation and defied scrutiny, and stood firm and unchanged. He admitted just this much, that some of the olden forms and images of speech had been remodeled to accommodate the refinements of modern idea and habit; but although the images had been recast, the same metal had been used; the cardinal doctrines of the church had stood unquestioned and unchanged. We would suggest a few questions to the reverend gentleman, which will perhaps bring him to a different opinion, and induce him to insert in this stereotyped sermon of the twenty-five years a new feature, the most important one of all, namely, the radical changes in religious ideas and dogmas. Twenty-five years ago, it was common for preachers to dwell on the torments of the damned in the sulphurous flames of hell. To-day no D.D. would dare to shock the tender sensitiveness of the well dressed and comfortable, easy-going Christians of that splendid temple with anything more than a distant allusion to that horrible place. Twenty-five years ago the kindest of men accepted the belief that God would punish people for not believing in certain dogmas; and believing that God hated unbelief, they hated it themselves, and persecuted the rejecters of their faith. Now all enlightened and good men know that a man's belief depends upon his education and surroundings and his natural capacity; that each and all have a perfect right to think for themselves, and that it is the height of absurdity to hate or punish men for differences of opinion. Having eschewed the folly themselves, they can no longer believe that an enlightened and good God could be guilty of it, or ever could have been guilty of it. Twenty-five years ago it was commonly accepted that man was a fallen creature, fallen in consequence of some act of disobedience. Science has now placed beyond dispute that man has risen, risen always, and is rising, and will rise, till all the dark shadows of mysticism and superstition, so carefully nursed and cherished by the advocates and apologists of an old and barbarous theology, are swept away, and man lives in the light of pure moral and intellectual science. Twenty-five years ago men hoped to be saved through the merits of a poor martyr, put to death nearly two thousand years ago, without any merit of their own. Now, coming to know that God is good and wise, we cannot see how any cheat, or subterfuge, or false pretense can stand in the place of real goodness of heart, and we fearlessly announce that the good will be saved, whatever their creed or nation may be. Even a conference of preachers has lately said, on the trial of Dr. Swing of Chicago, that to say that a good and wise heathen may have as good a chance of heaven as some believers, is not heresy. What can the people of Dr. Stone's church think of a gentleman, who should be up with the age, when he thus ignores the most important features of his subject? What can Dr. Stone think of a fellow laborer who undertakes to feed his lambs with this weak diet? Will he hasten to repair the omission, the wrong, and place before his people the whole truth? And what are we to think of this addition of D.D. to a man's name, if he sleeps through a quarter of a century, and sees nothing of the changes in the public mind, that are right before his eyes, and pertaining to the very subject on which he is supposed to be best informed? These two letters, do they mean "dead drunk," or "deaf and dumb," or "decidedly demented," or what do they mean? And what does he mean who comes before a reading, thinking California audience, and assures them that all is peace, that there is no material change or disturbance in the religious atmosphere, while within the church and without, and all about, the thundering and lightnings of schism, and separation, and renunciation are resounding in every land? Is he honest, or is he an idiot? Alas! he is not quite either. He is a fashionable preacher, who only talks right on, and tells the people what he thinks they like to hear and will readily pay for. But he mistook the men and the women who filled that church. They feel themselves qualified to grapple with every question as it is, to have the truth laid before them in all its force, and to meet it; and they will not long tolerate teachers who say all is quiet, when there is no quiet, and assure them that their creed stands unquestioned, when it is arraigned at every corner of the street, and the D.D. champions who ought to rush to its vindication hide their heads under the falsehood that there is no change.

THE NAKED TRUTH.

Mrs. Woodhull's oration on the Beecher-Tilton scandal drew a crowded house at Platt's Hall, on Friday evening of last week. Every seat was occupied, and but few available inches left of standing room. The audience was of the first character, and the woman element largely represented. Mrs. Woodhull was warmly greeted when she first appeared, and as soon as the hum of the immense multitude was stilled and the first clear notes of her ringing voice sounded over the vast audience, the magnetism of this marvelous woman began to be felt; the proverbial pin might have been heard to drop; every eye was fixed upon her; every ear was strained to catch the smallest word that fell from the lips of this wonderful being—woman or goddess—who stood there quaintly dressed in black, with a rose on her bosom and a girdle of some strange and curious pattern about her waist.

The subject matter of the oration was advertised to be a review of the Beecher-Tilton imbroglio; but it was rather a synopsis of Mrs. Woodhull's peculiar doctrines in application to Mr. Beecher's conduct. From her standpoint she has no censure for Mr. Beecher where the world censures; but only that while living the principles of personal freedom which she declares that he really holds, he yet has not had the moral courage to come out and honestly avow them. Mrs. Woodhull claimed further, that the "masterly inactivity" exhibited by Plymouth Church in their treatment of this whole matter; their lofty silence towards the public; their so-called noble confidence in Mr. Beecher; their evident determination to stand by him through any and every present or future development, is, in point of fact—no matter by what casuistries they may beg or evade it—a virtual endorsement of Mr. Beecher's acts; that, briefly, Plymouth Church knows, as well as the common sense public, that Henry Ward Beecher is guilty as charged in the indictment; that Plymouth Church privately, though not avowedly, in practice if not in theory, holds the same sentiments of personal freedom Mr. Beecher does; and that, living the same doctrines individually, they are not prepared to cast a stone at him, but rather to shield and sustain him, which they can only do, under the present system of social hypocrisy and falsehood, by declaring him "not guilty," and the subject not open for further discussion. Thus this masterly inactivity and sublime confidence resolves itself into a clever piece of strategy on the part of Plymouth Church. Christian conservatism, and, it may be, the whole social fabric, is threatened in these charges against Henry Ward Beecher; and can it be wondered at that an orthodox and subsidized press rush to the rescue, in the endeavor to save these already crumbling relics of a crude and barbarous past?

Mrs. Woodhull alluded to the hostility of the San Francisco press towards her, and the unfair and uncourteous treatment she has received at their hands. It is certainly anomalous, to say the least, the attitude of the press of this city towards this celebrated lecturer. The explanation may not improbably be found, however, in the fact that

Mrs. Woodhull on her first appearance here, made an allusion, or a supposed allusion, to the personal habits of a prominent and wealthy citizen, not by name, but by inference; and such an imprudence could not be allowed to pass without paying a penalty—and this gives the key to the whole matter. In Stockton, Sacramento and San Jose Mrs. Woodhull not only met with highly appreciative audiences, composed of the very best and most intellectual people, but the papers treated her respectfully and reported her fairly; the right of every one to be heard being fully accorded to her.

To say that Mrs. Woodhull is the perfection of grace, the queen of eloquence, will give no adequate conception of her to those who have not had the good fortune to see and hear her. She is the perfect artist, and holds her audience literally spell-bound with her magnetic power. We may demur at her propositions, we may cavil at her arguments; but before the inspiration of her genius logic is dumb. No more beautiful woman ever appeared on a public platform. Her face is intensely spiritual, and capable of the most marvelous variations; now flashing with indignation, now gleaming with sarcasm, and anon melting into love and tenderness.

From all outward demonstrations, Mrs. Woodhull's audience was in entire rapport with her. She was warmly applauded at different times throughout the evening, and when she closed there must have been but few present whose hearts, at least, she had not won.

L.

DR. TREAT AND MRS. WOODHULL.

In order to fill up a column on page 58 of COMMON SENSE we cut from The Word a brief criticism on Dr. Treat's expose of Mrs. Woodhull, not noticing that in the next number of The Word, then already issued, Dr. T. takes exceptions to the statement, and says: "I do not beg her to become a free lover like myself—in that regard, I only beg her to become (what she professes to be) a free lover."

The Doctor makes some serious charges against Mrs. W., and asks COMMON SENSE to give publicity to them. In a letter to the editor he says:

"As she will not come out in her own paper and meet the charges, if you will come out in yours I will gladly accept that; and if you say that the parties have denied my statements * * * or denied anything that I have asserted, let me know that you will give place to my answers, and you shall have them forthwith."

These charges have been denied repeatedly in our hearing, but we do not desire to enter into Dr. Treat's controversy, believing it would be neither profitable nor interesting to our readers. While none of the charges made by Dr. Treat were proved, several of them have been disproved by the very witnesses he cited to sustain him.

There is but one distinct rule, perhaps, that we can lay down for ourselves, and that is to do the good that lies before us, the nearest duty to us, ever keeping supreme in our affections that love and liberty which, in our highest moments, the soul reverences and approves, and leave consequences to provide for themselves.—Caroline H. Spear.

STATE WOMAN SUFFRAGE SOCIETY.

REPORTS SHOWING THE ORIGIN OF THE AMENDMENTS TO THE CODE CONCERNING WOMAN'S PROPERTY RIGHTS.

ED. COMMON SENSE: While we do not intend to trespass upon your patience, or that of your readers, with a lengthy account of our various meetings, correspondence, etc., we trust you will give room to the accompanying condensed reports. We more particularly desire that these reports be printed on account of the extraordinary misunderstanding that has arisen in regard to the agencies concerned in the passage of the very important amendment to the Code concerning the property rights of married women. While we are quite willing to admit that all persons working for the cause have doubtless contributed indirectly to the forming of a public opinion which made it possible for our delegates to accomplish this work, we are not willing that any misrepresentation should cover or distort the fact that Mrs. Wallis, aided by Mrs. L. De Force Gordon and the delegated authority of the Society, procured the amendment to the Code giving to women the right to control and manage their separate estate. Very respectfully,

M. LOUISE WILLSON, Secretary
Incorporated State Woman's Suffrage Society.

ACTION OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

At a meeting of the Board of Control of the State Incorporated Woman's Suffrage Society on the 15th of January, it was laid before the members that notwithstanding the petitions then before the Legislature in behalf of the right of women, an amendment had been framed and was about passing the House which would still further restrict her property right, and that, in effect, the proposed amendment would prevent a married woman from obtaining the necessities of life, if her husband should so choose, as it was proposed to release all property from liability on account of a woman's indebtedness. In view of this threatening amendment, Mrs. Wallis moved that the President appoint a committee of three to proceed to Sacramento and endeavor to obtain an amendment to Section 167 of the Code, giving force to Section 158, giving married women the control of their separate estate, and power to make contracts and pay money on their own account; said committee having full power to act according to their best judgment in the revision of the Code relative to the property rights of married women. The motion being adopted, Mrs. Hill, the President, appointed Mrs. Wallis, Mrs. L. De Force Gordon, and Mrs. Willson. A brief report of the Chairman of the Committee, filed April 3d, 1874, is herewith submitted.

M. LOUISE WILLSON, Secretary
State Incorporated Woman's Suffrage Society.

REPORT OF THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE.

To the President of the Board of Directors of the California State Woman Suffrage Association:

Your Committee on Amendments to the Civil Code of California beg leave to report the following: Through the influence of said committee, after two weeks persevering effort at the capital of the State in urging the passage of a bill through the Legislature the past winter, Section 167 (which debarred the wife the right to control and dispose of her separate estate) was so amended as to give full force and effect to Section 158, which reads:

Either husband or wife may enter into any engagement or transaction with the other, or with any other person, respecting property, which either might if unmarried; subject in the transactions between them, to the general rules which control the actions of persons occupying confidential relations with each other, as defined by the "Title on Trusts."

This Section 158, which harmonizes with Section 162, concedes to married women the absolute power to control, manage and dispose of her separate property without the intervention or consent of the husband.

Feeling that woman has hereby won a great victory, the foregoing is respectfully submitted.

SARAH WALLIS, Chairman Committee.

DASHAWAY HALL DISCUSSION.

FURTHER TALK ABOUT THE LOCAL OPTION LAW.

The Society for Self-Culture still continue for discussion the subject of Prohibition. Last Sunday afternoon the opening was by Mr. Healy, who said he did not deny the constitutionality of the Local Option Law. His objection was that it furnished the precedent for still more restrictive regulations regarding our eating, clothing, religion, etc. He did not think man was made for the constitution, but the constitution and the laws for man. He believed in the utmost freedom consistent with social organization.

Mr. Farrell, Sr., held that the government should provide places of amusement for the people. This, he said, is practical Democracy, and as we approach towards intelligence this system will be universal. He showed that Paine advocated the idea of the "referendum." The action of the license men in Alameda demonstrated that we are yet unfit for self-government. No laws should be partial; if the Option Law is good it should be national.

Emperor Norton said that government is best which is best for the people for which it is administered; if the government find that the use of animal food is injurious, it is the duty of the government to prevent its consumption. So with ardent spirits.

Capt. Smith declared that he had traveled a great deal, and deprecated the conduct of those who hooted and abused the women in Alameda; he considered it a stigma on the Germans, but as women were harnessed to the plow in that country he did not wonder much at their conduct. (Cries of "No.") He thought much good would come out of the Option Law, especially to women. It compels the conservative women to think. He recognized the finger of God in this matter. Women would soon vote and would purify the polls.

Mr. Klein condemned the Option Law as inconsistent, and tending to bring the scenes of the barroom to the kitchen and the parlor. He condemned the introduction of a few Germans in Alameda as an example of the German people.

Mr. Ryan thought we should have some consideration for the personal liberty of others. He would despise the government that would enforce him to buy liquor in certain quantities or not at all.

Dr. Merrick defined personal liberty as he understood it, and deprecated the mixing up of religious and political feeling in the contest. He denied that the reform is a religious crusade.

Other remarks were made by Mr. Johnson and Judge Heslep, and the discussion was continued another week, when Mr. Farrell, Sr., will open the debate.

MATERIALIZATION OF SPIRITS.

There are now a half dozen mediums for this phase of phenomena in the United States and several in Europe. A correspondent of the Religio Philosophical Journal, J. H. Randall, of Clyde, Ohio, gives a lengthy description of a visit to the Eddy family, in Chittenden, Vermont. The following are extracts:

THE SEANCE ROOM.

There is but one door to enter and go from the hall. At the west end, clear across the room, is a stage or platform five feet wide, and in front of it on its edge, stands a rail on supporters about two feet high, extending from the north side of the room to within two feet of the south side where is left an open space and two steps upon which to mount the platform. The north quarter of this stage is taken up by a dark closet and the chimney that passes from below up through the hall. The door of this closet opens almost in the center of the stage, there being a space of three feet between it and the rail. There is no furniture nor paraphernalia of any description in this hall.

THE FIRST EVENING.

On the evening of May 15th, there being present eight persons beside the family (which consists at the present time of three brothers and two sisters, all being mediums, but only two of them, William and Horatio, give seances), we formed a semi-circle, twelve of us extending from one side of the room to the other, and about four feet from the stage. William informed the company that any person who wished could examine him, his clothing, and the dark closet as much as they wished. The writer noticed that he had no white garment on him, his shirt being a dark colored woolen cloth, and we saw nothing that implied the least disposition to conceal anything either about his person or in the closet. His hands were securely tied behind him. He was placed in a chair in the closet and a large shawl was used to curtain the door, leaving him in the dark; the light was set on the floor and turned down some, but light enough so we could see each other; we all joined hands and commenced to sing. In less than two minutes the curtain was raised and pulled back from one side, and there stood two child-like forms draped in white; one of them bowed, motioned its arms and beckoned to a lady in the circle. The lady then remarked, "how much it acts like Jennie," when both of the childish forms seemed to dance with glee a moment or two, then disappeared, the lady believing that in them she recognized her child and its playmate, both of whom had recently died. Soon there appeared an old lady whom the family call grandmother, and in an old cracked voice, she gave some directions and disappeared. Following her disappearance, out slipped a large portly man with black pants, coat and vest, and a white shirt; light features, dark hair and beard. His motion was slow; he bowed several times. A gentleman present from Springfield, Massachusetts, J. F. Baker, who sat beside me, recognized in him his brother who had been three weeks dead. Several attempts were now made by different spirits to appear, and, one after the other, four Indians came out in different costumes, each staying long enough to show himself; one of them, a large majestic fellow, stood against the door case to give us an idea of his height, and we judged that he was six and a half feet high, and the most of the company were of the same opinion. One very friendly Indian maiden came out and danced, and motioned to a lady, Mrs. Cleveland, to come up on the stage. The old lady went up and danced with the spirit. She afterward told me she had dread at coming in contact with this materialization. I wanted to dance with the Indian maid, but did not get a chance. Her movements were very graceful and easy. Now, the spirits held a colloquy in voices differing in tone and in the use of language.

ANOTHER EVENING.

On Sunday evening, May 17th, the principal materializations were—first, the witch of the mountains, who appeared in full view, draped in weird costume, with a crown on her head and a long gauze veil over her face, which she raised slowly and majestically and took a chair that was on the platform, sat down and discoursed to us on the philosophy of the phenomena we were witnessing, winding up with a golden promise to us that as earth's children get rid of their fears and superstitions, so they can bear greater things, the spirits would produce more startling sights and utter things now unutterable. Then came another woman, in white garibaldi waist and black skirt, and it was said by those who thought they knew, that it was Ascha W. Sprague. The features were white and as expressionless as death. She appeared to look us all over, made a bow, clasped her hands, knelt on the floor and poured forth a fervent prayer, so intense, so stirring and thrilling to the feelings, that the company's amen was simultaneous with the closing of the prayer.

COMMON SENSE.

2210 MOUNT VERNON STREET,
PHILADELPHIA, June 18, 1874. }

FRIEND SLOOM: What a rare commodity is that sense which we call common! I have this morning been asked, by note, to give letters of introduction to my friends in England to be used there by a person of whom I never before heard. The person who made this request is well educated, is a good teacher, in and out of the pulpit, but in this case he lacks common sense. Nations go to war, spend vast sums, kill, maim, wound and in numerous ways injure each other, and then pay persons and build hospitals to bind up the wounds they have made. They lack common sense. Men and women bind themselves to live together in marriage for life. If they had a grain of common sense they would marry for love, instead of for life. A lady who has written much and well was seated in a Boston church, beneath a lamp; she requested a lady who sat near her to exchange seats with her, because she feared oil might fall upon and soil her dress! That lady, with all her acquirements, lacked common sense. One man murders another. The State gives a clergyman ample opportunity to "convert" him, then the "redeemed" is swung off before an assembled multitude, calling from the gallows upon the world to repent of its sins. If the State had common sense it would permit its saints to live and be of use to the world. Women wear long skirts in the public streets, and have to hold them up, exposing their under garments. They lack common sense.

Before you is a wide field, and I trust you will faithfully and lovingly cultivate it, and you may be a means of founding a common sense school, and in the far distant future some common sense women and men may be moved to build and sustain a common sense church, the members of which will be content to say—

"For creeds and forms let graceless zealots fight,
He can't be wrong whose life is in the right."

J. M. SPEAR.

AT HOME WITH THE LYONS.

When Daniel of old shut the mouths of the lions,
And sat tete-a-tete with those brutes in their den,
The puzzled professors of Chaldean science
Demurred to a seance with Daniel then.

They wanted a programme, no doubt, or rehearsal,
And jibed at these lions, all holding their jaws;
Till Darius got riled, and gave them the reversal,
Or benefit, that is, of Medean laws.

They to judgment had brought this young Daniel in triumph,
And, of feelings devoid, to their felines consigned;
But when he stayed untaunted, Darius cried, "Why—umph—
Walk in if you please, gents, my lions aint dined."

But, so soon as they entered, each magi and medium,
To see the live lions on straw litter fed,
The unfeeling brutes started from ennui's dull tedium,
And their bones on the paddy straw literally spread.

"Well out of that, Dan," shouted, watching his greedy ones,
The jolly director of that Sunday Zoo;
"You are welcome, my prophet, to preach us your te-deums
Since they've got small profits by peaching on you.

So, when Shadrach, and Meshach and 'Bednego ventured
To suggest slight improvements in Babylon's creed,
Old orthodox Neb he these heretics censured
As atheists, infidels, bad scamps indeed.

He then heated his oven, to have them well toasted;
A Spanish prescription, approved in such case;
But the bakers, who set down this high bred batch, roasted,
While the loaves loafed quite coolly, unris, through the place;

Nor even got crusty for all this fierce baking;
But walked with good spirits unsinged midst the glow
Of the white-heated furnace; the jailors stood quaking
To see their loosed prisoners fetterless go.

Not one hair of their beards frizzled up by caloric,
Not a white turban scorched, not a toga the worse,
Yet the fetters that bound them were nowhere; this coleric
King sought for their cinders, but found the reverse.

And Nebuchadnezzar was much disconcerted,
To see such an end to his auto-da-fe;
When he deemed them done brown, admiration he blurted
Out, finding himself done much browner than they.

Then he ordered them out of their very warm quarters,
And started to find them not smelling of smoke;
Though an fait—like most tyrants—at all sorts of slaughters,
He found baking Hebrews a mighty poor joke.

In disgust left cathedral and statescraft and palace
To roam in the meads, autocratical as;
Formed a penchant for thistles, dropped murder and malice,
Left his pillars, and took—like a donkey—to grass,

Till his hair like fowls' feathers stood up on his caput,
And rose from his poll like a cockatoo's crest;
His nails eagles' talons resembled, in habit
This talented king went extremely undressed.

And he dreamt of Abednego horrible nightmares,
Who to bed could go cosily sheeted with flame,
As he lay with his steeds in their clover, and light cares
Sat on the Honyfhms, this Yahoo to shame.

In the pride of his glory Belshazzar, carousing,
Pledged his bishops and generals in bumpers of wine;
No alarm for his state apprehension arousing,
Not a doubt of the church he'd received as divine.

Till young Daniel, the medium, came in to his seance,
That Daniel who once with the lions abode;
And the King had to put the next song in abeyance,
Yet, when spirits came rapping, he cried, "You be blowed."

But a spirit hand came forth, and wrote without parsing,
With style free and flowing, with pencil of fire,
Mene, mene, and tekeli, and also upharain;
The monarch beheld, and suggested "bell wire;"

Or mechanical dodges, false bottoms, trick lantern;
Polytechnic professors, and Pepper therewith;
And turning to Dan'l, attempted to banter him;
Asserting that "spirits were all just a myth."

Mene, mene, had meaning he found in his trouble,
And knew spirit writing not always a sell;
For Darius the Medean came down at the double,
And his spirit creed rose as his high spirits fell.

Thus our Magi, Chaldeans, and bulwarks of science,
Laugh the spirits to scorn from the lecture room's dais,
And jeering at Daniels at home with the Lyons
Had been awfully glad to have stood in his place:

Provided the Lyons were quiet as mouses,
Nor held them in chancery with soft feline wile;
Few savans object to "devour widows' houses,"
Though many might chafe perhaps at such a long trial.

But Daniel was patient, and bore with defiance
The unfeeling mendacity madame displayed,
While a righteous judge shut the foul mouth of the Lyons,
But took from the prophet the profits he'd made.

Go, traitress, and gloat o'er your thousands recovered,
Go hoard them in attics, your lioness den;
The prophet, if he'd been a more earnest lover, 'd
Have had for his profits the lion's share then.

And spirit hands come now, and write on museums,
On pulpit, and lecture room, churches and state,
Mene, mene, and tekeli upharain, ye see 'em
With fiery style score the burnt ash of the great.

Their meaning, Begone ye mean farces, avaunt ye,
Go tickle men's fancies with follies no more;
Ye are weighed in just balances, aye, and found wanting,
Your dominion is over, like Belty's of yore,

For your monarch and sage shall eat dirt like sick oxen,
Your magi and bishops consume in their fire,
Whilst fellows in fustian, oi polloi, with smooches on,
Walk free in the furnace and don't e'en perspire.

God hath numbered your kingdom, ye humbugs, what mean ye,
Who Babylon's throne hold, spite medium's lance?
God hath severed your sceptre, ye hypocrites—mene—
Leave our Babydom free to the medium's advance.

DON FULANO.

REPUTATION.

"Thou shalt not be found out."—Eleventh Commandment.

The lady is stern to-day, As her two cold eyes are cast On the mute girl at her side. "Once tell me they have lied, And, because of their faithful past, I shall trust no word they say." "But if the scandal be true, Why then—" and she pauses now, To read upon brow and cheek What the girl can only speak With crimson cheek and brow, And with great tears two by two. The lady's voice is now more low. "Poor girl! I am grieved—and yet, Since you own your shame as a fact, There is merely one way to act. However I may regret, I am forced to bid you go."	While the small clock strikes three From the mantle, velvet-hung, With its dulcet treble tone, The lady muses, alone: "Poor girl! so pretty and young! 'Twas hard—but it had to be!" "Three o'clock!" with a start she cries; "How have I come to forget? Nay, this sad matter, I know, Has flustered, confused me so! Well, well; 'tis not too late yet!" And for bonnet and shawl she flies. She has two hours still, no doubt, Till the shepherd reseeks his fold— (Her husband, apt to arrive Not often less late than five). So she speeds to her lover, bold-souled Meets him, and—is not found out!
---	---

The following known as "Mother Shipton's Prophecy," was first published in 1488, and republished in 1641. It will be noticed that all the events predicted in it, except that mentioned in the last two lines, have already come to pass:

Carriages without horses shall go, And accidents fill the world with woe. Around the world thoughts shall fly In the twinkling of an eye. Water shall more wonders do; Now strange, yet shall be true. The world upside down shall be, And gold be found at root of tree. Through hills men shall ride, And no horse or ass be at his side. Under water men shall walk,	Shall ride, shall sleep, shall talk. In the air men shall be seen, In white, in black, in green. Iron in the water shall float As easy as a wooden boat. Gold shall be found—and found In a land that's not now known. Fire and water shall wonders do; England shall admit a Jew. The world to an end shall come In eighteen hundred and eighty-one.
--	--

For a stylish and well finished Photograph go to Kluit's New Photographic Establishment, No. 28 Third street. All work warranted superior to any in the city.

Those suffering from that most annoying of the minor miseries of human life—a cold in the head—or from catarrh in any form, should try Dr. Evory's Diamond Catarrh Remedy. Just try it—that's all. Sold at this office, and by all druggists.

For the very best Photographs go to Bradley & Bulofson's Gallery, with an elevator, 429 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Drs. Rutley & Streeter's "Prince of Blood Purifiers" eradicates all corrupt humors from the blood, however they may have been caused, rejuvenates the exhausted forces, and restores, unfailingly, the vigor of those debilitated by all excesses. Try it. Head office, 745 Mission Street, San Francisco.

COMMON SENSE.

A Journal of Live Ideas.

VOL. 1.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, JULY 18, 1874.

No. 10.

Signs of the Times.

The Supreme Court of Massachusetts has decided that an adopted child is heir to its foster parents' estate.

One hundred and sixty thousand Mahomedans have visited Mecca this year already, pilgrims to the shrine of the prophet.

Worth, the Paris milliner, invented a walking costume for women, but none of them would wear it. It consisted of trousers and tunic. The Persian costume, Worth says, is the perfection of grace and beauty.

Theodore Tilton, in his letter to Dr. Bacon, says; "I have never yet seen my way clear to be a Spiritualist at all—certainly not to be so much a Spiritualist as some of the members of Plymouth Church are known to be."

Elder Jacob Knapp appointed George Tullock, an old subscriber to the Boston Investigator, and Duncan Ferguson, a Free Religionist, his executors; whereupon the Investigator says, "as the Elder neared the 'dark valley' he got a little common sense, even if he didn't see Heaven.

Mr. Bergh says that mad dogs do not kill by their bite as many New Yorkers in a century as strong drink does in a month. Yet, because a man died last week of hydrophobia, war to the death is declared on the poor dogs.

The Golden Age has been enlarged. It is now a sixteen page sheet, filled with good matter well arranged. Theodore Tilton, "in pursuance of a long cherished plan," has withdrawn from it, and William T. Clarke, former associate editor, has become editor and sole proprietor. Mr. Tilton will write for the paper over his own signature.

There is no question in the whole circle of science more firmly established than the fact that man was created in and arose from a state of barbarism. All Chinese, Hindoo, Greek and Roman philosophers can be quoted to this effect, and nowhere is there any evidence of his fall, but everywhere proof of his gradual progress up to his present elevation.

After the first of January next publishers of newspapers must pay postage in advance, the rate being two cents per pound on dailies and three cents on weeklies. The law will tend to increase the circulation of papers, as it will lessen the cost to subscribers, and publishers can afford to pay the postage in view of the consequent increase to their business. It is a just and sensible law, but one bad effect will be to cause skintint publishers to use something as near to tissue paper as possible. Look at the Call about those days, and you will see light through it, something no live man has ever been able to see yet.

Rev. C. G. Ames has a new lyceum lecture on "The Modern Situation."

There are ninety-five lady students in attendance at the Michigan State University.

A Troy firm shipped three tons of paper collars to New Zealand recently.

The peach crop of Delaware is a failure this year, and many fruit growers contemplate wheat raising hereafter.

Paper flour barrels are made in Iowa, and are so much better than wooden ones that it is predicted no other kind will be used five years hence.

De Witt Talmadge calls his new volume of sermons "Old Wells Dug Out." The Golden Age suggests that out of these old wells Talmadge pumps much less water than wind.

The case of the city of Sacramento against William Denton was tried last week, and Mr. Denton was found guilty of lecturing without a license, and his bail was declared forfeited. Mr. Denton is now in the southern part of the State.

Since the great comet of 1858 spectrum analysis has become so well understood that it is probable the comet now visible will be investigated in such manner as to determine its organization and constituent elements with some degree of certainty.

The veteran editor of the Banner of Light, in view of the fact that Scientific men are now investigating Spiritualism, says: "We are moved to predict that before another year is rolled in the ever-winding scroll of Time, Spiritualism will become in effect the popular religion of the day."

Prof. A. R. Wallace gives a digest of facts which have occurred during the last twenty-five years to prove Spiritualism, and says: "It embraces a mass of information by credible witnesses, which, if it were produced as evidence of the truth of some more popular and orthodox proposition, would be accepted by mankind as perfectly overwhelming."

Two "honest miners" were at work digging for the precious metal of golden California, when a sort of traveling preacher accosted them, and began a discourse about hell fire, strongly intimating that without an acceptance of his religion it was certain to be the home of the poor miners. After listening for some time, the one said to the other, "Jack, what will thee do when thee gets to that hot place?" Jack, after thinking a moment, replied, "Why, we'll form a joint stock company, run in a sluice-head of water, build a chimney to carry off the smoke, and make the place comfortable."

INTERVIEWING A DEAF MUTE.—No. 3.

BY PROF. W. H. CHANEY.

EVOLUTION OF LIFE.

In the last paper of this series the readers will remember that I quoted a line from "Pope's Essay on Man." This seemed to greatly interest my deaf and dumb friend, who resumed the discussion as follows:

D.—"All matter quick and bursting into birth." It is a most pregnant thought, although first suggested upon a theme entirely different from ours. My proposition was to restore animal life to the entire earth from six men and six women. I would prefer a greater number, but these will do, on the hypothesis that the casualties of life are not to be considered, and that I may presume them to live their three score years and ten, or longer, then go to some other world, progressing onward and upward until absorbed into their and my God.

[Here is an idea that escaped my mind at the time, to which I invite the attention of the reader, namely, he has let fall a thought held sacred by the Brahmins of India more than six thousand years ago. Among the laws of Manou was one requiring that if a man died without issue his brother or some relative should marry the widow and the first son born should be for the dead man, to perform expiatory sacrifices at his tomb, without which his soul could not be absorbed into the Great Soul. In compiling the Bible the compilers attempted to transfer this law from the Sanscrit to the Hebrew, but made a very bungling job of it. See Deut. xxv. 5—10. You will observe that the Bible omits the reason for this law, and without the reason it is a most absurd and ridiculous command. But here is a question that I want my friend Delevan to answer, namely, has he ever read the Vedas of India? If not, where did he get the idea of being absorbed, etc.? He will see this paper, and I want him to send his answer by mail. Also, I want his views on the subject of re-incarnation, if he will favor me, when I will add my comments and furnish for publication. But to resume.]

D.—It is to be presumed that this six pairs are in all things human, including an indulgence of passion, after the manner of humans to-day. Now I begin my reversal of Darwin, (in whom I do not believe.) The women resort to water ablutions by way of purification. The water is afterwards thrown out, perchance into a lake or stream in the tropics. It is not impossible that an impregnated ova may thus be thrown out. Now heat and moisture are the great producers and sustainers of life. We will suppose that the temperature is just right for sustaining embryo life until the ova bursts. It would not be a child, yet it might have animal life and possess the power of reproduction. [!] Thus might be commenced a renewal of life in the water. On the land the commencement might be similar. Birds might develop from the reptile, as in the past, and thus every form of life, now on our planet, be again produced.

[My theoretical friend suggested other theories for the reproduction of animal life from human, but as he gained nothing in plausibility thereby, and as portions of it might be deemed objectionable for publication, in consequence of the fastidiousness of public taste, which assumes to dictate the language of science and philosophy, I must omit them.

He assumes that the human stomach worm is capable of life and reproduction outside the stomach, and following up Darwin's theory of selection, he continues:]

D.—I produce my vertebrata from the water, my insect, reptile and ovathogny, (to coin a word,) from the manure pile, which is just as rational, in its Evolutionary sense, as Darwin's theory. It is hard for me to admit that life is spontaneous. I may say so from the force of early education, but I cannot accept it. Of course there is great ambiguity about the definition of words. We say God, reason, instinct, life, etc., yet these words convey a poor idea of what we really mean. I say this from experience, for I am often misunderstood, because the meaning of a word can be construed in so many different ways.

I have not been elaborate; only briefly sketched my starting point, from which you may trace up to its termini easier than you can go down with Darwin, for he starts from nothing, whereas I start from something. I have a germ of life which neither the warm water nor manure will allow to perish. Darwin has no germ, but is dependent upon the forces of Nature to produce it; that is, to make something from nothing, while I have a "something" to which I apply Evolution.

C.—Although of no practical value, still I am much interested in your theory, and will proceed to give my own views. I admit nearly all your facts, but cannot agree with your deductions because you assume one fact that has never been proved, and in my opinion, never can be proved; namely, that an impregnated human ovum can preserve embryo life out side of the womb. You may retort that this is true of the egg of a fowl; furthermore, that so much alike are the embryo of fish, batrachian, reptile, bird or mammal, including man himself, at an early stage of development, that even the great Agassiz could not distinguish the one from the other. Then, since they are so much alike, and since the ovum of a fowl may be matured [hatched] by artificial heat, that is, not the animal heat of the mother, therefore it follows irresistibly that the impregnated human ovum might mature, [be born] independent of the mother, if properly protected and supplied with heat.

Here is your case, the strongest that it can be made by argument. Let us examine it.

The embryo must be furnished with nutriment; else, like the man upon a desert island, though well supplied with heat and moisture, it will starve to death. Now the egg of the fowl, reptile, fish, etc. is supplied with a yolk which contains a sufficient amount of nutriment to sustain embryo life; whereas the egg of the mammal does not contain a particle of nutriment, being entirely dependent upon a supply through the umbilical cord. Therefore the cases are not parallel. No; you might as well expect to hatch the spawn of a frog on a bare rock, exposed to the sun's rays.

D.—I am inclined to think differently, from what I have read and seen. You are safe in your assertions, but then I come at you on monstrosities and such things, showing that like does not always produce its like. Then we get to speculating on the causes; pronounce it a "phenomenon," and invent a theory on which to explain it, all the time blundering and staggering in the most profound ignorance. I have seen species of worms and insects declared to be new; they were classified, called "rare," and even today the scientists are debating about their origin. The hybrid may be produced, capable of reproduction; then cross two hybrids, and another variety appears, and so on ad infinitum, until every form of life could be made to reappear, if once destroyed.

C.—I grant your conclusion, but deny the modus operandi by which you arrived at it. Destroy all animal life; leave not a vestige, from the sponge to the genus homo, still the forces of Nature which produced at first, will be able to reproduce. In the opinion of geologists there have been several catastrophes in the past, during which all animal life was destroyed, over vast portions of the earth's crust, if not its entire surface. The Glacial Period, for instance, when the "forces" seemed to rest, preparatory for the mighty effort of producing man. You must bring some stronger arguments before I can accept your theory.

D.—I am capable of believing, from what I have seen and read, that the ova of a mammal, once impregnated, may be surrounded with such favorable conditions as to mature into some living thing, independent of the mother.

C.—My dear sir, belief has ever proved the deadly enemy of science. The Pope and his Cardinals were capable of believing that the sun performed a daily revolution about the earth, and imprisoned Galileo for asserting to the contrary. So I might tell you that I am capable of believing that under favorable circumstances, a man might live ten years without tasting nutriment of any kind, provided the heat, moisture, etc. were just right. But would you not retort, "Prove this by actual demonstration and I will accept it, but your belief affords no proof?"

D.—I admit your correction, but reply that the proof of my theory would be hard to establish, for this reason: Water, distilled from acids, to which no air was admitted save through red hot pipes, has been found, after a few days, or weeks, to swarm with life. Now, in view of this fact, it would be difficult to determine whether the animal life discovered was spontaneous, or the verification of my theory.

[Although the discussion was continued to much greater length, I doubt if its publication would add any new thought or prove profitable to the general reader. It will be seen that we were treading upon dangerous ground, and although I have polished and suppressed, still very nice people will be horrified if they read it. But the subject, the laws of generation, is one to which I have given much thought during the past quarter of a century, and although I decline to lecture or write upon it, still I am always ready, in private, to advise parents how they may have offspring superior to themselves. The reason that I will not come before the public on this subject is because there are so many quacks and ignoramuses who give private lectures and pretend to so much knowledge. Besides, nice people would be so shocked, and I must spare their feelings lest I should be accused of cruelty to animals.]

EXTRACT FROM A LETTER.

It is not the best policy for a newspaper man to be fighting the cause of the people, especially when the people have no money. If you look around, you will find it just as easy to be brave and virtuous in doing battle for the fellows who hold the purse, and it pays much better. As to the people, they are an ungrateful lot; they will applaud you and admire you, and when you die won't even furnish the wood for your cremation. I have no doubt that my advice and friendship is all wasted.

AUGUSTUS TOMLINSON.

To be always intending to lead a new life, but never to find time to set about it, is as if a man should put off eating from one day to another, till he is starved.

THE MODERN PREACHER.

THE NEWSPAPER PULPIT—NO PASSING ROUND THE BEGGING BOX.

BY A. GAYLORD SPALDING.

It is real handy, isn't it, to put your sermons in printer's ink, and stand in the Newspaper Pulpit? Figuratively, let it be of rosewood, carved and gilded, fringed and tasseled—for the workingmen—the women—the common people. In the past it has been different; but come to think of it, it must prove a very great economy, and why not try it? The audience is wide-spread and immense, and not confined to Sunday. This style of preaching takes five hundred per cent. less money, and besides, it will go a thousand times as far. Strange that the ministers do not adopt this much superior method. (By the way, I must secure a copyright of my novel idea.) It would save the fearful cost of such totally dead and unproductive property as meeting-houses, and so many sociables, and strawberry and oyster and ice cream festivals, to support them, and the high salaries, and the constant annoyance and burden of passing round the everlasting begging box, so terribly eating on the little starved pocketbooks of working people. The pith and substance of all important essays and discourses should go in the free and heroic newspaper, making it the cheap organ of civilization and salvation; which may be ordained with the significant title of the Modern Preacher; and all newspapers may open a lively competition in the preaching business.

The old fashioned popular text-preaching is cumbrous, mythical, mystical, stale, and rusty with antiquity, and is only dealt out to little knots and narrow sects of people. Of puritanical and podauger type, it goes back to the bloody days of Charles II. of England, when human heads were stuck upon high poles over all that country—just on account of religion. Pshaw, what a pity! It reminds, too, of old crusade wars, and of old Salem witch hanging—all for church interests. Indeed, religion would seem to be a mighty curious institution. But, some how or other, "things ain't now as they used to was been," and the happy and marvelous change is owing mainly to the printing press and the newspaper.

I therefore hereby nominate and ordain COMMON SENSE a Modern Preacher of Spiritualism, with all the practical good for humanity involved in that beautiful philosophy. Won't it be queer—a minister in the mail bag! And every day all the postmasters will be "letting the cat out of the bag." But the ever industrious and patient preacher never stops, but travels on his weary winding way, rejoicing and happy, and takes by roads and cross roads, straight roads and crooked roads, level roads and hilly roads, sandy roads and muddy roads, rocky roads and stumpy roads, snowy roads and drift roads, jumping and bumping and thumping through all the woods and round.

From my present point of lone, serene and meditative repose, my anxious heart journeys out on the telegraphic wires of Thought, through the ranches and gulches and diggings of the far removed Golden State, peeping into humble and joyous homes of many hard toilers on the soil, in the shops and in the mines. They take the independent and progressive newspaper. What angel women are found in farmers' and workingmen's homes, for womanly worth and character! They give a charm and attraction to all the country, and when the millenium comes, its sweetest bliss and highest perfection will be more than half due to women.

This modern preaching is a vast improvement on the old. Its mission is to hardy, honest workingmen and women, and its doctrine a common brotherhood, sisterhood, and equal rights, with unity and co-operation. No doleful warning about death. That old, foolish idea is drying up. Let it dry. Such a notion belongs to childish ignorance. Salvation consists in living, not dying. Eternity is not beyond, but now. To-morrow is always twenty-four hours ahead, and we never find it till it gets here, and then it will be now. We never go to that, but that will surely come to us, though we stand still as a mouse. Let no revival minister, then, ever make a dreadful bugaboo of a far-off Eternity, to scare the children into church converts. It is no awful gulf to launch sinners into. Never fear. Present duty is all we can ever do, and that is to be honest, kind, brotherly, sisterly, and paddle your own canoe. That is religion, and a slight sprinkling is wanted in politics.

These are most wonderful times. The scene is panoramic; and as it moves along, now fast, then slow, kaleidoscopic beauties delight the eye. Reform, Politics, Science, Railroads, Monopoly, Extortion, Workingmen, Women, Grasshoppers and Potato-Bugs are on exhibition. Things are condensed and focalized. Streaks of light appear in the northern horizon. Rainbow splendors stripe the dark and boding clouds, and enchant the prophetic beholder. What intellect, skill, breadth and power distinguish the mighty manipulator! Who is he? Don't you know him? He is the profound, pungent and eloquent Modern Preacher, who casts all old style, old foggy expounders entirely in the shade. He speaks to everybody once a week, every day, and all the time. Listen, O ye people!

Now we return home. The people's hands are full this year—the women's and the men's—(except the thousands of unlucky ones just now thrown out of employment.) Woman suffrage shines on the high mountain's crest, in the distance, and the beautiful Land of Promise lies in the rich valley beyond. Cheer up, brothers; cheer, O sisters! The good time is close upon us.

The ballot! the ballot! we hold in our hand,
 'Tis freedom—God-given to all;
 And women should claim it in every land,
 To raise them from want and from thrall.

Champlin, Minn., July, 1874.

To deny women the elective franchise because they cannot bear arms would not be one whit more unreasonable than to deny men the ballot because they cannot bear children.—Grand Rapids Evening Post.

THE SOCIAL SIN.

BY E. STEVENSON, M. D.

ED. COMMON SENSE: I don't approve of Mrs. Woodhull's manner of putting things—too much declamation, too little method. But I am down on some of her critics also, who put a base construction on her teachings. I think I know what she means, and believe she does mean what I think she ought to mean. I have not understood her to inveigh against marriage; only against false notions of marriage. These false notions are that marriage consists in promises, and in legal enactments making those promises binding. I affirm that marriage does not consist in promises. Woman has very acute intuitive perceptions in this matter. Millions of them realize most painfully that they are only tied artificially. Their continued monogamic association with men under these circumstances is productive of dire consequences to themselves and their offspring. The main incentive to marriage is money, which means bread, butter and home, respectability, dress and idleness. To remove, therefore, or materially lessen woman's dependence pecuniarily is most desirable; for, if thus placed, what is called true marriage (and there is no other kind) will assuredly be more common, and the coming generation will be born once, well. It will get its primary inspiration from Love, and not from discord and disgust. To have woman comparatively independent it is only necessary for public opinion to make any industrial pursuit respectable for her, and equally profitable, and idleness not respectable. Woman's present position in this country is a degraded one, notwithstanding the homes so dearly purchased—just how dearly the victim only knows.

Bachelor's Hall, Virginia City, June 25th.

LOCAL OPTION.

DISCUSSION AT DASHAWAY HALL—NICE PEOPLE SHOCKED.

The consideration of Local Option was resumed by the Society for Self-Culture on Sunday last.

Mr. Farrell proved that man is a creature of circumstances, and that our opinions are made for us and not by us. Referring to the Alameda outrage, he said we should do all in our power to support Sally Hart, for she is the queen of hearts.

Dr. O'Donnell gave his usual recitation, commencing at the Pilgrim Fathers, continuing with the Star Spangled Banner, and was approaching the American Eagle when the gavel fell.

Judge Healep showed the impossibility of discussing this question except on the broad base of constitutional liberty, and said no one can understand liberty while his mind is in a groove. The party politician and the sectarian ranter are both disqualified for the discussion of liberty.

Mr. Knight urged that each one has a right to control his appetite in drink and dress. He thought people might be prevented from dressing to death or eating themselves into an early grave. We must go beyond legislative enactments, and appeal to the judgment of the people.

At this stage of the proceedings Mr. Healy went on the platform, and after a few generalities proceeded to correct a remark that was made regarding the cause of lunacy. He stated that it is a mistake to say that Stockton and the other insane asylums are filled with the victims of "rum," and asserted that insanity is more often the result of sexual abuse than from any other cause. At this juncture the President called the gentleman to order, and several ladies and their escorts left the room. Mr. Healy was declared out of order, and was obliged to resume his seat.

Dr. Merrick thought all speakers spoke wide of the mark. He thought the conduct of the speaker that preceded him showed the necessity of restraint in the exercise of our natural rights. He thought if the Lyceum would tolerate such licentiousness it ought to perish.

Mr. Kline indorsed the Doctor's last remark, and took occasion to reiterate that he was a Christian of the deepest dye, and thought Christianity the only road to temperance in everything.

Towards the close of the meeting a motion of confidence in the President was passed, notwithstanding the remonstrance of a Mr. Johnson, who considered the President ought to resign, inasmuch as her conduct towards a speaker on this very occasion showed her inability to preside at such meetings.

Next Sunday the Rev. Dr. Bailey is expected to enlighten us on the religion of Jesus Christ as a means of salvation for this world and that to come.

AN APOLOGY.

"The diseases of Society can, no more than corporeal maladies, be prevented or cured without being spoken about in plain language.—[John Stuart Mill.]"

EDITOR COMMON SENSE—Sir: Through your paper I wish to apologise to the "Self-Culture" audience of the 12th inst. In the course of the Local Option debate on that day it was incidentally remarked that alcohol is the great cause of insanity. On reaching the platform I took the opportunity to contradict that statement, and asserted that insane asylums are filled with the victims of sexual abuse. No sooner had I uttered the remark than the President called me to order, with much seeming indignation. At the same time about a dozen of the audience left the Hall, and after a few words more your correspondent was choked off. Now I wish to apologise to that portion of the audience who saw fit to leave the Hall. I certainly would have used different language, had I known they were "tender" on the subject. If they or their friends were ever in Stockton through sexual abuse I never knew it, nor would I have suspected it had they remained quiet. That my assertion was not without foundation in fact, I refer to "Acton on the Reproductive Organs," and other authorities.

San Francisco, July 15, 1874.

PAT. J. HEALY.

ADDENDUM.

MR. EDITOR: Since my note of yesterday I have discovered that the persons who were offended at my allusion to sexual abuse never were in Stockton, and were merely laboring under a severe attack of "Respectability Americanus."

San Francisco, July 16, '74.

PAT. J. HEALY.

HUM-BUG.

DEAR COMMON SENSE: I have of late been devoting considerable attention to entomology, running over the country with all the zeal of a naturalist in pursuit of an object. I am happy to say that I have discovered several new and surprising varieties of a common species. I don't know the Latin name, but common people know the species by the name of Hum-bug. It is voracious, predatory and rather solitary in its habits; and the varieties I have lately discovered seem to be rather aggressive, disposed to fight each other. The church hum-bug is one of the prettiest; generally shining in the light of a beautiful black, relieved with white; fat, and for the most part apparently harmless. I have reserved one for dissection. I suspect he has a formidable sting, and is venomous; but that is at present concealed. The political hum-bug is thinner, from much shouting from balconies and wire-pulling. He generally appears at night. But the bug to which I have devoted the most attention is the spiritual hum-bug, an entirely new variety and very extraordinary indeed! I discovered him in the twilight, and was positively frightened at him. He can appear both ways; is Protean in his characteristics. For instance, I have seen him when he looked as beautiful as a nautilus, and the next instant he appeared as ugly as a devil-fish. I have determined to make a specialty of him, and have written to one of the Harvard professors to manufacture a name for him regardless of expense, only as long and fine as possible. In the meantime I am getting rather tired. Bug hunting is hard on a person. If there was not an atmosphere above the bug atmosphere, where poor mortals could draw a diviner draught of more ethereal air, we should perish, such inroad is this species of bug making on the green leaves of our life. There are also the social variety of the same bug, both male and female. I have watched the male of this description creeping under a young, tender blossom, and turning its fresh, green life to blight and despair. The female does the same thing; but, what is remarkable, she does not often do it before she has come in contact with the male. But time presses. I hear them all round me winding their little horns, and that reminds me that I too must wind up.

E. HUGHES.

REFORM DEMANDED.—I believe every creed and every system has been just what it was intended to be, and has done just the work it was intended to do; but I also believe—and this in no way interferes with my perfect charity towards men of all shades of opinion—that creeds and systems were never intended to stand still; that we are in a constant state of progression, and that when a system has run its course, has done its work, and has proved itself to be played out, it is better that we should see if we cannot either amend it, or abandon it gradually. The Christian religion has had a great work to do in the civilization of the world, and it has done it nobly; it has been reformed from age to age; it has been altered; its dress has been cut anew in conformity with the needs of successive ages, and succeeding countries. Does it not need some little reformation now?—Don Fulano.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

COMMON SENSE is furnished to subscribers for Three Dollars per annum, in advance. Letters intended for the Business Department should be addressed:

A. T. CLARK, BUSINESS MANAGER, 236 Montgomery st.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

Interview with a Deaf Mute (No. 3)—Prof. Chaney.....	112
The Modern Preacher—A. G. Spalding.....	113
The Social Sin—Dr. Stevenson.....	114
Local Option—Dashaway Hall Discussion.....	114
An Apology—Pat. J. Healy.....	115
Humbug—Mrs. Hughes.....	115
Funeral of a Spiritualist—Remarks of Mrs. Parker.....	116
Trials of a Reform Paper.—Toledo Sun.....	116
Common Sense Stock.....	116
Causes of Insanity.....	119
Asleep in Jesus.....	117
Mediums' Seance.....	118
Wonderful Spiritual Experience—Farewell of Katie King.....	120

COMMON SENSE.

WILLIAM N. SLOCUM, EDITOR.

AMANDA M. SLOCUM, ASSISTANT.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, JULY 18, 1874.

COMMON SENSE is on sale every week at Patten's, 773 Market; Cooper's, 750 Market; Choyinski's, 146 Second; Snow's, 319 Kearny; and Sharp's, 238 Montgomery.

Among the articles crowded out of this week's paper is an abstract from the excellent discourse of Geo. W. Lewis on "The Oakland Manifestations and the Report of the Le Conte Committee."

Prof. Chaney will this evening, July 18th, at Charter Oak Hall, give a lecture on Freemasonry, in which he will explain the origin of the symbols of the Order. His lectures just given have been exceedingly interesting.

FRIENDS of Beecher have induced Mrs. Tilton to testify contrary to her husband's statements, and F. D. Moulton, who knows all about the affair, declines to give details, but simply says Beecher should acknowledge that he wrote the letter, a portion of which Tilton has published.

THE Chicago fire, when first started, could have been extinguished by the little Babcock Fire Extinguisher for sale at this office, and even after it had fairly broken out, it could not have spread by falling cinders if Chicago had adopted Fiske's patent roof. See advertisement on first page.

THE fifth anniversary of the first Woman Suffrage organization on this coast will be celebrated at Dashaway Hall on the 27th of July, by the Incorporated State Woman Suffrage Society. Good Speakers have been engaged, and a pleasant time is anticipated. Mrs. A. J. Boyer of Oakland will read an original poem.

Reports of two notable sermons, and comments thereon, are unavoidably crowded out until next week. One is the opening discourse of the Rev. Dr. Allen, the new pastor of Howard Presbyterian Church; the other a sermon by Dr. Stone on "God and Nature." There was a close likeness in sentiment, though marked contrast of style, in the two discourses. One was plain, blunt, somewhat uncouth, though earnest and probably sincere; the other was poetical, polished, scholarly and every way pleasing, except that it was in many respects untrue, a fact which the intelligent Dr. Stone must be as well aware of as were his sensible hearers. It will receive due attention.

COMMON SENSE STOCK.

The friends of Free Thought will be glad to hear that the stock of the COMMON SENSE Publishing Company is selling readily, over five hundred shares having been subscribed for since our last issue. It is sold at one dollar per share; but as the amount offered at that price is limited to three thousand shares, over nineteen hundred of which have already been taken, it will be well for those who wish to invest in a good paying enterprise, and at the same time aid a worthy cause, to come forward at once and take shares. Do not wait to be called upon and urged to do what—both for your own interest and the interest of the cause—you should do without urging. The legitimate business of the paper is already greater than the expense of publishing it, and the subscriptions and advertising are constantly on the increase. There is a fair prospect that we shall obtain two thousand subscribers before the year closes, and we would like to have all who can afford to do so take at least five shares of the stock. The recent subscriptions range from one to one hundred dollars each. While we are glad to receive large subscriptions from those who have money to invest, it would be even more gratifying to receive small subscriptions from a large number, as the more stockholders there are the greater will be the number of active workers for the paper, and the more speedy its success. We desire as soon as practicable to establish a Job Printing Office and a Liberal Book Store in connection with the paper. Orders for stock may be sent by express.

CAUSES OF INSANITY.—After a two hours' search in the Mercantile Library for statistics to show the leading causes of insanity, we have come to the conclusion that there is much less reliable information on the subject than the public should have in order to guard as much as possible against so dire an affliction. Ill health is frequently given as one of the principal causes, but nothing is said to show the cause of the ill health, which may in many instances result from practices against which people need to be warned. Among the physical causes of insanity intemperance takes the lead in most countries; then follows epilepsy, diseases of the nervous system, onanism or masturbation, venereal excesses, etc. As epilepsy and diseases of the nervous system are very frequently caused by the causes last named, it is difficult to properly classify the various causes. The reports, for years past, of Dr. Shurtleff, Superintendent of the Stockton Asylum, places masturbation at the head of the list of assigned causes; but the Doctor thinks "Committing Boards" are not sufficiently careful with regard to this particular cause, as some patients so designated are found free from the practice. Dr. E. T. Wilkins, the Commissioner selected by Gov. Haight to visit asylums in the United States and Europe, gives intemperance as the leading physical cause; then ill health, spermatorrea, etc. Among the moral causes religious excitement is prominent.

MR. BEECHER has selected six of his warmest personal friends and members of his church to investigate the charges against him. If he is convicted it will be a wonder, considering the make-up of the jury.

ASLEEP IN JESUS.

If there is any gospel extant that will save a man we are determined to find it. "This is the patent age of new inventions for killing bodies and saving souls." Surely no man need be lost if he will only open his ears. There are so many paths to heaven nowadays that the only trouble is to select the right one. Every church is a ticket office, and all insure against accident and delay, and promise to land you in Paradise, if you only pay the fee. The only trouble is in selecting the really genuine train, and getting a through ticket. The clerk at each office assures you that the other line, although perhaps very well meaning people, are not really reliable. They are either going on the down grade to the other place, or the track is unsafe, the train will switch off, or the engine blow everything to pieces. You have to be careful where you buy your ticket; and resolved to be so, and not to invest till we are sure of the right office, we are on a tour of inspection, to hear the different claims advocated. Last Sunday night we found a comfortable seat, fine music and good society where the venerable and reverend Dr. Scott points the way to the haven of eternal rest. But we are inclined to think his train is too slow. If heaven were on the next block, at the good old Doctor's rate of progress he would not reach it in a thousand years. Why, he has learned nothing since he was a school boy. He ignores all our modern acquirements, in rhetoric, science and common sense. Eusebius, or Origen, men who lived fifteen centuries ago, could have treated his subject with just the same force and effect as did Dr. Scott on this occasion. Had a mummy crawled out of one of the pyramids of Egypt and delivered that sermon we should have expected the same ideas, the same grade of knowledge and reason. Had the Doctor's discourse been intended to interest young oysters how to lay flat on their sides, trusting in Jesus, till the next tidal wave rolled them into heaven, it could not have been less adapted to the wants of that really respectable, intelligent and enterprising congregation. No wonder the church is not filled. The Doctor is making it a monument of the dead past, without a glimmer of light, instead of a beacon tower of modern thought and illumination. He said he believed in the resurrection of the body. Is there another man in San Francisco that does, after the recent revelations of chemical and physiological science? Can such a thing be possible? What body? At what age? In what form? Tons of crude matter have made a part of Dr. Scott, who has probably lived the allotted three score and ten years. In the resurrection, will he have the body of his youth, his prime, or his declining life? And of all the material that at times has made up the Doctor, which will be selected, and which rejected? And should it be found that not two ounces that ever belonged to him can be found that is not claimed by somebody else, how shall his resurrected body be made up? But the subject is too preposterous even for a comment. He told those wide-awake old men and women, and the middle aged, and the children, who have studied geography and astronomy, and know something of the boundless universe, and of the Great Spirit of God that pervades all, that he believed in Jesus Christ, the Son of God, "conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary," etc., etc. Can it be possible? It is not singular that two thousand years ago men who believed in the personal God of the bible, with form, etc., like a man, should think that he might seek a woman and beget a son. They thought this earth was nearly all creation, and man made in the image of God, and went to God. But how can a sane man in the nineteenth century, who knows that the earth is only as a grain of dust among innumerable suns and systems, and man a local and ephemeral offspring of the earth, believe in such an amalgamation? It must be buried with the dead past. We know better. That congregation knows better. Dr. Scott knows better. It is read only as a form, and would be more honored in the omission than the reading. Then he told the good people that faith and baptism in Jesus constitute all necessary to salvation; that Christ can and will forgive sins; that though the soul may be black with fraud, and perjury, and oppression, and red with murder, yet faith and baptism will wash it as white as snow. Now the Doctor ought to know, unless he lives in a tomb, and hears and sees nothing of what transpires around him, that science and common sense are fast making it apparent to mankind that sins are never forgiven, neither in this world, nor in the world to come. If there is one thing that modern science has demonstrated, it is this, that God operates by uniform and immutable law. In the physical world there is no pardon. "Every nice offence must bear its comment." Repentance and reformation, if they come in time, may abate and mitigate the extremity of the penalty, but nothing can efface the effects of physical error. And it is fair to presume that in the moral world it is the same. Indeed, every fact that we know points to this truth. And it is as absurd to suppose that a guilty soul can throw off in a moment all the effects of sin as that a man of seventy, whose body has been disfigured by broils and drunkenness and disease, can by merely repenting stand at once a picture of venerable beauty. Nor is it in the interest of true morality to teach men and women this theory of sudden whitewashing on a death-bed repentance. It is well calculated to engender recklessness and the sowing of wild oats, as it is called, in early youth. Oh, I will repent, say they, and be all right. Let us rather teach our children that every departure from the laws of God not only invites to further straying, but leaves a stain upon the soul that may cling to it forever and render it entirely unfit for communion with God and the purer angels. The Doctor says, "Lighten our darkness, oh Lord!" And we say, Lighten Dr. Scott, and his church, and all our churches! Let them teach the approved wisdom of the age in which they live, and not hold back the car of progress, and the advent of millennial light by sleeping in Jesus, instead of waking to the true knowledge of God.

MEDIUMS' SEANCE.

The degree of public interest evinced in the spiritual manifestations at the Mediums' Seances on Sunday afternoons is a subject of constant remark. Charter Oak Hall on Sunday last was crowded, and the tests given were in every case acknowledged by persons in the audience. Mrs. Staley, Mrs. Wiggins and Mrs. Cummings gave the principal tests during the fore part of the seance. They were listened to with intense interest. Mrs. Fannie Allyn then answered a question, propounded by some one in the audience, What constitutes mediumship? She said it depended upon the organization. All persons are more or less mediumistic. It is the duty of all to become better acquainted with themselves, and to ascertain their own powers. Some are naturally impressional, and do not know it; some are clairvoyants, some psychometric, and some have healing power, of which they are ignorant. The time will come, she said, when not only hired ministers but hired mediums will be done away with, and every family and circle of friends will have its own means of communication. Spiritualism, she said, is a living principle—something more than to talk about on Sundays. It is practical good work—it means charity, good will, forbearance, justice, mercy and truth. It also means self-denial, self-control and self-culture. The more healthy you make your bodies and the more pure your minds the better fitted you are to receive help from the angel world, and the better man or woman you may become. Develop the powers within yourself, and you will not need any priest, nor any medium either, to come between you and the angel world.

The seance closed with the "ballot test" by Mrs. Föye, which proved unusually interesting. O. P. Sutton consented to act as a committee of one to open the papers. Every name given was found correct, and every question was correctly answered. Most of the persons who recognized the spirits stated that they had no acquaintance with Mrs. Föye. Some of the names sent to the stand were written by persons not then in the audience, and had been sent in by others. Mrs. Föye stated that this proved that mind reading had nothing to do with the manifestations; she said that in fact she is not a clairvoyant, and has no power as a psychometrist. She does not know the names on the papers, not even when she is writing them, as the writing is from left to right and upside down, a mode of writing she is incapable herself of even imitating. She also writes in any language, although she knows the English only. During a single evening she has written communications in seven or eight languages. A seance of a similar character will be given again to-morrow afternoon.

CONFERENCE AT CHARTER OAK HALL.—The conference last Sunday morning was very interesting, and all seemed convinced that an hour or two may be well spent in listening to the varied ideas of others on any given subject, and like a young bird, trying your own wings now and then. Next Sunday forenoon, at 11 o'clock, the question is, "Have we sufficient evidence of the so-called spirit manifestations to convince a rational mind of their truth?" Both sides will be represented, and a pleasant and profitable occasion is anticipated.

MRS. FRANCES A. LOGAN.

EDITOR COMMON SENSE: Mrs. Logan made her first public appearance in this city at Central Hall last Sunday afternoon, when she gave an original poem on "Incidents in New York Life," etc. Mrs. Logan is a graceful, interesting speaker, and was listened to with marked attention. She has a sympathetic voice, and there is a sweet womanly dignity about her which is very taking. The New York incidents in Mrs. Logan's lecture were illustrative of different phases of the various great social wrongs; the grinding of the poor by the rich; sewing girls starving on miserable pittance, and when hunted and driven to pay, selling their bodies for bread to the very money kings who have defrauded them. She related an incident of an orphan beggar boy—only one of forty thousand homeless children in the streets of New York city—standing ragged and supperless on a night of fearful cold, and gazing with hollow, hungry eyes into a broker's window, where heaps of shining gold pieces mocked him, and piles of greenbacks stared at him in horrid irony! She spoke of our prisons and penitentiaries as a disgrace to this enlightened age, and of the injustice and cruelty of our whole penal system. Crime is a disease, and should be treated as such; if we sympathize with those who are physically diseased, how much more should we do so with those who are morally unsound. Criminals are made under pre-natal conditions, and until we come to a better understanding of this subject, and accord to every human being the right to be properly born, we can never have a better race of men and women. This part of Mrs. Logan's subject was listened to with close attention. Altogether she made a favorable impression, and will not fail to draw interested audiences wherever she may go. She has been traveling in the interior of the State for the last three months, and in that time has given, I understand, sixty lectures, and has been everywhere well received. She proposes to go from here down the coast, and will lecture at Santa Cruz, Los Angeles and other points. L.

IF THE SOUL is indeed immortal, and God will take to himself such as have pleased him in this world, "for their happiness and his glory," who will they be? The really good and pure and holy; no matter what may be their creed, or nation, or color. He can see through all disguises; he can select his own wherever they may be found. Nor can any form, or subterfuge, or false pretense, or technical evasion have any force with him. The idea that there is any way to his favor but the direct one of being good, that any form of faith, or baptism, or prayer, or intercession, will answer instead of real virtue, is derogatory to God and a fraud upon mankind.

THE TIDAL WAVE is the title of a small book about to be published by subscription. It is a temperance story, by Rev. J. Rawson Johnson, editor of the Banner of City Reform, 409 Washington street. Price 50 cents, payable on delivery.

FUNERAL OF A SPIRITUALIST.

REMARKS ON THE LIFE AND CHARACTER OF "HARMONY" POST.

Ellen Violetta, wife of Victor B. Post, died in this city July 3d, aged 62. Mrs. Post was born in London. She moved to New York in 1848, and lived there many years, and was well known as an excellent trance and seeing medium. She has since resided in many places in California. Her disease was cancer. At her request her remains were taken to the house of Col. Hatch, in Petaluma, where the funeral took place. The services consisted of the singing of "Nearer my God to thee," after which Mrs. C. M. Parker made the following remarks:

It was the wish of our friend that I should say a few words to you at this time. We have not assembled here for the purpose of laying our dear one in the tomb. The stone has been rolled away from the door of the sepulchre, and we meet to celebrate the birth of an angel in the spirit world. For four years it was my privilege to know her intimately. She was one of the best women I ever met. Her mission was to do good. She was a valuable friend. To her you could go at any time and tell her all your troubles, and she would listen patiently, and rebuke, warn or comfort as the occasion demanded. She was gifted with clear common sense, and with a keen perception of the right, and she never shrunk from speaking the truth, even though it might wound the self-love of her hearer and disturb his complacency; yet so kindly did she administer, that you felt that pure love prompted the rebuke. * * * Her patience and courage during her trying illness were unequalled. Her physician, who knew her less than two weeks, said to me, "She is a wonderful woman; I never saw a person bear suffering so well. [Mrs. Parker here related several instances of the remarkable patience and care for others evinced by the deceased.] I could talk to you for hours, telling of her kind deeds; and they were all done so unobtrusively. She never seemed to think she had done anything remarkable. She could not live without doing good, and to the sick her very presence brought healing, so genial was her magnetism. She had, too, large charity for the failings of others. Well was she named "Harmony;" for she always poured oil upon the troubled waters, and did her best to make peace. Her faith in the power of the spirit world was unlimited; and when events occurred that were not as she wished, she consoled herself with saying, "There must be a good purpose in it, though I cannot understand it." She was an excellent clairvoyant, seeing spirits clearly, and as a trance medium I have never found her superior. The communications given by her were seldom in reference to material things; they generally related to principles, and came with a power that clothed them with authority. Her little "Honeymoon," who has so often spoken words of hope to the despairing, has ere this greeted her medium on the other shore. * * *

She had no fear of death, but quietly disposed of her clothing and jewelry, and gave directions with regard to her burial as calmly as if she were settling a business matter. "Remember," she said to her companion, "you will never be alone; I shall always be with you," and with this thought she passed away, as one would take leave of home, with a promise to write often. * * * All day yesterday there was a peace and holiness in the house that forbade any noisy expression of grief or lament at her departure. With a keen sense of the ludicrous and a humorous way of viewing things, she united a dislike of cant and humbug. "Don't have any cant said over me at my funeral," was one of her last requests, and as I penned these lines at twilight yesterday I asked myself, "Will that please her?" with a feeling that she knew what I was writing.

We will miss our friend in our homes; her pleasant face, her kindly smile, and her wise counsel. But she will not be far away. She said, but a few hours before her spirit passed on, "I must have a good rest, and then I shall be very busy." With her strong will power and keen insight into causes, and her disposition to go about doing good, she cannot remain long away, but will come to us in times of trouble and help us to do and to bear.

Looking at her earth-life, the thought occurs that even if there were no future existence, if these remains of our friend were all that is left of her, still it would be worth doing our very best while we are here, to leave behind us the pleasant memories that she has bequeathed. But realizing, as we do, that this sphere is but the first of a series, in which we shall go on and on, we have a strong incentive to lead true lives. "Heaven seems nearer to me than earth," said a good man, "so many of my friends are gathered there;" and the spirit world will seem nearer to us, now that Harmony Post has entered it.

"There is rest for the weary" was then sung, after which the body was taken to the grave. At the request of the friends, Mr. R. A. Robinson there made a few remarks, endorsing what had been said by the first speaker, and giving testimony from his own experience of the good deeds performed by Mrs. Post. Mrs. Post was present during the services, being distinctly seen by several mediums.

TRIALS OF A REFORM PAPER.

The Toledo Sun, an anti-church paper, which has done much good work in the way of freeing the minds of readers of superstition and slavery to creeds, suspended publication a few weeks ago. It now comes out again, and thus greets its readers:

Where has the Sun been all this time? you ask, dear reader. We will answer: In the hands of the Sheriff. It has gone hard with us, and you have the benefit of what is left. The "wolf" has not only been at the door, but has been holding high carnival all over the office. In the meantime the good work has been going on. Down in the Church the "very devil has been to pay." Witness the eruptions all over the land, and the remarkable evidences of progress all through the press. The fight is a glorious one to witness. Read Swartwout's contest with Dr. Adams, and Prof. Swing's letter to his brethren in holiness at Chicago. The army of doubters is growing. Must we be permitted now, after so much has been accomplished, to relinquish our hold and abandon the glorious work? Shall fraud starve out all honesty? Shall we have Sun shine or darkness?

If the heart of a nation could be made wise and right, its institutions and laws could not long remain radically wrong.

A loving disposition, a kindly temper, a self-forgetful habit, an impulse to do justly—in short, a tendency to morality may be begotten in children.

WONDERFUL SPIRITUAL EXPERIENCE.

THE FAREWELL OF KATIE KING.—LETTER FROM WM. CROOKES, F.R.S.

Probably no spirit manifestation has ever been more clearly proved or more satisfactory to the numerous witnesses than has that of the spirit known as "Katie King," who appeared through the mediumship of Miss Florrie Cook of London. The manifestations were witnessed by a large number of educated persons, including a number of men of acknowledged scientific attainments. She remained with her medium three years, then took her farewell, saying she would never come again. The London Spiritualist gives the names of a large number of persons who were present at several of the seances preceding the last, and adds:

The farewell seance was held on Thursday, last week, and Katie had stated that she intended to give it only to the few tried friends now in London, who for a long time had been fighting her medium's battles with the public; and, notwithstanding many solicitations, she made but one exception, by inviting Mrs. Florence Marryat Ross-Church. The other spectators were Mr. William Crookes, Mrs. Corner, Mr. W. H. Harrison, Mr. G. R. Tapp, Mr. and Mrs. Cook and family, and the servant Mary. * * The spirit came out from the dark room in five minutes after the medium entered. She was dressed in pure white, with low neck and short sleeves. She had long hair of a light auburn or golden color, which hung in ringlets down her back and each side of her head, reaching nearly to her waist. She wore a long white veil, but this was only drawn over her face once or twice during the seance.

The medium was dressed in a high gown of light blue merino. During nearly the whole of the seance, while Katie was before us, the curtain was drawn back and all could clearly see the sleeping medium, who did not stir from her original position, but lay quite still, her face being covered with a red shawl to keep light from it. There was a good light during the entire seance.

Katie talked about her approaching departure, and accepted a bouquet which Mr. Tapp brought her, also some bunches of lilies from Mr. Crookes. Katie said that she should never be able to speak or show her face again; that she had had a weary and sad three years' life "working off her sins" in producing these physical manifestations, and that she was about to rise higher in spirit-life. At long intervals she might be able to communicate with her medium by writing, but at any time her medium might be enabled to see her clairvoyantly by being mesmerized.

All the sitters in the circle clustered closely round her. Katie asked Mr. Tapp to take the bouquet to pieces, and lay the flowers out before her on the floor; she then sat down, Eastern fashion, and asked all to draw round her, which was done, most of those present sitting on the floor at her feet. She then divided the flowers into bunches for each, tying them up with blue ribbon. She also wrote parting notes to some of her friends, signed "Annie Owen Morgan," which she stated was her real name when in earth-life. She wrote a note for her medium, and selected a fine rosebud for her as a parting gift. To each of her friends assembled to say good-by she gave a bouquet of flowers tied up with ribbon, a piece of her dress and veil, and a lock of her hair, and a note which she wrote with her pencil before us. One was as follows: "From Annie de Morgan (alias Katie King) to her friend, Florence Marryat Ross-Church, with love. Pensez a moi. May 21st, 1874."

Katie then took a pair of scissors and cut off a quantity of her hair, giving everybody present a liberal portion. She then took the arm of Mr. Crookes and walked all round the room, shaking hands with each. She again sat down and distributed some of her hair; and also cut off and presented several pieces of her robe and veil. After she had thus cut several great holes in her dress, as she sat between Mr. Crookes and Mr. Tapp, she was asked if she could mend it as she had done on other occasions; she then held up the dilapidated portion in a good light, gave it one flap, and it was instantly as perfect as at first. Those near the door of the cabinet examined and handled it immediately, with her permission, and testified there was no hole, seam, or joint of any kind, where a moment before had been large holes several inches in diameter.

Then she gave parting instructions to Mr. Crookes and other friends, as to the course which was to be taken in the future for the further developments that are promised to be given through her mediumship. These instructions were very carefully recorded and given to Mr. Crookes.

She then appeared tired and said reluctantly that she must go, as the power was failing, and bade farewell in the most affectionate way; the sitters all wished her God speed, and thanked her for the wonderful manifestations she had given. Looking once more earnestly at her friends, she let the curtain fall and was seen no more. She was heard to wake up the medium, who tearfully entreated her to stay a little longer, but Katie said, "My dear, I can't. My work is done. God bless you!" and we heard the sound of her parting kiss. The medium then came out among us, looking much exhausted and deeply troubled.

Professor Crook, who took a great interest in the wonderful manifestations, writes a long letter to the London Spiritualist, from which we extract as follows:

During the last six months Miss Cook has been a frequent visitor at my house, remaining sometimes a week at a time. She brings nothing with her but a little handbag, not locked; during the day she is constantly in the presence of Mrs. Crookes, myself, or some other member of my family, and, not sleeping by herself, there is absolutely no opportunity for any preparation even of a less elaborate character than would be required for enacting "Katie King." I prepare and arrange my library myself as the dark cabinet, and usually after Miss Cook has been dining and conversing with us, and scarcely out of our sight for a minute, she walks direct into the cabinet, and I, at her request, lock its second door, and keep possession of the key all through the seance; the gas is then turned out, and Miss Cook is left in darkness.

On entering the cabinet Miss Cook lies down upon the floor, with her head on a pillow, and is soon entranced. During the photographic seances Katie muffled her medium's head up in a shawl, to prevent the light from falling upon her face. I frequently drew the curtain on one side when Katie was standing near, and it was a common thing for the seven or eight of us in the laboratory to see Miss Cook and Katie at the same time, under the full blaze of the electric light. We did not on these occasions actually see the face of the medium because of the shawl, but we saw her hands and feet, we saw her move uneasily under the influence of the intense light, and we heard her moan occasionally. During the week before Katie took her departure she gave seances at my house almost nightly, to enable me to photograph her by artificial light. One of the most interesting of the pictures is one in which I am standing by the side of Katie; she has her bare foot upon a particular part of the floor. Afterwards, I dressed Miss Cook like Katie, placed her and myself in exactly the same position, and we were photographed by the same cameras, placed exactly as in the other experiment, and illuminated by the same light. When these two pictures are placed over each other, the two photographs of myself coincide exactly as regards stature, &c., but Katie is half a head taller than Miss Cook, and looks a big woman in comparison with her. In the breadth of her face, in many of the pictures, she differs essentially in size from her medium, and photographs show several other points of difference.

But photography is as inadequate to depict the perfect beauty of Katie's face, as words are powerless to describe her charms of manner. Photography may, indeed, give a map of her countenance; but how can it reproduce the brilliant purity of her complexion, or the ever-varying expression of her most mobile features, now overshadowed with sadness when relating some of the bitter experiences of her past life, now smiling with all the innocence of happy girlhood when she had collected my children round her and was amusing them by recounting anecdotes of her adventures in India.

"Bound her she made an atmosphere of life,
The very air seemed lighter from her eyes,
They were so soft and beautiful, and rife
With all we can imagine of the skies;
Her overpowering presence made you feel
It would not be idolatry to kneel."

I have the most absolute certainty that Miss Cook and Katie are two separate individuals so far as their bodies are concerned. Several little marks on Miss Cook's face are absent on Katie's. Miss Cook's hair is so dark a brown as almost to appear black; a lock of Katie's, which is now before me, and which she allowed me to cut from her luxuriant tresses, having first, traced it up to the scalp and satisfied myself that it actually grew there, is a rich golden auburn. One evening I timed Katie's pulse. It beat steadily at seventy-five, whilst Miss Cook's pulse, a little time after, was going at its usual rate of ninety. On applying my ear to Katie's chest I could hear a heart beating rhythmically inside, and pulsating even more steadily than did Miss Cook's heart when she allowed me to try a similar experiment after the seance. Tested in the same way Katie's lungs were found to be sounder than her medium's, for at the time I tried my experiment Miss Cook was under medical treatment for a severe cough.

Your readers may be interested in having Mrs. Ross-Church's and your own accounts of the last appearance of Katie supplemented by my own narrative, as far as I can publish it. When the time came for Katie to take her farewell I asked that she would let me see the last of her. Accordingly when she had called each of the company up to her and had spoken to them a few words in private, she gave some general directions for the future guidance and protection of Miss Cook. Having concluded her directions, Katie invited me into the cabinet with her, and allowed me to remain there to the end. After closing the curtain she conversed with me for some time, and then walked across the room to where Miss Cook was lying senseless on the floor. Stooping over her Katie touched her, and said, "Wake up, Florrie, wake up! I must leave you now." Miss Cook then woke and tearfully entreated Katie to stay a little time longer. "My dear, I can't, my work is done. God bless you," Katie replied, and then continued speaking to Miss Cook. For several minutes the two were conversing with each other, till at last Miss Cook's sobs prevented her speaking. Following Katie's instructions I then came forward to support Miss Cook, who was falling on to the floor, sobbing hysterically. I looked round, but the white-robed Katie had gone. As soon as Miss Cook was sufficiently calmed a light was procured and I led her out of the cabinet.

To imagine that an innocent school girl of fifteen should be able to conceive and then successfully carry out for three years so gigantic an imposture as this, and in that time should submit to any test which might be imposed on her, should bear the strictest scrutiny, should be willing to be searched at any time, either before or after a seance, and should meet with even better success in my own house than at that of her parents, knowing that she visited me with the express object of submitting to strict scientific tests—to imagine, I say, the "Katie King" of the last three years to be the result of imposture, does more violence to one's reason and common sense than to believe her to be what she herself affirms.

WILLIAM CROOKS, F. R. S.

TANGIBLE PROOF OF SPIRIT MATERIALIZATION

Mrs. Florence Marryat, Ross Church, London, writes to the London Spiritualist as follows:

Sergeant Cox, in his late letter on the subject of Miss Showers' mediumship, says that could such an end be attained as a simultaneous sight of the apparition outside the curtain and the medium within, "the most wonderful fact the world has ever witnessed would be established beyond controversy." Perhaps Sergeant Cox would consider a sight of both medium and spirit in the same room and at the same time as convincing a proof of stern truth. I have seen that sight. On the evening of the 9th of May Katie King led me, at my own request, into the room with her beyond the curtain, which was not so dark but that I could distinguish surrounding objects, and then made me kneel down by Miss Cook's prostrate form, and feel her hands and face and head of curls, whilst she (the spirit) held my other hand in hers, and leaned against my shoulder, with one arm round my neck. I have not the slightest doubt that upon that occasion there were present with me two living, breathing intelligences, perfectly distinct from each other, so far at least as their bodies were concerned. If my senses deceived me; if I was misled by imagination or mesmeric influence into believing that I touched and felt two bodies, instead of one; if "Katie King," who grasped and embraced and spoke to me, is a projection of thought only—a will-power—an instance of unknown force—then it will be no longer possible to know "Who's who in 1874," and we should hesitate to turn up the gas incautiously lest half our friends should be but projections of thought, and melt away beneath its glare. Whatever Katie King was on the evening of the 9th of May, she was not Miss Cook. To that fact I am ready to take my most solemn oath. She repeated the same experiment with me on the 13th, and on that occasion we had the benefit of mutual sight, also, as the whole company were invited to crowd round the door whilst the curtain was withdrawn and the gas turned up to the full, in order that we might see the medium, in her blue dress and scarlet shawl, lying in a trance on the floor, whilst the white-robed spirit stood beside her. On the 21st, however, the occasion of Katie's last appearance amongst us, she was good enough to give me what I consider a still more infallible proof (if one could be needed) of the distinction of her ideality from that of her medium. When she summoned me, in my turn, to say a few words to her behind the curtain, I again saw and touched the warm, breathing body of Florence Cook lying on the floor, and then stood upright by the side of Katie, who desired me to place my hands inside the loose single garment which she wore and feel her nude body. I did so thoroughly. I felt her heart beating rapidly beneath my hand, and passed my fingers through her long hair to satisfy myself that it grew from her head, and can testify that if she be "of psychic force," psychic force is very like a woman.

BE A HERO.

(From Our Age.)

BY L. E. RAILLY.

All sick and sad, with care oppressed,
My life seemed vain to me at best;
With folded arms I sat and sighed,
Would that in youth I could have died.
I idly gazed on the busy throng
Of human life as it passed along;
And one there was of noble mien,
Who read my soul by me unseen;
He paused and firmly, gently said,
"Weep not for buried hopes and dead—
Be a hero!"

My years were few, but on my head
Time left its trace of age instead;
I knew of want and weary care,
And poverty had brought me there;
With woes my anguished soul was stung,
Till health had failed me—my mind un-
strung;
I looked with longing, wistful eyes,
For peaceful rest beyond the skies;
Again these simple words I heard,
Like thrilling notes of joyous bird—
"Be a hero!"

I wept the loss naught could replace;
I missed and mourned a baby's face,
And felt there's none on earth to love,
For those most dear now dwell above.
No wish had I to longer live,
I've tried to bless, I still must give;
It but exhausts me this demand,
My wealth of soul thus to command,
Again a voice said, "Oh, be brave,
Perchance some sorrowing heart to save—
Be a hero!"

I saw the mount of knowledge high;
Its tow'ring summit reached the sky;
I longed to tread its loftiest peak,
And o'er the deepest gorges leap;
A pathway bright I failed to find,
For misty mase is doubting mind.
How earnest in my soul I prayed
For helping hand of human aid.
A welcome voice, in accents mild,
Said, "I will guide thee, weary child."
Then laid his hand upon my brow,
And bade me promise I would now—
"Be a hero!"

Yes, in the depths of soul to-night
Dawns newer faith and higher light,
And peace and hope with joy serene
Illumes the pathway once unseen;
With love and trust come strength and power
To rise above each darkened hour.
There's virtue in the world, I said,
And hearts are not all cold and dead;
I'll strive to profit from this day—
The lesson taught when thou didst say—
"Be a hero!"

NOBILITY.

True worth is in being—not seeming—
In doing each day that goes by
Some little good; not in dreaming
Of great things to be done by and by.
For whatever men say in blindness,
And spite of the fancies of youth,
There's nothing so kingly as kindness,
And nothing so royal as truth.
We get back our mete as we measure,
We cannot do wrong and feel right,
We cannot give pain and gain pleasure,
For justice avenges each slight.

The air for the wing of the sparrow,
The bush for the robin and wren,
But always the path that is narrow
And straight for the children of men.
'Tis not in the pages of story
The heart of its ills to beguile,
Though he who makes courtship to glory,
Gives all that he hath for her smile;
For when from her heights he has won her,
Alas! it is only to prove,
There's nothing so sacred as honor
And nothing so loyal as love.

WE REAP WHAT WE SOW.

For pleasure or pain, for weal or for woe—
'Tis the law of our being—we reap as we sow;
We may try to evade them, do what we will,
But our acts, like our shadows, will follow us still.
The world is a wonderful chemist, be sure,
And detects in a moment the base or the pure;
We may boast of our claims to genius or birth,
But the world takes a man for just what he is worth.
We start in the race for fortune or fame,
And then, when we fall, the world bears the blame;
But nine times out of ten 'tis plain to be seen,
There's a "screw somewhere loose" in the human machine.
Are you wearied and worn in the hard, earthly strife?
Do you yearn for affection to sweeten your life?
Remember this great truth has often been proved,
We must make ourselves lovable, would we be loved.
Though life may appear as a desolate track,
Yet the bread that we cast on the water comes back.
This law was enacted by Heaven above,
That like attracts like, and love begets love.
We are proud of our mansions of mortar and stone,
In our gardens are flowers from every zone;
But the beautiful graces which blossom within Grow shriveled and die in the Upas of Sin.
We may make ourselves heroes and martyrs for gold,
Till health becomes broken, and youth becomes old.
Ah! it was the same for a beautiful love,
Our lives might be music for angels above.
We reap what we sow—oh, wonderful truth!—
A truth hard to learn in the days of our youth;
But it shines out at last, as the "hand on the wall,"
For the world has its "debit" and "credit" for all.

MY CREED.

BY THEODORE TILTON.

As other men have creeds, so I have mine;
I keep the holy faith in God, in man,
And in the angels ministrant between.
I hold to one true church of all true souls;
Whose churchly seal is neither bread nor wine;
Nor laying on of hands, nor holy oil,
But only the anointing of God's grace.

I hate all kings, and caste, and rank of birth;
For all the sons of man are sons of God;
Nor limps a beggar but is nobly born;
Nor wears a slave a yoke, nor czar a crown,
That makes him less or more than just a man.

I love my country and her righteous cause;
So dare I not keep silent of her sin;
And after Freedom may her bells ring Peace!

I love one woman with a holy fire,
Whom I revere as priestess of my house;
I stand with wondering awe before my babes,
Till they rebuke me to a nobler life.
I keep a faithful friendship with my friend,
Whom loyally I serve before myself;
I lock my lips too close to speak a lie;
I wash my hands too white to touch a bribe;
I owe no man a debt I cannot pay,
Save only of the love men ought to owe.

Withal, each day, before the blessed Heaven
I open wide the chambers of my soul,
And pray the Holy Ghost to enter in.

Thus reads the fair confession of my faith;
So crossed with contradictions of my life
That now may God forgive the written lie!
Yet still, by help of Him who helpeth men,
I face two worlds and fear not life or death.
O, Father, lead me by the hand! Amen.

MORNING LAND.

So near the goal, so near!
The portals open with a sound like song;
The path is lost in brightness that so long
Wandered mid shadows! Oh, my soul, be strong
And do not fear!

Do you feel, too, the woe,
The mist that blinds my eyes, all cool and gray,
The fog that settles round my troubled way?
The clouds that settle? but they cannot stay—
Rise up, and watch them go!

So near the goal I stand!
Oh, weary heart, thy task is well-nigh done!
I see far off the golden setting sun;
The work well-wrought that was so sad begun,
Welcome! O, Morning Land!

LAURA C. HOLLOWAY.

THE THREE-FOLD CORD.

Have hope! Though clouds environ round,
And gladness hides her face in scorn,
Put thou the shadow from thy brow,
No night but hath its morn.

Have faith! Where'er thy bark is driven—
The calm's disport, the tempest's mirth—
Know this: God rules the hosts of heaven,
The inhabitants of earth.

Have love! Not love alone for one,
But man, as man, thy brother call;
And scatter, like the circling sun,
Thy charities on all.

For the very best Photographs go to Bradley & Rulofson's Gallery, with an elevator, 429 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

For a stylish and well finished Photograph go to Kluit's New Photographic Establishment, No. 28 Third street. All work warranted superior to any in the city.

Those suffering from that most annoying of the minor miseries of human life—a cold in the head—or from catarrh in any form, should try Dr. Evory's Diamond Catarrh Remedy. Just try it—that's all. Sold at this office, and by all druggists.

PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS, the sanitary condition of the people of these United States and Mexico will be improved, and life saved, by a total abstinence from the use of ardent spirits, as a beverage, and except only for medicinal purposes; therefore, we, Norton I., Emperor of these United States and Mexico, decree as follows: That from and after twelve months from this date, it shall be unlawful to manufacture, import, or sell, any ardent spirits within the limits of the United States, or Mexico, except for medicinal purposes, as hereinbefore designated and allowed. This act shall not be so construed as to interfere with the use of malt liquors for the working man, and "wine for the stomach's sake."

San Francisco, July 18, 1874.

NORTON I.

COMMON SENSE.

A Journal of Live Ideas.

VOL. 1.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, JULY 25, 1874.

No. 11.

Signs of the Times.

Henry Wise of Virginia thanks God for the abolition of slavery.

In Illinois, eleven of the County Superintendents of education are women.

Rev. Laird Collier, of Chicago, has accepted an invitation to take charge of a parish in England for one year.

The young women of the Andover Academy dress in plain white, and without jewelry on graduating day—a good example.

Alfred R. Wallace says spiritualism is an experimental science, and affords the only sure foundation for a true philosophy and a pure religion.

In 1790 there were only 75 postoffices in the United States, and 1875 miles of post roads; in 1873 there were 33,244 postoffices and 256,210 miles of post routes.

The N. Y. Independent speaks highly of Joaquin Miller's writings, and says he is doing in his prose articles some of his best literary work. Miller is writing letters to the Independent from Italy.

Mrs. Carrie F. Young, a writer and lecturer, well known in this State, has the material for a small volume nearly ready for the press, the title of which is to be "Foothills and Mountain Homes of California."

Some one says that while the professed religion of America is Christianity, the practical religion of the people—the real, guiding gospel of life—is money getting. This includes all in the churches as well as those without.

"And the last thing I did," said Patrick, as he closed his confession to the holy father, "was to steal a bit of hay." "How much of a 'bit'?" asked the priest. "Well, I might as well confess to the whole stack," says Pat "for I am going back for the balance to-night."

A French chemist asserts that if tea be ground like coffee before hot water is poured on it, it will yield nearly double the amount of its exhilarating qualities. Another writer says, if you put in a piece of lump sugar the size of a walnut, you will make it infuse in half the time.

A letter from Carrie F. Young, who is lecturing in the northern part of the State, says: "My topics these six months past are physiological, and health reform. The temperance reform is carried on where I have been by bigoted church people, who freeze me out when they learn I am not one of them. Hence as much as I have done for temperance it comes to nothing now. I am surprised that Emily Pitts Stevens is permitted to work with them. Or has she joined the church?"

There is a fair prospect that the city of Brooklyn will vote $2,000,000 in aid of the East River Bridge project, whether New York does anything to assist or not.

Dr. Thomas M. Brewer, of Boston, testifies to the great benefit the English sparrow has proved to shade trees in Boston, by destroying the eggs and cocoons of destructive worms.

The lemon grafted on sour orange makes delicious fruit. There are not many sour orange trees in California, but the few we have may be easily made profitable by grafting.

Alvinza Hayward, of San Francisco, recently sent to the St. Lawrence University his check for thirty thousand dollars as a gift. This makes $120,000 this institution has received during the year past.

Geo. Francis Train, after a severe course of Turkish baths and vegetable diet, has been transformed (according to his own account) from a Bengal tiger to a Mongolian sheep. He is not sure yet whether the result will be a magnificent fizzle or a power to sway mankind as never before, and teach them love, truth, charity and justice. He is in a state of incubation, and as yet is at a loss to know whether he is addled or a "good egg," out of which may come a winged cherub, who shall lead the way to the land of the blessed. Think of Train as an angel!

Wm. H. Shearman and Fred. T. Perris, of Salt Lake City, passed through San Francisco last week, on their way to the Southern portion of the State, where they hope to find a suitable place for a large number of families from Utah. The class of people represented by these gentlemen are among the most industrious and intelligent of the Territory, and will be a most desirable acquisition for California. They are mostly seceders from the Mormon Church. It would be a good speculation for some of our large landholders to give a tract of land as an inducement for such immigrants to occupy it, as land in the neighborhood would soon double in value in consequence.

Henry T. Child and Robert Dale Owen state that a spirit claiming to be "Katie King" has manifested to them in Philadelphia, and Mr. Owen has no doubt of her identity, although she does not closely resemble the form which appeared in London. Other spirit forms walk out of the cabinet, sometimes three at once, and talk with those in the circle. The medium does not enter the cabinet, but remains in the room with the visitors. The spirits frequently dissolve in sight of all the witnesses. People who have for years derided spiritualism, are now beginning to fear that the truth will soon become apparent, in spite of lies and sneers. When that is accomplished the ministers' occupation will be gone.

SKEPTICISM.

BY J. W. MACKIE.

The true philosopher, in his earnest search for truth, asks not what is sweet, or bitter, or desirable; only, What is Truth? Whether his own convictions or those of his neighbor be found false, whether his most cherished hopes be destroyed, or his faith be found on a false foundation, his only duty is to follow Truth, let the consequences be what they may. The true philosopher does not consider himself under obligation to stand by Materialism or Spiritualism, or even science, only so far as either of these may accord with truth as he sees it. He will therefore continue to investigate, by denying, or accepting, or doubting, as the case may demand. So I, in my humble way, will continue to test the grounds of my surest hopes and my sincerest faith; will distrust my senses, my most inner convictions, aye, and my very reason, in my eager search for truth; for all these, separately and conjointly, have deceived at times. I will continue to compare and analyze facts, reasons and theories in order to approximate to truth, and will, as opportunity presents itself, freely and boldly state where I am in the great journey towards truth, regardless of how I viewed it yesterday or may view it to-morrow, or whether my views be true or false, poisonous or nutritious, desirable or undesirable, or lead to life or death. Let those who have traveled more and farther on Truth's great highway kindly point out where I have misdirected my steps, and how I can reach the more direct way to truth, away from darkness and consequent doubt, to light and consequent faith.

History records innumerable sects which have arisen, informing the world of a great discovered light which revealed the truth concerning the destiny of man. Among these stands prominently, and closely related to us, the Christian revelation. Some of us have discarded that light as a delusive ignis fatuus, and have been branded as "poisoners of her most beautiful flowers," as deniers and pestilential fellows. Surely, Spiritualism, the latest light, will be more charitable to those who do not see the light, who have doubts and dare express them, not for the purpose of destroying or obscuring a single truth, or prevent bees—spiritual bees—from extracting nectar from Nature's flowers, or laying up stores of honey and hope for future use; but for the purpose of having doubts and every obstacle to a clear perception of truth removed.

We have a right to question Spiritualism, or Materialism, or any other ism; especially when we read of mighty spiritual fabrics which have grown old and become great and have vanished like the baseless fabric of a dream. All these, like modern Spiritualism, have had inexplicable phenomena, "spiritual manifestations," on which their superstructure rested; have had evidence upon evidence presented that their system was true. Yet they are now discarded, even by Spiritualists. Cicero, in his "Nature of the Gods," puts in the mouth of his brother Quintus, who maintained their existence, the following words:

"Let us deny everything; let us burn our annals; let us say all these statements are false; let us, in short, confess everything rather than that the gods regard the affairs of mankind."

He might have been a modern Spiritualist talking to his doubting brother. But these same gods which Quintus so persistently contended for, are now silent. These gods did not know that they were only the spirits of common humanity. The way between heaven and earth was only open to the gods, but not to the spirits of kindred and friends. The testimony regarding the existence of devils is equally strong, and a writer of the seventeenth century, getting out of patience with sceptics, says:

"Many will not believe they [the devils] can be seen, and if any man shall say, swear and stiffly maintain that he has seen them, though he be discreet and wise, judicious and learned, they account him a timorous fool, a melancholy dizzard, a weak fellow, etc." And among other examples gives the following from the works of Cardan concerning his father Tacius Cardan: "After the accustomed solemnities, August 13, anno 1491, he conjured up seven devils, in Greek apparel, about forty years of age, some ruddy of complexion and some pale, as he thought. He asked them many questions and received ready answer; that they were aerial devils; that they lived and died as men did, save that they lived much longer, 700 or 800 years, and did much excel men in dignity."

Thomas Bromhall has left behind a work written in the same century, in the style of Robert Dale Owen. One thousand tales are told illustrating the power of the devil, and proving that angels and devils appear unto men; and adds another chapter, headed: "The Arguments of those which deny that the Angels and Devils can take unto themselves a body; Confuted." None of these tales hint that the spirits of the dead communicate with the living. Yes, there is one which, to do Mr. Bromhall justice, I will quote:

"Philip Melancthon reports that he was told by Christopher Gross and Sigismund Galenius that a certain virgin of Bononia was conversant among men two years after her death, and who was at a banquet whereunto she was invited, not tasting any meat, and sitting amongst other virgins; by chance a magician present, knowing the fraud of the devil, saith to them that were present, 'This maid hath been dead,' and coming straight to her, taketh from under her right shoulder an enchantment, whereupon she appeared an ugly dead corpse. This enchantment had been performed by another magician, and thereby the devil had carried about this corpse all this while."—Bromhall's Spectres, ed. 1658.

The devils and angels have gone the way of the gods, and no one suspected that they were only the spirits of their nearest kin, the very devils being ignorant of the fact. Elves and fairies too have gone, which is sad. Now, are we sceptics to blame if we hold ourselves aloof, watch with care, without deciding in matters strange and little understood, when the ages record such varied opinions? Of course, if it can be indisputably proved that the spirits of men and women can and do return and communicate with their friends, it matters little what past history says; but to the doubter it has great weight, and as yet remains unexplained, why they have been so long silent, when they could have so easily spoken.

On the desert is often seen a mirage; water sparkling, rippling appears; along its margin are green trees waving in the breeze; the lovely scene, so fresh and green, inspires the travelers with renewed hope; their animals too, reanimated, apply themselves to their task with renewed energy—to find at last a barren, sandy desert, and no water. So has Spiritualism appeared to me. Personal experiences of a varied character, the testimonies of others, well written works by able men of indisputed respectability have by logic and illustration so proven the truth of Spiritualism that I believed I saw before me a beautiful future of immortality; hope put on her greenest garments, and the water of eternal life rippled and sparkled in the distance,—but, in my endeavors to drink I have imbibed nothing but sand, the beautiful prospect proving to be only a cruel, deceptive mirage.

Ye who have drank of the waters of life and found them sweet and real, will surely bear with patience the poor wayfarer, who, weary, dusty, thirsty and hungry, has failed to reach those waters; ye who have a superabundance of those waters, give us to drink. I and tens of thousands do desire communion with our lost—we fear forever lost. We crave no namby-pamby twaddle, full of idle platitudes and senseless sentimentality; and to be told, when we do not accept it as the speech of those we esteemed in life, that we are dishonest, and that we come in a lying spirit, and so disturb the “conditions.” If our friends can communicate there are a thousand simple, natural ways to convince us of it, such ways as are adopted in every day life where identity may be doubtful. Give us to drink.

THE OAKLAND MANIFESTATIONS.

SKETCH OF A LECTURE BY GEORGE W. LEWIS, AT CHARTER OAK HALL.

After a statement of the occurrences which took place at Mr. Clark's house, and giving the verdict of the LeConte committee, Mr. Lewis said the gentlemen composing the committee, by assuming the task of examining into the matter, entered into obligations with the public which they are in duty bound to fulfill. There are but two questions involved: Did the alleged manifestations occur? and, if so, by what agency? These questions the committee ignored. They simply say “We find the evidence insufficient to indicate the presence of any supernatural or occult agency.” Occult means undiscovered. Consequently if the agency was not occult, the committee must have discovered it, and the question naturally arises, what was it? The community demand of the committee that they tell us what agency the evidence does indicate. That there was no supernatural agency all Spiritualists and most scientists freely admit, be the causes of the phenomena what they may. Spiritualists hold that there is no existence outside of nature. After summing up the case, Mr. Lewis said the verdict was an insult to Mr. Clark and the inmates of his house, an insult to the good sense of the community, and a disgrace to science, if such a verdict is to be called scientific.

WANTED TO KNOW. [For Common Sense.]

How can any man who refuses to believe in the resurrection of a flesh and blood body, on the ground of absurdity, believe in what he calls the “materialization” of a spirit?

Are we to believe the witnesses who affirm that the materialized spirit of Katie King was really flesh and blood, so far as they could judge by their eyes, their ears and their touch? (Their taste and smell are not mentioned.) And that they now possess locks of her hair? (!)

Is not that equivalent to saying that that spirit possessed all the properties of matter? Could it possess all the properties of matter and not be matter?

If they say it was not flesh and blood, will they point out the difference?

If they say it was not flesh and blood, but something so like it that their senses were deceived, are their senses reliable? Can we believe that they saw or felt anything?

If it was matter, where did it come from? Who made it? and where did it go to?

Are not flesh and blood the result of certain processes of digestion and assimilation? Do not these processes require time? Are there not many compound substances in the human body? Are they not, chemically speaking, intricate and wonderful compounds? Can we believe that these compound substances were produced in an instant, from the surrounding atmosphere, the tables and chairs, etc.?

Is it asserted that Katie King was made up of and subtracted from the bodies of those around her? Could portions of their flesh, blood, brain, etc., be taken from them without their perceiving it? Could those particles travel through the air without being seen? Could they become invisible and still remain corporeal? And if they were resolved into simple substances, gaseous matter, etc., could they be converted again into flesh and blood without going through that wonderful laboratory, the stomach?

Is it likely that Katie King could live without a heart? Could she get the medium's heart without making a hole in her side? Could the medium live without it, or even with the half of it? Would it not be more difficult to get the half of it, than the whole?

If the testimony of a dozen witnesses is sufficient to convince us of so wonderful a thing as this, how can we, with any decency, refuse to believe the miracles sworn to by the Roman Catholics?

And finally, could human credulity go any farther?

In the name of COMMON SENSE, I “want to know.”

THE OLD MAN.

Mrs. Gertrude Smith has brought a suit against Sterling S. Smith, a millionaire of Columbia Heights, to recover her husband, a son of Mr. Smith, whom she avers he has confined in a lunatic asylum to prevent their living together.

Miss Susan E. Dickinson, a sister of Anna, is about to make her appearance on the lecture platform. Brought up among the Quakers, she has frequently addressed large audiences already, but mainly heretofore in churches.

[For Common Sense.]

THE PEN—THE NEWSPAPER—THE BALLOT.

A WOMAN'S REBELLION—NO BALLOT, NO ALLEGIANCE.

BY A. GAYLORD SPALDING.

How important that working men and women learn the value and power of the pen! It would give to the newspaper a potency beyond all churches, priests, legislatures and congresses, and thereby enable them (the people) to throw off the extra burden of taxes—State and national—of politics, churches and war. They would no longer, through ignorance, consent to be continually crushed by capital, fashion and aristocracy. Each one would produce his own honest bread, and become his own individual sovereign, president, governor and minister. This would be a true self-government, which every intelligent, industrious, and temperate person should aim to realize.

What farmer or worker needs to be governed, protected, or saved, so much, at such fearful cost? Universal nonsense and imposition! We are taxed for our very breath, which tax goes into the hands of men that never lift a finger in the way of productive toil. And it simply keeps up, fat and handsome, a nation full of political and social moths, or non-producing professional leaders, who live on the people's industry. But such leaders will never stop until the workers dismiss them. Let us do that, then, quickly as possible. It will be a happy day. Dear Grangers and workers, discuss this matter, and write for all brave journals. The pen is mighty, and the newspaper is ubiquitous and omnipresent.

The question of rights must be understood by the industrial class. The first right is, to be a man or woman, which consists of body and mind, life and liberty, and the means of happiness, as stated in our great Declaration. And the ballot is the key which unlocks to all and to each, impartially, the riches and blessings of the earth. It is the symbol of equality, and the power of the people, which, if wisely exercised, makes every man king and every woman queen. It is the backbone of all true democracy. Any other quality is an unmitigated sham, and an outrage on mankind. But this nice theory is already so well understood that elaborate argument is superfluous. Woman claims the ballot, and she must have it. But man monopolizes it, which is the corner-stone of all monopoly.

The means of happiness are labor and property, or production. What need of lack to anybody? But behold your Astors, Stewarts and Vanderbilts! They are social carbuncles and monstrosities. Yet such men lead the world, and every city and town have their petty Stewarts and Vanderbilts, whose motive, aim and principle are the same as those of the bigger bugs of large cities. They are your monarchs of trade, money, monopoly and extortion. The true object of life is perverted, and property, to many, is rendered more a curse than a blessing; since the rule seems to be that the higher the wealth is heaped up, the more frightful and hideous is the amount of poverty, ignorance and vice, all around, especially in cities.

"To have and to hold"—more than the noble use—is the controlling idea of most men of property. The few naturally gain an oppressive ascendancy over the many, and no relief is attainable except through a terrible struggle and crisis, as in the late rebellion against negro slavery, and now in our rebellion against monopoly. A partial and temporary victory will amount to very little. We must plow deep into the principles of things, and make them both religious and political. Aristocracy and non-production are the same under any name, whether secular or ecclesiastical. There is no sect in truth and principle, and but a small degree of real truth or principle in our sects, as fully proved by their endless divisions and disputes. They must, therefore, be set aside, and better ideas substituted, which will throw off an awful burden from the shoulders of the laboring class. Truth is always a harmonious unit, and works exceedingly cheap.

But the Granges and Industrial Lodges are to correct and regulate matters hereafter, and will cover the entire ground of business, politics, and religion; thereby economizing very extensively by dispensing with hundreds of old foggy, costly, professional, aristocratic extravagances. For instance, in legislation: As no Legislature projected or invented these noble orders of justice, equity and brotherhood, they will work independently, and do very much their own legislation, right out doors, on the farm and in the shop.

Pride will be bound to fall,
In Washington and St. Paul.

And your monopolizing Othellos will lose their rich occupation. So there will naturally and necessarily be fewer salary grabs and official swindles, for lack of opportunity. Thus the Granges and Lodges become at once justly magnified into wonderful importance, having in themselves each a combined wholeness of—(1) the farm, (2) the workshop, (3) the legislature, (4) the church, (5) the lyceum, (6) the school.

The ballot is the magical key of accomplishment that will open the mammoth money-bags of California and all the world. It will distribute, like rain-drops, the concentrated and hoarded wealth of cities over the broad country among the workers, and develop the full sources of production, employment, wages and education, for the sewing girls, the cooks and the washerwomen—aye, and even the magdalens! Your Vanderbilts, Stewarts and Astors, big and little, will dwindle down beautifully, and join the common brotherhood. All this will come, must come, and the ballot-key, in the hand of woman, will unlock the door to it.

But a woman's rebellion is the preliminary step. Rebellions have become quite popular and respectable. However, we propose no bloody one, for there is a better way. The woman's prayer crusade, for example, is a brilliant, sublime and heroic rebellion for temperance. Now, just adopt that same kind of crusade for woman's ballot—only by wiser methods—and cry it through the land. First—Revolt against all tax-paying while denied a representation. Remember Abby Smith's cows. Second—Obey no law without a voice in its enactment. Third—Give no audience to any minister or public speaker whose desk, pulpit, platform or rostrum is not equally free to women preachers and speakers. Fourth—inscribe on your waving banner for the proud lords of creation—No Ballot, No Allegiance. This will be the last ounce on the camel's back, or mule's back, of obstinate, stupid and wicked opposition to woman suffrage. This will be a heavenly rebellion, and its results most glorious.

Champlin, Minn., July, 1874.

SPIRITUAL PHENOMENA.

NUMBER EIGHT.

MR. EDITOR: As X. and myself were very anxious to have a few more words with J. Nolan and A. A. Jones, Mrs. Hollis kindly consented to give us a seance on the Sunday evening—my last evening in London—although she had two seances previous to ours on that day, and feared that the conditions would be bad. With her consent I invited some relatives of Jones who were skeptics to attend. An aunt and a friend of his, Mr. Robert P., met us at Torrington street, at 8 p. m., as well as a physician invited by me. On this occasion no one was present besides our party, except Mrs. Holmes and a medium who lived in the house. The lady, Mrs. C., sat on my left, the doctor on my other side; Mr. R. P. at some distance on my right; X. beyond him, and Mrs. Holmes and Hollis opposite to me on the other side of the room. The spirit voices joined in the singing as on the former occasion. James Nolan spoke with us for a good while with the same smartness and pertinency as before, answering all our questions without any hesitation. Spirit lights flitted about the room. They looked just like fire-flies. After Nolan had taken leave of us, a voice in a strong whisper, apparently originating in the air close to our faces, said, "Gus—Sarah." We answered; and the voice in very emotional tones, and unmistakably Jones', said, "I am not blind now. Greet my mother; tell her I am happy. Is Robert here?" "Yes," we said, "he sits there." Mr. P. had been a most intimate friend of Jones. "Tell Robert I want to speak to him; tell him I can see now." "Why don't you go to him?" "I have no power to." All in the room heard these whispers distinctly, and my friend the doctor remarked "that the spirit appeared to be a very emotional one." The voice, which was far stronger than on the previous night, then said, "I can speak to you much better if you will come again; good by; I must go now." His aunt, who sat next me, was much affected, and at the time expressed her conviction that the voice was that of Arthur Jones. We next heard a loud distinct whisper on the right, near X., say, "I wish to speak to you." "Who are you?" "Margaret X." "My mother?" "Yes." "Are you always with me?" "Yes. I have no more power now. God bless you, my dear son." The seance then closed; the gas was turned up. We found Mrs. Hollis very pale and much exhausted. I felt her pulse, which was remarkably feeble. X. appeared much affected by what he had heard, and would hardly say a word as we walked home to our hotel in the cold, frosty January air. However, he, the sceptic of a few days ago, on my suggesting the possibility of fraud in the manifestations, turned on me quite angrily, and said that the idea was absurd; that he was now absolutely convinced of their genuineness, since Mrs. Hollis, whom he had never seen before, and who knew absolutely nothing of him or his belongings, must, if an impostor, have correctly guessed three common names; his own, "Charles," and his aunt's, "Mary," in the message first written on the slate, and now his mother's, "Margaret." X. said, justly, that the chances of any person guessing correctly these common names were so infinitesimal, that he considered the question, as regarded Mrs. Hollis' mediumship, settled; whilst the possibility of accounting for this by unconscious cerebration, or mind reading, seemed shut out by the fact that X. was himself unaware of his aunt's name, and I did not know Jones'.

Mrs. Holmes, in casual conversation, told me the following curious story, of the truth of which she then knew nothing, but which has since—I see by the Medium—been confirmed in every particular. Besides J. Nolan, an Indian spirit calling himself Ski Waukee is also an attendant and guardian of Mrs. Hollis. This spirit is a wag, and although very shy of meeting strangers, is very familiar and good natured when once you can make his acquaintance. While at Paris, whence they had just come, Ski one day informed them that he had written a letter to a gentleman in America, Mr. J. B. Plimpton, editor Daily Commercial, Cincinnati, Ohio. They asked how he got the materials. He said he took the pens, ink, paper and stamps from their desk, and posted his letter himself at the branch postoffice in — street. But, said they, "There is no office there." "Yes there is," he replied; "you go see." On looking where he described they found an obscure postoffice, which they had overlooked before. Mrs. Holmes showed me Ski's album, a photographic album which had been given to him at his request. It was half full of photographs, chiefly those of public characters, which, Mrs. Holmes assured me, Ski had inserted himself in the night, having taken or stolen them from various stores in Paris. He would tell them in the morning that he had added such and such a photo to his collection, and on examining the book, they always found it so. On arrival in London they had gone, at Ski's request, to Mr. Hudson, and got Ski's photo taken. This I saw in the book—a pretty clear likeness of a remarkably ugly Indian, with an immense nose and mouth, tricked out in feathers and wampum. I believe this was taken double, as a stereoscopic carte de visite. A few days after the prints had been sent home, Ski informed them that he had sent his likeness in a letter to Mr. Plimpton. But, said they, "It was too large for any envelope." "Me get scissors and cut em," answered Ski. "Where did you get the scissors?" "Out of your work box." Mrs. Holmes did not know whether Ski was speaking the truth or no; but Mrs. Hollis has since heard from Mr. Plimpton, to whom she wrote to ask if he had received such a letter. Mr. Plimpton enclosed to Mrs. Hollis the envelope of Ski's letter, properly addressed and stamped, thus: Mr. F. B. Plimpton, Commercial office, Cincinnati, Ohio, U. S. America. The substance of Mr. Plimpton's letter from Ski was that the picture he inclosed was not a very good one, but that he would try to get a better one, which he would send. He also writes that he had been at Mr. Plimpton's house, but was unable to make himself manifest.

MEDICUS.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

COMMON SENSE is furnished to subscribers for Three Dollars per annum, in advance. Letters intended for the Business Department should be addressed:

A. T. CLARK, BUSINESS MANAGER, 236 Montgomery st.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

Skepticism—J. W. Mackle.....	124
The Oakland Manifestations—Lecture by G. W. Lewis.....	125
Wanted to Know—The Old Man.....	125
Woman Suffrage—A. Gaylord Spalding.....	126
Spiritual Phenomena—Medicus.....	127
Two Notable Sermons—Ed.....	129
Our Sunday Search for Heaven—Ed.....	130
Re-incarnation—A. M. Stoddard.....	131
A New Secret Society.....	133
Central Hall Meetings—Mrs. Hughes.....	133
Poetry and Special Notices.....	134

COMMON SENSE.

WILLIAM N. SLOCUM, EDITOR.

AMANDA M. SLOCUM, ASSISTANT.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, JULY 18, 1874.

THE PLATFORM at Mercantile Library Hall, on Sunday evening was occupied by Mrs. Konny, a trance speaker, whose subject was: "Whither are we drifting?" The lady spoke fluently, without notes, in a clear voice, and with distinct enunciation. Her subject was well chosen and appropriately treated.

PROFESSOR WILLIAM DENTON is announced to give a course of lectures in Mercantile Library Hall, commencing, on Monday evening, August 10th, and continuing until Saturday, the 15th. Three of his lectures will be on astronomy, one on minerals and metals, one, "The Revelations of Geology regarding Man", and the last on Psychometry. These lectures will be the last he will give here, as he intends to return East as soon as the course is concluded.

THE SPIRITUAL UNION, which has for some months held its meetings in Mercantile Library Hall, will hereafter meet at the new hall, over Gleeson & Fell's store, 911 Market street. The subscriptions for the support of this institution now amount to over $100 per month, which sum will enable the society to make its afternoon meetings free to the public. The Mediums' seances are to be continued until further notice. On Sunday evening the 26th, James I. Ferree will speak in this Hall, admission ten cents.

AN EXPLANATION.—Some of our readers complain that they have been deceived by the advertisements in our columns of spiritual meetings. On Sunday evening last several went to Mercantile Library Hall, expecting to hear Mrs. Fannie Allyn, according to the announcement in this paper. We have endeavored to obtain correct information concerning the meetings, and have published the notices free of charge; yet no one of the present officers of the society has ever given us any information or exhibited any interest in the paper which is the only friendly publication the Spiritualists have on this coast. They send notices to the Chronicle and Post, both of which deride spiritualism, and pay these enemies of the cause for their insertion, but have never given one dollar to this paper, nor even a notice of any kind, which we would gladly insert free of cost. This is a way some Spiritualists have of sustaining their own.

THE CONFERENCE last Sunday morning, at Charter Oak Hall, commencing at 10½ o'clock, was well attended. The question under review was, "Is there sufficient evidence of spirit manifestations to warrant a belief in them by a rational mind?" The conference was opened by a gentleman who gave a decided No! to the question, and declared that the extraordinary statements set forth could not be believed without repeated and incontestable proof; and even then a scientist would be disposed to believe the witnesses deluded or insane, than to admit their testimony. This speech was followed by a flood of experiences from those present, which were exceedingly interesting, and seem incontrovertable. The subject elicited so keen and earnest a discussion that it was continued till next Sunday morning, when the opponents of spiritualism will have a chance to analyze these statements, and show, if they can, where the discrepancy comes in. All seemed anxious either to relate their experience, or to declare their utter unbelief in these things, and the time was fully and pleasantly occupied.

THE SPIRITUALISTS are now divided in this city in three societies, though it is hoped the two most prominent may, ere long unite. Where there are so many, there must exist more or less of jealousy and ill feeling personally, something of which Spiritualists, of all people in the world, should be above indulging in. In our reports of the various meetings, we have endeavored to give most prominence to those likely to be of most interest to the public. When Mr. Denton occupied the platform in Mercantile Library Hall, we devoted a column or more each week to notices of his lectures, and when something good was said at Charter Oak Hall we have endeavored to do them justice also; but we do so not to gratify ourselves or our personal friends, but solely for the good of our readers. If the reports sometimes seem to favor one society more than another, it is because there is more of public interest at one than the other.

Mr. Tilton has at last told the story of his wrongs; and it fully confirms the statements in his letter to Dr. Bacon. It shows that Beecher seduced Mrs. Tilton, and that a "criminal intercourse" was kept up for nearly two years. Beecher, when discovered, threatened suicide, and Mr. Tilton, to save him and to prevent scandal, became reconciled to his wife, covered up his wrongs and for two years suffered in silence. Beecher endeavored to bribe him to go to Europe, but he declined, and finally, after being driven to the wall by Beecher's friends, Tilton made the exposure.

THE FRIENDS of Mr. and Mrs. Dean Clarke are glad to welcome them back to San Francisco. It is probable Mr. Clarke will be engaged to speak before one of our Spiritual Societies, if his health will permit.

The hope of the Christian church is in their Sunday Schools. More attention is now paid to the proselyting of the young than ever before. Sunday schools are gaining ground in Germany France and other continental countries.

TWO NOTABLE SERMONS—DRS. ALLEN AND STONE IN THE PULPIT.

REV. DR. ALLEN'S FIRST APPEARANCE.

Howard Presbyterian church, on Mission street, is so constructed as to enable the "worshippers" to see "as through a glass, darkly." One goes into it from the bright sunshine as into the vaulted chambers of the dead, and he finds there about as much life. Yet the church has a new pastor, a D. D., who, born in Kentucky, was bred a lawyer, developed into a minister, preached in New Orleans, and then—so the church notice in the paper says—"went to Philadelphia, where he has gained a reputation as a popular, eloquent preacher." This man has been engaged to take the place once filled by the eccentric orator and wit, Rev. Dr. Scudder. He has neither the appearance nor the manner of the conventional preacher. He carries into the pulpit the atmosphere of the court room, speaks without notes, and talks to his hearers as an advocate appeals to a jury. He is not a man of genius, and apparently is not overstocked with learning, but he is well enough suited for the cause he advocates. In his first sermon he discoursed of Christ, as God. He said God is written on the face of nature, but men have sought to know more of God, hence they have made images to represent him. Christ is the Christians' image of God. The human heart wants in God a palpable object to cling to. In the incarnation of his son, God presents himself to his creatures, thus exactly meeting their wants. He continued as follows: "In Christ I have that I can actually grasp; I have love in a form I can understand; God stands before me in a human shape, speaks to me with a human tongue, and listens to my prayers with a human ear. The divinity of Christ stands before us the very foundation of true religion—the only God we can love. ** When we contemplate his divine nature, we find ourselves facing the invisible, which no man can comprehend. *** There are two things necessary for Christ to show himself God: First, he must, in order to reveal God to us, express all the divine attributes; second, he must make the nearest approach to human nature that it is possible for God to do."

In order to prove that Jesus Christ was God, Mr. Allen cited the miracles, taking up the most prominent ones separately and commenting on each. Christ healed the sick, raised the dead, stilled the waters, made wine out of water and fed the multitude on a few loaves and fishes, therefore he must be God. In short, the reverend gentleman said: "If Jesus Christ is not God, there is no God." Mr. Allen concluded his discourse by a laudation of "the great scheme of redemption," which he said is so simple a child can understand it, and so just no one can find fault with it! "If you reject Christ," he said, "you reject your only hope of salvation; and you can't afford to do it; it will cost you too much," etc.

There was not an original idea in the sermon. It was the tamest of common place; a weak repetition of old worn-out ideas. And this is the "live preacher" the Howards have engaged to stand in Scudder's shoes. Scud! is the word they should now say to him.

DR. STONE'S DISCOURSE.

In the evening we attended service at the First Congregational Church, and, as it happened, listened to a sermon on a subject somewhat similar, but in its treatment very different. Dr. Stone reads his discourses, and it is a pleasure to listen to his well turned sentences, which are models of good English. His subject was "God and Nature." We have no space to give anything like a report of the sermon; or lecture, rather; for it was not sermon-like. It was a beautiful essay, full of poetical imagery, delightful to listen to merely as an exercise in composition, but sophistical and insincere. In his smooth and seductive way he spoke of Nature as capable of being used as a substitute for God, and assumed that when so used it is a harm rather than a help. He admitted that Nature may be sought as a divine handmaid, to lead our souls to higher paths, away from all low desires, but when she takes the place of God he said in honoring her we dishonor Him. There is, he said, a kind of goodish feeling that comes over one in contemplating Nature in the quiet of the woods, in the majesty of the mountains, in the silence of the night, alone with the stars, but it is a goodness that has nothing to say of God. It has no longing for him; it brings forth no penitential tears, no sublime aspirations; it does not advance one in self knowledge! Why, what is this man made of? Is it possible that one of his progenitors who could stand with a face of flint before the majesty of the heavens, and give forth no spark of feeling when struck by the hand of the infinite, was therefore called by his fellows stone, which, hard as flint, is still without its kindling fire? If so, he was most appropriately named, or his worthy descendant grossly belies his own nature. Where is the man with soul so dead that Nature has for him no awakening power? Where the one so blind to its beauties, so deaf to its harmonies that its sweet influences have never even for a moment raised him out of himself, as it were, into an atmosphere akin to the divine? Alas for Doctor Stone, if he is the man; but we do not believe he is, though he did say that Nature rebukes no sinner. "Nature" says this man of stone "holds no mirror, reflecting back our vileness; no genuine reformation of life is ever wrought by her, no lesson of repentance is ever taught by her sweet voices, no path to righteousness ever pointed out by her starry fingers." What a libel on Nature, and what sophistry to preach to the money-changers, who, after preying on their fellows six days in the week, come to this temple of stone to pray to their unknown God on the seventh. How much better it would be for them if they would go out alone in the fields, wander in the woods, or along the brook-sides, and try to get their souls attuned to the quiet and peace, the majesty and harmony of Nature; or visit the seaside, and lose themselves, if only for one hour, in contemplation of the grandeur, the power and beauty of old ocean, which is but one of the many teachers of the great master, Nature. They would then carry a little of the divine influence back with them to their daily toil, or possibly their daily scheming for plunder, and their week-day acts might thereby be somewhat modified for the better. But this would not suit the man who gets his living, his handsome mansion, rich furniture, fast horses and fine carriages, by the contributions of those who might, if not warned, learn to love Nature better than the inside walls of a church, as fine even as Dr. Stone's; so the wily Doctor tells them they should not yield to the seductive influence of our California climate, which nearly the entire year invites us to go out of doors and enjoy the sunshine, the genial atmosphere, and the flowers which never cease to bloom. Says the Doctor:

"There is no healing virtue in trees and flowers, in sunshine and showers, in fields and running brooks, for a mind diseased. You want a God—a God of redemption, a Bible, and a consecrated place! Nature, without God, is a painted bauble, an airy nothing, an enticing cheat. When you are weary, she is so calm, so patient, she magnetizes the tired soul into quiet, so we lay our weary head on her beautiful bosom and rest. She soothes, but cures us not. When sick, do you want some one to soothe you, or a physician who will go to the root of the disease, and remove the cause of your trouble?" [The Doctor is at fault here also. Nature is the great restorer.] "But," continued the preacher:

"If you ramble abroad on the Sabbath day, the great story of redemption is unheard; you lose God as a savior; and when the time of need comes, what have you as a refuge? How will your gentle mother Nature treat you? Will she soften your fall? Has she any thought of sparing you? No, she will dash you to the ground as one of the rocks of her cliffs. She is as pitiless as the grave. For no traveler lost on the desert does she spread tables; for no sound of suffering has she a listening ear. Go to her with sorrow—does she weep with you? Visit her in suffering; does not the sun shine on and mock at your agony? Cometh not the night with its pall, concealing but taking not away your sorrow?"

Now this is all very pretty, and in a measure it is true, and a grand lesson can be drawn from it, but the lesson Dr. Stone would teach by it is one he not only knows to be unworthy, but false. It is a delusion and a snare. He would have us believe that there is a power outside of ourselves which can redeem from sin, and that, in order to prevent such redemption, we must support fine churches like his own—the gilded gospel shops where alone salvation is to be found. He is no fool; and he knows this to be a sham. He knows there is no such thing as forgiveness of sin. He knows that the hope of forgiveness by whomsoever indulged, is a continual excuse for wrong doing. He knows that the only religion worthy the name is that which a man lives in his daily life, and not an outside thing to be kept for Sunday wear, and for weekly display in the cushioned pews of Dr. Stone's church. The fact is this, man does not preach what he believes. He is false to himself, to his people, and to the God he professes to adore. He is a painter of pretty words, which fall sweetly on the ear, but do no good, because they are used to gloss over the truth which it is his duty to proclaim. How long will people listen in patience to such preaching, while by merely holding their cups right side up, they may catch for themselves the waters of life, and be rid of the fellows who present to their lips this sweetened mess, the main ingredient of which, when analyzed, is found to be, "Put your hands in your pockets, and pay me for humbugging you."

OUR SUNDAY SEARCH FOR HEAVEN.

Again we sallied forth last Sabbath evening to find, if possible, the narrow way, and the straight gate that leads to salvation and eternal glory. The narrow way! Why narrow? Narrowed only by human bigotry and selfishness, that would exclude, if they could, all but the chosen few of their own precious circle, while in reality the way is broad, and plain to be seen, and the gate not merely ajar, but open wide, that whosoever will may enter there. If there be not active, wilful, deliberate, downright wickedness, hypocrisy, and perversion of judgment, heaven shall come at last to all. The goodness of God promises and secures so much. We are inclined to concur with the poet, who says:

"I think few worth damnation save the kings."

That is, the kings of crime, those who know the right, and yet the wrong pursue—the tyrants, who will shed oceans of blood, rather than yield their usurped authority—and the hypocrites who mislead those they should guide, by declaring dogmas in which they no longer believe themselves. These, in our judgment, are the very elect, but elected to the wrong place, that is all.

This time we were fortunate. Our feet led us to green pastures, and pleasant waters, beside which we dwelt for a season with pleasure, and came away rejoicing that we had heard a gentleman preach in the language of "common sense," and bring all the enginery of modern thought to aid him in his discourse. The Rev. T. S. Dunn, of the M. E. Church, on Mission Street, gave us a sermon, at once earnest, practical, wise, witty and convincing. He took for his text an allusion to the shortness of our little journey through this world, and the great need of looking forward to the future, and asking ourselves seriously what preparation is required to make that future such as we desire. He showed clearly that we may not sleep on this momentous thought: that it calls for serious and instant action, that to-morrow it may be too late, and that utter neglect may be fraught with the most serious consequences to us. He said we must cast about us to discover if possible, and to practice, that line of conduct here that will secure to us the approbation of God, and a smiling welcome into his kingdom, when we have done with the things of this world. We should be mindful that we are not deceived or misled. We should weigh carefully every question and project presented to us in regard to our future life, and earnestly and piously pursue the path that well informed judgment points out as the best.

This is precisely what we desire to do, and what we expect all others to do likewise. We have no sympathy with those who have no yearning for immortality—who are content to eat, drink and die, and then find an end of mind and body alike. They are of the earth, earthy; they are as the beasts that perish, in their own estimation; they are sunken in the slough of despond, lost to hope, and beyond the reach of appeal. We know not how to address them. Their first want is a conviction that the human mind, with its vast comprehension of itself, of the world, of the universe, and of God, is a part of God, and, like him, shall never perish. But to those who believe that before them lies a haven of rest, and peace, and joy, or an outer darkness of trial and suffering, and "gnashing of teeth," and yet live on, without a thought of the one or the other, we are inclined to say with our preacher, "Thou fool, perhaps this night thy time has come, thy account must be settled." He did not say how this preparation should be made; but he left us to infer that in the bible, and in the tenets of his church, the true guide, the lamp to our feet, would be found; and if we did not find it there, He would condemn us as lost. But we say no. We do not wish to be judged, and we judge not. We simply say to all, if you do not feel that you are already informed as to what is best for your eternal welfare, seek first that knowledge, seek it earnestly and at once. You have no more urgent business. When you have found it, make it the rule of your life. Use all your faculties to discover the right, and all your will and energy to do it, and you will be safe, notwithstanding the weakness of your judgment and the strength of your temptations. Time will make all things right, and all earnest effort will meet with its reward. Indifference has no excuse. He who has no religious opinions, is less than a man. He who knows the right and does the wrong, is worse than an angel of darkness; yet even he shall turn and see the light.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE CELEBRATION

On Monday next, the 27th, the society known as the "California Woman Suffrage Association Incorporated," will hold its annual meeting for the election of officers, etc., and in the evening of the same day, and at the same place, Dashaway Hall, the Society will celebrate the fifth anniversary of the inception of the woman suffrage movement on this coast. Several good speakers have been invited to deliver addresses, and the occasion will undoubtedly prove exceedingly interesting. We hope all friends of the suffrage movement, without regard to former affiliations, will take part in the celebration. No personal feeling should be allowed to mar the harmony or retard the progress of such a movement.

SOCIETY FOR SELF CULTURE.

The discussion at Dashaway Hall assumed a new phase last Sunday. Rev. Mr. Bailey opened with an appeal in behalf of the religion of Jesus Christ, which will be noticed fully in our next.

Mr. Battersby referred to the first chapter of Matthew, and third of Luke, and thought there was a discrepancy in the statements. After showing the remorselessness of science, he asserted that a religion that would last must rest on that basis.

Mr. Klein believed the bible—did not believe in Spiritualism. He showed what the bible taught, read the decalogue, and asserted that Infidels and others objected to it because it teaches a holy life.

Mr. Mackie admitted there is hypocrisy in Infidelity as well as in Christianity, and thought it not fair to judge of any sect by the hypocrites it contains. He doubted if Christianity can save the world. He said he wished to find the truth, and defined an Infidel as a person who dares to doubt honestly. If we go to hell for that, he defied the power that would consign him to such fate.

At the close of the debate, Dr. White was elected President, and Dr. O'Donnell was chosen Secretary.

For Common Sense.

RE-INCARNATION.

MR. EDITOR:—I see in your Journal of June 27th, Mr. A. W. Baylis wishes a little light on the subject of re-incarnation; and as that is my pet hobby, I volunteer to give him a few items of truth in connection with laws and conditions governing the manifestation of life as we find it.

Now it is evident to all reflective minds, that life is incarnated on this plane of manifestation, at least once, from the fact that we find no life permanently located here. It is all received from some other source than that of earth. Our planet is what we call physical or negative—it is the effect of some great cause; and I will now explain what that cause is, as I have received it from a spirit who belongs to the seventh degree of the third sphere, and is one of the four who compose what we call "Our Band." This spirit, who says her name is "May," is of a very intellectual order of development, has a massive brain and great will power to propel it. She declares to me most emphatically that she has lived three different lives upon this planet, and when here last, she was known as Mary, Queen of Scots. I have seen her materialized fifteen different times, and have a beautiful picture of her taken by Mr. Anderson, of New York. I consider her testimony, upon the subject of re-incarnation, of great value, and I will now give it as she has declared it to me from time to time:

Ques.—Is re-incarnation a truth?

Ans.—It is a great truth of which the world knows little about, as yet.

Q.—Do you remember living on this earth more than once?

A.—I do know that I have been incarnated three different times upon this planet. After spirits pass, or reach a certain degree of development, the memory of all the past becomes green to them.

Q.—Have you any evidence you will or will not be incarnated again?

A.—I have evidence that I shall not be incarnated again. Spirits, after they reach the last degree of the third sphere, are never sent back to earth again.

Q.—Why not?

A.—Because, after we pass to the third degree of sublimation, we can do nothing bad enough to merit incarnation.

Q.—Do you pretend to say spirits are sent back to earth as a punishment for wrong doing in spirit life?

A.—O no; but we do say, your earth with all its physical conditions has been created by a higher spiritual power for the purpose of developing spirit or life. Earth is a mill, so to speak, and at each round we come out a little finer. But mind you, earth does not create spirits; it only develops them—helps them from a lower to a higher degree of development. Here you are incarnated; you come under physical conditions for the time being. This earth, when the cause for which it was created is satisfied, will again return to the great cause from whence it was taken, just as your physical bodies do when your spirits are done with them. Your spirit caused your physical body to come into existence for great and good purposes. When the end for which they were created is accomplished, you die, as you call it.

Q.—Can you tell me where spirits come from when they are incarnated?

A.—We have already said they come from the great positive side of life. The spirit world, the lower spheres, the land of the Diakas are phrases which express the same thing. To illustrate: A spirit on the positive side of life is found to lack the physical life elements which are necessary in order for its advancement. It seems to stand still, or would, if it were not projected into earthly or planetary life. The law of supply is always equal to the demand. The moment the necessity is born, the supply is manifest, and lo! a human being—a living spirit is born into the world.

Q.—Do we come here by a will of our own, and if so, are we conscious of the will?

A.—No, we do not. Undeveloped spirits are little children, so to speak. They know not what is for their highest good. If they did or could know, then there would be no necessity for their incarnation in earthly life. Their manifestations in spirit life are out of harmony. That is, they sin, as you term it. They do not suffer for their transgressions, because they are not conscious of doing wrong. Their condition of life is seen by those much more advanced than they, and these good spirits, whose business it is to do all they can for the advancement of their kind, transplant them, so to speak, into just the right conditions necessary for their greatest good and advancement.

Q.—Do you mean to say a spirit will advance faster here than on the positive side of life?

A.—That is just what we mean. A spirit here, in an ordinary life time, should advance as much as it could possibly in a thousand years in spirit life. That is, if we could measure time and progress as you do here, it would.

Q.—You have said all spirits or human beings come from the positive side of life or the spirit world. Now can you not tell us their origin or when they were created?

A.—As you use the term created, it means a beginning. Spirits have no beginning and therefore have no end. They are finite elements of all things in existence. If you would know what God is, learn what you yourselves are. You, as spirits, are the all of the Universe, and as there is no God or higher power outside of the universe, so you will find no God outside of what you call humanity. God is all in all.

Q.—Can you not tell us something more direct as regards the law of incarnation?

A.—Yes, we could tell you many things; but it would amount to nothing unless you understand what we tell you. In the first place, your minds are full of traditional speculations about God creating Adam, in the Garden of Eden, out of the dust of the earth, &c. This old heathen notion has become a part of your education—a part of you, for the time being; and it is most impossible for us as spirits, to demonstrate to you that it is not so. Your priests tell you it is true, and that you must believe it or you will be damned. We, as spirits, from our high stand point of experience and observation, tell you to believe nothing that does not demonstrate itself to your highest sense of right.

We will now try and answer your question more fully. Your spirit manifests itself in or through what we call organs. Under all conditions of life this is true. Organization is an eternal property of your spirit. When it is incarnated here, in earthly life, it clothes its spiritual organs, each and all of them, with physical organs, and all together make what you call a physical body. In the formation of the physical body certain conditions are necessary before any life can manifest in matter. First, all the physical elements that are found in a human body, both positive and negative, must be present, with a perfect blending of the atoms, which we call physical harmony of the male and female, the positive and negative. This being the case, the ground is ready for the seed—the spirit. A small portion of these elements, which are of themselves negative as a whole, are charged from the positive batteries of the life that is to express itself, and lo! matter begins to move from the center, or in what you call the heart. This being the first organ spiritual that is clothed. When that is perfect, then the spiritual portion is affinized with matter, atom by atom. Then the organs of the brain, each in their own order, until a perfect form is created; and when the negative connections become strong enough between the spiritual and physical of the new life, a human being is born into the world, and becomes independent of the primary physical condition.

Q.—Can you not tell us why we do not remember having had a previous existence?

A.—Yes. Your physical brain remembers nothing that your spiritual brain might have contained prior to incarnation. How could it when it had no existence before it was formed by your spirit? Your spirit loses nothing by incarnation; neither can your physical, as physical, gain anything by coming in contact with spirit. You, in this world, can know nothing of the spirit, only as it expresses itself; and as it can express itself only through physical conditions, you can know nothing of its history as a spirit.

Q.—What do you think of Mr. Darwin's theory?

A.—If we understand Mr. Darwin, and we think we do, he treats of physical things and the laws governing the same, which might be called a science; but he knows nothing about spiritual things. Mr. Darwin is right. The physical condition for a human spirit to manifest through has been developed, or brought from the lower order of creation; but, as we have said, the spirit or power manifesting is eternal.

Q.—Is all life manifesting on our planet through matter incarnated?

A.—The law of incarnation runs through all life the same. We tell you all life is organized, and all organization is eternal. Matter can never move, until spirit or life acts upon it, to move it.

The above testimony of a spirit was given to me by "May," through the medium, Mrs. Lizzie Blandy Davenport, in Cleveland, Ohio, February, 1874, the spirit form being materialized sufficiently to use oral language, and in the presence of twenty-five individuals at each seance. The testimony of this spirit upon the question of re-incarnation, establishes the fact to my mind, beyond a reasonable doubt. Will some of the readers of "COMMON SENSE" give us their objections to the statements made by the spirit? Until these statements and reasonings are shown to be incorrect, I, for one, shall believe they are true.

Oakland, Cal., July 12.

A. M. STODDARD.

MEDIUMS' SEANCE.—Large audiences assembled at both Halls on Sunday afternoon. At Charter Oak, there were Mrs. Hendee, Mrs. Wiggins, Mrs. Cummings, Mrs. Staley, Mrs. Richards, Dean Clark, Mrs. Carrie B. Wright, Mrs. Kerns and other mediums. Spirits were described and messages given as usual, closing with the ballot test by Mrs. Foye. The latter was especially interesting and satisfactory.

THE MARIONETTES.—One of the most amusing and beautiful exhibitions ever given in this city may be seen nightly at Platts' Hall, and on three afternoons of each week. It is especially a treat for the little ones, and the day performance is preferable for them as children's tickets are then half-price.

A NEW SECRET SOCIETY.

Learning that a new secret Order of the "Friends of Progress" had been organized in this city, dating from July 4th, 1874, and judging from the name that the principles and aims of the Order might interest some of the progressive readers of COMMON SENSE, we have obtained from one of the originators the following statement, which we give in his own language:

TO THE FRIENDS OF PROGRESS EVERYWHERE: A new secret Order of "Friends of Progress" has just been organized in the city of San Francisco, California, designed to include and represent every shade of reform and all grades of reformers, who endorse the equal natural rights of every human being, and regard the development of a grand and noble manhood and womanhood as the great object and end of human existence.

It aims to combine the talent, influence and numerical strength of all the progressive minds in this country, so as to be able to concentrate the whole force of the Liberal element upon any question of reform; or to checkmate and prevent any efforts to crush out free thought, free speech, or a free press, whether upon political, religious, social or industrial interests; and to mutually assist and protect each other, or any human brother or sister who may stand in need of assistance or protection.

It will also include a principle of life insurance—each insured member of the Order paying in a small sum to the family, heirs or assigns of a deceased brother or sister.

It will endeavor to establish and maintain a high standard of social and industrial justice; carrying its principles wherever its members go, whether into political, religious, industrial or social relations; ignoring all pretensions of aristocratic caste founded upon the accident of wealth or social position; and will seek to bless and benefit universal humanity.

No question of any interest to the welfare and happiness of mankind will be considered as an outside issue, with which we have nothing to do, but everything that touches the interests of the human spirit will be a legitimate subject of inquiry and investigation.

The Circles will hold regular weekly meetings, which will afford opportunities for social and intellectual culture, dropping all useless repetitions of dry formulas, and making the best use of the time for improvement and progress. Each Circle may have a Musical Conductor, whose duty it will be to cultivate the musical ability and taste of all the members—making our meetings a school of learning and amusement.

Age, counted by years, will not be a "guage" for the admission of members; for children of an older or younger growth will be admitted upon their individual merits, and upon an estimate of the ability of the Circle to assimilate and bring them up to a comprehension and love for the principles and aims of the Order.

It will be one of the principal aims of this Order to make the meetings so attractive, joyous and happy that the young of both sexes will find more incentives to become worthy of membership, and more happiness in their relations as members, than any other place can afford.

This Order will be no one-sided affair—man-made or woman-made—but will be composed of as nearly an equal number of men and women as may be practicable, the offices particularly being filled by a pair, a man and woman.

The Order being founded, and the first Local and Grand Circles being organized in the city of San Francisco, State of California, organizing officers will be sent out in any direction, when a petition from not less than twelve—six men and six women—has been sent to the Grand Circle, requesting a Primary Circle to be organized in their locality. Address, with stamp, "President Grand Circle, U. O. F. P., San Francisco, California."

THE CENTRAL HALL MEETING.

If any argument were necessary to prove the vital importance of a free paper and an organ for free thought, such as "COMMON SENSE" presents, the wretched misrepresentation of the meeting at Central Hall last Sunday, on the part of the press of this city, would point one in its favor. But truth is mighty and will stand. To say that the spirit or sense of the meeting was represented, is an absurdity. It was proved to my satisfaction and that of others, that a meeting may be conducted decorously, orderly and harmoniously, without either constitution, by-laws or chairman; that no elements can be introduced into such a meeting, that the sway of a truly divine spirit in those who compose it, is not able to regulate and harmonize; that no disturbing element can prevail against us if we are only at rest and harmonized in our own spirits—not even those that our enemies may introduce to trouble us. It is a bold experiment; but is one that we are very hopeful of.

Dr. Swan spoke first in a temperate, friendly spirit, advocating personal freedom in the meeting without restriction as to time. Dr. Deam expressed the same views.

Mrs. Hughes followed, expressing herself a convert to the experiment of freedom, and that such a meeting as this is demanded as an exponent of present conditions; it is an out-growth of the times. Prof. Chaney advocated restriction as to time. Mr. A. C. Stowe spoke at length on the experiment of freedom in our meeting and its applicability to all claims of opinion and persons who might be here represented. "Even thieves and blackguards,?" said a voice. "Yes," said Mr. Stowe. Mrs. Moore, the medium, made a short address under influence, at the close of the meeting, and it was the feeling on the minds of all present, that a reverent, kindly and calm spirit moved the whole proceedings. Thank God that we have an organ through which to speak to the people now. Spiritualists and Free Thought societies, arise and support it. No longer tamely sit down and be misrepresented to two hundred thousand people every day. Sustain your speakers, sustain your writers, and above all, cultivate yourselves to that calmness, strength and dignity of soul, founded on a truly humanitarian spirit, at peace with God and man, that shall enable you to take the roughest elements that can come in among you, those that come to scoff, and perhaps to disturb and malign you, to remain and aspire to become wiser and better. I have more hope of these, should they come from the lowest hells on the Barbary coast, than for the paid reporter. I will not say reporter; I should wrong that calling. The man who was at Central Hall, last Sunday, was not a reporter, but a misrepresenter, and paid to be a misrepresenter, by those whose money can buy anything that is to be bought from a misrepresenter to a vote. I say this in no spirit of anger, but to arouse the free and liberal minds, everywhere, to a sense of our true position. The tactics of our enemies are good, though not very ably conducted. Persecution makes a cause grow, and if it is worth anything, it will outlive ridicule. E. HUGHES.

PERDITA.

I dipped my hand in the sea
Wantonly.
The sun shone red o'er castle and cave;
Dreaming I rocked on the sleepy wave;
I drew a pearl from the sea,
Wonderingly.

There in my hand it lay;
Who could say
How from the depths of the ocean calm
It rose, and slid into my palm?
I smiled at finding there
Pearl so fair.

I kissed the beautiful thing,
Marveling.
Poor till now, I had grown to be
The wealthiest maiden on land or sea,
A priceless gem was mine,
Pure, divine!

I hid the pearl in my breast,
Fearful lest
The wind should steal or the wave repent
Largess made in mere merriment,
And snatch it back again
Into the main.

But careless grown, ah me:
Wantonly
I held between two fingers fine
My gem above the sparkling brine,
Only to see it gleam
Across the stream.

I felt the treasure slide
Under the tide;
I saw its mild and delicate ray,
Glittering upward, fade away.
Ah, then my tears did flow,
Long ago!

I weep, and weep, and weep,
Into the deep;
Sad am I that I could not hold
A treasure richer than virgin gold,
That fate so sweetly gave
Out of the waves.

I dip my hand in the sea,
Longingly;
But never more will that jewel white
Shed on my soul its tender light.
My pearl lies buried deep
Where mermaids sleep.

(Galaxy.)

SPRING TIME.

Only a little way farther on,
We shall find the pastures of purple and gold:
The skies are clear, and the rosy dawn
Its banners of glory begins to unfold.
Only a little way farther on;
And the dreary days are forever gone.

Billows of light in the spring-time land,
Billows of beauty and budding bloom;
Led by the clasp of your willing hand,
I shall go out where the soul finds room.
Out of the shadows, the storm and cold—
Out where the sunbeams are dripping their gold.

How I have longed for your beautiful face;
Groping my way through the wearisome night;
How I have sighed for a delicate trace
Of your tender step, so dainty and light,
A sweep of your voice—a gleam of your hand,
Lost in the lap of a wintry land.

Only a little way farther on,
I see a touch of the hazy hills,
Growing bright, as the rosy dawn
Gaily glimmers on rock and rill,
Where joyous minstrels of Nature bring
Their gladdest notes for the glorious Spring.

TO MY FRIEND S.

Crush the dead leaves under thy feet,
Gaze not on them with mournful sigh.
Think not earth has no glory left,
Spring time will bring fresh verdure as sweet—
Crush the dead leaves under thy feet!

Look not back with despairing heart,
Think not life's morning has been in vain—
Rich, broad fields lie before thee yet,
Ready to yield their golden grain,
Autumn may bring thee a fruitage sweet—
Crush the dead leaves under thy feet!

Murmur not, if the shadows fall
Thick and dark on thy earthly way,
Hearts there are which must walk in shade,
Till they reach the light of eternal day.
Life is not long, and the years are fleet—
Crush the dead leaves under thy feet!

Bravely work, with a steadfast soul,
Make others happy, and thou shalt find
Happiness flowing back into thy heart,
A quiet peace, and contented mind;
If earth be lonely, then heaven is sweet—
Crush the dead leaves under thy feet!

Manchester, N. H.

L. E. B.

MY CREED.

BY THEODORE TILTON.

As other men have creeds, so I have mine;
I keep the holy faith in God, in man,
And in the angels ministrant between.
I hold to one true church of all true souls;
Whose churchly seal is neither bread nor wine;
Nor laying on of hands, nor noly oil,
But only the anointing of God's grace.

I hate all kings, and caste, and rank of birth;
For all the sons of man are sons of God;
Nor limps a beggar but is nobly born;
Nor wears a slave a yoke, nor crar a crown,
That makes him less or more than just a man.

I love my country and her righteous cause;
So dare I not keep silent of her sin;
And after Freedom may her bells ring Peace!

I love one woman with a holy fire,
Whom I revere as priestess of my house;
I stand with wondering awe before my babes,
Till they rebuke me to a nobler life.
I keep a faithful friendship with my friend,
Whom loyally I serve before myself;
I lock my lips too close to speak a lie;
I wash my hands too white to touch a bribe;
I owe no man a debt I cannot pay,
Save only of the love men ought to owe.

Withal, each day, before the blessed Heaven
I open wide the chambers of my soul,
And pray the Holy Ghost to enter in.

Thus reads the fair confession of my faith;
So crossed with contradictions of my life
That now may God forgive the written lie!
Yet still, by help of Him who helpeth men,
I face two worlds and fear not life or death.
O, Father, lead me by the hand! Amen.

GEMS.

He who from love to God neglects the human race,
Goes into darkness with a glass to see his face.

A jewel is a jewel still, though lying in the dust,
And sand is sand, though up to heaven by the tempest thrust.

Who learns and learns, but acts not what he knows,
Is one who plows and plows, but never sows.

The firmament is God's letter of love to man,
The sun the seal stamped on its envelope of air:
The confidential night tears off that blasing seal,
And lays the solemn star-script, God's hand-writing, bare.

DIED, in Reno, July 14th, PERBIA, the only child of Mrs. SANDY BOWERS, aged twelve years. On the 16th there was a gathering of friends and school children at the "Bowers Mansion." There was a new grave under the pines, where the late Sandy Bowers was buried. The school children and school teachers were there with songs and music. The Episcopal minister, of Reno, and Mrs. H. F. M. Brown were invited to speak on the occasion. Both went with branches of palm and olive leaves. One read of death and the resurrection; the other spoke of the after-life and the coming back of our risen dead. C. W. B.

Special Notices.

Persons having business to transact with Woodhull & Claflin may address their agent, Fred. Thal, care of William Sharp, 236 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

For the very best Photographs go to Bradley & Bulofson's Gallery, with an elevator, 429 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

For a stylish and well finished Photograph go to Kluit's New Photographic Establishment, No. 28 Third street. All work warranted superior to any in the city.

Those suffering from that most annoying of the minor miseries of human life—a cold in the head—or from catarrh in any form, should try Dr. Ivory's Diamond Catarrh Remedy. Just try it—that's all. Sold at this office, and by all druggists.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, NO. 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

AGENTS IN THE INTERIOR.

Contra Costa county ..... E. H. Kimball, Antioch
Inyo county ..... Mrs. L. Hutchinson, Bishop Creek.
Monterey county ..... W. M. Wilson, Salinas City.
Santa Barbara county ..... Mrs. Clara B. Crane, Santa Barbara.
San Bernardino county ..... Dr. J. J. Greves, Riverside.
Santa Cruz county ..... Mrs. Georgiana E. Kirby.
San Joaquin county ..... W. S. Sturgeon, Stockton.
Ventura county ..... J. W. Stevens, San Buenaventura.
Yolo county ..... J. G. Hudson, Woodland.

TRAVELING AGENTS, Abby W. Baker, Prof. W. H. Chaney, J. L. York, J. I. Farree, Addie L. Ballou, H. F. M. Brown.

COMMON SENSE.

A Journal of Live Ideas.

VOL. 1.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, AUGUST 1, 1874.

No. 12.

Signs of the Times.

If a printed slip or any piece of paper is pasted on to a penny postal-card, it subjects it to six cents extra postage.

The glass works of New England produce articles which in quality, design, and engraving are equal to any made abroad.

An Iowa paper predicts that within five years every every pound of Western flour will be sent East in barrels of paper made from the straw the wheat grew on.

Phosphorus is now made from phosphatic rocks, of which there are deposits sufficient in South Carolina alone to meet the demands of the world for thousands of centuries.

The various Government Bureaus at Washington are generally adopting the newly invented machine which prints letters instead of writing them. A clerk in the Post Office Department has written fifty-six words a minute with this machine.

It is predicted as one of the possible practical uses of balloons that the time will come when mechanics who have to work on church spires and high buildings will do it by means of balloons, instead of with the dangerous scaffolding now in use.

At the Harvard Commencement, lately, an oration was given in defence of Pantheism, which called forth high praise from competent critics for its ability and reverent earnestness, and which was received by the audience with an enthusiasm rarely witnessed on such occasions.

M. D. Conway says:—I doubt not that the life or death of the Unitarian movement depends upon the question whether it will be able to emancipate itself from the Christian name, now the badge of a worldly and conventional system corresponding to that against which the whole life of the great-hearted Christ was a protest and witness.

During the last twenty-five years, Belgium has almost entirely relinquished the infliction of capital punishment; and now it is officially stated that "the commission of grave crimes is everywhere diminishing in Belgium, and it is a noteworthy circumstance that for nearly eleven years no execution has taken place in the country."

At Berne, Switzerland, there may be seen at present at the places used for posting up public notices, nine little placards, each containing twenty names. They are the lists of Berne citizens who are forbidden to visit cafes and restaurants because they have not paid the military taxes.

A new invention in carpet manufacture promises to afford a handsome article at a much lower figure than now required. The carpet can be made of any desired pattern, and the colors are very bright, so that when laid upon the floor it has all the effect of a costly article.

Jennie Bonnet, the girl who wears men's clothes while frog catching, is in prison again.

Ex-Senator Pomeroy, of Kansas, is on trial at Topeka, for bribery in connection with the Senatorial election two years ago.

England has adopted compulsory education, and is enforcing it vigorously. After education, comes revolution, peacefully or otherwise.

The mass of the people are averse to seeing churches, or individuals, put on airs, and claiming to be holier and better than the general average, unless they really are.

It is said that more lumber is used in cribbing and walling up silver mines in Utah, than is used for building all the cities, towns, dwellings, and fences in the Territory.

The editor of the Religio Philosophical Journal has met a young man who has such respect for the truth that he scarcely approaches it. He stands off and admires it at a distance, as people look at the comet.

Mrs. Van Cott talked to the Chicago people about their besetting sins last Sunday. One of her hearers observed that people whose besetting sin is a fondness for the drama should be careful how they go to hear Madame Van Cott.

N. C. Carter, of San Gabriel, Los Angeles, is to leave Lowell, Massachusetts, on the 15th of August with a large number of families. The fare is sixty dollars through, and this low rate enables him to make choice among some of the most desirable material for colonization in Massachusetts.

The population in India, subject to the British crown, or more or less connected with it, is about 180,000,000 of persons, and though great efforts have been made, of late years, to bring the influence of missionaries to bear upon those whom formerly they could not reach, still, with all efforts, not above 318,000 Protestant converts have as yet been made.

Elizabeth Cady Stanton gives as one reason why the Beecher-Tilton matter was not exposed years ago, that the owners of the Plymouth Church building, the Christian Union and other property, would suffer pecuniarily. Mr. Wilkinson, who was interested in the publication of Beecher's Life of Christ, said the expose at that time "would have knocked the Life of Christ higher than a kite."

Mr. Glendenning, pastor of Prospect Avenue Church, Jersey City, who is accused of being the father of a child by one of his church members, a Miss Pomeroy, to whom he was engaged, denies that the child is his, and says he can furnish undeniable proof that six of the leading members of the congregation had been as intimate with her as he!

SPIRITUAL PHENOMENA.

NUMBER NINE.

MR. EDITOR:—Since my arrival in California, I have received many interesting letters from my old friend X., and as I think it must interest your readers, in connection with the facts before related of the mediumship of Mrs. Hollis, to know how completely one remarkably practical and clear-headed sceptic, at least, was turned from the error of his ways, and forever convinced of the astounding fact of direct spirit communication, by witnessing a few hurried seances with her. I will take the liberty, which I am sure he will forgive, of copying a few extracts from one of his letters. I had suggested to him the possibility of imposture in the case of Mrs. Hollis, and urged that as he had plenty of time and opportunity, he should make an exhaustive examination into the facts. I had said that the necessity of the long tin trumpet seemed to me suspicious, and suggested that it would be more satisfactory at the dark seance if all the circle, including Mrs. H., should join hands; also, that X. should make Mrs. H. speak at the same time as Nolan. It is true I had done this myself, once or twice, but wished it tried repeatedly. I also proposed that at the day-light seance, X. should ask Mrs. H. to allow him to place the little table, under which she holds the slate, close to the window, and that he should then make a small hole in the cloth, and peeping through this, watch the pencil at work; or, if necessary, should insert in the cloth a small plate of metal, pierced with a hole to peep through. X. spoke to Mrs. Hollis about these propositions of mine, and this is what he tells me in answer.

“London, February 20th, 1874.

“I have not yet been able to carry out any of the experiments you suggested to Mrs. Hollis. Mrs. H. is quite willing to allow me to try any thing I like; but a small hole, such as you suggest, in the table cloth, gives no sufficient light to see anything inside or underneath the table; and invariably, when I have lifted one end of the cloth, the pencil has fallen on the slate. Mrs. H. affirms, however, that a friend of hers has frequently seen the pencil writing.

I was at Mrs. H.'s to-day, and my sister, who is mediumistic, held the slate herself, and got raps, conveying intelligent communications, in the same way Mrs. H. herself gets them. The spirits say that my sister will get direct writing on the slate herself, within a month. This would, to me, be more convincing, if possible, than anything else could be. Lately, however, we had a most convincing test. We, my sister and myself, asked, at Mrs. H.'s, the name of a spirit that has been creating a good deal of disturbance at the house of a friend of my sister at Margate. The name was given us as John O., a deceased relative of my sister's friend, Mrs. O. But on referring to Mrs. O., she denied positively the existence of any one of the name of John at any time in her family, she professing to be quite familiar with the past history of her family.

On our again visiting Mrs. H., however, a deceased sister of mine, who came to communicate, said that “John O. was the name of a dead relative of Mrs. O.; that he had been uncle to Edward O., whom Mrs. O. knew well.” This put Mrs. O. on her metal, and she enquired of a brother of hers who held all the family records and papers, if such a person as John O. ever existed. The brother had never, himself, heard of any John O., but on looking up old family records, he discovered a letter from a younger brother of his grandfather, to his grandfather, about some property. Thus it turned out that the original spirit's communication was quite correct, and no more perfect test could have been devised, since, at the time the statement was first made, and when repeated by my dead sister, no one on earth, to the best of our knowledge, knew of the existence of this John O., still less of his relationship to Edward O., who was Mrs. O.'s father. The spirit said at the time, it was a test question, and said it proved to be beyond all doubt.

I don't see any way to doubt the spiritual element in these manifestations. I have hitherto seen no failure in their results with Mrs. H., except that answer made by Jones' spirit to your question as to whether he died in Java, when rapped, “Yes;” and this was hardly material, since it was at once corrected by him.

To-day I was at Mrs. H.'s, and my deceased sister E. wrote the slate quite full, in a small, neat, female hand, with the lines perfectly parallel. I have the slate here now; Mrs. H. gave it to me. I have not been to Mrs. Gruppy's since I went with you; nor have I seen Mrs. Godfrey. The fact is, I have been almost too busy to go anywhere. I go with a friend to William's to-morrow night, however. Mr. Crookes is getting on famously with Miss Cook, and hopes soon to be able to let her appear again amongst friends. Mr. Crookes has no doubt whatever of the materialization of the spirit of Katie King.

The test that you proposed to the dark seance, of all holding hands, and making Mrs. H. and Nolan speak at once, Mrs. H. is perfectly willing to allow; but for myself, I do not wish to test the question in that way. The names I have heard given, and circumstances related, which it was utterly impossible for Mrs. H. to know anything of, are proofs quite sufficient for me. No mortal power could manage these things without ignominious failure, I feel sure. Very few of the persons who visit Mrs. H., disclose their names to her at all, yet the manifestations, circumstances and names given, are quite accurate, nevertheless.

If my sister becomes a medium, we will introduce any test you may think of, for the purpose of convincing any of your scientific friends in London, who do not yet believe in the fact of spirit communication. Mrs. H. is most anxious to submit to any test; but as it so happens, I have never yet had a number sufficient to hold hands all round in a circle large enough for Jimmy Nolan to move freely about within it. Three, besides myself, is the largest number we have ever been able to muster, of people good for spiritual development. I will, however, take an early opportunity of testing the matter in the way you propose, if you still wish it done.

One of my brothers has never been mentioned by name at any seance. I asked to-day the reason why, and received for a reply, that “it would be useless, as he was beyond all hope, skeptically inclined.” This is quite true; his intellect is peculiar, and can see only one side of the shield of truth, and a very small piece indeed of that. His is a mediæval intellect, and his ideas upon all subjects seem to be tainted with the most astounding ignorance of all pertaining to modern thought. No wonder he is ignored by the spirits, whose religion, so they say, is one of purity and truth; as far removed as can be, from all ignorance and superstition.”

It seems to me to be a fitting way in which to close these papers on spiritual phenomena, by giving in his own words, this testimony of my old friend—one of the most practical, skeptical and clear headed men I have ever known—to his absolute conviction of the truth of phenomena to him perfectly new and marvellous, and to the necessity of attributing them to intelligent, invisible agencies, which could be no other than the spirits of the departed; a conviction which, as you see from his own testimony, absolutely subjugated his highly intellectual mind, and was produced solely by witnessing a half dozen seances with Mrs. Hollis, a medium whom he had never heard of in his life till I took him to her rooms. It is clear that he is more profoundly convinced of the truth of all that the most advanced spiritualists claim, than I have been by thirteen long years experience of spiritual phenomena, of every phase, and in every clime.

Permit me, Mr. Editor, to bid you and your readers adieu. Thanking you for the patience with which you have listened to my tedious tale. Yours faithfully MEDIOUS.

For Common Sense.

THE MATERIALIZATION OF SPIRITS.

A skeptic, in your last issue, has laid down as an axiom that we cannot place confidence in the old chronicles, but "must depend on the facts of to-day." He is right; and every impartial, intelligent reader will readily discover that he has, in this assertion, admitted the force of the recent developments, that have occurred before witnesses of unquestioned integrity, most of whom were opposed to this spiritual theory previous to the overwhelming evidence they received. The photographs of the materialised spirit either prove the fact beyond the imagination of those present; (for imagination could not make a likeness on the silver plate) or the three scientific men, Crooks, Varley, and Wallace, and those who were with them during the three years, were liars and knaves.

Another correspondent "wants to know" if Katie could possibly have been seen, and felt, and pieces of her garment and some of her hair taken and kept, if flesh and blood cannot rise from the dead? (as in the case of Christ I suppose he means) Christ made no claim to a flesh and blood resurrection; for he said "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of heaven." And if it was flesh and blood in Katie, how does he know how quickly flesh and blood could come into existence? Does he not know the atmosphere contains all that is in the composition of the natural body? Shall the Hottentot give to the scientist the decision that steam power does not exist, because he does not know how to generate it? And if the human body is constantly being destroyed, and renewed, as science now affirms, why may not a superior chemical power, of which we have yet learned very little, produce, and dissolve even flesh and blood? One thing it has proved, (even if you denounce the finest intellects of England as liars and knaves), something did make hair; and parts of a garment that still endure, the texture of which cannot be matched in any of the markets of the world? It has proved that it can create and destroy, or preserve, as it shall choose.

JESSEE H. BUTLER.

HESTER PRYNNE.

[For Common Sense.]

Who of us do not remember the strange mystical romance of Hawthorne, The Scarlet Letter, so prophetic in its meaning, so freighted with messages of peculiar purport to this day and generation? For us thousands like poor Hester Prynne have loved, lived and suffered, that from their lives a diviner truth might come, that from their sufferings and agony a more glorious truth might be reached, a truth that should emblazon the infamy of the Scarlet Letter into a symbol of divinest meaning. O Hester! Hester Prynne! In the eternities thou smilest with a saintly smile on thy persecutors and torturers, and leadest them up to where thou dost stand; so near to him who was the revelation of love. How little his own time recognized the prophetic soul Hawthorne possessed. He passed away from earth only half recognized, like almost all men and women of super-eminent genius. In the very nature of things they can only be fully recognized by the few. In the last years of Hester Prynne's life, after Dimmesdale's death and Pearl's marriage she comes back to her little cottage by the sea.

"In the lapse of the toilsome, thoughtful, self-devoted years that made up Hester's life, the Scarlet Letter ceased to be a stigma. Women came to Hester's cottage demanding why they were so wretched, and what was the remedy. Hester comforted and counselled them as best she might. She assured them, too, of her firm belief, that at some brighter period, when the world should have grown ripe for it, in heaven's own time a new truth would be revealed, in order to establish the whole relation between man and woman on a surer ground of mutual happiness. Early in life, Hester had vainly imagined that she herself might be the destined prophetess, but she had long since recognized its impossibility. The angel and apostle of the coming revelation must be a woman indeed, but lofty, pure and beautiful; and wise, not through crushing grief, but the ethereal medium of joy, and showing how sacred love should make us happy, by the truest test of a life successful to such end."

Come forth, angel of the future, divine, purified woman, savior of the world. We who have been in chains so long, dimly struggle to reach up to that perfect standard which embodies the world's highest hopes. At this time, when the angel world is pressing down to us, and regarding with passionate interest those who are on the scene of mortal life, are not the Hesters of the past still beside many a struggling, fainting woman soul; sustaining it in action, soothing it in solitude, and calling upon women collectively, especially on this North American Continent, to come up higher?

E. HUGHES.

At a religious meeting in a moral village, one of the ministers present opened the exercises by the following announcement with a very solemn pronouncement. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son, that whosoever believed on him might be saved." A countryman present, deeming that this was a resolution moved an amendment which was carried by an almost unanimous vote. The amendment was to this effect, "God so loved the world that he will save all who deserve to be saved, of his own motion and goodness, and without any such round about red-tape process as begetting a son to do it."

"WANTED TO KNOW."

BY GEORGE W. LEWIS.

In COMMON SENSE of 26th July, "The Old Man" asks a series of questions, among which are the following: "How can any man who refuses to believe in the resurrection of a flesh and blood body, on the ground of absurdity, believe in what he calls the materialization of a spirit?" The resurrection theory predicates that the identical material substance of the organism which is deposited in the grave, shall, at the resurrection, come forth, re-organized into the same body and re-animated by the same spirit which was separated from it. But science teaches that the body returns to its original forms, entering into new combinations, and becoming the constituent elements of other organized forms; that the material substance composing the organism of "A." at his death may have been the constituent elements of hundreds or thousands of other human organisms at the death of such individuals; and as science teaches that no substance can occupy two distinct places at the same moment, the resurrection theory is essentially absurd.

And this in no manner conflicts with a belief in "materialization." In the light of science, I see no more absurdity, no greater mystery in the materialization of a spirit, so called, than I do in the growth and maturity of individual men and women, from the initial stage of their existence.

In the laboratory of nature, it may require the work of ages to perfect certain chemical compounds; while in the laboratory of the chemist the same compound may be formed in a few minutes, and as readily decomposed; and yet, there is no occasion here to cry "absurd." And while in the usual processes of nature a human organism is matured in thirty or forty years, yet the spirit, through its knowledge of the chemical and molecular laws of the universe, may, by controlling these forces, aggregate particles and molecules of material substance into a temporary material form, and thus produce, through the laws of nature, the well attested phenomena of materialization.

"The Old Man" seems to maintain the same attitude in relation to the empirics of to-day, that "Deacon Home-spun" did to the facts of science in his day. For, says the Deacon, "If the world turns over, my mill pond will be upset and all the water spilt out." The new revelations of science and new empirics cannot be interpreted in the light of old notions. It is the same to-day as through all the ages of the past. The church, through all historic ages, has cursed science at every onward step, because it was unable to reconcile the new empirics with its old effete dogmas. So there are many, who, in the name and garb of science, are ever ready to curse the new empirics and the onward strides that science makes. Again he asks, "Could it (the materialized spirit of Katie King) possess all the properties of matter, and not be matter?" I answer no. * Spirit is not matter, and by no process can it ever become such. In the strict sense of the term, a spirit is never materialized. But some spirits returning to earth, are enabled, through the laws of nature, to construct from the atoms and molecules of physical substance, a temporary physical body—a physical body as genuine, as visible, as palpable as your body or mine; and through such temporary body the spirit can manifest the marvels of its inherent power. The spirit, by aggregating to itself a material body, no more becomes material itself than does a man become a garment by clothing himself in one. It is only in common colloquial language that we use the term materialized spirit.

The fact that spirits survive the dissolution of the physical organism; that they return and communicate with those in earth life, and sometimes construct temporary physical bodies, are as well attested as any scientific fact can be; and no sneer, no cry of "absurdity," no assertion of "delusion," can controvert these empirics, can refute the testimony of these scientific men who have placed themselves square upon the record.

PUBLIC OPINION ON WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

EDITOR COMMON SENSE: The tide is turning as regards woman suffrage. By and by, when the atmosphere is warmed up enough, we shall see the clergy venturing out on our rostrums. Like greenhouse plants, however, they require a good deal of shelter, and are not calculated to meet or encounter storms. One hardy plant, however, came out on Monday evening, and I did not see that it did him any harm; indeed he bore himself bravely through the experience. The society sets out on its new career under very favorable auspices, with excellent officers and a nice little sum in the treasury.

Woman suffrage is now almost an accomplished fact, because it is a necessity, and a necessity which is every day pressing upon thoughtful minds; men as well as women. In view of this fact, which is so near us in the future, let me call upon women to be prepared for the troublous times that are at hand, when the great ships of state, with torn sails and creaking masts, shall seem about to plunge madly into billows which yawn to swallow her. Then will be your time, oh mothers of Israel! Men already begin dimly to foresee this, and will ere long look to the prescient inspirations of woman, divinely inspired now, as she always has been in times of great peril and emergency. They will look to her, I say, to light the beacon lights of divine inspirational light along the shore to save them from swift destruction.

The meeting on Monday, so harmonious, so well attended, and so hopeful, is an augury of good. Let me warn my sisters not to be too much elated by any apparent success. We sometimes have to be kept long in the furnace of affliction to do our best work. Gold, seven times tried, shines the brightest. Through evil report, and through good report, let us continue unto the end, fearing nothing so much as to be unfaithful to our highest convictions of right and duty.

E. HUGHES.

* When we say "spirit is not matter," we do not assert, nor believe, that it is a nonentity.

TRUTHFUL WORDS TIMELY SPOKEN.

We clip the following from a letter in the Banner of Light written by S. B. Brittan, editor and publisher of Brittan's Quarterly Journal, a magazine which is an honor to the cause it advocates, the very highest, ablest and best of spiritual publications. It is one that Spiritualists everywhere should be proud to sustain; yet it is allowed to languish, for want of pecuniary support, its editor discouraged, and his usefulness impaired by the apathy, not to say meanness, of those calling themselves Spiritualists. After referring to the failure of Spiritualists to properly support their best speakers and writers, forcing them into other occupations, he says:

It cannot be said, in truth, that we are either insignificant in numbers or deficient in means; but we do lack the wisdom and generosity to support the authors whose commanding talents would dignify and strengthen the cause, that is now only feeble and despised because we choose to have it so. Many of the most outspoken of our people contribute liberally to the support of outside publishers, and leave their own to go begging. I have been personally engaged in the public advocacy of Spiritualism twenty-eight years; and yet, when I now appeal to the spiritual public, by offering our people a Quarterly Journal—purely original in its contents—which commands respect from the press, in literary circles, and among scientists, and has elicited the most complimentary opinions at home and abroad—the meagre patronage extended to the enterprise falls far short of meeting the necessary cash expenses of the work. The Editor and his very able contributors have all performed their labors without the smallest pecuniary compensation. What has become of the principle of common justice? Where is the sense of shame, and the honest pride that most people feel in caring for their own? Thus a great multitude of believers turn coldly away, and dishonor the cause they profess to respect. They patronize the enemies of the great truth we have demonstrated. And for what reason? Why, merely—it would seem—to preserve the fellowship of fashionable society, and that they may hang a little longer on to the soiled skirts of a waning popularity. * * * * We know some Spiritualists (?) who possess large fortunes who perhaps do not contribute so much as five dollars a year to secure the triumph of their principles. They seek private gratification in circles, but are indifferent to the common welfare. In the public advocate they expect a fidelity that winks at the sacrifice of all temporal prospects, and will not shrink from cold indifference and certain poverty. And at the same time, if from the proceeds of a lucrative business, or possibly from an almost princely income, they take a paper or magazine at three dollars a year that costs the poor publisher all he gets for it, they often pride themselves on upholding the cause! And these people often support some clergyman who trims and spreads his sails to the popular breeze; they take a slip in a fashionable church, give liberally to send the politic priest to Europe, and squander thousands in selfish enterprises and riotous living. This is a great wrong, a bitter reproach, and to the guilty a burning and lasting shame! When the prodigals have wiser grown we may presume they will stop feeding swine and find a more honorable occupation in the Father's house.

Since service supplies our wants, and creates the improvements upon raw materials which are held for purposes of dishonest gain, working people are the natural sovereigns and benefactors of society.

FEMALE EDITORS.

The Christian Union has been asked "whether there are any successful periodicals in England or America, of which women are the editors," and replies as follows:

The Victoria Magazine, (London), is edited by Emily Faithfull, and Aunt Judy's Magazine, a very excellent juvenile published in London, is edited by Mrs. Alfred Gatty. So in this country Harper's Bazar is edited by Mary A. Booth, the trenchant Woman's Journal by Lucy Stone and Julia Ward Howe, the able and beautiful St. Nicholas Magazine by Mary Mapes Dodge, the Little Corporal by Emily Huntington Miller, to say nothing of local papers edited by ladies. In many offices ladies of ability hold subordinate places of great importance, as Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster, the principal assistant on Hearth and Home. Mrs. Swisshelm gained distinction in journalism; our correspondent, Gail Hamilton, edited Wood's Household Magazine for a while, and Mrs. L. G. Runkle is one of the very ablest contributors of editorial articles connected with New York journalism. There are innumerable lady correspondents, some of them, as Mary Clemmer Ames, having achieved distinction in the profession. But lest we should stimulate young women to plunge into journalism, we beg to add that not one man or woman in a thousand who tries newspaper life ever succeeds in doing more than gaining a very moderate livelihood, while the great majority fail entirely or succeed in making but a meager pittance. To most it is a hard calling, affording a precarious subsistence.

AN IMPOSTOR EXPOSED.—A young man calling himself Charles Rayner has recently been giving "seances" in Chicago for the materialization of spirits. He went to the circle-room of the Philosophical Journal, and the editors, after asking him to submit to tests, sewed his pants to the carpet; sewed his wrists to his pants, and sewed his coat collar to the back of the cabinet. There were no demonstrations, and finally the editor searched him. He examined his coat, his pants, his vest, his hair—nothing there; but his shirt—oh! he was sensitive, he wouldn't have that examined, it was sacred; underneath the garment, there were the utensils to make up his class of spirits. This nice fellow was stopping at Mrs. Carry's, in Chicago, where he held several seances, receiving enthusiastic applause. Poor fellow! he said the seances exhausted him "so much!" On information received from the editor of the Journal, this lady, while conversing with what purported to be a spirit, suddenly tore down the improvised cabinet, and there Rayner himself stood, with whiskers, wigs, etc., representing the spirit. He didn't want Mrs. Carry to kill him. She told him he need not fear that, as he was too low to dirty her hands with. She ordered him out of the house, and he went.

The Bible is a labor-reform book of the most radical stamp, favoring the abolition of property in land, of usury, (to the extent of decreeing the repudiation of so-called debts the principal whereof has been paid in the form of interest), and of all other methods of getting an income without work. Why are the clergy silent on these grave questions? Are they ignorant of the plainest teachings of their Bible, or do they think it unsafe to speak the truth? This silence is not creditable to either their heads or their hearts, and we wait to know whether the popular churches will continue to acquiesce in the speculative piracies which impoverish labor, as they formerly sided with chattel bondage.—E. H. Heywood.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

COMMON SENSE is furnished to subscribers for Three Dollars per annum, in advance. Letters intended for the Business Department should be addressed:

A. T. CLARK, BUSINESS MANAGER, 236 Montgomery st.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

Spiritual Phenomena—Medicus	136
The Materialization of Spirits—Jesse H. Butler	137
Heater Pryne—E. Hughes	137
"Wanted to Know"—Answer to "The Old Man," by Geo. W. Lewis	138
Public Opinion on Woman Suffrage—Mrs. Hughes	138
Truthful Words Timely Spoken—How Spiritualists Sustain their Publications	139
God in the Constitution—Lecture by J. I. Ferree	140
Henry Ward Beecher—Ed.	141
Free Conference Meeting—Ed.	142
Mediums' Seances	142
Book Notices	143
Woman Suffrage Meeting	145
Plymouth Church—Proclamation by Emperor Norton	146
Poetry and Special Notices	146

COMMON SENSE.

WILLIAM N. SLOCUM, EDITOR.

AMANDA M. SLOCUM, ASSISTANT.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, AUG. 1, 1874.

EDITORIAL matter is deferred to give place to communications and reports of meetings.

THE ARTICLES FROM MEDICUS, detailing spiritual phenomena which took place mainly in London, close with number nine, published in this issue of the paper. Next week we shall give the first of two communications of a similar character, written by Mr. B. Shraffe, whose well known integrity is a sufficient guarantee of the truthfulness of his statements.

THE SPIRITUALIST AT WORK, published by D. M. Bennett & Co., New York, is a handsome paper of 16 pages, issued each fortnight, at $1.75 per year, or $3 for the Truth Seeker in addition. Both publications are radical, progressive, well edited and worthy of support. Number 2 of the Spiritualist is an improvement on No. 1, which is a good sign.

DASHAWAY HALL DISCUSSION.—The Society for Self-Culture had a fine meeting last Sunday afternoon. The venerable and much respected gentleman, who was so long its President, opened the debate, by invitation, with an article of some length, in which he set forth the views of Thomas Paine on the Christian religion, with a calm dignity, and a conclusive logic that went home to the hearts of all present. The question for debate was: "Is the plan of salvation and the atonement by Christ the only means of eternal happiness?" Mr. Battersby was followed by other speakers, some on one side, some on the other, and all exhibiting a skill and enthusiasm in debate rarely witnessed in a promiscuous assembly. It is impossible, in our limited space, to give an outline of the speeches. Several professed Christians took part in the debate. Others scouted the entire Christian fabric as a delusion and a snare, untrue, unjust, indecent and immoral; and others still took a middle ground, accepting the teachings of Christ, while condemning those absurd and corrupt dogmas and practices which have been engrafted upon the Christian religion by the Roman Catholic Church. The discussion was very lively, and the question continued for further consideration.

GOD IN THE CONSTITUTION.

Our Sunday travel in search of heaven was interrupted on Sunday evening last by a desire to hear what James I. Ferree had to say on the subject of "God in the Constitution," before the San Francisco Spiritualists Union. The following is a synopsis of Mr. Ferree's discourse. He said in substance:

The attempt to recognize God, Christ and the Bible, as an integral part of our fundamental law, is a part of the old and never ceasing battle between despotism and liberty. The first struggle of these forces on this continent resulted in the independence of the colonies, the second in the destruction of slavery, and the third contest is now progressing between Christianity and Liberalism.

The head and front of this movement are the "United Presbyterians" of America, the modern representatives of the Scotch Covenanters of the last century; the main body, the Y. M. C. A., the Jesuits of Protestantism. They are in deadly earnest, and unless they are met with like earnestness and wisdom, they will succeed. Their success means the entire elimination of the democratic and republican elements from our government, the utter subversion of American liberty, the destruction of all our guarantees of freedom. They argue that the Constitution as it is, is godless, and must be changed, or the nation will be damned; that we are a Christian nation, and are utterly inconsistent in maintaining a Constitution which treats all religions alike, and which secures the same rights and privileges to Atheists, Deists, Jews, Christians and Free-thinkers of every grade; they holding that infidels have but two rights, viz: one to repent, and in case of failure in that, to be damned. They argue that the paying, out of the public funds, of chaplains in the army and navy, Congress and the State Legislatures, hospitals and prisons, the exemption of church property from taxation, the introduction of the Bible in the public schools, the appointment of fast and feast days by official authority, proves the nation Christian, and consequently the Constitution defective. We must meet them by affirming that the nation is not exclusively Christian, and that the government is neither Christian nor anti-Christian, but simply secular, and therefore these customs should cease, and thus conform the government to the Constitution.

Christianity and American liberty are essentially antagonistic forces; they will not and cannot live in peace on terms of equality. One or the other must, and will, dominate the other; and the sooner the lovers of liberty are awake to this fact the better. Christians must crush out Liberalism by civil power, by fines, imprisonment and the gallows, if need be, or give up the idea of endless torment for the impenitent, which will be certain death to Christianity.

The Bible idea of God is essentially monarchical, un-republican and anti-democratic, and hence a nation cannot be both Christian and democratic at the same time. Democracy is government of the people by the people for the people, while Christianity is governing the people by Almighty God, through Jesus Christ, for the benefit of the elect. We say the voice of the people is the voice of God. They say the Bible is the word of God. We say governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed. They say Almighty God is the source of all authority, and Jesus Christ the ruler of the nations. The lecture closed with an earnest appeal to lovers of American liberty to be up and doing.

HENRY WARD BEECHER.

Probably no preacher has ever attained a fame more wide-spread or better deserved than has Henry Ward Beecher. Christians have had abundant cause for rejoicing that Beecher was "chosen of God to teach men." They have looked upon him as one whom God specially called to stand upon the walls of Zion. Now that he has been proved guilty of some "irregularities," a portion of the Christian church are in favor of knocking him off the wall. This may be justice, from their stand-point, but it does not accord with the example set before them by the "Most High." Even if Beecher is guilty of all that is charged, still he is a better man than "righteous Lot," the father of his own grandchildren, and a perfect gentleman, compared with David, the "man after God's own heart." David caused the murder of Uriah, whereas Beecher, instead of trying to kill Tilton, calls him "my dear Theodore," and offers to furnish money for him to take a pleasure trip to Europe.

In relation to the Beecher-Tilton affair all the parties who know the facts of the case seem to hold back, and to indulge in special pleading, instead of coming out with a plain statement of the truth. The very air of mystery and reticence with which the principal characters approach the subject, and the homœopathic light they throw upon it from day to day, seems to indicate "some monster in their thoughts too big for utterance." Mr. Tilton says he has seen only two indications of extreme intimacy, but that Mrs. T. told him of the rest; that Beecher confessed his crime, and wrote a humiliating apology, and that third parties, Moulton and others, were called in, spoke with Mrs. Tilton and Beecher, and heard their confessions. Now here is a complaint, full, clear and specific, which cannot be negatived by averring that foolish women are in the habit of writing love letters to Mr. Beecher, and that Mrs. Tilton's letters were no more amorous than the rest. Any allusion to Tilton's family difficulties, and Beecher's advice under them, is mere special pleading, and only covers the case with smoke. If there had been nothing but this, there is no cause for all this agony and hanging back. Mrs. Tilton and Beecher deny the impeachment, and, of course, deny that they ever confessed so much; and now if Moulton and the others, who are said to have known these things, say they never heard either Beecher or Mrs. Tilton admit any such fact, why there is an end of all; but without this, the public must conclude that the charges are true. Delay, and long statements, and special pleading, look like an effort to whitewash, and tend to weaken the public confidence in the committee and its report. It is said that Beecher is not to be examined until all the other witnesses have testified. This is evidently an effort to favor Mr. Beecher; but Tilton and Moulton evidently do not intend to give him this advantage. Moulton wishes Beecher himself to admit the truth, and Tilton is endeavoring to compel Beecher to commit himself to a specific statement before bringing to bear the full force of his batteries. He reserves his fire until his enemy has exposed his weak points, and he is justifiable in doing so, as the course already taken by Beecher and his friends clearly proves. Had Beecher met the charge by a candid admission in the first instance, the generous world would have felt disposed to pity a great and useful man, who had yielded to a common human weakness. But should the charge now prove true, the shuffling and tergiversation practiced by Beecher and the church, and the effort to persecute the already too much injured Tilton, will come back upon themselves with ten-fold force. It will not be the first time that "a man after God's own heart" has forgotten his piety for a pretty woman; but it will be the first time that a great church and its pastor have been guilty of every grade of meanness and prevarication to cover the criminal, and heap odium upon his injured accuser. If this charge be now sustained, Henry Ward Beecher will stand before the world, not merely as one who has trodden forbidden paths, but as an unblushing fraud, who has put all the low artifice of falsehood and pretence before his church and mankind, while he assumed the sanctity of innocence; and from present appearances, we are led to believe that Tilton's statement is true. No man would lay under such a charge for a day if he could meet it fairly and honestly.

Since the foregoing was written a dispatch states that Tilton's friends, in order to bring the matter into the courts, have had him arrested for libel. The result will be that Moulton, Carpenter, Bowen, Miss Anthony, Mrs. Stanton, Mrs. Woodhull, Isabella Hooker, and others, who are said to have known the facts a long time, will be compelled to give their testimony. The end is not yet.

CONFERENCE AT CHARTER OAK HALL.—The conference last Sunday morning on the evidences of spiritualism was a spirited affair. The opposition is resolute and well represented, while spiritual manifestations by those who say they have seen and heard them, are attested with a clearness of description that would seem to silence all doubt. But it does not. After most respectable persons, one after another, have said, "I have seen these things,—I know what I say,—there could have been neither fraud nor trick,—I have seen, and felt, and conversed with spirits, and recognized them as my father or mother, or others,"—after all these asseverations, the doubters, with a stare of amazement, exclaim, "I cannot believe it! a thousand witnesses could not prove these things to me,—I must first see them myself." The question was laid over till next Sunday forenoon, at 10½ o'clock, and both sides promise to strengthen their works. We may expect a lively time. All are invited.

FREE CONFERENCE MEETING.

A few weeks since a number of persons, who had been in the habit of attending the meetings of the Spiritualists' Union, became dissatisfied with the Sunday afternoon meetings, which are devoted to seances under charge of Mrs. McKinley. They thought it more profitable, to themselves at least, to consider vital questions affecting the well-being of society, and they accordingly engaged Central Hall on Sixth street; but did not withdraw from the Union, whose meetings they generally attend in the evening. On account of gross misrepresentations, which were made in the Chronicle, the proprietors of Central Hall declined to rent it for their meeting; and they were compelled to seek quarters elsewhere. Last Sunday they met in a room in the rear of Charter Oak Hall. The editors of this paper were present, and can vouch that we never attended a more orderly, harmonious and interesting meeting. We were in error last week in speaking of the organization as a third Spiritual society. Although composed mainly of Spiritualists, it does not claim to be a Spiritual organization. The object is to present a free platform, on which people who have any worthy thought to express can give it in their own way, without limit as to time or subject, only endeavoring not to infringe upon the rights of others. They have no chairman, and are guided solely by their own ideas of propriety and courtesy. This is a mode of conducting a meeting which has never heretofore been tried excepting among personal friends or the members of a society, outsiders not being allowed a voice. Here there are no "outsiders." All present are members, and with such unlimited freedom it seems not likely that they will be long able to get along without a presiding officer. However, it has worked well so far, and if no unfriendly element comes in, it will probably continue to move along harmoniously. Certain it is, that the atmosphere of the place appears to be conducive to good behavior. The discussions have been conducted in the kindest spirit, and with the most courteous recognition of each other's rights.

The meeting on Sunday was opened by Dr. Swain, who briefly stated the objects which they were endeavoring to realize. Remarks were made by Mr. Healey, Professor Chaney, Mrs. Hughes, Mr. Pierson, Mr. Spring, Mr. Wild, Mr. Stowe and others, and Mr. Morse read an interesting article from the Banner of Light. We regret that we have not space for a report of the addresses. The social question was not alluded to by any speaker. The meeting to-morrow cannot be held in the same place, as the proprietor of the hall has been compelled by other lessees to deny the society its use.

When man becomes as wise as Nature, he too will come to see all things to be good, because he will see everything in its time and place. We need to have a great patience with the slow evolution of things.—A. W. Stevens.

Jesse H. Butler will discourse on "Beauty and Utility," at Charter Oak Hall, to-morrow (Sunday) evening.

MEDIUMS' SEANCES.

The two seances were held as usual on Sunday afternoon, one at Charter Oak Hall, the other at 911 Market street. Mrs. McKinley invited Deane Clark and Mrs. Kenny to the platform. The people were invited to send up questions to be answered. Mrs. Lena Clarke read the questions and Mrs. McK. replied to them. The following are specimens of the questions, with answers in brief: Will spirits materialize here in California? Yes. Does the materialization of spirits prove the miraculous conception? No. Are there bad spirits? No, not essentially bad, but undeveloped. We should endeavor to do right and to keep away from bad influences of spirits in and out of the "form." What is freedom? We cannot tell what it is so well as we can what it is not; but it is to do as we think right, so as not to interfere with the rights of others. Mrs. Clarke described various spirits, some of which were recognized. Mrs. McKinley said she saw the spirit of Mrs. Slade, deceased wife of Dr. Slade, of New York. She wants Dr. Slade to come to California, and give seances. She thinks his health would improve here. Deane Clark made a brief address, in which he said "Katie King" has promised to show herself in this city.

At Charter Oak Hall Mrs. Dieterly joined the mediumistic force, and added to the interest by clear descriptions of spirits. The other mediums were Mrs. Cummings, Mrs. Staley, Mrs. Hendee and Mrs. Wiggins. The seance was of unusual interest. At its close Mrs. Foye gave the ballot test. Some one proposed H. H. Hunt as the committee, but Mrs. Foye said the gentleman had had sittings with her, and she preferred a stranger. Mr. Hunt declared himself a skeptic, and stated that he wished to make the test thorough. He proposed to take the ballots selected by Mrs. Foye, and write new ones with the same name, and see if the spirit could again select the name when the newly written pellet had been thoroughly mixed with the others. Mrs. Foye declined to sit with Mr. Hunt, at that time, but said she would give him that or any other test in private. The seance then proceeded with Mr. Hoge as committee, and every test given was pronounced correct. Mr. Hoge was unable to discover any appearance of trickery.

WHATEVER IS RIGHT.—I am an optimist. I believe and am sure that there is no such thing as evil; that just in the same way as physical philosophers have long ago agreed that cold and darkness have no existence, but are simply "less light" and "less heat;" so, too, moral philosophers have got to acknowledge that what we call evil, aye, the very worst forms of it, are only "less good." I believe that this world is governed by perfectly just laws, and by a perfectly good and all powerful God; I am sure if I had been God, I would have made things just as comfortable for every one of my creatures as possible, consistently with their own best good; and I am not going to believe that God has done otherwise. We think things very bad down below here; but it is not so, it cannot be so; everything is going right. For either God couldn't arrange things better, or he wouldn't, or he didn't know how to; but as we presuppose his all powerfulness, and his perfect goodness, we must allow that it was because he wouldn't, and that for very good reasons of his own.—Don Fulano.

Book Notices.

THE NEW ERA.

THE TEACHINGS OF THE AGES: IN TWO PARTS—BY A. C. TRAVELER: BANCROFT & COMPANY, SAN FRANCISCO.

This book is written for the great suffering heart of humanity, and the writer is not only a humanitarian, but a philosopher. Broadly, we may say that the writer is a philosophic Christian, and the book should therefore commend itself to all classes of religionists, while the free-thinkers of all types and names, Rationalists or Materialists, will find food for thought in its pages.

The central proposition of the book is, that the second advent of the Messiah is now at hand, though whether he is to appear incarnate, as in the first era, or to come as an invisible glory and power to the hearts and souls of men, may be an open question; but the author claims that the ideas of the hour point unmistakably to the second coming. The age is active and expectant; some great event is about to burst upon the world. Among other proofs of this, the author claims as demonstration, the wide-spread spiritual manifestations of the day, these being the same, only with an accession of power and influence, as those that attended the first advent.

As there is to be a new dispensation, so there must be a new prophet to inaugurate it, and the writer assumes that this prophet has already appeared in the person of Emanuel Swedenborg, the "colossal John the Baptist of the new era, commissioned to bestow on the church the baptism of reason and of science, and to prepare the way for the second coming."

In this work, the organized church, in spite of its great sins of omission and of commission, is recognized as a necessity; as, in fact, the centripetal force of the moral world. Whether in the meridian age of glorified humanity we shall still need such organizations, the author does not clearly state; but it may be inferred that we shall not. To those who still hold with reverent faith to the Christian bible, because they have learned its lessons at a mother's knee, and it is associated with the holy memories of childhood and of home, it will be a satisfaction to know that this thoughtful and conscientious writer has not discarded it, but holds to it devoutly, while interpreting it philosophically, and believing it to be largely allegorical. In the Mosaic account of the creation, "days" and "weeks" are interpreted to mean days and weeks of the ages. Each day, therefore, is centuries of time, and thus the earth went through ages of preparation for the reception of man.

But that which to many will prove the most attractive idea in the book, is the doctrine of a dual god-head, or a Father and Mother God—an idea long entertained by the author, though other writers of late years have put it first in print. It is here avowed with an earnestness and cogency of reasoning which prove, at least, a perfect faith in it. What a comfort to feel that there is a Mother God, and that we weary, sorrowing children of earth can rest our bruised and bleeding hearts on the bosom of this Divine Comforter. The author elaborates this beautiful idea:

"God said, not to his son, as heretofore erroneously taught, but to his co-equal and beloved companion of eternity, the universal Mother, (or the Holy Ghost and Comforter,) Let us make man in our own image, after our likeness. And they were made male and female, after the image of the Divine Father and Mother God. Hence, we are the children of Deity, heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ."

Making a practical application of this doctrine, the writer claims that the hitherto false position of woman, even in enlightened christendom, has arisen from the inability of the world to recognize or comprehend the Divine Mother in the Godhead; "man, with his practical tendencies and absolute self-hood, seeing only a male Divinity, regardless of the Divine Mother, ever present in the subtle and elevating influences of the beautiful of earth and heaven." The writer looks forward, however, to the time—now, indeed, in a process of inauguration, when it shall be seen that woman, in her sacred office of maternity, represents the Divine, Universal Mother. But man's exceeding joy in discovering this, will be attended with humiliating and sorrowful reflections, and in his desire to redress her wrongs, he will render to woman more than justice.

The following are brief extracts:

"Let Woman herself awaken then to the subject of her own freedom in right action, and equal responsibility with Man for the improvement of the gifts with which she is endowed by Heaven, and become obedient to the voice of the spirit, or the impelling force of her own soul; remembering that God marked out no particular sphere for either man, or woman, independently of the revelation of His Will impressed on their hearts and minds, when he created and blessed them, and pronounced His work good. The All-Parent said unto both alike: Be fruitful and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it."

"And let it be remembered that neither the Childhood nor Youth of the World, nor of the individual man, are ages of philosophy; and that Man, as a sex, has been thus far unable to rise superior to the influences of education, and of traditional prejudice, and to view truth broadly from the comprehensive plane of cause which overlooks the wide realm of effects. And, for this reason, he has failed to award equal justice to Woman, either as a sex, or as a rational and intelligent individual, companion and friend. And, the mind of the present Era is so thoroughly imbued with the material and masculine tendencies of past ages, that it can only see in the direction of the old masculine channels and act through them. Even the professed Christian Philosopher still looks at Woman through spectacles borrowed of Pagan Sages. It is true that the Pagan was unable to penetrate as far into a future state of existence as the Christian is, who admits Woman to Paradise in her own proper person; but, the latter is still so biased by the narrow views of the former, that, while he generously accords to her equal rights in the higher life of Heaven, he obstinately refuses to recognize her claim to equal justice, while she remains a resident of the planet Earth.

In consequence of this partial and unphilosophical view of the Human Family, partial and unhealthy social conditions everywhere obtain in the world. We have Institutions of Learning, founded for the benefit of Man only—which are very liberally endowed by the wealth of both sexes, while Woman is equally in need of the educational light which they impart to the youth of the land. And we have large industrial interests, established for Man only; while Woman is equally in need of remunerative occupations to sustain herself and those depending on her efforts for subsistence. And, through all the ramifications of society, there is but a partial application of the principles of social science and of the deductions of philosophy, and justice is but partially administered. The grand universal principles of truth, broadly gathered from Nature and Revelation for the regulation of human conduct, are nowhere applied to human conditions and requirements, irrespective of sex."

"But, fortunately for all the oppressed members of the Human Family, male as well as female, we live in the dawn of a New Era. The World is approaching its maturity. The day of Reason is advancing. Its morning is already luminous with the Rising Sun of Righteousness and of Knowledge. All the forces of physical and of Intelligent Nature are vigorously at work to throw off old conditions, and take on new. The subtle Spiritual Powers of the Universe are radiating finer elements of soul-life, from soul-centre to soul-circumference; and these are permeating the mind of the age, and will be manifested ere long in higher types of Man and Woman, and a purer Christian Democracy."

"The Republican Government of the United States of North America was established on the intelligence, and consequent self-governing power of the people; and must therefore depend upon the enlightenment of the millions for its perpetuity. And, hence, UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE, on the basis of intelligence, is the only rational and consistent policy for our Nation to adopt, if it would secure public order, peace and prosperity. And it is the only policy which harmonizes with the genius of our free and progressive Democratic Institutions."

"UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE, on the basis of intelligence, would render simple justice to Woman. It would endow her with the vote, which is her natural right as a citizen of the State and as the progenitor of the Human Race. CITIZEN—did we say? Woman is not a recognized citizen of the country which she populates. Our laws ignore the individuality of Woman, the Mother of those who frame them. They class her, politically, with children, idiots, slaves and criminals. And, like these innocents and unfortunates, Woman has no right that Man feels himself legally bound to respect; and he measures her by her political instead of intellectual and moral status, in all his business and social relations with her, and treats her accordingly. We speak not now of exceptional cases, but of general usage."

"As before stated, women have been drilled all through the centuries in the belief, that the exercise of political rights would unsex and demoralize them. Large numbers of the unreflecting have accepted the proposition as true; and they have a natural repugnance and horror of being unsexed and demoralized. And, while occupied with this formidable objection, they do not see the falsity and injustice which underlies the assumption. But it is none-the-less a lie, and tyrannous wrong, although women are blind, and although usage and the prejudices of education cause both sexes to view leniently the monopoly of political power by the male half of the Human Family."

But, could the women of America understand that the Vote represents both material and moral power, and that they are really as legitimately entitled by nature to the advantages which it confers as men, and equally as capable of using it for practical ends; then they could no longer remain indifferent to the great question of political enfranchisement.

And, could the women of America understand that the Vote in their hands would command for them greater respect and consideration from men, who entertain a profound regard for the material and practical goods of life,—for the Vote and its considerations, citizenship, office and its emoluments, representation in the State, and station in society,—then, women would no longer remain indifferent to the question of political enfranchisement."

For sale by Herman Snow and A. L. Bancroft & Co., San Francisco. Price $2.50.

COOPER ON FINANCE.

We have received from the publisher, A. L. Bancroft, a small pamphlet by S. Cooper, of Eureka, Humboldt county, in this State, on the subject of National finance. It is just issued from the press, and is well worth the attention of the curious student of finance. We do not agree with Mr. Cooper in his general conclusion, though we admit that he is often logical, and has certainly given his subject a thorough dissection. He handles the new Senator from the State of Nevada, Mr. Jones, with ability; and is deservedly severe on a Dr. Bacon, of Yale College, who has written a letter on this subject. The Doctor got up quite a furor of theological indignation against our irredeemable currency, as though it had been a sin against the Holy Ghost. Mr. Cooper, we think, shows that a man may be a D.D., a president of a great school of divinity and a popular preacher, and yet know little of financial science, and have a crude sense of political justice. On the whole, Mr. Cooper's little waif is a curiosity. He thinks he proves conclusively some things which a sane man will find it difficult to believe; namely, that an irredeemable currency, always below par, is best for the country; that the more it is depreciated, the better it is; that the average American citizen would be supremely blest if he could only get a green-back with five dollars marked upon it for his day's labor, or bushel of wheat, though the gold value of the paper was only half a dollar; that this would be a most happy state of things, because we can have high wages, and high prices here at home, and yet export all our products at the lowest rates to foreign markets. We are persuaded that there is a hidden sophistry in this reasoning that can reach conclusions so utterly repugnant to common sense. The pamphlet is running over with food for reflection, and accurate history and statistics pertaining to the subject under discussion. We commend it to the attention of all students of our monetary system.

HENRY S. FITCH is now preparing a work for the press on the subject of a national currency. Some of the principles already enunciated by Mr. Fitch, although not likely soon to be adopted by the government, command themselves to the good sense of every plain, straightforward thinker; every one, in fact, not biassed by pecuniary interests in favor of our present complicated and nonsensical monetary system.

The Bulletin calls the comet a "rare bird," probably because it has such a long tail.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE INCORPORATED SOCIETY AND CELEBRATION.

One of the best, most harmonious, and in every way most satisfactory, Woman Suffrage meetings ever held on this Coast, took place in Dashaway Hall on Monday, the 27th inst., under the auspices of the California Woman Suffrage Society Incorporated. The morning session was devoted to the reading of reports and the election of officers for the ensuing year. The Treasurer's report showed the society to be out of debt and with a balance on hand of $850. The election for officers resulted in the choice of the following excellent ticket: President, Mrs. Sarah Wallis, of Mayfield; Vice Presidents, Mrs. P. Benedict, of Contra Costa county; Col. A. Heath, of Santa Cruz county; Mrs. Laura De Force Gordon, of San Joaquin county; Mrs. Watkins, of Santa Clara county; Mrs. Waterhouse, of Sacramento county; Mrs. R. G. Steele, of Merced county; Mrs. C. P. Sprague, of Yolo county; Mrs. Kellogg, of San Francisco county; Mrs. Boyer, of Oakland; Miss Sallie Hart, of Alameda county; Mrs. Latimer, of Sonoma county; Mrs. Hanly, of Sierra county; Mrs. Irwin, of Marin county; Mrs. John Llewellyn, of Napa county; Mrs. Davis, of Solano county; Mrs. Clara Gayne, of Mendocino county; Miss Eliza Taylor, of San Francisco; Mrs. E. Lloyd, of Nevada county; Mrs. Johnson, of San Joaquin county. Secretary, Mrs. Matthews, of San Francisco. Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. Wilson, of San Francisco. Board of Managers, Mrs. E. Pitts Stevens, M. Louise Wilson, Mrs. Dr. White and A. McKeon, of San Francisco; Mrs. Phebe Benedict, of Contra Costa county; Mrs. Isabella Irwin, of Marin county; Miss Sallie Hart, of Alameda county; Mrs. Watkins, of Santa Clara county, and Mrs. Dr. Waterhouse, of Sacramento county.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Brief addresses were made by Mrs. Roena Granice Steele, Mrs. Hendie, James I. Ferree, Mrs. Drinkhouse, Mrs. Roberts, Mrs. Wiggins, Mrs. Laura De Force Gordon, editress of the Leader, and Mrs. Boyer, editress of the Homestead. The latter declared herself favorable to woman suffrage, but thought the education of women would have to precede suffrage, as without education they could not know the benefit it would confer upon them. Mrs. Gordon did not believe in waiting. The demand for a right should not be delayed. There was no delay in giving the negro the right to vote on account of his ignorance.

Mrs. Boyer thought the local option movement had been a help to the cause of woman suffrage.

Mrs. Pitts Stevens replied, that without the prior movement of the woman suffragists, no local option law would have been possible, and no woman would have dared to go near the polls. It was just because of this demand for suffrage that women had been encouraged to do something under the Local Option Law.

Mrs. Benedict, who presided, called on Mr. Kimball, of Antioch, who responded in a quaint and comic little speech, and then promised that, if let off, he would recite a poem during the evening meeting. This agreement was ratified with applause by the audience.

EVENING SESSION.

The Hall was well filled. Mrs. Benedict presided, the constitution requiring the old officers to continue to serve till September. Mrs. Laverna Matthews favored the audience with a song and piano accompaniment. An article was then read by the Secretary, Mrs. Matthews, which was written by Mrs. Emily Pitts Stevens, in January 1869, being her salutatory as editress of the Sunday Mercury, afterwards the Pioneer, in which she declared herself in favor of woman's enfranchisement. The reading of this article was followed by an appropriate, eloquent, and in every way excellent speech by Mrs. Stevens, in which she gave an account of the rise and progress of the woman movement. On the 27th of July, 1869, five women organized the first woman suffrage society in this state. There were so few of them that each one had to take an office. Mrs. E. P. Schenck was President, and Mrs. Stevens was Vice President; Mrs. Coelia Curtis, Corresponding Secretary; Mrs. Hutchinson, Recording Secretary, and Mrs. Dr. Corbett, Treasurer. Fifteen were present at the next meeting, twenty-five or thirty at the third, and the fourth meeting was held in the museum of the Mercantile Library, with over one hundred and fifty. Mrs. Stevens spoke of the ridicule that had been cast upon them by the press and the people, and the gradual growth of the cause into respectability and strength.

Mrs. Boyer read an original poem entitled "Recompense." Addresses were made by Mrs. Hughes, Judge A. M. Crane, Rev. Otis Gibson and others, the speeches being interspersed with songs by Mr. Davis, and music on the piano by Mr. Kirwan. Captain Kimball gave his promised poem, on Adam and Eve, which elicited roars of laughter. The evening's entertainment closed with an address by Laura De Force Gordon, in which the circumstances leading to the celebration were reviewed. She referred to the fact, that she gave the first Woman Suffrage address in Platts Hall, in February, 1869, before an audience of about three hundred persons. Mrs. Wallis was the only woman who went on the platform with her. Now, continued the speaker, there is a deep seated conviction in the public mind in favor of woman suffrage, while ridicule of it is confined to the ignorant and vile of society. She maintained that without the right to vote, woman can never obtain equal wages for equal work, nor can they ever obtain justice in the courts. She particularly condemned the probate court system, which, ostensibly for the protection of women and children, is really a means of robbery.

As an illustration of the difficulties that are thrown in the way of women who enter vocations usually followed by men, Mrs. Gordon referred to the printing business, and to her own experiences and annoyances. She then spoke of the trifling way in which many women spend their time, crocheting, netting, embroidering, etc., even making worsted kittens with glass eyes, instead of spending their leisure in the improvement of their minds by reading or acquiring some useful art. She said if we are becoming a nation of pigmies, it is mainly owing to the inanity of the women, who have no noble aim in life, no high aspirations, no worthy thought. The address was full of good, sensible ideas, well expressed, and the meeting adjourned, all feeling they had had a good time.

IRREPARABLE.

BY MARY E. BRADLEY.

My heart was happy yesterday,
For on the hills the sunshine lay
In golden mist; and common things,
In the sweet bloom that autumn brings,
Grow beautiful, till every sense
Responded to its influence,
And not a leaf upon a tree,
But in its stirring gladdened me.

To-day the mellow sunshine lies
As tenderly along the skies,
And with as rare a splendor fills
The purple hollows of the hills;
But all the joy of yesterday,
And sweet content, have passed away,
Since in my hearing it was said
That little Muriel was dead.

I never loved the child too well—
That little pale-faced Muriel;
There was not in her looks or ways
The charm, indeed, to win one's praise;
And save the natural regret
For youth and death untimely met,
And pity for the mortal strain
Upon a childish heart and brain.

The news, for me, had never made
The glory of the hills to fade;
Had never caused the rustling sheaves,
And all the wind-tossed scarlet leaves,
To sigh with such an undertone
Of sorrow for my heart alone,
If I could answer, verily,
That she had borne no wrong from me.

Now, though I sought them tearfully,
They never can return to me;
And neither penitence nor prayer
That one injustice can repair.
His shadow will surround me yet,
And many a pang of vain regret
And haunting memory will belong
To this irreparable wrong.

PROCLAMATION.

Know all men by these presents, that we, Norton I, by the Grace of God, Emperor have read the records of the Beecher Tilton scandal, and are led to regard the same as one of those Providences of God that are so frequently found to pave the way to larger views, and more brotherly feeling among mankind, and to that unity of sentiment on the great subject of religious liberty that is so essential to our peace and safety as a nation. If we cannot all be of one mind, we must all remember that our neighbors have the same right to differ from us that we have to differ from them.

We have observed of late that some of our people were altogether too good to be happy themselves, or to permit others to be so. Among these may be counted the members of Plymouth Church, whose purity was altogether too sweet to be wholesome. An All-wise Providence has seen proper to humble their pride and scatter their councils, till no such babbling has been heard in the land since the confusion of tongues.

Now, therefore, we, as aforesaid, Norton I, Emperor, by the Grace of God, do proclaim and ordain, that all our good and loyal subjects, each one seeking for himself the kingdom of heaven in humility and simplicity of heart, do leave all others to do the same for themselves also; and that they do forever eschew and throw off all that pharisaical puritanism that is so irksome to themselves and so disagreeable to their neighbors, and become simply good men and women, judging not others, lest they be judged themselves.

It is the first desire of our heart to see our subjects thoroughly united in our church, and this can only be done on the broad basis of leaving every man to think for himself, and letting his life adorn his principles. God cannot be deceived. He will know His own, in whatever disguise they may be found. No subterfuge, no pretense, no outward forms, no certificate can seal His eyes. Many will say Lord! But to those only who have done right and showed mercy, and in His name fed the hungry and clothed the naked, and been especially mindful of the little children, will He answer, "here am I!"

God willeth not the death of a sinner, and the Emperor willeth not that any of his people should live except to repent of any evil they have done in the past, and to walk in the paths of righteousness and peace.

Given under our hand, this 30th day of July, A. D., 1874.

NORTON I.

But once, for something lightly heard,
I spoke a harsh and hasty word,
And blamed the child with bitter blame,
And covered her with sudden shame,
Until, dismayed, she crept away,
To sob and grieve the livelong day—
And yet, for any evil meant,
She was entirely innocent.

I knew it afterward, in vain,
And suffered such remorseful pain
As one must, in remembering
Wrong wrought upon a helpless thing.
But still, I set my heart at rest
With promises of wrong redressed:
"Some time," I said, "I will repay
All that she bore from me that day.

I will make glad with some surprise
Of sweets or toys, her childish eyes;
And my caresses, free and kind,
Shall blot the trouble from her mind."
I soothed my heart with plans like these,
With petty plans and promises,
Wherewith—since Muriel is dead—
I can no more be comforted.

Somewhere in heaven to-day she stands,
And, haply, lifts accusing hands
To God, who sees me here dismayed,
By reason of that debt unpaid;
And knows (as I know, too, alas!)
The opportunities let pass
So carelessly, wherein I could
Have turned my evil into good.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

From "Our Age."

We read with interest the articles of J. W. Mackie, published in the "COMMON SENSE." There is something in them unlike much we find in public journals. Truly, this paper speaks for itself, as its editor assured us it would.

[From "The Word" Princetown Mass.]

COMMON SENSE has at last got into journalism. Weekly, Edited by W. N. Slocum 236 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal. Well-printed, ably-edited, full of interesting matter; it is, what it claims to be, "A Journal of Live Ideas." Send for it.

From the "New Age," San Francisco, Cal.

"Common Sense—A Journal of live Ideas." This is a new enterprise started in this city by Mr. and Mrs. Slocum. The paper is devoted to the dissemination of free thought on religious and philosophical subjects, and however diverse may be one's opinions on such subjects, there can be but one opinion as to the excellent paper presented. It is creditable editorially and typographically to all concerned, and we wish it a hearty God-speed.

[From S. F. Chronicle.]

COMMON SENSE, the new paper devoted to free thought, Spiritualism, etc., of which W. N. Slocum is editor, has made a second appearance. It is a capital number, and its "make up" is a triumph of journalistic art. Typographically, COMMON SENSE is one of the prettiest papers in this city.

[From the San Jose Mercury.]

COMMON SENSE.—The second number of this new weekly is at hand. It is free from the imperfections of the first hurried issue, and is truly a superior number. We learn that some sixty subscribers have been obtained for the paper in San Jose, a number that will doubtless be increased to a hundred or more.

[From the Russian River Flag.]

COMMON SENSE.—A weekly journal with this title was started in San Francisco last week, with W. N. Slocum as Manager. The first number indicates that it will be an exponent of the doctrines of Spiritualism, but it proposes to open its columns for the presentation of all ideas entitled to a respectful hearing. Its platform says the paper "is intended to serve as a means of communication between rational thinkers and intelligent, truth-seeking readers—an advocate of morality, education, equal rights, labor reform, and all that elevates and ennobles the human race; an opponent of class legislation, church creeds, bigotry, intolerance, and whatever tends to degrade mankind and retard human progress. It will not be the organ of any party or sect, nor the exclusive mouthpiece of any man or woman, but will furnish a fair field for all opinions worthy of consideration, however much they may differ from those entertained by the editor." The friends of free thought will give COMMON SENSE a cordial greeting. Its subscription price is $3 a year.

[From the New Northwest]

COMMON SENSE.—We are in receipt of a Spiritual paper bearing this title, issued by the "Common Sense Publishing Company" of San Francisco. As a sectarian Spiritual publication, it is as prosy and orthodox as the "Watchman and Evangelist" and "Christian Reflector" are for the sects which they represent.

[From the Truth Seeker.]

COMMON SENSE, No. 1, Vol. 1., of a neat sixteen page Weekly by this title, published in San Francisco, is upon our table. It is devoted to morality, education, equal rights, labor-reform and whatever elevates and ennobles our race. It has a decided bearing towards the Spiritual Philosophy. We hail this young champion of mental freedom and the rights of man. We can hardly have too many advocates of the Truth before the public. It appears to be ably conducted, and we hope the Liberals and Spiritualists of the Pacific coast will accord it a generous support, and may it prove a success.

Special Notices.

For the very best Photographs go to Bradley & Eulofson's Gallery, with an elevator, 429 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

For a stylish and well finished Photograph go to Kinit's New Photographic Establishment, No. 26 Third street. All work warranted superior to any in the city.

Those suffering from that most annoying of the minor miseries of human life—a cold in the head—or from catarrh in any form, should try Dr. Evory's Diamond Catarrh Remedy. Just try it—that's all. Sold at this office, and by all druggists.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, NO. 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

COMMON SENSE can be purchased at the following places in this city: Patten's, 773 Market; Cooper's, 750 Market; Choyinski's, 146 Second; Snow's, 319 Kearny; Sharp's, 238 Montgomery, and at this office, 236 Montgomery street, up stairs. Price of single copies, ten cents.

AGENTS IN THE INTERIOR.

Contra Costa county	..... E. H. Kimball, Antioch
Inyo county	..... Mrs. L. Hutchinson, Bishop Creek
Monterey county	..... W. M. Wilson, Salinas City
Santa Barbara county	..... Mrs. Clara R. Crane, Santa Barbara
San Bernardino county	..... Dr. J. P. Greves, Riverside
Santa Cruz county	..... Mrs. Georgiana B. Kirby
San Joaquin county	..... W. S. Sturgeon, Stockton
Ventura county	..... J. W. Stevens, San Buenaventura
Yolo county	..... J. G. Hudson, Woodland

COMMON SENSE.

A Journal of Live Ideas.

VOL. 1.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, AUGUST 8, 1874.

No. 13.

Signs of the Times.

A German Society in New York proposes to put dead bodies through the cremation process for $8.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS is nominated by the New York Tribune as United States Senator, from New York, to succeed R. E. Fenton.

The experiment of providing trained nurses for hospitals, alms houses and families has succeeded in England beyond the hope of those who established the institution.

O. B. Frothingham says that although materialism was never so openly and so largely professed as now, yet materialism was never before so thoughtful, so delicate or so sensitive.

Because Tilton has threatened exposures which would endanger the outside respectability of fashionable society, the New York papers treat him as if he were a mad dog, to be exterminated at any cost.

Infant damnation having been abandoned by the Christian Church, the damnation of the heathen is soon to get the go-by also; then missionaries may stay at home. At least, Rev. Arthur Swazey, D. D. of Chicago, so preaches.

Although intemperance is apparently on the increase, yet there never was a time when so many people were temperate on principle—never a time when intemperance had so little control over the ruling brain and conscience of communities.

Kate Stanton recently visited the House of Commons, where ladies are accorded a gallery, with bars in front of it, away up on the topmost stage. This reminded Kate of caged animals. She was told that the ladies are not allowed to be seen, lest they would distract the members while debating! Still on the animal plane of development!

Frank B. Carpenter, the artist, is spending the summer at Homer, N. Y., which is his native town. Watson's Art Journal has a highly complimentary notice of his portrait of Mr. Greeley, which it says is the best ever painted, and one that, like Gilbert Stuart's Washington, will hereafter be looked upon as the standard portrait of Horace Greeley.

Mr. Loiseau, of Philadelphia, has invented a machine which, with the help of two men, will produce one hundred and fifty tons of artificial fuel in a day. The materials are ninety-five per cent. of coal-dust with five per cent. of clay, sprinkled during the mixing with milk of lime. The pasty mass is moulded into egg-shaped lumps; these are dried on belts of wire gauze, are dipped into a solution of resin and benzine, to render them damp-proof, and are ready for the market. In this way it is hoped a means of utilizing the prodigious heaps of coal-dust at the Pennsylvania mines has been discovered.

Miss Kate Stanton has gone to France to study the workings of M. Godin's Workingmen's Palace at Guise.

Spare moments are the gold dust of time. Of all the portions of our life spare moments are the most fruitful in good or evil.

The Republicans of New York will probably renominate John A. Dix for Governor. He will undoubtedly poll a larger vote than any other man that party could place in the field.

On the 18th of this month the people of Ohio are to vote on a new constitution, and they are to have a choice whether licences to sell intoxicating drinks are to be granted in that State.

An English firm has made a straw-roof sewing machine, which can turn out of hand from 1,500 to 2,000 square feet of water-tight roofing in an hour, requiring only two assistants to accomplish its task.

WHAT must we think of those who pretend to find the religion of Christ in our fine churches, with their smooth-tongued preachers? Christ denounced everything that these preachers do; and they do everything that He denounced. They are the shallowest false pretense of the age.

WHEN a man feels that he does not want to be honest and good, and so earn the kingdom of heaven by his own personal virtues, he joins a fashionable church, in hopes that by giving a few of his stolen dollars to the preacher, he may somehow evade the devil, and escape the punishment of the wicked.

Dr. Holland, in Scribner's Monthly says: "When we come to the real reason of the popularity of the men called heterodox, we shall find it precisely the same as that which makes Prof. Swing the popular favorite that he is. Their absolute freedom is their charm." This is radical teaching for a magazine that was started a few years ago to represent orthodoxy.

The Reno Crescent says: Take a first class engine down at Sacramento when the Legislature is in session and it costs, from the sworn statement of Governor Stanford, from $38,000 to $40,000. Just run that same engine up to Reno, without doing it the least perceptible damage, about the time the Assessor is around, and it depreciates so rapidly that it is put on the Assessor's books at $5,000.

Thirty-eight years ago, Abner Kneeland, the founder of the Boston Investigator, an infidel paper, still published there, was convicted of blasphemy in a Massachusetts court, and sent to prison for uttering these words: "The Universalists believe in a God, which I do not, but I believe that their God (aside from Nature) is only a chimera of their own imagination." Digitized by Google

REPLY TO A SKEPTIC.

BY B. SHRAFFLE.

EDITOR COMMON SENSE:—I wish to express my approval of a portion of one of Mr. Mackie's articles, "Skepticism," in which he speaks of our duty to doubt, to deny, and to investigate, until satisfied of the truth. They were manly words, which could only come from an honest, sincere heart; therefore I, too, question Spiritualism, Materialism and all other 'isms, until I have such positive evidence that I can doubt no longer; yet, while I am so skeptical, I am glad to say that I have had such overwhelming evidences of the fact of communion with spirits, that to doubt longer would be absurd for me. I thank my stars that I am out of this sea of doubts, and now sail on smoother waters; nevertheless I question everything that comes from spirits, in or out of the "form," just as closely as I did seventeen years ago, when I began my investigations into the subject of Spiritualism, and I earnestly urge on every investigator to do the same. Mr. Mackie's failure, I think, consists in doubting his own reason, and most inner convictions, as he says. What medium could convince him, if he does not believe his own reason? I am credibly informed he once saw a spirit form in a dark hall, some years ago, and was sure he was wide awake. In his fright he related immediately the occurrence. I hope they will frighten him again, and keep coming so often that he may get used to them, and may obtain that positive evidence that even his senses and reason can doubt no longer, and he too can bask in the bright sunshine of this blessed reality. My good brother says:

The devils and angels have gone the way of the gods, and no one suspected that they were only the spirits of their nearest kin, the very devils being ignorant of the fact. Elves and fairies too have gone, which is sad. Now, are we skeptics to blame if we hold ourselves aloof, watch with care, without deciding in matters strange and little understood, when the ages record such varied opinions? Of course, if it can be indisputably proved that the spirits of men and women can and do return and communicate with their friends, it matters little what past history says, but to the doubter it has great weight, and as yet remains unexplained, why they have been so long silent, when they could have so easily spoken.

But what evidence can it be to him even if they have or have not communicated in the past? I shall be most happy to give him some evidences, (but cannot do it in this article, as it would make it too lengthy) and prove to him that they have not been silent during the last 1800 years. Furthermore, how does my brother know that spirits can speak so "easily." Does he fully understand the laws of spirit control, and is he sure that mankind has always been as well fitted to receive communications as at present? Speaking of past religions, he says:

All these, like modern Spiritualism, have had inexplicable phenomena, "spiritual manifestations," on which their superstructure rested; have had evidence upon evidence presented that their system was true. Yet they are now discarded, even by Spiritualists.

Although the religious systems have been discarded, yet

Spiritualists do not reject the spirit manifestations of the past, but sift the wheat from the chaff from all religions, and only accept that which to them is good. It is true Spiritualists often differ in their opinions on account of the difference in their mental powers and developments, their early education and surrounding circumstances; yet they hold one conviction in common, namely: that spirits can and do communicate with mankind when conditions are favorable. They question the Bible, or any other book, no matter how musty it is with age. They consider they have the right to scrutinize everything in nature, to find what they are in search of—truth.

I know there are Spiritualists who swallow whatever comes from the lips of mediums, just as Christians accept what their minister says. They have not outgrown the old habit of allowing some one else to do the thinking for them, which is not strange. It cannot be expected they all should be thinkers. Modern Spiritualism had its birth but recently, and though its adherents are counted by millions, yet it must be remembered they come out from all sects and creeds, and, as a natural consequence, have brought more or less with them which colors their spiritual perceptions and ideas. The next generation of Spiritualists will be far advanced in their development, and in one hundred years Spiritualism will have accomplished for humanity more than Christianity has in eighteen hundred; because it will not only have purified religion of its dross and pretensions, but politics also, and literature and science, and will give them new life and vigor.

I therefore say to my brother: Keep on doubting and analyzing; do not accept the say-so of anyone until you have sufficient evidence of its truth. Follow your convictions, yet do not fail to listen to the "still, small voice" which speaks to you of the divine essence. This, modified by your judgment, will lead you safely to the green pastures, and ever-flowing fountain of wisdom, goodness and truth, where your skeptical mind will be fully satisfied in its longing and aspiration towards the Infinite Father of us all, from whence it flows.

HOODLUMS.

The San Francisco Chronicle, a staunch supporter of Christian morality, is calling attention to the great importance of suppressing the Hoodlum element in this city. The Oneida Community, which has been in existence somewhat longer than the city of San Francisco, has no Hoodlums, and no Chronicle. The causes that produce "Hoodlums" have not been admitted there. They have no whisky, tobacco, prostitution, land or other monopoly; consequently no poverty and destitution. Every man, woman and child having an equal interest in the property and in the individual and general welfare; no police regulations, no criminal lawyers, doctors or priests are needed; hence Hoodlums, Chronicles, social evils and moral and physical pestilences are unknown there; and if their example of unity of interests, community of property, and a universal education, were adopted in San Francisco, we should be spared the infliction of Hoodlumism, and such journalism as the Chronicle represents. M. E. M.

SOCIAL CLUBS INSTEAD OF HIRED PREACHING.

BY A. GAYLORD SPALDING.

A hundred millions a year is a cruel and burdensome tax on a domestic republican nation like ours, as the expense of hired preaching; and many intelligent individuals are adopting the free social club system instead, as a matter of economy. Every neighborhood may adopt that plan. Human beings are social, and require social or co-operative action; but a leadership of non-producing priests is not needed. That belonged to a former age of feudalism and kingcraft. It is our privilege to improve on old dead customs, in religion as well as politics. Our people should learn to do their own thinking, and dispense with the class who assume to do it for them.

The average cost of sustaining a single popular church cannot be less than two thousand dollars per annum, and a population of two thousand generally requires from four to six such churches. Taking this for the national average, the aggregate is immense; and, like every other tax, the burden bears on labor. It is a universal pickpocket system.

The financial managers of every church find their way, during the week, to the small pocket money of both saints and sinners. It is stated by authority, that of the three hundred millions population of christendom, one hundred millions never have enough to eat; and of our own forty millions, ten millions are constantly drudged to procure their daily bread. This in a world so rich, bountiful and productive! There must surely be monopoly somewhere. Yet these are the people that pay all the costs. Then add to this the endless government taxation, and it fully explains the upper and the undercrust philosophy. One class produces, the other—eats. One class are deadheads, the other—dupes. Churches are magnificent begging shops; and clergymen are the recognized high and respectable head beggars, and working men are the common victims.

Sectarian preaching is a service of ceremonies that returns no equivalent for its terrible costs. The art consists simply in the skillful handling of the Bible texts, which the priest shuffles as the gambler does his cards—the most expert hand always winning the game. It is a mistake to suppose that any truth is proved by texts. Ideas prove themselves by their own logic, the same as mathematics, and rest on their own intrinsic merits; and too much preaching of conflicting doctrines tends more to bewilder than to enlighten the public mind.

It is claimed that the church elevates, purifies, and preserves the moral order and integrity of society, and that vices and crimes are checked and repressed by its influence. But when we look at cities where church spires most do abound, we find that liquor saloons, gambling hells and brothels are not wanting. The more of one sort the more of the other, is the rule. So the claim proves a baseless pretension. Take New York, Chicago, St. Louis, St. Paul, and San Francisco for examples.

As to moral character, the preaching class may stand on a par with the average of men, or common sinners. In the midst of so many schools, lyceums, books, and newspapers, the clerical profession is entirely superfluous: since they have no source of knowledge not accessible to others, male and female. Free Sunday social clubs, with the lyceums, granges and industrial lodges, will supply all the benefits of gatherings called churches. And true religion is a true life, which is not helped by mummeries and flummeries, observances and creeds.

Champlin, Minn., August, 1874.

HERO WORSHIP.

BY B. F. FRENCH.

Let us question nature, and I think that we shall find that the idea of worship has, like many other things, been handed down to us from the dark ages, when people had very crude ideas concerning God and the works of nature. Who among us, that is intelligent, would desire to be adored? To every noble and intelligent soul such a thought is abhorrent.

John, the revelator, was rebuked by the angel whom he was about to worship: "See thou do it not! I am thy fellow servant, etc." See Rev. 22-9, and by referring to the sixteenth verse of the same chapter, it will be seen that this angel was none other than Jesus himself; and yet, with this positive command ringing in their ears, the so-called Christian world have been worshipping him for eighteen centuries. The evil of "hero worship" is that principles are lost sight of, and truth, the only thing which should command our highest aspiration, is left unsought and uncared for, while some individual is idolized and deified; thus mystifying the minds of our youth concerning the true principles of nature. This is also applicable to the worship of any mere ideal being. Whether deity be personal or impersonal, he must be subjective to law—must exist by virtue of law. He cannot be his own creator. If then he exists according to, and is subject to, law, he is, in principle, the same as ourselves; consequently should not be worshiped. If he has personality, possessing all wisdom, etc., our worship could not please him, for the same reason that it would not please a noble man, or woman. Again, if deity is impersonal, our worship could in no way affect him, save as it might affect ourselves, as being parts of himself; and right here another idea presents itself: If, as truly said by Pope, we "all are parts of one stupendous whole," which part shall worship, and which be worshiped? Certainly the lowest may not worship the highest; for it would only adore that which had ascended from its own self, or at least from its own condition. May we not reasonably conclude then that all worship, as understood and practiced by the large mass of professed Christians, is but a mitigated form of idolatry? and may we not reasonably hope that the day is dawning when worship, as now practiced, shall become obsolete, even as sacrifice has become among the most intelligent worshippers? I say yes, and believe that true worship will soon be inaugurated; which is simply a full and just appreciation of nature, and all her sublime manifestations; the expression of which will be seen in deeds of noble philanthropy, charity and justice, whereby humanity shall be resurrected out of its present ignorance, and all its consequent pain and degradation.

[For Common Sense.]

SCIENCE AND SPIRITUALISM.

These two things are wide apart, and to all appearance, always must be. Like oil and water, there is an incompatibility between them, and it seems to be insurmountable. Science rests upon well ascertained facts which repeat themselves invariably under the same circumstances. These are the essential tests: First, that the facts are incontestably what they are stated to be: Second, that the conclusions are drawn from them by inexorable logic: And third, that when all the conditions are repeated the expected results follow without exception.[1] Thus, the inventor of the steam engine observed the effects of fire upon water; he reasoned upon the facts till he solved out the idea of a steam engine; he tried his experiment, and it operated like a charm. These tests are all wanting in what are called spiritual phenomena. Those who see them are either incapable of scientific observation, or unaware of the nature of the evidence necessary to support a truth. The witnesses, who saw or heard, must report just what met the senses, just what they saw or heard, and nothing more. There should be no hearsay and no enlargement. To the legal or scientific mind it is idle to make reports in any other form. They are of no more force than visions or dreams. We smile when told that the great medium, Home, in London, went out of a window feet foremost, and round the corner of a second floor, and in at another window, in the presence of several very respectable persons, and yet not one name given. It is no evidence of anything. No truth can be established in that way. Why did not the respectable persons sign the document? It is the more necessary that the testimony in these cases should be above refutation, because, as spiritualists themselves affirm, these events are separate from each other, and repeated at the mere will of spirits. To be brought home to the intelligent mind, they must be supported by the same class of evidence that goes to establish a murder or any other crime. We have never yet seen this done.[2] Spiritualists are generally content to make such reports of what they do or see done as cannot command the respect of any logical mind. It is not necessary to pursue this branch of the subject further. Unless the facts are admitted or proven, there is nothing to explain; no new theory is necessary, and if it were, and the theory of spirits seemed to be the only logical one, it is yet outside of the third test of science, for these spirits will not come and act alike for us under the same circumstances; they have a self-will that baffles all our rules or appliances. We cannot hope for the same results from the same conditions. These circumstances create an impassable gulf between science and what is called spiritualism; and there can be denying that science is on the safe side of the gulf. However slow, it is the safe and sure road to the only truth we certainly know. We should not be wise to leave it for any imaginary air line. We have reference here merely to the physical phenomena. [3]

In reference to the mind, mediumship and spiritual communications, I see still less reason to admit the claims of the spiritualistic theory. Not that we say that it is impossible. On the contrary, all our opinions seem to favor the idea; but rather that it is not true, because there are no facts to support the claim. Believing as I do, most devoutly, that there is a God, a great spirit that rules the universe, and that man has a soul, an emanation from God, partaking of the great spirit nature, we could easily believe that these spirits could, or did, or do communicate with each other, and sometimes independently of the physical world. I see no impossibility in such an idea, nothing even improbable; but is it really so? That is the question. Are there well ascertained facts enough to demonstrate such a conclusion? I think not. Robert Dale Owen, in one of his works, has collected perhaps the most forcible catalogue of this nature. But they have only shown that in all ages, and in all countries, men and women have believed these super-natural legends, and readily recorded them. But that is no proof of their truth, or every form of superstition could be demonstrated in like manner. We do not care to cite ancient ghost stories. Unproved themselves, they can prove nothing. We must have some illustration from the light of modern times, some ghost story of our own day. [4]

As to inspiration, mediumship, trance-speaking, etc., they find no favor in my eyes. They come clothed with no attribute that commands respect or attention. God has placed us in this world with senses to perceive, a mind to think and draw conclusions, and an external nature to understand. By the natural exercise of these powers we have discovered wonderful truths, both useful and entertaining. We are discovering more every day. They are making us wise, and rich, and happy. We have far more to discover yet, with results almost inconceivable; and we are doing it diligently and well. All the pretenders to inspiration, all the mediums from the beginning of the world till now, have not added one jot or one tittle to our stock of knowledge. They have not discovered a new planet, a rich mine, a new island or continent, nor have they improved or invented so much as a wheel-barrow or a grindstone.[5] I listen, as I have repeatedly done, to their discourses, and I discover nothing to vindicate the claim to a higher source of information than common sense. And there should be something of this nature, or what is the use of inspiration? The inventor of the steamship or the electric telegraph, or the discoverer of the real nature of the solar system, might have made a reasonable claim to inspiration; but these people who repeat only what others have taught before them, can have no such pretension. I do not charge them with dissimulation. It is one of the vices of the age to strain our language to an enforced meaning, which, when we come to sift, has nothing in it. We are all of us too much given to this kind of semi-delusion. I remember discoursing once with a distinguished clergyman on the divinity or inspiration of Christ. He insisted upon it. I resisted the claim. But at last he said, "Why, you are a son of God when you do right; you are inspired when you have a beautiful thought." And I could say no more, only that if this is what he means by son of God or inspiration, he should let the world know it distinctly. Let us use plain terms. Figures of speech are not favorable to truth. They shade, they soften, they make agreeable; but they lack the sharp lines of real knowledge. There are no tropes and figures in geometry. Should we insist upon the use of words that are strictly defined, and have no ambiguity, half of our errors would be swept away. Truth is one, and there is one way to it—scientific research—and none beside. All pretended inspiration, all royal roads to knowledge, all short cuts or by paths that pretend to dispense with observation and reason, must be discarded by the votaries of common sense. And all spiritual phenomena, mediumship or inspiration, must be regarded with doubt and suspicion, till they can stand the tests of science, till they can vindicate themselves by uniform successes.[6]

LAKK.

BRIEF COMMENTS BY THE EDITOR.

1. With our imperfect knowledge of the laws governing spiritual manifestations it is impossible for us to know whether all the conditions are repeated or not.

2. This has been repeatedly done, but there are "none so deaf as those who will not hear." It was done in the very case mentioned. The witnesses were Lord Adare, and others whose names we cannot now recall. All the names were given in the account published by Lord Adare.

3. Whenever and wherever scientific men have candidly investigated physical phenomena, there has been but one result, a conviction that the cause, if not spiritual, is unknown. Some scientists have assumed to give the unknown cause titles such as odic force, psychic force, (soul force) etc., but this is merely naming something which is still left unexplained.

4. There probably never was an age so full of "ghost stories" as our own. The newspapers are full of them, and most of them are well authenticated.

5. This is simply untrue. Andrew Jackson Davis, when a mere boy, described planets the existence of which has since been verified by astronomers; mines have repeatedly been discovered by spirit agency, while the list of inventions by spirit aid is so large that no definite statement can be made as to their number. In fact, it is quite likely that a large proportion are the result of spirit impression. In comparatively few of these cases has the fact been made public, because Spiritualism has not been popular, and no inventor cared to run the gauntlet of ridicule which such a confession involved.

6. One reason why spirits do not tell us more than they do is that we are placed here to exercise our own reason, not to be blindly led by any power outside of ourselves, and there is no lesson so constantly dinned into the ears of Spiritualists as this one of self reliance and self development. This one doctrine, self culture, is the alpha and omega of the spiritual philosophy, and it is in order to fulfil this injunction that we seek to understand our own nature and to solve the mysteries of our being, physical and spiritual.

The dependence of laborers upon capital, having no sanction in natural justice or the Common Law, is the result of special class legislation which enables a privileged few to plunder the useful many.

"GOD IS LOVE."

BY PROF. W. H. CHANEY.

How beautiful the thought! Remember this is said of the God of the Bible, and by turning to that sacred volume on every page we find the proof that "God is love." Love animated the bosom of the God there described, when he made Adam. Being omniscient, God knew that he was making him so weak that the man would transgress; knew that Adam would be tempted beyond the power of resistance; knew that he would "fall;" knew all the suffering that would thus be entailed upon the human race in this life, with hell and damnation for their sole inheritance in the next. This is the Bible God. How infinitely affectionate it was on His part to adopt this programme in the production of man. Suppose, instead of selecting an inferior quality of "the dust of the ground," God had chosen the very best, (especially for making the heart and brain of Adam,) then the man might have been strong enough to resist temptation; the "fall" would have been averted, and no Savior needed. But gentle love swayed Infinite Intelligence, and man was made so that he must fall, entailing both temporal and eternal misery upon the unborn millions that were to come after him. How grand! How beautiful! This instance alone is sufficient to prove that "God is love;" but there are others, equally forcible, to which I invite attention.

Samson made a bet with the Philistines which he lost through the treachery of his wife. Then Samson growled about it, for even in those days gamblers grumbled when they lost. After recording the sublime language of this ancient sport, about their "ploughing with his heifer," the next utterance of the sacred text is in these words: "And the spirit of the Lord came upon him." What was that spirit? Love, of course, for "God is love." If the reader doubts, let him read the whole verse, Judges xiv, 19. "And the spirit of the Lord came upon him, and he went down to Askelon, and slew thirty men of them, and took their spoil, and gave change of garments unto them which expounded the riddle." That is to say, in plain English, the spirit of the Lord "controlled" Samson to commit murder and robbery to pay a gambling debt. Amazing pity, grace unknown, and "love beyond degree!" How clearly this incident proves that "God is love." True, it might not be discreet for any person, in these degenerate times, to imitate Samson, else God's children would stretch his neck at short metre, for God has informed them in His Holy Word, "My spirit shall not always strive with men."

But to be serious. If the "spirit," mentioned in the last sentence, is the same "spirit" that came upon Samson, it would seem that while it has partially ceased to "strive" with the Caucasian race, it still "strives" with the Spaniards in Cuba, with some negro tribes of Africa, with barbarians generally, and "Indians not taxed," who take the same rank as our American women. These are not a tithe of the evidences to be found in the Holy Scriptures which prove that "God is love."

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

COMMON SENSE is furnished to subscribers for Three Dollars per annum, in advance. Letters intended for the Business Department should be addressed:

A. T. CLARK, BUSINESS MANAGER, 236 Montgomery st.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

Reply to a Skeptic—B. Shraffe	148
Social Clubs instead of Hired Preaching—A. Gaylord Spalding	149
Hero Worship—B. F. French	149
Science and Spiritualism—Lake	150
God is Love—Prof. W. H. Chaney	151
A Word to Reformers—Ed.	152
Common Sense as a Reform Journal—Ed.	153
Healing the Sick—Ed.	154
Words of Commendation	154
Law versus Equity—Ed.	155
Reform Demanded—E. Hughes	155
The Materialization of Spirits—The Old Man	156
Spiritualism, the ultimate verdict of Science—Geo. W. Lewis	156
Mental and Spiritual Illumination—M. E. Morse	157
The Wallace Papers—Chicago Times	157
Poetry and Special Notices	158

COMMON SENSE.

WILLIAM N. SLOOUM, EDITOR.

AMANDA M. SLOOUM, ASSISTANT.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, AUG. 8, 1874.

SCIENCE AND RELIGION will be the subject of a lecture by J. L. York, before the Spiritualists' Union, at 911 Market street, to-morrow evening.

JENNIE LEES.—This lady, who has acquired a great reputation as an inspired speaker, has been engaged by the San Francisco Spiritual Union to give a course of lectures in this city during the month of September.

DEAN CLARKE lectured before the Spiritualists Union on Sunday evening last, on the uses and abuses of Spiritualism, a most excellent subject, and one which Spiritualists should more frequently have brought to their attention. By a mistake on the part of one of our friends, we failed to obtain a report of the lecture.

ADDIE L. BALLOU.—The friends of this lady will be glad to learn that she is meeting with success in Oregon, speaking to large and appreciative audiences. It was her intention to leave for Olympia this week, but she remained in order to assist in procuring a reprieve for a young man who was sentenced to be hanged at Salem on Friday. After returning from Olympia Mrs. Ballou will visit Salem again during the session of the Legislature for the purpose of influencing the abolition of the death penalty in that State.

Mrs. TILTON has made another statement, being a pretended explanation of suspicious circumstances. It bears on its face the impress of untruth. The committee, having by letter demanded original letters from Tilton, he replied that he offered them to the committee, and they refused to accept them. Now, having lost all confidence in the justice of the committee, he will keep the documents for presentation to a court of law. He states also that the committee have refused to take important testimony, and have published garbled reports of that which they have taken.

Some of the evils resulting from intemperance could be prevented if the natural appetite for pleasure could be gratified by cheap and innocent amusements.

A WORD TO REFORMERS.

Are you a reformer? Do you wish to see the great republic preserved for all time? Are you proud of being a free man, and do you desire to see the great principles of liberty handed down intact to the next generation? Then you must use your influence and your vote to bring about these results. First, simplicity and equal justice, in all our laws, to all our people. True liberty is inconsistent with complication and mystery. Second, the curtailment of officers, and official patronage. Freedom is endangered by a great army of men depending on the public purse, whether they are soldiers or not. Third, moderate salaries, and a simple republican virtue in all our officials. Men of wasteful and extravagant habits, or who do not live in strict conformity to sound morals, are not fit either to be makers or executors of the law. And fourthly, reduced taxation. It is a reproach to the cause of liberty all over the world, that high taxes, and financial corruption, are more rife in republican America than anywhere else. If you are a true and thorough reformer, you must lend your aid, heart and soul, to these things. It is with the people to inaugurate a complete regeneration of our government, or to permit it to go on in the downward career of fraud and extravagance, till our liberties are lost in the ambition of our public men to become wealthy at any sacrifice. But to be a true reformer, and to hope to succeed in the work, you must begin at home; you must first reform yourself. If you cannot clean out the little frauds and corruptions of your own nature, how shall you purge the great commonwealth? In other words, if you cannot cast the beam out of your own eye, how shall you see to cast the "Credit-Mobilier elephant" out of the optics of "ye congressman." Therefore reform yourself first. Lessen your own taxes. Dispense with your liquor and tobacco, and reduce other expenses to a reasonable rate. See to the just administration of affairs in [your own family, and your own town. Then you may try your hand with some hope of success on the State and Nation. But if you cannot restrain and reform the little kingdom of self, you will labor in vain in the wider fields of national affairs.

THE THIRD TERM.—It is ridiculous! It is impossible! The thought of it is a violation of our traditions, and a menace to the republic itself. Washington and Jefferson sat in that chair but twice; and no man will ever be found whom the people will honor above them. Besides, we need a change. Some of the most gigantic frauds known to history have been perpetrated in General Grant's last term, and though he may not have participated in them, he has permitted them without a word; and has lent no hand to their exposure or punishment. We want a President who will neither steal nor permit his subordinates to do so.

When President Grant wishes to consult his cabinet, instead of going to Washington, he coolly orders them by telegraph to come to him at Long Branch and they come, the whole seven of them, for they are just the flunkies Grant believed them to be when he appointed them.

COMMON SENSE AS A REFORM JOURNAL.

Woodhull & Claflin's Weekly, in an article on reformatory journalism, speaks of the numerous attempts to establish reform papers in a field already occupied. It says:

So long as there are papers open to the advocacy of whatever subject, it is unwise on the part of anybody to attempt to float another in the same channel; but when one has ideas which he or she cannot get before the public in any existing papers, then it is eminently proper to publish a new paper to cover the deficiency.

As COMMON SENSE was started to meet what was believed to be an imperative demand for a liberal reform journal on this coast, there being no paper of the kind published here, we do not take to ourselves the strictures which the Weekly evidently intends for some particular enterprise. It adds:

We know very well that the papers now being published in the interests of reform are not properly supported. The radicals of the country are actuated by entirely different motives from those that insure the support of the secular and religious press; and they do not feel it to be any duty of theirs to contribute to anything for any other reasons than that they want it for their own benefit. Now just here is the dangerous point in the whole matter, which ought to enter into the consideration as to whether any new enterprise should or should not be supported. A half dozen papers may, in the advocacy of various reformatory ideas, be supported well, when if there were double that number all of them would be in constant danger. This fact was well illustrated among the Spiritual Press. The Spiritualists of the country will support two representative papers, but they would not support five. The Weekly was an entirely new departure in journalism. It was started to advocate all kinds of reform, and laid hold of Woman Suffrage, Labor and kindred subjects from the outset. Before its advent no Spiritualistic paper had adopted these subjects as legitimate parts of Spiritualism; nor had any Labor papers adopted woman suffrage. So the Weekly did not trench upon any already established paper. And when the question of Social Freedom was sprung upon the public, it had a special, and at that time, independent position to fill and to maintain, while fulfilling its original purpose as the vehicle for the fullest and freest discussion of all subjects whatever.

The Weekly circulates largely in California, and is highly esteemed, it being the only paper of its class in the world. It is fearless in the expression of facts, able in its treatment of all subjects it discusses, and certainly exerts great influence on public opinion. While COMMON SENSE does not endorse all of its ideas, nor approve all its methods, it willingly accords to it a leading position among the radical reform journals of the day. The Weekly concludes its article as follows:

So far as our personal wishes are involved we should be glad to see a hundred new radical journals spring into existence, if they could be maintained, but we should be sorry to see any added to the present number, to occupy the ground and advocate the principles already covered, if by such addition the lives of any that now exist, which, by reason of the good they are doing, ought to continue, should be endangered.

It will probably gratify the patrons of COMMON SENSE to learn that this paper is now so well established that there is no longer danger of its failure. We have had a very difficult task to bring it to this point; and there were times when its prospects were dark indeed. The freethinkers of California, especially the Spiritualists, are much divided in sentiment on various questions which it would be cowardice to ignore, yet which could not be treated without raising bitter antagonisms. The Local Option Law, Woman Suffrage, and above all the social question, meet within the ranks of reformers most earnest support and rancorous opposition. It has been our desire to harmonize as much as possible all the elements of reform, without losing sight of reform itself; we have therefore endeavored to treat all subjects fairly, hearing both sides, presenting facts for consideration, and allowing readers to draw their own conclusions. We believe that this course has satisfied the majority of our supporters. A few, who were too intolerant to listen to the truth, have withdrawn their support; but many others, desiring to sustain an honest independence, have come to our aid. The editors of COMMON SENSE are unequivocally in favor of woman suffrage; but the columns of the paper are open to any opponent of the proposition; so also are we favorable to temperance and social reform; but the best methods of bringing about these reforms are as yet open questions, concerning which every earnest, honest reformer should have a voice, and should receive fair treatment. We do not hesitate to say that our opinions on these and other subjects will undoubtedly change with the constantly changing phases of the times. Whoever boasts that he is to-day what he was one year ago, prides himself on the lack of growth. Whatever else we do, we hope never to stand still. It is better to lose one's way temporarily, learning the better path by experience, than to make no headway at all.

When Mrs. Woodhull came to California, she met from the press generally very unfair treatment. All she said which was worthy of consideration was ignored, while the few injudicious words which occasionally dropped from her lips were caught up, and magnified and distorted, so as to present to the public a grossly incorrect idea of her teachings. COMMON SENSE, without approving all Mrs. Woodhull said, endeavored to give, within the limited space its columns afforded, a fair statement of her sentiments, and of the manner in which they were received by her hearers. We did not advocate "Woodhullism;" we merely presented a picture of the advocate,—a truthful one—as it was our duty to do; but for this we received some abusive letters, and lost a few subscribers who have not the justice or the ability to analyze what they read. We have no regrets for the course we took; and perhaps should not have, even had the paper failed; for if we cannot publish the truth and live, we are content to die; and this will be our constant rule of action. We will be true to ourselves, true to principle, hearing all sides, and judging of the right as well we may be able, trusting every day to grow into larger and juster views, and holding ourselves in readiness to declare these views as we may become convinced of their expediency, and of the fitness of the people to receive them.

"HEALING THE SICK."

The changes produced by Spiritualism, in breaking up old modes of thought and established practices, are in no department more noticeable than in that of medicine. Its reformation here is little less than revolution. People are using less and less of drugs, depending more and more upon good nursing, bathing, diet, magnetism and the action of nature itself as a curative agent. Our magnetic and clairvoyant physicians, although still sneered at by the old school practitioners, are by far more successful than the regular faculty. They have even intrenched on the field of surgery, curing by simple treatment, and without the use of the knife, patients who a few years since would have died, or been maimed by amputation. There are a score or more of these physicians of nature in this city, and others are constantly establishing themselves here. Among the latter are Dr. Bancroft, of No. 204 Montgomery street, formerly of Wisconsin, a man of great magnetic power, a thoroughly educated physician, one whose advent among us will be welcomed even by those of his own profession. Dr. Ruttle, of 745 Mission street, has cured some desperate cases. One of his patients called on us recently, and if the facts were as he stated, and we have no reason to doubt, the man had been snatched from the very clutch of death. He is now apparently as strong and healthy as the best of us. Mrs. A. W. M. Bartlett, formerly of Vineland, has also recently come to this State, and will soon locate in San Francisco. Female physicians seem to predominate among Spiritualists. There are a large number in this city, (see their cards on the inside cover,) all of them gaining a fair support, and yet many cases are treated by advice from abroad. There is something wonderful about the curative powers of some of these "healers," and the subject is certainly worthy the attention of scientific men. For instance, Mrs. C. M. Morrison, of Oswego, New York, a lady who is totally blind, has within the last year (or her spirit guides have for her) diagnosed over twelve hundred case of disease from locks of hair, sent to her by letter, the result of the prescription being in many cases a permanent cure. She does not pretend to have any power herself, except as an instrument for the spirit physicians. Now why is not this a case for the scientists?

CHARTER OAK HALL.—The conference on Sunday morning was well attended, and the discussion on the rationality of the belief in Spiritualism was spirited. In the afternoon the medium's conference was crowded, and more tests were given than at any previous seance. Mrs. Hammond gave the "Little Child Dirge," and the song "To Mother," both very sweetly sung. In the evening Jesse H. Butler spoke to a large audience, his subject being "Beauty and Utility." (We shall give extracts next week.) The lecture was listened to with much attention, and the speaker warmly applauded. At its close a song, "The World is full of Beauty," was sung by Mrs. Hammond, and a poem on "Beauty," by Miss Daten, was finely read by Mrs. Ada Foy.

WORDS OF COMMENDATION.

On the last page of this week's issue will be found a number of extracts from the press commendatory of COMMON SENSE. Not intending to republish such notices, we have retained copies of a few only, and will esteem it a favor if our friends will send a copy of any paper containing a notice. We do not like the idea of republishing complimentary notices, but some of the stockholders and many friends seem to think it good policy to do so, and we defer to their judgment. Thanking our friends kindly for the many good words they have given us through the press, and by letter, we shall continue to endeavor to deserve all the commendation they have bestowed. Letters, written not for publication we do not feel at liberty to quote from, but we have permission to use the following, from persons whose judgment is not only mature, but who have had much experience as writers: E. H. Haywood, editor of The Word, Princeton, Mass., says: "I am glad to see so able an exponent of Free Thought on the Pacific Slope, and will gladly do what I can to introduce it here."

Mrs. Georgiana B. Kirby, of Santa Cruz, writes: "I am delighted with COMMON SENSE. It has fulfilled my best hopes. It is keen and bright, free and tolerant, with nothing in it that is weak or trashy. I should feel it a loss to the community if it should have to suspend. All who have taken it here are pleased with it."

J. L. York writes: "Your paper is just the thing. Neat in appearance, tolerant in opinion, liberal in its views, and admirably calculated to fill that part of the journalistic field, the Free Thought corner, which has been so long neglected in this State."

J. F. England, of Somersville, writes as follows: I am delighted with the paper, it is truly a journal of live ideas, and it is the very thing that we have been in need of on this coast. I like the platform, and indorse the principles that it advocates, and I think it deserves the support of every liberal minded man and woman on the coast. Mr. Sellers' defense of atheism particularly is an able article. It is sad to think that the press of California generally is so enslaved by old theological dogmas as to refuse the publication of such admirable articles. But the tide is turning, and ere long the people will be found to acknowledge Common Sense and reason as the only true guide. Put my name down for the journal, and send me all the back numbers for I wish to have it from the commencement.

In a work entitled "The Night side of Nature" by Mrs. Crowe, an English authoress of some note, which book was reprinted in this country in 1853, may be found a narrative of Spiritual Manifestations which are almost a parallel to those at Oakland. These annoyances occurred in the Castle of Prince Hohenlohe in Silesia, in 1806, and the account is given by Councillor Hahn of Ingelfingen, who was himself a witness. The manifestations were made the subject of careful investigation by scientific men, whose conclusions were wholly different from those of the savans of Oakland.

LAW VERSUS EQUITY.

Auguste Huncleker, while in a drunken fit, in this city, a year ago, brutally murdered his mother. He was indicted for manslaughter, and a jury empaneled to try him; several witnesses testified, when the Judge decided to send the case back to the grand jury for reindictment, the offence being evidently wilful murder or nothing. He was reindicted, but on appeal to the Supreme Court, that tribunal has ordered his discharge on the ground that he cannot be twice placed in jeopardy for the same offence, so a murderer, never fully tried, is turned loose on the community on a mere technicality, and this is called law! In this case it so happens that the result is the best possible thing for the accused and for society, Huncleker being a bad man only when crazed by drink; and the lesson already received will probably prove an effectual one, but this does not mitigate the evil action of a court which lets the guilty go free not on the ground of mercy, but merely because the judge of an inferior court did something which is not just according to rule. The fact is, what is called law is a jumble of conflicting technicalities, in which justice has very small part. It is a dead body, the remains of old Roman and English statutes, from which the life has long since departed; yet, in the estimation of all thoroughbred lawyers, the decaying carcass is of more account than the once living spirit—hence the decisions of which this is a specimen.

THE MATERIALIZATION OF SPIRITS.

The reply of Mr. Lewis sets at rest the doubts I have hitherto entertained respecting the (rather) wonderful things related in the Arabian Nights, and in the stories of Cinderella, Puss in Boots, and the Invisible Prince. No doubt they were accomplished by some spirit, "through its knowledge of the chemical and molecular laws of the universe." It was far less difficult (for instance) to construct Aladdin's palace in a single night than to make a human body in five minutes; and if "the atmosphere contains all that is in the composition of the natural body," as Mr. Butler asserts, it is reasonable to suppose that the materials for a palace are at hand also.

It is a gratifying reflection, but I haven't time to dwell on it.

Many, very many, of those who have candidly investigated Spiritualism, have come to the conclusion that there is a something that is strange and inexplicable at the bottom of it; but it seems to me that the mass of Spiritualists are running it into the ground. They are swallowing bigger and bigger stories, without question, and the time will come when their stomachs will revolt and they will reject the whole thing in disgust.

THE OLD MAN.

Harry Andrews, the well known manager of Woodward's Gardens, is to have a benefit to-day, Saturday, August 8th, and all his friends should visit the gardens. Unusual attractions are advertised.

REFORM DEMANDED.

Adolph Sutro has recently given in this city a course of lectures explanatory of his great tunnel project, illustrated with diagrams and pictures thrown on a canvas by means of a magic lantern. The lectures were intensely interesting and highly instructive, but the speaker was compelled by the facts to speak disparagingly of certain members of mining rings, whose business it is to rob the people, and because of these reflections on the character of monied men the press of the city has taken very little notice of Mr. Sutro and his lectures.

For years our Self Culture Association at Dashaway Hall came under a similar ban of the press. It stigmatized the efforts of the people to cultivate themselves by exchanging ideas on religious, literary and social subjects once a week, as it now attempts to stigmatize and ridicule a recent effort made in the same direction. Our Self Culture Association was a lasting educational benefit to those connected with it; more than that, when innocent men—the sailors of the "Sunrise"—witnesses in a criminal suit, were dragged in irons through the streets, like felons, in all this great city of the west not one voice was heard petitioning the General Government against the outrage, and asserting the rights of individuals, excepting our poor little society; and its voice was heard at Washington, and Marshal Morris lost his official head in consequence. Freedom is always feared by tyrants, particularly when women are mixed up with the effort made in its behalf, that being considered a double outrage on the tyrants themselves, and on one of their gods, custom or conventionality, to which good women are nowadays refusing to burn incense. The infamy of being a free woman is almost equal to that which used to attach to a free-thinker; but we are fast outliving all this, and a fossil press and fossil institutions will recognize it ere long. We trust that our State will free itself from its press-ridden, gold-ridden incubus, and take an equal rank with the Eastern States in behalf of justice and freedom for all.

E. HUGHES.

FROM SAN BERNARDINO.

Mrs. M. C. Wills, of San Bernardino, writing under date July 27th, after congratulating the editor on the happy selection of a name for the paper, COMMON SENSE, says:

Here, in San Bernardino that part of our people called the Liberal element, has been slumbering, for months, and bid fair to die a natural death, till the arrival of Brother J. L. York among us, who, with his clear Logic, Eloquence, and convincing arguments, has awakened us to life again. It is impossible in these few lines, to give my idea of the amount of thinking and agitation Mr. York caused while here. I can only refer you to the public press of this place to give you a proper conception of the impression made, and what is better left, on the minds of the people. Mr. York will be warmly welcomed by many true friends on his return this winter. Keep him before the people, for he is doing a mighty work in revealing the hideousness of ignorance, and the beauty of Science and knowledge. Yours truly, for free thought and "Common Sense."

SPIRITUALISM, THE ULTIMATE VERDICT OF SCIENCE.

EXTRACTS FROM A LECTURE BY GEORGE W. LEWIS.

The very interesting and instructive discourse by Mr. Lewis on this subject is to be published in pamphlet form. Through the kindness of the author we are enabled to make the following extracts:

Materialism denies the existence of spirit and the facts of immortality. It denies the survival of a conscious, intelligent existence beyond the dissolution of the physical organism, and it pretends to predicate its philosophy on the basis and authority of scientific induction on the immutable and eternal laws of the physical universe.

* * * * *

It postulates the entire range of terrestrial and cosmic phenomena, upon the particles and molecules of matter under chemical and molecular action. It denies that underlying the outward world of ephemeral forms, of ever shifting effects, there is a world of permanent and all-enduring causes.

Here Mr. Lewis said that as Materialism postulates that all phenomena, not only of the physical world, but also of life, intelligence and consciousness, depend upon the physical forces, he would examine the laws which govern the mineral, vegetable and animal kingdoms. The main portion of his lecture consisted of this examination, during which numerous quotations were made from the writings of scientists. Mr. Lewis then said:

Standing, then, upon the ultimate facts of science, namely, the eternal existence of matter, of force, and of motion, we can arrive at no other conclusion than this, that in the universe there is as vast a series of ultimate forces, as in the world of matter there is of organized forms; and it is the eternal province and function of these forces to operate and run in series and systems, wielding, moulding and shaping matter into its vast infinitude of forms. These are not only the molecular and physical forces that move atoms, particles and molecules of material substance, but "above and behind" these are the organizing and directing forces that control and manipulate the physical and subordinate forces, binding and holding them into series and systems, and thus causing them, in their actions and operations, to culminate into the specific form of mineral, plant or animal. These organizing forces, which, through their automatic and autodynamic actions, control and direct the physical forces and affinities, building up the infinite and amazing variety of architecture throughout the entire range of the mineral, vegetable and animal worlds, are ultimate facts of the universe, eternal, uncreated and unending. These constitute the world of causes. The physical phenomena and forms constitute the world of effects. And wherever protoplasm or material substance exists in the proper condition, these organizing forces, invariably, by the inherent law of their existence, mould it into forms of living beauty. On this principle alone can we account for crystalization; on this alone can we account for the commencement of organized life on the planet.

* * * * *

And thus carrying forward and maintaining the argument through all gradations of nature, the only reasonable conclusion remaining for us is, that the spirit, soul, or life, of man is an ultimate fact of the universe—the specific organizing power—which, through its autodynamic and automatic actions, controls the physical laws and forces, and seizes upon the material in proper conditions, moulding it into the physical form of man. Standing, then, upon the fundamental principles of science, we are driven to the conclusion that life, soul, spirit, called by whatever name, is one of the ultimate facts of the universe, uncreated and eternal, existing through all duration, without beginning, and without end. It is invisible and imponderable substance, having within itself the inherent and eternal power to move. It not only has the inherent power to move—for the physical forces have this power—but it has the inherent and eternal power to guide, direct and control its motions and its actions. It has the power to control, regulate and modify the physical forces and affinities. Coeval with matter in existence, and coeval with eternity in the number of its days, it ever passes the round of its long progression, and ever operates through both the conscious and unconscious powers of its being, upon the substance and material around it; and ever clothes itself in a garment, or body, out of the material of its surroundings and environment. It ever passes through its mighty cycles; throws off its covering or body, and passes on to other spheres of existence and progression. Standing, then, with our feet firmly planted upon the everlasting rocks of the ages, standing firm and sure upon the immutable laws and principles of science, we can meet the Materialist upon his own ground, and fight him with his own weapons. We can give a reason for the hope within us. We can hurl defiance into the jaws of death.

"THE HOMESTEAD."—This is an eight page monthly, published in Oakland for the edification of California women. It declares itself, "a literary journal for women—woman as a maiden, wife and mother; woman in the home, in the school room, and in the world of work." This is all very well; but woman will never be able to obtain justice in the "world of work," nor in any other capacity until she becomes a power at the ballot-box. This is a fact which the Homestead seems to overlook, and the following is all "Dora Darnmore" could say of the Woman Suffrage Convention held in this city last week, and in which she took a prominent part:

On the 27th of July, that being the fifth anniversary of the California Woman Suffrage Society, the occasion was celebrated by a meeting of the friends of the cause at Dashaway Hall, San Francisco. The work of the Society during the past five years was reviewed; interesting addresses were made, and officers were elected for the ensuing year.

Does any one wonder that so many are indifferent to church institutions, or at least that they mix common-sense with their religion, diluting it so that the sulphur-taste is wholly gone, and hardly now perceptible in the most rigid churches; that religion, like some diseases, is now of a milder character than formerly, and that even the saving of souls is not the object of church associations, which are more for social intercourse and worldly prosperity? Their distinctive features are kept up, but without regard to logic or consistency; no one can tell the difference between saints and sinners, ecclesiastically speaking, in the daily walks of life.—John Wetherbee in the Index.

CHRIST himself never pretended to divinity. On the contrary He disclaimed it on all occasions. But after his death, his followers pretended to worship him, instead of following his counsels, and our churches are all doing the same to this day.

MENTAL AND SPIRITUAL ILLUMINATION.

The magnetic presence of a fine, intelligent, lucid mind, with a vigorous, healthy body to vitalize and project it, is like a "jet" of light. It illuminates the mental atmosphere of other minds, and enables them to discover the mental and spiritual "wealth" within the range of their now illuminated vision. Hence mere words, which are only the signs or hints of the presence of realities, are useless where there is not sufficient mental illumination to discover the realities. This explains and gives the rationale of spiritual and mental impressions, purporting to emanate from distinguished personages, whether in the form or from disembodied spirits. George Washington, Daniel Webster, Benjamin Rush, the twelve apostles, and occasionally a "noble red man," are the ajective realities to whom very many mediums ascribe all the glory, and modestly declare that in their normal state they are entirely incapable of the sublime teachings that fall from their inspired lips. But as spirits succeed in only partially illuminating the minds of the mediums, the utterance of the thought is defective. The mode of expression represents the educational culture and capacity of the medium, including defects, excentricities and essential peculiarities. From which this lesson may be derived: The intrinsic value of any spiritual communication, mental impression, or abnormal control, depends entirely upon its quality, estimated in the light of truth and reason, carefully taking into account all the conditions and influences through which it has had to come.

M. E. MORSE.

RADICAL PUBLICATIONS.

We have received from the publishers, Asa K. Butts & Co., 36 Dey street, New York, a number of small works, which our readers can obtain by ordering through this office, or direct from the publishers. The books sent to us include The Essence of Religion, by Ludwig Fuerbach; Lecture on Buddhist Nihilism, by Max Muller; The Childhood of the World, by E. Clodd, T. R. A. S.; Christianity and Materialism, by B. F. Underwood; The Influence of Christianity on Civilization, by Underwood; Materialism, its History and Influence on Society, by Dr. Buchner; The Religion of Inhumanity, by Frederick Harrison; Epidemic Delusions, a Lecture by Frederic Marvin, M. D.; The Relations of Witchcraft to Religion, by A. C. Lyall; The Atonement, by Bradlaugh; Secular Responsibility, by George Jacob Holyoake; The Masculine Cross, by Sha Rocco, etc., etc. We shall notice some of these works more fully hereafter.

THE FREE CONFERENCE MEETINGS.—One of these meetings was held at Anthony's Hall on Sunday afternoon last, other halls having been closed against them on account of the unfounded allegations in the Chronicle. The meeting was not very interesting, but one of the participants, Mr. Morse, said the most interesting part is the quiet thinking that goes on among those who do not speak. Another meeting is to be held at the same place to-morrow afternoon, at 2 o'clock.

WALLACE PAPERS.

The following, from the Chicago Daily Times, will show the high estimation placed on Mr. Wallace's articles by the independent secular press:

The very extended article from the pen of Alfred Wallace, on the phenomena of what is termed Spiritualism, which was recently copied in extenso from The Fortnightly Review, into this journal, is a production that should not be dismissed without some comment. Spiritualism presents itself the same as any other topic for current journalistic comment and criticism; and its evidence is before the public for the same examination that is the evidence in the case of the theories of the interchangeability of heat and motion, or unconscious cerebral action, or the evolution of species. This is especially the case since Spiritualism has entered into the domain of scientific examination, and has proffered its phenomena to the crucial tests of men of scientific minds. During the last ten years it has been subjected to an almost infinite number of severe and exhaustive examinations, whose results are summed up in the paper contributed by Mr. Wallace. They cover an enormous area, including manifestations in almost every possible direction, and with reference to almost every possible subject. His observations certainly prove one very important thing, to wit: that the phenomena of Spiritualism can no longer be ignored by thoughtful men, or sneered away by the incredulous. He has succeeded in elevating them to a place upon which they can claim, and upon which they are entitled to, a serious and respectable consideration. As to the world in general, it must consent henceforth to treat the theme of Wallace's paper with just the same respect that it now accords to any theory which has received the indorsement of Huxley, Tyndall, Agassiz, or any other theory indorsed by any man of acknowledged high intellectual attainments. Henceforth, any one who undertakes to explain the existence of these phenomena, other than he would the facts of established reliability, may be safely set down as an ignoramus. To say that so-and-so is a Spiritualist will hereafter be just as contemptuous as, and no more so than, to say that so-and-so is a Presbyterian, or a geologist, or an evolutionist.

THOMAS JEFFERSON ON RELIGION.—The following extract from a letter of Jefferson to a young ward of his, Peter Carr, deserves the consideration of every American youth. After advising the young man to read the Bible as he would any other book, and to judge of all statements in the light of his own reason, he adds:

Do not be frightened from this inquiry by any fear of its consequences. If it end in a belief that there is no God, you will find incitements to virtue in the comfort and pleasantness you feel in its exercise, and the love of others which it will procure you. If you find reason to believe there is a God, a consciousness that you are acting under his eye, and that he approves you, will be a vast additional incitement; if that there be a future state, the hope of a happy existence in that increases the appetite to deserve it; if that Jesus was also a God, you will be comforted by a belief of his aid and love. In fine, I repeat, you must lay aside all prejudice on both sides, and neither believe nor reject anything because any other person, or description of persons, have rejected or believed it. Your own reason is the only oracle given you by Heaven; and you are answerable, not for the rightness, but uprightness, of the decision.

"Let nature alone, and she never gets filthy; but as soon as human hands lay hold of her, how vile she becomes!"

COMMON SENSE.

WRITTEN FOR "COMMON SENSE," BY LAKE.

Dear husband! Why not go to church,
And hear the pastor pray,
And tell of Christ, who died for us,
And washed our sins away?

How easy is the yoke to bear!
We need not to be good,
But only to believe in HIM,
And journey on to God.

The murderer, and the perjurer,
The oppressor, and the thief,
Who live a life of wickedness,
In Jesus find relief.

No matter how debauched, depraved,
How high the mount of sin,
Say you believe in Jesus,
And they kindly let you in.

We can live just as we want to,
And do just as we may,
Till the last hour of earthly life,
Then turn to HIM and pray;

And glory opens wide for us:
The angels all rejoice.
How easy 'tis to gain the prize!
How rich it is! How nice!

But then dear wife, you do not think
If all this may be true;
And if it be not, say what then,
Is best for us to do?

God must admire a virtuous life
He cannot be blinded by;
Amid the storms of mortal strife,
Each gentle act He'll see.

And He will save the good and true;
And this is my defence,—
I cannot hear your pastors words,
They are not Common Sense.

ANGEL GUARDED.

"Mother, will the angels keep me
Through the long, dark hours of night?
Will their sweet and loving presence
Guard me till the morning light?
If I waken, shall I see them
By the light the moonbeams shed?
Shall I see them, loving, patient,
Watching o'er my little bed?"

"Gently slumber, child of mine,
Innocent, and sweet, and fair;
Slumber softly through the night,
Angels hold thee in their care."

"When my little prayer's repeated,
And my evening hymn I sing,
Then I wish some bright-winged angels
Little golden harps would bring,
And, while I am lying quiet,
Thinking of my mother dear,

In the dark and lonely hours,
Sweetest music I would hear."
"Gently slumber, child of mine,
Innocent, and sweet, and fair;
Slumber through the night,
Angels have thee in their care."

"Mother, when the night is over,
And the day begins to dawn,
When the gloomy tints of sunrise
Hail another welcome morn,—
Mother, wont the angels linger,
Just to see how fair and bright
Is the early morning sunshine
After all the lonely night?"

"Heaven is brighter, child of mine,
Brighter than the sunrise light;
But the angels' holy care
Ever guards thee, day and night."

OUTGROWN.

BY JULIA C. R. DORR.

Nay, you wrong her, my friend, she's not fickle; her love she has simply outgrown;
One can read the whole matter, translating her heart by the light of one's own.
Can you bear me to talk with you frankly? There is much that my heart would say,
And you know we were children together, have quarrelled and "made up" in play.
And so, for the sake of old friendship, I venture to tell you the truth,
As plainly, perhaps, and as bluntly, as I might in our earlier youth.
Five summers ago, when you wooed her, you stood on the selfsame plane,
Face to face, heart to heart, never dreaming your souls could be parted again.
She loved you at that time entirely, in the bloom of her life's early May,
And it is not her fault, I repeat it, that she does not love you to-day.
Nature never stands still, nor souls either; they ever go up or go down;
And hers has been steadily soaring—but how has it been with your own?
She has struggled, and yearned, and aspired—grown purer and wiser each year;
The stars are not farther above you in your luminous atmosphere.
For she whom you crowned with fresh roses down yonder, five summers ago,
Has learned that the first of our duties to God and ourselves is to grow,
Her eyes they are sweeter and calmer, but their vision is clearer as well;
Her voice has a tender cadence, but is pure as a silver bell.
Her face has the look worn by those who with God and His angels have talked;
The white robes she wears are less white than the spirits with whom she has walked.
And you? have you aimed at the highest? have you, too, aspired and prayed?
Have you looked upon evil unsullied? have you conquered it undismayed?
Have you, too, grown purer and wiser, as the months and the years have rolled on?
Did you meet her this morning rejoicing in the triumph of victory won?
Nay, hear me! The truth cannot harm you. When to-day in her presence you stood,
Was the hand that you gave her as white and clean as that of her womanhood?
Go measure yourself by her standard. Look back on the years that have fled;
Then ask, if you need, why she tells you that the love of her girlhood is dead.
She cannot look down to her lover; her love, like her soul, aspires;
He must stand by her side, or above her, who would kindle its holy fires.
Now, farewell! For the sake of old friendship, I have ventured to tell you the truth,
As plainly, perhaps, and as bluntly, as I might in our earlier youth.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

From "Our Age."

We read with interest the articles of J. W. Mackie, published in the "Common Sense." There is something in them unlike much we find in public journals. Truly, this paper speaks for itself, as its editor assured us it would.

[From "The Word" Princetown Mass.]

COMMON SENSE has at last got into journalism. Weekly, Edited by W. N. Slocum 236 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal. Well-printed, ably-edited, full of interesting matter; it is, what it claims to be, "A Journal of Live Ideas." Send for it.

[From S. F. Chronicle]

COMMON SENSE, the new paper devoted to free thought, Spiritualism, etc., of which W. N. Slocum is editor, has made a second appearance. It is a capital number, and its "make up" is a triumph of journalistic art. Typographically, COMMON SENSE is one of the prettiest papers in this city.

[From the San Jose Mercury.]

COMMON SENSE.—The second number of this new weekly is at hand. It is free from the imperfections of the first hurried issue, and is truly a superior number. We learn that some sixty subscribers have been obtained for the paper in San Jose, a number that will doubtless be increased to a hundred or more.

[From the New Northwest]

COMMON SENSE.—We are in receipt of a Spiritual paper bearing this title, issued by the "Common Sense Publishing Company" of San Francisco. As a sectarian Spiritual publication, it is as prosy and orthodox as the "Watchman and Evangelist" and "Christian Reflector" are for the sects which they represent.

From the "New Age," San Francisco, Cal.

"Common Sense—A Journal of live Ideas." This is a new enterprise started in this city by Mr. and Mrs. Slocum. The paper is devoted to the dissemination of free thought on religious and philosophical subjects, and however diverse may be one's opinions on such subjects, there can be but one opinion as to the excellent paper presented. It is creditable editorially and typographically to all concerned, and we wish it a hearty God-speed.

[From the Truth Seeker.]

COMMON SENSE, No. 1, Vol. 1, of a neat sixteen page Weekly by this title, published in San Francisco, is upon our table. It is devoted to morality, education, equal rights, labor-reform and whatever elevates and ennobles our race. It has a decided bearing towards the Spiritual Philosophy. We hail this young champion of mental freedom and the rights of man. We can hardly have too many advocates of the Truth before the public. It appears to be ably conducted, and we hope the Liberals and Spiritualists of the Pacific coast will accord it a generous support, and may it prove a success.

[From the Russian River Flag.]

COMMON SENSE.—A weekly journal with this title was started in San Francisco last week, with W. N. Slocum as Manager. The first number indicates that it will be an exponent of the doctrines of Spiritualism, but it proposes to open its columns for the presentation of all ideas entitled to a respectful hearing. Its platform says the paper "is intended to serve as a means of communication between rational thinkers and intelligent, truth-seeking readers—an advocate of morality, education, equal rights, labor reform, and all that elevates and ennobles the human race; an opponent of class legislation, church creeds, bigotry, intolerance, and whatever tends to degrade mankind and retard human progress. It will not be the organ of any party or sect, nor the exclusive mouthpiece of any man or woman, but will furnish a fair field for all opinions worthy of consideration, however much they may differ from those entertained by the editor." The friends of free thought will give COMMON SENSE a cordial greeting. Its subscription price is $3 a year.

Special Notices.

For the very best Photographs go to Bradley & Rolofson's Gallery, with an elevator, 429 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Persons having business to transact with Woodhull & Claflin may address their agent, Fred. Thal, care of William Sharp, 236 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

For a stylish and well finished Photograph go to Knitt's New Photographic Establishment, No. 28 Third street. All work warranted superior to any in the city.

Those suffering from that most annoying of the minor miseries of human life—a cold in the head—or from catarrh in any form, should try Dr. Evory's Diamond Catarrh Remedy. Just try it—that's all. Sold at this office, and by all druggists.

Send Austin Kent one dollar for his pamphlets on Free Love and Marriage, etc. He has been seventeen years physically helpless, confined to his bed and chair, is poor and needs the money. He sends four or five well-written essays for one dollar. His address is AUSTIN KENT, Stockholm, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., Box 44.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, NO. 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

COMMON SENSE can be purchased at the following places in this city: Patten's, 773 Market; Cooper's, 750 Market; Choyznaki's, 146 Second; Snow's, 319 Kearny; Sharp's, 238 Montgomery, and at this office, 236 Montgomery street, up stairs. Price of single copies, ten cents.

AGENTS IN THE INTERIOR.

Contra Costa county ..... E. H. Kimball, Antioch
Inyo county ..... Mrs. L. Hutchinson, Bishop Creek
Monterey county ..... W. M. Wilson, Salinas City
Santa Barbara county ..... Mrs. Clara B. Crane, Santa Barbara
San Bernardino county ..... Dr. J. P. Greves, Riverside
Santa Cruz county ..... Mrs. Georgiana B. Kirby, San Joaquin county
Ventura county ..... W. S. Sturgeon, Stockton
Yolo county ..... J. W. Stevens, San Buenaventura
J. G. Hudson, Woodland

TRAVELING AGENTS, Abby W. Baker, Prof. W. H. Chaney, J. L. York, J. I. Ferris, Addie L. Ballou, H. F. M. Brown.

COMMON SENSE.

A Journal of Live Ideas.

VOL. 1.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, AUGUST 15, 1874.

No. 14.

Signs of the Times.

Lafayette, Ind., has a society of "Holy Rollers," and the papers are calling upon them to rise and explain or lie down and illustrate.

The young ladies of Cleveland, Ohio, are trying to raise $200,000 to build a library and lecture-room for the Young Men's Christian Association.

The remains of a mastodon, the third which has been found in this country, have been exhumed in Dansville, N. Y. The animal is thought to have been at least fourteen feet high.

Chalborne county, Miss., is horrified by the marriage of a young white lady, belonging to an influential Democratic family, to Hon. Hawkins Smith, colored Representative of the district in Congress.

In reply to a correspondent in Kansas, Mr. Beecher, in the Christian Union, informs him that "the balance of power in New York City was never in the hands of professed infidels;" and adds: "Our rogues all claim to be good Christians of one sort or other."

The aggregate of "religious charities" in England last year amounted to more than $8,000,000 in gold. W. J. Potter, in the Index says it is a question whether the bestowing of money to build up any form of sectarianism can rightly be reckoned as a charity.

Miss Gilbert, a blind lady, opened a blind school in a Holborn cellar, for which she paid eighteen pence a week. She has now a thousand pupils, whom she has taught to support themselves. They maintain the Institution that gives them a home, an education and an occupation. Its maintenance costs $40,000 a year.

The Boston Transcript says that the pleasantest signs of the times are the growing manifestations of a catholic temper, shown in acts of fellowship. Independent, cultured men, holding fast to the results of their individual thought and research, are willing to invite the hearing of outside voices, where hitherto denominational jealousy has refused to let the congregation listen to any utterances except those in perfect accord with their own shibboleths.

A. W. Stevens, in the Index says: "A great majority of our people are living, today, for mere pleasure, for fame, or for fortune. We are, indeed, 'on the bolt.' We bolt everything,—food, education, literature, politics, religion. Consequently, we digest comparatively nothing. Consequently, the social man is dyspeptic to-day,—in body, mind, and spirit. We need to learn how to live slowly, calmly, quietly. We must live less in public, and more in private. We must mind our own business more, and other people's less. We must cultivate the genius of character."

Dr. E. O. Smith, of Albany, Oregon, has invented a lady's fan which goes of itself, on being wound up. It is an excellent invention for invalids.

The New York Independent says: "Orthodoxy, as we understand it, is the truth as it is in Jesus." What in the world is the "truth as it is in Jesus?"

Emily Faithful thinks Goldwin Smith's real reason for opposing woman suffrage is his distrust of civilization, which tends to establish a perfect harmony between man and woman.

The Boston Transcript says: "Mr. Chase was perhaps destined to be the last American in public life who is to delude himself with the idea that the way to attain the presidency is to make himself fit for the presidency."

A Roman Catholic Priest at Castleton, Vt., saw a man in his congregation who didn't kneel, and approaching him, he exclaimed: "Why don't you kneel down! Get out of here! Somebody put this man out!" The man didn't wait for somebody to put him out.

Anna Dickinson has not given up her intention of going abroad, but is delayed by the necessity of finishing a book. It is a chronicle of certain experiences and adventures in her lecturing tours, amusing and otherwise, with a record of one summer spent in California and another in Colorado.

Mrs. Livermore asks "If there is any force in the argument that women should not have the ballot, because they do not want it, how is it with that large class of men who do not want the ballot, and who do not exercise the suffrage?" They should be compelled to vote under penalty of loss of the privilege.

It is stated that Prof. Lillard, of the California College, has invented a parabolic speculum which will not only very greatly reduce the expense but increase the power of telescopes. There is no limit to the size, excepting the limit to machinery. The inventor thinks he can construct a telescope with a focus three thousand feet from the lens, and the reflector still be as perfect as with a three inch focus.

Moses Hull and Mattie Sawyer propose to live together without the permission of a minister. Believing that love, not law, constitutes marriage, they simply make announcement of their intention. Mr. Sawyer, former husband of Mattie, and Elvira Hull, the former wife of Moses, have written letters approving the "arrangement" made by Moses and Mattie. It is very queer; but it certainly must be accepted as one of the "signs of the times." Mrs. Hull says in her letter: "With my whole heart I bid you God speed in the race you have begun, and wish you unbounded success in all your righteous undertaking. With much love to you both, I am as ever, Elvira L. Hull."

REASON AND INNER CONVICTIONS.

BY J. W. MACKIE.

Garrulous controversy is good for neither reform journals nor reform; the desire for victory is too apt to obscure the worthier desire for truth. I do not controvert spiritual theories for the purpose of gaining admission to the arena of spiritual controversy. I had a course marked out, of private thoughts on Spiritualism and kindred subjects, which I had intended for the COMMON SENSE. It was also my intention to permit no adverse criticism to switch me of the line; but it is hard to abide by such decisions, when such an affable opponent as brother S. enters the field. He says:

"Mr. M's failure, I think, consists in doubting his own reason and most inner convictions."

I will continue to doubt my reason till it becomes perfect, and will never assent to a popedom within my own breast. An infallible Reason, which is not to be doubted! That cannot be. "We can only reason from that we know," has been truly said, and as the premises from which all reason flows are continually shifting in the light of new facts, so must our conclusions. I cannot reason as I reasoned a year ago, as I will a year hence, or may perhaps to-morrow. But I trust, nevertheless, reason as my only guide, the only judge before whose bar my most inner convictions must be tried.

As with reason, so also with my inner convictions. What is meant by inner convictions? There seems to be in us all a mental citadel, in which is kept carefully recorded the sum total of our experience and reason. In this sanctum sanctorum our faith dwells, our credo as it is. When doubt enters there, and is therein recorded, it will be well to respect that doubt, and search for the flaw which must exist in our well laid arguments. As these inner convictions rest on the same basis as reason, only further removed, so I cannot treat them as infallible in their dictum, but simply as indicators, the barometer of our spiritual atmosphere. Trusting them in this light, I learned to doubt my own realization of spirit communion; and as I desired no incomplete fabric of faith, I analyzed the spiritual creed which I then possessed. As I have failed to remove the obstacles which I found lying between me and an undoubting acceptance of Spiritualism, I have laid one of them before the readers of COMMON SENSE so that aid may be procured in removing it. I thank brother S. for his good natured assistance; and will be happy to receive those promised evidences that spirits, as the spirits of common humanity, have communicated during the past eighteen hundred years. If they did, it is strange that mankind did not know it, but mistook them for angels, devils, gods—anything and everything but the spirits of the dear departed.

As to that "spirit" which "frightened" me so, I have only to say, that in substance he was correctly informed, the fright being a little rhetorical flourish of my friend B. As I intend to make spirit-seeing and spectral illusions a special article, I will say nothing more at present.

I notice another skeptic in the field, who is more of a denier than I dare be. For though humbug is rampant, and common sense couchant with the many, yet enough of the genuine has transpired to prove the reality of what is termed spiritual phenomena. If friend "Lake" will visit Mrs. Foye I think he will discover something very analogous, at least, to mind reading or clairvoyance; and if he can discover how she manipulates those "raps," I will pay the cost of the "sitting." And as for judicial evidence, if I were on trial for my life, with but a small fraction of the evidence against me as strong as that in favor of the spiritual phenomena, I would trust more to judicial trickery than to judicial purity to save myself.

RE-INCARNATION.

EDITOR COMMON SENSE:—A. M. Stoddard writes for some one to show objections to "Mary's" showing of the doctrine of "Re-incarnation." I object to the doctrine in toto, because it is not true to my consciousness and inspiration, but do not object to others embracing it, provided they have the tangible proof. Judging the tree by its fruit I must reject Mary's showing in the premises, though she may have "lived three different lives upon this planet;" her say-so is no evidence at all, since she may have to come back again and learn a little consistency from those yet in their first casket. Though she admits that "Darwin is right" she says "we know nothing of spiritual things;" while she, as a representative teacher of the spiritual, says, "spirits are finite elements of all things in existence." I cannot so jumble or blend the infinite with the finite. My faith is, that spirit or spirits do surround, permeate and utilize "all things" of the finite; as all such things are but so much stock in trade, to be used in a million ways, ad infinitum. Furthermore this thrice incarnated teacher seems to know of no God outside of humanity, and says: "If you would know what God is, learn what you yourselves are;" then adds that "you as spirits, are the all of the universe;" and that "God is all in all." While I cheerfully accept the latter aphorism, I do know—intuitively, as well as from other evidences incontrovertible—that there is a God, or Chief Artist or designer, as well as executor, who is omnipresent, omniscient and omnipotent; so far indeed above and beyond humanity, that the latter is but an outgrowth in the legitimate line of progress. Spirit germs are not developed humanity, yet these emanate from God. I know from hard experiences that there are "bands" of spirits that are as unreliable, and even malicious, as are persons to be found in this material plane; yet it would be as inconsistent to reject Spiritualism on this account, as for the moral and good here to abandon good society through fear of being deceived. Deception is a good negative; and fills its place in the designs of the Grand Artist, who well knows how to turn it to good account. As an educator it teaches us caution, appreciation, and the law of variety, as: In a great house there be vessels to honor and vessels to dishonor (2d Tim. 11:20); that is honorable combined with all and every shade of variety. This spices the life of men even in this material form.

For Common Sense.
SPIRITUAL PHENOMENA.

BY B. SHERAFL.

As "Spirit Materializations" in this as well as in the old country, are agitating the minds of the people, and as there are those who think that this has never taken place before, I will give several instances of spirits appearing to people who had never heard the word "Spiritualism," or "Mediumship;" also of "Spirit voices" long before the Rochester rappings.

In 1846 I made the acquaintance of Samuel Bohm and family, in Vienna, Austria. In 1852 I came to this country, and after I was here a few years I commenced investigating Spiritualism, and in my correspondence with the Bohms, in 1858 or 9, I once mentioned Spiritualism. In the next letter which I received, Mrs. B. used the following expression: "I believe in God and guardian angels, but I don't believe in spirits." I did not mention the subject again in my correspondence, thinking it would be useless, as she was so decided about it. In 1863 I received from her the sad intelligence that her husband was dead. Her condition was a sad one; he, who was the only support, suddenly cut down, and no means to fall back on; with six little children to provide for, the oldest of which was but twelve years old; her grief and distress was unspeakable. After he was buried she was lying one night, thinking over her situation, when the room seemed to become lighter; she could not account for it, knowing that no rays from the street lights could strike her windows, as she lived on the fourth floor. She turned over to have a full view of the room, which continued to become lighter, when about eight feet from the bed a ball of mellow light seemed to form, which increased in size until it was the size of a man's head, when it changed into the features of her departed husband, with his sandy hair and long whiskers, and by degrees the whole body was formed. He then moved forward towards the table opposite the bed, and stood for a few moments with his back towards her; then turning he walked to the bed and stood looking at her. She was so frightened that she could not speak. He stood thirty or forty seconds, gave three heavy sighs, and then walked towards the door. Meanwhile she aroused courage enough to call his name, "Samuel," when in an instant he disappeared, and the room was again dark as before. She arose to see if the door was locked, and found it locked and bolted.

A brother of Mrs. Bohm was an artist-gardener, and was engaged with three others at the gardens of Count Lichnovsky, in Vienna, Austria, in 1843. The head gardener, with whom he occupied the same room, was taken ill, and after a short illness died. A few nights after he was buried George lay awake in bed, and as the moon was streaming in brightly through the windows every object was plainly visible. At once his attention was attracted by hearing the door open, and on looking he saw the form of the deceased gardener walking in. He watched it going to his trunk, taking the keys out of his pocket and unlocking it; taking out first the top shelf, then laying the clothes, which he took out, on top of it, then reaching to the bottom of the trunk for a bundle of papers and letters, which he untied and commenced reading. He read a number of them, consuming from fifteen to twenty minutes time; then tying them up again after folding them, putting the clothes and shelf back again, he locked the trunk and went out through the door. He came a short time afterwards once more in the same manner, and when he was leaving the second time George spoke to him, but he did not get any answer. The form vanished through the door. George got up immediately, but nothing could be seen of his visitor.

Another well attested apparition was that of Mr. Rabbi, in 1837, in Pressburg, Hungary. Mr. R. was a man in good circumstances, but was very close-fisted, and denied many comforts to his two daughters, then living with him. After he was buried the daughters heard noises in the rooms for many nights, which kept increasing. At last they became so frightened that they invited some one every night to sleep with them, but the noises continued, and one night the two daughters, and a lady friend who slept with them, saw the old man walking in the front parlor (which was connected with their sleeping room by folding doors wide open) in his dressing-gown, slippers, with his red cap on his head and smoking a pipe. After a while he sat down to the centre table and read for some minutes. They all were so frightened they did not dare to speak. A dim, mellow light pervaded the room. At last he arose and left through the door. A second time he appeared again in the same manner, and left as before, three ladies being in the room. A third time he came, and the two daughters had another friend with them (a sister of Mrs. Bohm) who was more courageous. After he entered the room, and the first fright was over, he walked into their bedroom. This lady asked him what he wanted, but he did not answer. She then said to him: "If your soul cannot rest because of your mean behavior towards your daughters, it is not their fault, and they want you to let them alone, and suffer for your own sins." He turned around, walked slowly into the front room, stood for a few moments at the table, and vanished in an instant. He never troubled them afterwards. The lady who spoke to him I was personally acquainted with, and have it from her own lips.

In my next article I will give a few instances of spirit voices and spirit lights.

18 Prospect Place, S. F., August 10.

A Scotch parson had a farming neighbor who was in the habit of shooting on Sundays, but after awhile this Sabbath-breaker joined the church. One day, the minister to whose church he belonged, met a friend of the farmer, and said: "Do you see any difference in Mr. — since he joined the church?" "O yes," replied the friend, "a great difference. Before, when he went out shoot on Sunday, he carried his gun over his shoulder; but now he carries it under his coat."

THE MATERIALIZATION OF SPIRITS.

REPLY TO "OLD MAN" BY GEORGE W. LEWIS.

It is not surprising that "The Old Man," after having devoted his time to the study of the "Arabian Nights," "Cinderella," "Puss in Boots," and other similar trash, should be at a loss to comprehend the ultimate facts and laws of science. For over twenty-six years, since the spirit raps at Rochester, these raps, ever attended by an intelligence, have been repeated under favorable circumstances throughout the inhabited earth; and during all this time scientific men have failed to show that they originate either in delusion or fraud. Over a quarter of a century has passed, and neither scientist nor skeptic has been able to explain the phenomena, or reveal the hidden mystery. The unseen intelligence accompanying these phenomena during all these years has persisted in asserting that the agency thereof is spirit power and spirit intelligence. The skeptic and scientist have assigned no other cause, and still are unable to do so. But as year after year has passed away the spirit manifestations have become more marked and astonishing, ending only with the actual fact of Materialization—this latter fact attested by some of the foremost scientists of the world. And until their characters as men, their ability, knowledge and veracity as scientists, can be impeached by direct and positive evidence, we must accept their verdicts upon this as we do upon other subjects tested by scientific men. At least we ought to place as much confidence in what the ablest scientists of the age say they have seen, tested and know, as we do in what anonymous writers admit they have not seen, have not tested, and do not know. And as the laws of chemistry reveal the fact that the chief atmospheric elements are also the chief organic elements, it must become apparent to "The Old Man" that really "the materials for a palace are at hand." And when scientific men tell him that the carbon of the atmosphere, and the breath we breathe in some mysterious manner through the laws of nature, become transmuted into timber—yes, into stately mansions and lordly palaces—will he admit the fact? Or will he deny it because he has not seen it, and charge scientific men with "running science into the ground?"

DUTY OF THE GOVERNMENT.—It is the duty of the nation—not that of the State—to provide a better currency than individuals can possibly provide; a better system of education and nurseries for children than there can be found in the isolated household; better transportation for individuals and merchandise than can be furnished by individuals, and which will prevent the impositions upon justice now so generally true of transportation: a better method of securing the use of land to every one who desires to occupy it and to use it; but yet to permit any body who will to make their own money, educate themselves (we deny the right to prevent the education of children or to compel them to suffer from an inability on the part of parents to provide for them); to transport their own letters, freight, and to ride in their own or anybody else's conveyance; to do all these is not despotism in any sense that we can understand it.—Woodhull & Claflin's Weekly.

SCIENCE AND SPIRITUALISM.

[For Common Sense.]

BY JESSE H. BUTLER.

"Lake" says "Science and Spiritualism are far apart." What is Science? There are many sciences, but they all consist in an intelligent use of nature's laws, so far as ascertained up to the present time. Now what has Spiritualism done to entitle it to be called a science?

[We omit many of the facts mentioned by our correspondent, the ground having been traveled over so many times before.]

It has been proved by Crooks, Varley, Wallace, and many other witnesses, that by a "sentitive," Miss Cook, in a quiet room, often in a very strong artificial light, and in different houses, and on many occasions, the spirit power could temporarily clothe the spirit of Katie King with a physical body, having pulsation, expiration, and inspiration, a feeling of tangibility, and an audible voice. And in San Francisco before five hundred persons, from Sunday to Sunday, the spirits by using the "sensitive" Mrs. Foy, select out of a thousand "ballots" sent up by the audience, closely folded and mixed, ballot after ballot, giving the name in each by writing with Mrs. Foy's hand before it is opened. They also give the age, occupation, etc., etc., by writing, or knocks on the table, in presence of a skeptic on the platform, chosen by the skeptical audience; and this umpire invariably finds the name written by Mrs. Foy the same as in the folded paper, taken from the table by his own hand; and the friends (skeptics) of the spirit answering to the ballot invariably declare the answers given by the spirit are correct. Now if this is not a science, the modus operandi of which "can be repeated under the same conditions, with the same results," as positively as the experiments and results of chemistry, then human reason is at fault, and we may as well stop all experiments and all discussion.

Spiritualism is a science far better established than many other sciences of the same age. Its conditions are known, and when properly applied prove the existence of intelligent spirits out of the visible form. The communications are not always truthful, nor always intelligent, but good, bad and indifferent. Spiritualism is revolutionizing religions, governments and human lives, even faster than material science is improving our facilities for physical happiness.

THE USE OF GOVERNMENT.—Government and law are for the ignorant, the vicious, the degraded. The good man or woman have no need of them. How many thousands live and die, and never see a court—are never accused of a crime! The wicked cause all this machinery, all this expense. And should there ever be no wicked, government will cease for want of use. Othello's occupation will be gone, but not till then; and we apprehend that the time is far off. The great rule of right is that all should seek their own happiness in their own way, not interfering with the same right in others. But when the strong will not abide the rule, but oppress the weak, society, or law, must come in to insist on justice. The law never prevents wisdom and love from making peace, if they can. It takes up none but irrepressible conflicts, which, if there were no law, would have to be settled by force. Law is an evil, but mere brute force is a much greater evil. Of the two, we wisely choose the least. Should the time ever come when all men are disposed to do right we may dispense with both.

CURRENCY AND TAXATION.

EDITOR COMMON SENSE:—I see considerable in your paper upon the currency question. Let me say this much for the present: No government can be prosperous with two kinds of currency, for the bulls and bears will cry one down and the other up, by turns, at the expense of the people. What then? Abolish gold and silver as a legal tender, and issue government paper only; and let the credit and honor of the government and people be its security. Let it be limited, and kept regulated in amount by the number and increase of population. Let the proportion of property represented by the currency (for money is only a representative of property) be as great as that represented by the currency of countries we are in the habit of trading with, and then let us have free trade and direct taxation. The revenue laws should be so changed as to require increased taxation with the increase of wealth. Say, for the first thousand dollars, one-half of one per cent.; over one and under two thousand, one per cent.; over two and under three thousand, one and one-half per cent., and so on to ten or twenty per cent. And we will soon pay the national debt with less injury to any one than can be done in any other way. It will bear a little heavy on the very rich, but they can stand it. And the beauty of this plan is, it can be done by a proper use of the ballot, and avoid violence, which now seems inevitable, and more nearly equalize the privileges and comforts of life. Of course the clause in the constitution, "all taxes shall be equal," must be stricken out. F. W.

LETTER FROM OREGON.

ED. COMMON SENSE: Having no access to the public press in Eastern Oregon to publish any thing pertaining to our philosophy, I beg leave to occasionally occupy a small space in your excellent paper to chronicle such facts as may come under our notice, that would be of interest to the liberal public.

Mrs. Belle Chamberlain, the well known trance medium, in company with the Rev. E. W. Shortridge is now in this city giving lectures, and treating the sick. The attendance here so far has been small, owing partly to the deep prejudice existing against us here, and partly from the falsehoods that have been industriously circulated by the enemies of free thought. They imagine that because these two persons are traveling together and lecturing, that it means nothing but free love, and that too in the sense they understand it. I pity the mind that cannot rise out of this low plane of thought. Could such minds be made to realize the constant presence and watchful care of their spirit friends, and know, as Mrs. Chamberlain knows, that she is always in company with her Spirit Band, who guide and control her, whom she daily and hourly sees and converses with, among whom is her spirit husband and daughter, as real and tangible to her as your friends in the flesh are to you—could they realize this as she does, they would be ashamed to talk or think as they now do.

How many of our orthodox friends rely upon their Bible, and realize that God sees every thing they do? I undertake to say that the absolute knowledge of the presence of a spirit mother would have a greater restraining influence than all the preaching, praying, and exhorting of all of the preachers in the world.

WILLIAM F. MC CRARY.

Baker City, Oregon, August 6th.

A PROFESSOR OF THEOLOGY NONPLUSSED.

The wisest heads are sometimes drawn into a net of difficulty by the questions of clear juvenile minds that often go with direct and unsophisticated simplicity to the mark. We remember an incident of our youth, wherein the president of a theological institute was sorely tried by a student not over fifteen. The president had delivered a very fine lecture on God, and his immutable and all-prevailing laws, and stood ready to explain whatever might seem dark or shadowy to his pupils. After some desultory remarks, one student of fifteen arose, and questioned his teacher about as follows:

Pupil.—You say sir, that God has given laws to matter, which are immutable and unending, and will operate throughout the whole universe forever. This being the case, if God should sleep, or could absent himself, or in any other manner remain quiescent, would it make any difference to the operations of nature?

President.—The question is singular and new. It is somewhat preposterous too, that God should sleep. But we may suppose so, for the sake of argument. I cannot see that it would make any change; these laws being immutable and eternal, I believe everything would proceed just as it does.

Pupil.—One step further. Suppose that God should die, would these laws cease to operate—would that make any change?

President.—After mature reflection, because the question is so new and singular, I am constrained to say that I cannot see how it could make any difference. I think the operations of nature would proceed as usual.

Pupil.—Can it be of much consequence whether there is a God or not, when it thus appears that he could be so easily dispensed with, would be so little missed? If you admit these laws to be eternal, does it not answer the same purpose; God then only originates nature, and has no further concern with it?

President.—My dear boy, you are too curious. Turn your penetration to geometry, or some kindred study, and it will do you a world of good—but we will pursue this matter no further at this time. It is known to us all that it is far easier to ask questions than to answer them. The class is dismissed.

THE sun is a million times as large as the earth, and the universe contains myriads of suns larger than ours. There is no conceivable limit to their number and size. The earth is as a grain of dust among the stars. The great spirit that we call God has an equal interest over all. That He should have come down upon our planet, to a woman, to beget a son, is so preposterous and absurd that only an idiot could entertain an idea for the moment.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

COMMON SENSE is furnished to subscribers for Three Dollars per annum, in advance. Letters intended for the Business Department should be addressed:

A. T. CLARK, BUSINESS MANAGER, 236 Montgomery st.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

Reason and Inner Convictions—J. W. Mackie .....	160
Re-incarnation—H. ....	160
Spiritual Phenomena—B. Shrad. ....	161
Science and Spiritualism—Jesse H. Butler .....	162
The Materialization of Spirits—Geo. W. Lewis .....	162
Currency and Taxation .....	163
Letter from Oregon .....	163
A Professor of Theology Nonplussed .....	163
The World and the Church—Ed. ....	164
Free Love—Ed. ....	165
Cunningham's Great Tragedy .....	166
Mr. York's Lecture .....	166
True Spiritualism—Pearl Melwood .....	167
Public Seances .....	167
Dashaway Hall Discussion .....	167
Secret Societies .....	168
Denton's Lectures .....	168
The Ministry of Angels—W. M. Fernald .....	169
Poetry and Special Notices .....	170

COMMON SENSE.

WILLIAM N. SLOCUM, EDITOR.

AMANDA M. SLOCUM, ASSISTANT.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, AUG. 15, 1874.

The friends who subscribed for COMMON SENSE stock, payable when the total subscriptions amounted to three thousand shares, are notified that the requisite number of shares have been sold, and the money may now be paid in. The stock is ready for delivery.

The true friends of Spiritualism will be glad to learn that there is now a fair prospect of union between the two Spiritual Societies. Then we shall need a new hall, and as money is cheap now, it will only be necessary to raise a few thousand dollars for the purchase of a site, and the thing is accomplished. Money for the building can be obtained on mortgage.

MANY LETTERS written for COMMON SENSE which are not used, and others which we cut down materially, would be published entire were it not for the controversial spirit running over in them. There is nothing to be gained by this style of writing, and we hope correspondents will, as much as possible, confine themselves to facts and opinions based on facts without casting reflections upon any other writer.

Frederic R. Marvin, M. D. has published a couple of lectures on Spiritualism and Mediumism. He thinks that what is called spiritualism is a more refined and degrading materialism than that of Helvetius or D'Holbach, and looks upon it as the most mournful calamity that has ever happened to the human race. He is an able writer, and evidently honest; but he is blind to a large class of facts, sustaining Spiritualism, which are indisputable.

COMMON SENSE is sent to city subscribers through the postoffice, payment for its delivery being made by us quarterly in advance. Some of our subscribers complain that they never receive the paper until Monday, and sometimes not at all. It is always left at the Carriers' Department of the postoffice on Friday, and should be delivered on Saturday morning. Please notify us of failures, that we may have a basis for complaint to the Superintendent of the Carriers' Department.

THE WORLD AND THE CHURCH.

Whatever may be said of our politicians and lawyers, however prevalent the impression that they are corrupt and unreliable, they are still infinitely superior, in morals and manners, in good temper and good nature, in calm deliberate judgment and fair dealing, to the average churchman. There is something in the atmosphere of our modern churches that is narrow, unjust, ill-natured, false and prevaricating. There is a lack of charity, fair dealing and just judgment that is so conspicuous as to attract general observation. Not that the church was ever any better. Its whole history, from the first inception of the papacy till now, has been of a piece. Shakspeare was well aware of it in his day, and expressed it where he says of a certain bishop that he had a churchman's memory of an injury, and would never forget nor forgive. We have already had several examples in our own history to show that our so-called Christians, headed by their pastors, are the most impatient and uncharitable of all our people, and the most difficult and prevaricating to deal with whenever their affairs call for investigation.

Long before our politicians lost all patience with each other, and inaugurated the war of the rebellion, the churches north and south had divided, and unable to adjust their differences in their own tribunals, had appealed to the courts of the country, and settled the pecuniary part of their troubles by law.

Some time ago a charge was alleged of gigantic fraud in the Methodist Book Concern. For over two years anything like a fair investigation was put off, under the most shallow and unworthy pretexts. The party making the charge was persecuted by the church as though he was a public enemy, and a direct agent of Satan; and at last, when an investigation was forced, the charges, which were found to be true, were glossed over, and the trial so resulted that the greatest punishment fell at last on the informer.

In the recent Swing trial at Chicago, the virulent prosecutor, Patton, descended to a paltry and forced construction of language so contrary to common sense that no court could justify it; and but for the pressure brought to bear by the press and other outside influences, and the evident march of the human mind away from the old hard Calvinism of the past, Swing would have been condemned as a heretic, and left out in the cold. The preachers saw it would not do.

This present Beecher trial is of the same character. The complaint has been filed before the public tribunal for over two years. The charges were specific; the witnesses named; the truth or falsehood of the whole thing could have been determined in a day; and yet, under one false pretence or other, Beecher has been retained in good standing in the church all that time. At last an accuser came whose charges could not be ignored. The bereaved husband of one of his victims speaks in his own defence, and thereby accuses Beecher in terms not to be evaded. How is the crisis met—by a fair and honest trial? Not at all. The accused selects a committee of his personal friends, and so grossly unjust was the conduct of this self-appointed jury, so well calculated to hide, instead of to uncover, so trifling, so one-sided, so unlikely to arrive at any satisfactory judgment, that the public became disgusted, and the accuser was driven from this Christian tribunal to the naughty courts and the wicked lawyers for fair play.

What can we expect of our Congress in railroad, Credit-Mobilier, and other cases of fraud and corruption, when the exponents of the religion of Christ set so woful an example of concealment and prevarication? Whatever we may say of the whitewashing and evasive tricks of a committee of Congress, it is openness and purity itself compared to a conclave of church members or ministers.

FREE LOVE.

With our present limited experience of the true nature of human sexual love, we are little able to say either what it is, or what it should be. The world, up to this time, has afforded little opportunity for the study of sexual science. The tender passion has been subjected, in all countries, to so many outside and sinister influences, that it is rarely seen or felt in its native purity. Among savages the female has been an object of barter or conquest, and on her part love was unknown, save what she might cultivate in obedience to a sense of duty for the fortunate possessor of her person. In civilized life wealth and other external influences warp the mind into certain grooves, and often forbid a marriage dictated on both sides by affection alone.

To aid still further in estranging human nature from itself, the church and law have sanctioned these marriages of convenience, and declared them to be sacred and perpetual, however ill-advised and disastrous. Law and religion have, as it were, pinioned two people together, and said to them, this is the only love that you shall know; and whether it be the best, or the worst, you shall have no means of proving. Neither man nor wife are allowed any knowledge of any other of the opposite sex. Their experience is confined to one person alone. Whether they experience with each other a high degree of felicity, or a very limited share of enjoyment, they are bound by law and custom. If they are obedient, law-abiding, conscientious people, and timid under the thought of wrong, they cannot travel out of the fixed groove. They live and die in entire ignorance of that fulness of joy, that pure and intense love, that might perhaps have been theirs under other circumstances.

There are some men, and few women, who set these restraints and obligations aside, and sip the sweets of love wherever found. But these are not safe guides. They are often very impure and unnatural, and their unscrupulous appetites are a poor criterion of what pure and undulterated human nature should be. Where then shall we look for the facts to guide us in our inquiry into that system of sexual communion that will give the greatest happiness to all, because it is most in accordance with the nature of all? We must go to the young and unsophisticated. We must watch the outcroppings of the pure passion of love not where it is subject to law, but where its conditions are free. There love is its own law, its own guide, its own interpreter. But it is not free love in the sense of flitting from flower to flower, without thought, without any mutual obligation, or pledge, or constancy. It is not that! But farthest removed from it! Love's sweetest smile is reserved for one alone. It is exclusive; it is monopolizing; it absorbs the whole being; it says you are mine, and I am yours; it seeks solitude; it resists intrusion; it resents neglect; it abhors rivalry. When the lovers part they expect to meet again with hearts of renewed fire. If either is slack or sullen, or indifferent, which dalliance with others would naturally induce, there is doubt, reproach and misgiving; but with true affection no such scenes occur, there being no occasion. Years elapse, still the same delight, the same fervent desire is unabated. Children bless the union, and are loved for the mother's, for the father's sake. They are a bond; but not a necessary one. Where the flame of love burns bright never do the children come between the true wife and husband. They serve to cement and patch up half unions; but are altogether secondary where true love retains its hold upon the parents. And we see them, these two, blessed and being blessed continually, and clinging to each other till youth is passed, and manhood declines into old age, and yet with gray hairs fondly supporting each other. These are our happiest lives. Thrice blessed are they who are thus married. Such a union commands the admiration of all. There is a chord in every human breast that responds amen whenever two people are so united, and a prayer is made for a perpetual union and love between them.

If "free love" means that this divine emotion that makes up the quintessence of human happiness shall have encouragement and scope; that we will remove from its path all sinister influences and side issues; that we will make woman independent, so that she may choose her mate from affection alone, apart from every consideration of wealth or power, or place; that we will have none but love marriages, and love families, and love children, to the end that all may be born with a full endowment of moral goodness, we are for "free love." We would purge the stream of its impurities if we could, but we want the stream. Let us have it fresh and sparkling, flowing gaily along the vale of life, cheering by its beauty, and ennobling with its genial influences all the activities of our being, till, subsiding into the smooth waters of old age, it glides peacefully to the bright shores of that other and better world.

We recognize the right of every human being to admire beauty and revere goodness wherever found; to seek those who are most congenial, and avoid those who are not; but if "free love" is construed to mean temporary indulgence, a "flitting from flower to flower," a perpetual change of "chosen ones" from momentary fancy or merely "magnetic attraction"—no permanent affection, no holy confidence, no sense of constancy—then we have no use for it; we abhor it as the sinking of the highest and holiest instinct of humanity into the bottomless pit of heartless sensuality. Let us know what all "free lovers" mean, that none may deceive us by the mere avowal of a high morality into paths that lead to destruction; for true it is that there are those who, though professing purity, do yet poison the fountain of all that is most lovely and estimable in human life.

CUNNINGHAM'S GREAT TRAGEDY.

Last Sunday we heard Dr. Cunningham at the Tabernacle on the "Great Tragedy of the World." This, in the Doctor's estimation, was the crucifixion of Christ. His word picture of the event was a fine piece of oratory, and showed a fertile imagination and inventive genius. Every little event that might have tended to prolong or augment the sufferings of Christ was magnified to its utmost proportions. The Doctor made the most of his subject. If taunting words had been whips and scorpions, if contemptuous spittle had been venomous snake bites, and the cross of searing red hot iron, they could not have been more excruciating than our preacher represented them. One thing was peculiarly noticeable in the Doctor's voice and manner. When speaking of Pilate, the chief priest, and the Jewish rabble who cried out "crucify him," and of Judas, who betrayed him, the Doctor's words came like hissing snakes, breathing condemnation and hatred, and manifesting a spirit the very opposite of that of Christ, who said, "Father forgive them, for they know not what they do." When the description was through, and nobody wept, or sobbed, or groaned, the Doctor stared about him as if to say, how do you like that? What do you think of it? And what are you going to do about it?

This great drama of the crucifixion of Christ has two aspects. If he were a god, and only like an actor going through a part, to resume his god-head a few moments after, and be just as happy and glorious as before, then the whole tragedy is a broad farce, and the Doctor a most egregious humbug to make such a mouth about it. We should just as soon think of sympathizing with one of our stage players for the agonies of a cruel death scene, when we see him the next day, with a new suit of clothes, and his pockets filled with the proceeds of the night's performance. If such were the fact, this sermon was a most pitiful attempt to get up a great sensation over just nothing at all. If Jesus Christ, as we suspect, were simply a good man, who excited the hatred of the priesthood of his day, and their poor dupes, and was tortured to death through their ill will, he well deserves, and has, all our sympathy and good will. But thousands have suffered just as much he did, and in the same cause; and were he to appear again in our own city, and say, as he did of old, "Woe unto you pharisees, hypocrites, who pray standing in the synagogues and the corners of the streets; who lay heavy burdens on men's shoulders and will not touch one of them with your little finger; sell that you have and give to the poor; take no thought for the morrow, or what ye shall eat or drink; behold God is your father and ye are all brethren;" the doctor would be among the first to cry out, "communist, leveler, scoffer," and hurry him to prison and punishment. But, after all, his sufferings and death were a very common-place affair, and not to be compared to a thousand other tragedies that have stained the history of this world, and in which the innocent and good have been the sufferers. How will it compare with the tortures of the Inquisition? or the massacre of St. Bartholomew in Paris? or even with Libby prison, or Andersonville? What of the flogging to death of a poor negro by an imperious Christian master? Nay, if we are rightly informed, some good missionaries in the South Sea Islands have been so mistaken by the natives, that after explaining to them the necessity of partaking of the body and blood of the good man Christ, as the only means of salvation, they have forthwith eaten the missionary in spite of his earnest remonstrances.

We didn't weep at the Doctor's recital, nor did we see anybody else. The crucifixion of Christ was a very poor tragedy as compared with a thousand others which have been enacted in this world by bigoted priests, even if it were all true; and the Doctor seemed to forget that one essential of a really good story—that it should be founded on fact. Of course he could have told us that he has the account in four little books, without either date or author's name, and called Gospels. He could have told us that the Pope of Rome and all the great councils have said that these books are true. He might have said that the bench of bishops and King James, in England, had indorsed the statement; and lastly, that all the clergy of America, who are paid enough for doing so, do the same. But he well knew that these statements would have little effect on that intelligent audience, and he had none other to offer, so he forgot the proof altogether. He relied on the high colors of his picture to affect the imagination. He would not appeal to the judgment, knowing he had nothing to offer to convince it. And yet, without these proofs, his great tragedy loses all its power over the well informed mind.

MR. YORK'S LECTURE.

Our friend York is becoming more and more lively in his style of speaking. He certainly does not intend that anyone shall go to sleep under his preaching. He spoke before the Spiritualists' Union on Sunday evening last on Religion and Science, maintaining that the latter is all we need to help us on in this world; that religion is only another word for superstition; and that it generally covers a large amount of cussedness. Science teaches the right relation of things; religion teaches nothing, but it envelops the mind in a fog, deluding people that the priests may rob them. Every blessing is brought to us by science; no good comes from what is called religion. Knowledge is not of itself a virtue, but it enables us to distinguish what is virtue, and it has taught Mr. York that there is no virtue in religion. Whatever teaches men to be better, to act nobler, to accomplish more for the good of humanity; whatever enables us to grow, morally, intellectually and physically, he asserts belongs to science. Beyond this there is no work left for religion; yet the spiritual nature must be cultivated. The soul is the man, and that must be attended to—but in the opinion of Mr. York, this work also belongs to the domain of science, which embraces the entire field of human action, thought and feeling. The lecture was listened to with much attention. Mr. York will speak again on Sunday evening, the 22d. Let him have a full house.

TRUE SPIRITUALISM.

EDITOR COMMON SENSE:—I wish the writers for the liberal press were led to speak more of practical and less of phenomenal Spiritualism, so that the world at large may understand and know that the manifestations, so called, are but the smallest portion of true Spiritualism, and that it is something that finds a response in the very centre of our being. I wish the whole world to know that it includes everything that is pure, true and good, that it teaches us to find "sermons in stones;" and not only in them, but that we may receive good from the Christian pulpit. I hear it so often remarked by those who do not know of our beautiful faith, that the outward manifestations are all there is of Spiritualism; that it does not give us any lessons in morality, but rather leads to licentious freedom. Then let us, who know better, tell them so, or rather let our lives prove the falseness of the accusation. But too many of the so-called reformers have settled back upon their own self-righteousness, and stand accusing the Christian world of hypocrisy, while all the time 'tis only from the abundance of the heart that their mouths are speaking, for the religion of Spiritualism is charity and brotherly love. Then let us write and speak, in public places, of the morality taught by our faith in its spiritual purity. Those who wish to learn of spirit communion can visit mediums who sit for that purpose. Others may do as they will, but what I propose to give to the public is the lessons of charity, love, light and peace, which are given me from time to time by my spirit guides.

PEARL MELWOOD.

SELF CULTURE AT DASHAWAY HALL.—Last Sunday the exercises at Dashaway Hall were opened by the Rev. Mr. Hemphill, of Calvary Church. The example is a good one, and we hope the able preachers of our city will often take advantage of the opportunity there thrown out, to cast their pearls before those who will not go to the churches. The gentleman was listened to with respect and attention. The question for consideration was, "Is the 'plan of salvation' and the atonement by Christ, the only way of salvation?" Mr. Hemphill did not seem to understand the wants of his audience. They expected facts and logic. They did not want opinion and persuasion! What Pontius Pilate, or the Apostles, the Pope of Rome, or the great Napoleon, thought of Christ, was not to the question. Neither did that audience need to be told that the character of Christ was lovely and commendable. That is admitted. The question involved three points: "Who was Christ, in fact? Is an atonement what man wants, to be saved? Did Christ offer that atonement, and is there no other way to be saved?" On all of these points Mr. Hemphill was silent. He was followed by others, who, in a different way, strayed equally from the true issue; and yet, taken altogether, the discussion was eager, sharp and interesting. The question was continued for next Sunday, and the interest will no doubt be maintained.

PUBLIC SEANCES.

Both the meetings on Sunday afternoon last were well attended. The seance at Spiritualists' Union Hall, 911 Market street, near Fifth, opened with a song, "Daisy's left us," exquisitely rendered by Mrs. Whitney. A poem was read by Mrs. McKinley, after which, under the inspiration of Dr. Rush, questions sent up by the audience were answered. Lena Clark then arose and gave a lucid description of a gentleman standing behind a lady in the audience, giving his age, characteristics, etc.; his first name is William, and he is a near relative. The lady arose and testified that the person described was her brother. Several tests followed. While describing one spirit she says: "the name is Mary A. C.," whereupon the influence immediately seized Mrs. McKinley, and said "Mary Ann Clark—I will write my name upon this medium's arm." It was almost instantly accomplished, to the gratification of the spirit and audience. Dean Clark made some logical remarks upon the philosophy of vision, elucidating both the process of material and spiritual sight. The name of A. White also came on Mrs. McKinley's arm, and a description of the spirit followed. After other tests the song "Dreaming of Home and Mother" was given, and the audience dispersed, well pleased with the afternoon's entertainment.

Charter Oak Hall was crowded. Mrs. Foye being indisposed, Mrs. Wiggin presided. A large number of tests were given. Out of twenty-seven names of spirits described seventeen were acknowledged as identified. How many more were recognized, but not acknowledged, is unknown.

CONFERENCE AT CHARTER OAK HALL.—The Sunday morning conference was well attended, and the discussion on the evidences of Spiritualism lively and forcible. The opposition seems not to be daunted by the formidable array of statements of astonishing manifestations. The evidence is discredited; fraud and collusion and delusion are brought in to explain them away. The utter impossibility of their being true is insisted upon; or, at least, such high improbability that better proof is demanded than any yet given. Then the facts poured out by Spiritualists present, as of their own experience, seem sufficient to carry conviction anywhere. They would convert any but the very clect, and the opposition claim to be of that class.

At a convention of the Young Men's Christian Association recently held, it was reported that there are nine hundred and forty-five associations on the roll. New York is going to have a Y. M. H. A. The H stands for Hebrew. The Friends of Progress might have a Y. M. F. P. A., were it not for their conviction that young women should be admitted on a par with the young men. As it is, the new secret order, U. O. F. P., will answer very well.

ANOTHER "Free Conference" was held at Anthony's Hall on Sunday afternoon, the attendance being small. The meeting was, however, an interesting one, and the utmost good feeling prevailed. The "Conference" will be held to-morrow in the same place.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

EDITOR COMMON SENSE:—In your last issue I note the organization of a secret society, to which as a friend of "progressive" human advancement, I enter protest. Secrecy is not progression. As individuals desirous of lifting ourselves, and those to follow into a higher condition, we must build up a system that can stand the light, and the free criticism of the multitude. Our acts and purposes must be based on reason, and the science of life, and all this union with closed doors is a backward step.[1] This mating business is a humbug of the first water. There is nothing in it to elevate woman, but more to pull her down as society stands to-day. Work for woman's political power; this gained she then can mate herself. Organization is well enough for the promulgation of liberal ideas and for charity; but secret conclaves, degrees, and "mating," carries no good for the masses.[2] Secret organizations belong to the past; they are the fading relics of barbarism and superstition, and do not belong to the progressive spirit of this age. In accordance as we school ourselves and others to the idea of true individuality, where every act and word can stand the test of the light of day, do we advance in moral and intellectual worth.[3]

Some may contest my views by referring to the Masonic and Odd Fellows order. Are they to-day what they were in times past? Are they to-day more than benevolent insurance institutions? As benevolent institutions they are admired, but for any good purpose beyond that they are utterly useless. We all have work to do, collectively as well as individually, but let Friends of Progress move with open acts, open hearts and open doors.[4] P.

July 30th.

COMMENTS.

Our friend is honest in his opinion, and is entitled to be heard; but we have something to say in reply:

1. The principal object of this society, as we are informed, is to counteract the efforts of the Young Men's Christian Association to engraft the Christian religion on our republican constitution, and to change our civil government into an ecclesiastical hierarchy. The movement to this end has been growing rapidly since the Evangelical Alliance had its session in New York last year. The power behind this movement is the Christian Association, which is practically, though not avowedly, a secret organization, holding its public meetings for the masses, and its private consultations for the "trusted servants of the Lord." The only way to contest the ground with these fanatics successfully is to organize secretly. We must know who are our friends, and must quietly prepare for the troublous times which are coming.

2. There is some truth in this, as understood by our correspondent; but we are informed that the "mating," as he calls it, is not for the purpose of pairing off persons who are congenial; it is merely a mode, and a very innocent and natural one, of recognizing the political equality of the sexes, which P. is himself so desirous of having established. It is the same plan adopted by the Grangers, for the purpose of accustoming women to take part in business matters, and the same long practiced by the Good Templars, who certainly have no thought of "mating" people. Women are not yet accustomed to act an equal part with men in the affairs of life, and in these societies, if not required by rule, they would shrink from the performance of official duties, and would fail to gain the experience necessary to qualify them to go side by side with their husbands and brothers to the polls.

3. The truth is, secret organizations were never in a condition so flourishing as they are to-day. The editors of COMMON SENSE never belonged to any of them, excepting the Good Templars, and have always opposed them, but the signs of the times point unmistakably to their necessity; not for the sake of concealing anything of itself evil, but for the same reason that the movements of armies are concealed in time of war. We are engaged in a contest with a wily foe, and it would be folly to expose our "hand" to the enemy before we ascertained which party has the most trumps.

4. There is no ground of comparison between the secret societies here mentioned and the new one just organized. The former are ostensibly benevolent institutions, but really they have the effect to narrow the field of benevolence within certain fixed limits, and in so much they prevent the growth of that humanitarianism which looks upon every man as a brother and every woman as a sister, no matter of what order in society, what nationality, color or even creed, though as to the latter it is well to be careful that while seeking to help them, we do not permit them to hurt us. Another great difference between the old established orders and the new one is that the former are for men exclusively; the latter is for all. The former is founded on the ancient idea that the "spheres" of the sexes are widely apart, the latter upon the modern opinion that the interests of men and women are essentially one, and that whatever society is unfit for women to mingle with is unfit for men also. Odd Fellows meet in Lodges as brothers, but that does not imply that the families of Odd Fellows are on a social equality. Odd Fellows would not take their wives and daughters with them, if permitted, through fear that they would be contaminated by the company they would there meet. Their idea is to keep women the same weak, helpless things they have so long been, and assist them when unprotected by father or brother. The Friends of Progress, on the other hand, believe in assisting women to become self-supporting, independent and capable of taking care of themselves, and a sick husband also if necessary. One system is, as our correspondent says, a "relic of barbarism"; the other, if carried out in the spirit which should govern it, will be in full harmony with the "progressive spirit of the age." Whether this particular society will carry out the principles it professes, or whether they are avowed but to conceal other designs, does not yet clearly appear to those not initiated, and, thus far, the editors of COMMON SENSE have not been able to get anything more than a general idea of the new Order. If it is what it purports to be, it will live; if not, it will fail, and the Liberal element of the Pacific coast will form another, or join the National League recently started in New York.

Lectures on astronomy, geology and other subjects have been given each evening this week to large audiences by Prof. Wm. Denton, at Mercantile Library Hall. They have been very interesting and instructive, as all of Mr. Denton's lectures are; but the most attractive of the series is to be given this evening, Saturday, the 15th, on Psychometry, or the Soul of Things, containing an account of the most remarkable discoveries of the 19th century. Tomorrow, Mr. Denton will lecture, afternoon and evening at the same hall on Spiritualism, and in order to afford friends an opportunity to go, there will be no meeting of the Spiritualists Union at 811 Market street. The Charter Oak Hall meetings will be deferred also.

THE MINISTRY OF ANGELS.

Since the death of William M. Fernald, Noyes Holmes & Co., of Boston, have published a collection of his essays under the title of The True Christian Life and How to Attain it. The following is an extract from one of the articles entitled "The Ministry of Angels:"

Confucius, the Chinese philosopher, taught that the spirits of the departed frequently returned to the halls of their ancestors. Zoroaster, the founder of the Persian religion, claimed, and we have no doubt truthfully, to have had intercourse with the spiritual world. Pythagoras and Plato both taught distinctly the doctrine of guardian spirits. Socrates, the wisest and best of all the heathen philosophers, always declared himself to be sensible of the guidance of a superior being, who warned him of dangers and directed him aright. The ancient Egyptians are full of the same faith; and the evidence is, that, cleared from ignorance and superstition, and unobstructed by sense and materiality, it is the faith of human nature. It is the powerful support of all fiction; the highest element of romance is indeed missing when this feature of it is not present. And the Providence of God in this respect is immense. No mind can conceive or imagination form, an adequate idea of the constant, universal, complicated agency of these spiritual beings, in the care and direction and government of this world. It is not generally in order, however, for them to appear externally and visibly; this, if it were too common, would take away our freedom. But they flow silently into the thoughts and affections. They come in moments of danger, when we see them not, and prompt the thoughts to safety and peace; they come in sorrow, to infuse the balm of comfort and the strength of cheerfulness into the mind; they come in temptation, to avert the soul from its purposes of wickedness; they stand by the couch of sickness and the bed of death, and, having themselves passed through the same scenes of mortality, they minister to every human frailty and weakness, and shed the light and strength of heaven through the soul ready to despair. O! could we but realize it! Could we but see the reality, and the parting circumstances of the dying bed, how would death be robbed of its sting, and the grave of its victory?

But they stop not here. They are always with us when we are awake and when we sleep. They are abroad upon the whole world, and they rule the nations more than men. They are limited in their power; they cannot do everything for us. They are necessarily limited to the general conditions of human progress and to human organization and susceptibility. And there are many evils which they might perhaps prevent, which they are not permitted to. The permissive dispensation of Providence frequently baffles all our comprehension. But they roll on this mighty car of human improvement more than we do. They urge the proper ones to their proper work. They stimulate the reformer to his hard but glorious task, and lead him by a way that he knows not; and, seeing the end from the beginning, sustain him in his trials, and carrying him onward in his triumphs. We are not alone in this mighty movement of a progressive world. Hosts of purified spirits, who have passed through the same battles with the wrong, and stood out for freedom and truth, are looking down upon our efforts, and assisting us in the work they love. I speak but the Scriptural truth, for we are assured of "a great cloud of witnesses." The strength of every good cause has more of heaven in it than of earth. There is more of peace, freedom, patriotism, temperance, and more advocates of a better world and church, among the guardians of our world in heaven, than are to be found on earth. Every solitary thinker, every lonely man and woman, who, in retirement, or in the midst of persecution, is pressing on in the cause of righteousness, is, after all, not alone, but in a glorious company strong and bright for the same great movement.

BEECHER A FOLLOWER OF JESUS.

At a prayer meeting recently held in Plymouth church, Henry Ward Beecher is reported as saying, in the course of his remarks:

Of one thing, my dearly beloved, be fully assured, my greatest joy will be assured when I stand in the presence of the revealed God, and when you come up we shall shake hands in eternal, blessed reunion. I shall ever be by the side of my loved Saviour, whose servant I have been.

A writer in Woodhull and Claflin's Weekly comments as follows:

Whether Beecher is or has been the servant of the "loved Saviour," seems to be somewhat problematical in view of his teaching on several late occasions; but especially in his sermon on "The Sermon on the Mount" and in his lecture on "Manhood and Money," whereby are taught sentiments as opposite in their meanings as light to darkness, compared with those of the "loved Saviour," and such as none but sycophants, man-worshippers, and the real enemies of truth, and the righteousness begotten of truth could possibly hear without being moved to the feeling and expression of a righteous indignation. How any man dare to attempt to impose himself upon even a credulous community as a servant of one whose plainest teaching he has publicly disavowed and sneered at, none but a Beecher can understand, and none but a community of toad-eaters attempt to justify.

VIRTUE A THING OF GROWTH.—The frightful pictures of remorse, painted by artists of the "Evangelical" and "sentimental" school, were done under the inspiration of theological dogma, rather than at the suggestion of truth. They who would seem to have best causes for remorse—the thieves, robbers, liars, slanderers, assassins, the fomenters of domestic and social strife, the authors of unholy wars, the poisoners of the wells of humanity,—show the smallest evidence of its presence. The ruffian is not pricked in conscience. The fraudulent railway manager does not pine from an outraged moral sense. The conspirator feels no torment of spirit till he is in danger of detection, and then his suffering is due to the anticipation of punishment, not to the pangs of guilt. The speculator sleeps well and dines comfortably. The pillager of widows' houses sips his wine, and talks piously with his minister of the delights of a good conscience. The best man suffers more in an hour for a fault than the worst man suffers in a lifetime for a brutal sin. Men who are capable of remorse for great crimes are incapable of committing them. Men must grow into wisdom and goodness. Ignorance is the mother of crime and all injustice.—O. B. Frothingham.

It is a custom with the English House of Lords that the youngest of the prelates offers up prayers. Once the old Bishop of Durham lounged into the House, when, being the only member of the episcopate present, he was invited to perform the easy office of chaplain. Disgusted, he retreated, and thus explained his injury to an in-going peer: "No young bishops there! Hang 'em! do they think that I am going to do their dirty work for 'em? Not I, sir! not I!" Familiarity had brought contempt. He had come to regard prayer as common, routine work, only fit for inferior parsons.

MOTHER-LOVE.

"God loves the erring as a shepherd loves
The wandering lamb. No mother hates her child,
But crusted o'er with evil, sin defiled,
Cradles him in her bosom. All the world
May curse him, but it matters not to her,
She loves him far better for his agonies.
Sweet pity tends his fevered couch by night,
Unstinted love her boundless wealth bestows.
Were he a crowned seraph, dazzling pure,
King of a race of angels in the sky,
Were all his thoughts beatitudes, not more
Would that sweet love his being bathe and bless.
How spake the Man of Mercy when the Jew,
The type of an extreme morality,
Thanked God that he was not as other men?
He turned to where the publican bowed low
And owned himself a sinner, and he saw
A genuine manhood, sweet and beautiful.
The heart that feels its own unworthiness
Throbs most with love to God and love to man.
The man who sees one common nature, where Others discern but surface opposites,
Sees as God sees. All human beings share
The common imperfections of the race.
All, in their inmost essence, receive
The common inspirations of their God.
They love the most who are forgiven most,
And Right Reason slowly dawns once more
On the wild madness of a moral fiend—
Our brother still, and God's beloved child.
There comes a mighty gnash of gratitude,
Thawing the hoar frost of a life of crime,
Breaking the icy barriers of self-love,
While all the loosened rivers of the soul
Spring from their fountains, radiant in the light.

THE PARTING HOUR.

There's something in the "parting hour"
Will chill the warmest heart—
Yet kindred, comrades, lovers, friends,
Are fated all to part;
But this I've seen—and many a pang
Has pressed it on my mind—
The one who goes is happier
Than those he leaves behind.

No matter what the journey be,
Adventurous, dangerous, far,
The wild deep, or bleak frontier,
To solitude or war—
Still something cheers the heart that dares,
In all of human kind
And they who go are happier
Than those they leave behind.

The bride goes to the bridegroom's home
With doubtings and with tears,
But does not Hope her rainbow spread
Across her cloudy fears?
Alas! the mother who remains
What comfort can she find?
But this—the gone is happier
Than one she leaves behind!

Have you a friend—a comrade dear?
An old and valued friend?
Be sure your term of sweet comcourse
At length will have an end!
And when you part—as part you will—
O take it not unkind
If he who goes is happier
Than you he leaves behind.

God will it so—and so it is;
The pilgrims on their way,
Tho' worn and weak, more cheerful are
Than all the rest who stay.
And when at last poor man subdued,
Lies down to death resigned,
May he not still be happier far
Than those he leaves behind.

TO HIS SATANIC HIGHNESS.

Hail, patriot spirit! thy labors be blest!
For of all great reformers, thyself wert the first;
Thou wert the first with discernment strong,
To perceive that all rights divine were wrong;
And long hast thou spent thy sovereign breath,
In heaven above and on earth beneath,
And roared it from thy burning throne,
Thy glory of independence alone;
Proclaiming to all with fervor and irony
That kingly dominion's all humbug and tyranny;
And whoso listeth may be free;
For Freedom, full freedom's the word with thee!
That life has its pleasures—the rest is a sham!
And all that comes after a flim and a flam.
Speed thee, speed thee!
Liberty lead thee!
Many this night shall hearken and heed thee;
Hie abroad,
Demi-god!
Who shall defame thee?
King of the elements! how shall we name thee?

NOTES AMERICAN.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

From "Our Age."

We read with interest the articles of J. W. Mackie, published in the "COMMON SENSE." There is something in them unlike much we find in public journals. Truly, this paper speaks for itself, as its editor assured us it would.

[From "The Word" Princetown Mass.]

COMMON SENSE has at last got into journalism. Weekly, Edited by W. N. Slocum 236 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal. Well-printed, ably-edited, full of interesting matter; it is, what it claims to be, "A Journal of Live Ideas." Send for it.

[From S. F. Chronicle]

COMMON SENSE, the new paper devoted to free thought, Spiritualism, etc., of which W. N. Slocum is editor, has made a second appearance. It is a capital number, and its "make up" is a triumph of journalistic art. Typographically, COMMON SENSE is one of the prettiest papers in this city.

[From the San Jose Mercury.]

COMMON SENSE.—The second number of this new weekly is at hand. It is free from the imperfections of the first hurried issue, and is truly a superior number. We learn that some sixty subscribers have been obtained for the paper in San Jose. A number that will doubtless be increased to a hundred or more.

[From the New Northwest]

COMMON SENSE.—We are in receipt of a Spiritual paper bearing this title, issued by the "Common Sense Publishing Company" of San Francisco. As a sectarian Spiritual publication, it is as proxy and orthodox as the "Watchman and Evangelist" and "Christian Reflector" are for the sects which they represent.

From the "New Age," San Francisco, Cal.

"Common Sense—A Journal of Live Ideas." This is a new enterprise started in this city by Mr. and Mrs. Slocum. The paper is devoted to the dissemination of free thought on religious and philosophical subjects, and however diverse may be one's opinions on such subjects, there can be but one opinion as to the excellent paper presented. It is creditable editorially and typographically to all concerned, and we wish it a hearty God-speed.

[From the Truth Seeker.]

COMMON SENSE, No. 1, Vol. I., of a neat sixteen page Weekly by this title, published in San Francisco, is upon our table. It is devoted to morality, education, equal rights, labor-reform and whatever elevates and ennobles our race. It has a decided bearing towards the Spiritual Philosophy. We hail this young champion of free thought on religious and philosophical subjects, and however diverse may be one's opinions on such subjects, there can be but one opinion as to the excellent paper presented. It is creditable editorially and typographically to all concerned, and we wish it a hearty God-speed.

[From the Russian River Flag.]

COMMON SENSE.—A weekly journal with this title was started in San Francisco last week, with W. N. Slocum as Manager. The first number indicates that it will be an exponent of the doctrine of Spiritualism, but it proposes to open its columns for the presentation of all ideas entitled to a respectful hearing. Its platform says the paper "is intended to serve as a means of communication between rational thinkers and intelligent, truth-seeking readers—an advocate of morality, education, equal rights, labor reform, and all that elevates and ennobles the human race; an opponent of class legislation, church creeds, bigotry, intolerance, and whatever tends to degrade mankind and retard human progress. It will not be the organ of any party or sect, nor the exclusive mouthpiece of any man or woman, but will furnish a fair field for all opinions worthy of consideration, however much they may differ from those entertained by the editor." The friends of free thought will give COMMON SENSE a cordial greeting. Its subscription price is $3 a year.

Special Notices.

For the very best Photographs go to Bradley & Bulofson's Gallery, with an elevator, 429 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Persons having business to transact with Woodhull & Claflin may address their agent, Fred. Thal, care of William Sharp, 236 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

For a stylish and well finished Photograph go to Kluit's New Photographic Establishment, No. 28 Third street. All work warranted superior to any in the city.

Those suffering from that most annoying of the minor miseries of human life—a cold in the head—or from catarrh in any form, should try Dr. Evory's Diamond Catarrh Remedy. Just try it—that's all. Sold at this office, and by all druggists.

Send Austin Kent one dollar for his pamphlets on Free Love and Marriage, etc. He has been seventeen years physically helpless, confined to his bed and chair, is poor and needs the money. He sends four or five well-written essays for one dollar. His address is AUSTIN KENT, Stockholm, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., Box 44.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, NO. 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

COMMON SENSE can be purchased at the following places in this city: Patten's, 773 Market; Cooper's, 760 Market; Ohoyaki's, 146 Second; Snow's, 319 Kearny; Sharp's, 238 Montgomery, and at this office, 236 Montgomery street, up stairs. Price of single copies, ten cents.

AGENTS IN THE INTERIOR.

Contra Costa county	E. H. Kimball, Antioch
Inyo county	Mrs. L. Hutchinson, Bishop Creek
Monterey county	W. M. Wilson, Salinas City
Santa Barbara county	Mrs. Clara R. Crane, Santa Barbara
San Bernardino county	Dr. J. P. Greves, Riverside
Santa Cruz county	Mrs. Georgiana B. Kirby
San Joaquin county	W. S. Sturgeon, Stockton
Ventura county	J. W. Stevens, San Buenaventura
Yolo county	J. G. Hudson, Woodland

TRAVELING AGENTS, Abby W. Baker, Prof. W. H. Chaney, J. L. York, J. I. Farree, Addie L. Ballou, H. F. M. Brown.

COMMON SENSE.

A Journal of Live Ideas.

VOL. 1.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, AUGUST 29, 1874.

No. 16.

Signs of the Times.

Philadelphians propose to raise $100,000 for a memorial to Joseph Hopkinson, who wrote Hail Columbia.

Rev. Mr. Johnson, of the Santa Barbara Press, is preparing to go East on a lecturing tour, the lectures to be illustrated by California views.

Wm. H. Martin, and a number of Eastern gentlemen recently visited Santa Barbara, to examine land offered for sale, for the use of colonies, the result being the purchase of 40,000 acres.

The innumerable lapses from common honesty among the most devoted of church adherents, that have characterized our land of late, show the need of a very different kind of religion.

Wonderful physical phenomena continue to be witnessed in presence of the Eddy Mediums, at Chittenden, Vt. At one seance, as many as seventeen different spirits manifested themselves.

Chicago has introduced moral suasion in her schools instead of corporal punishment, and finds it successful. Last year there were fewer suspensions in proportion to attendance than ever before.

Rev. Mrs. Gillett, of Rochester, Michigan, says at almost every trip she takes in that State, some man goes through the cars and takes the vote of women, and that it is usually six out of ten in favor of Woman Suffrage.

COMMON SENSE says: "Politically, we are free; but religiously we are abject slaves. Slaves to a horde of petty tyrants. We are afraid of our shadows. On all other subjects, we reason, investigate and analyze, but upon religion we dare not think, nor read, nor hear."

A letter from a friend in Olympia, August 10th, says: "Mrs. Ballou has given three splendid lectures here to good houses, but for poor pay. With a population of only fifteen hundred, and six churches, the people are priest-ridden, and ground down to the bedrock."

John P. Stearns, of Santa Barbara, says $250,000 worth of intoxicating liquors are sold annually in Santa Barbara. He is the sole owner of wharf property there, and receives $2,000 a year wharfage on whiskey, yet he counsels the people not to use the stuff, but to spend the money in building a railroad or educating the children.

The total value of the sponges fished on the coast of Syria is from 20,000*lbs* to 25,000*lbs*. The production is, however, falling off through excessive fishing, and the consequent exhaustion of the fishery grounds. About 250 to 300 boats are at present employed in this industry on the coast of Syria, manned by about 1,500 men.

Doctor Beins, of Amsterdam, suggests that condensed carbonic acid should be used as a means of producing a motive-power to supercede steam.

Gladstone is writing a work on Hell. It is said his political life has fully qualified him for the task, but the Golden Age suggests that he wait awhile, when possibly he will be able to treat it with more warmth.

Among some books shortly to be sold in London is a rolled manuscript of the Hebrew Pentateuch, acquired a few years ago from a Synagogue in Palestine. It was written in the twelfth century on 60 skins of leather.

T. W. Higginson says woman suffrage will not divide families. He reminds us that families and nations have quarrelled twice as much over religion as over politics, ever since the world began, yet women are free to choose their own religion.

There are now in California fifteen Alden Fruit Evaporating machines erected, or being erected, located as follows: Five at San Lorenzo, Alameda county; three at Centerville, same county, two at Vacaville, Solano county; and two at Napa city.

A few weeks ago a number of young men in New York city associated themselves under the name of the Young Men's Woman Suffrage League, for the purpose of removing legal and constitutional obstacles to the exercise of the right of suffrage by woman. Four public meetings have been held in Plimpton Hall, which attracted large audiences.

Many of the most refined women whom the land has produced have gone as missionaries, taught schools for freedmen, visited the Five Points in New York, entered into bar-rooms to persuade their husbands away, or tended hospitals during the war; yet it is a common saying that refined woman will not demean themselves by putting a ballot in a box.

The New York City School Commissioners have passed an order consolidating the white and colored schools. This action has created intense excitement, and many intelligent colored people regret the step as calculated to injure the schools and irritate feelings that ought to be allayed. The Catholics rejoice, as they would gladly see the free school system ruined.

As President Gilman, in his various addresses concerning the University, has spoken no word for the co-education of the sexes, and on one occasion, at least, in a public address said the University exists for the education of young men, it is inferred that he is opposed to the equal education of women, and looks unfavorably upon their admission to the University.

SPIRITUAL PHENOMENA.

DEAR MR. EDITOR:—It is generally understood by Spiritualists that the spiritual telegraph was first opened with the other world at Hydesville, by the Misses Fox, about twenty-five years ago. But it must not be overlooked that this was a mere accident, not dependent at all upon the action of the spirits on the other side, but of that of those on this; and moreover that the statement can only be predicated of Europe, and is not true of the rest of the world, —is not true even of this continent. The medicine men of the Indian tribes were no doubt often mediums, and had communications in various ways with the spirits of the departed, exhibiting symptoms of trance mediumship, and displaying, when shut up in their medicine wigwams, which formed the requisite dark-chamber, many of those extraordinary physical phenomena which have so startled modern frequenters of seances.

The Chinese, and Cochin Chinese, are almost all Spiritualists, and have for ages communicated with the departed by means of planchettes, indirect writing in sand, etc., and in various other ways. Indeed I have heard and read accounts of phenomena amongst them which would seem to show that they are conversant with many of the more startling facts which are now only just dawning upon some of the most liberal of our scientific men. A missionary for many years resident in China, who some years ago lectured at Shanghai, spoke of the Chinese as Spiritualists to a man, and as having through all differences of creed and dynasty been Spiritualists for ages past. Indeed all Buddhistic nations are necessarily Spiritualists, since their sacred histories, like those of the Christians, are full of spiritual manifestations identical in principle with those now so rife amongst us. All oriental nations believe in charms, witchcraft and the intervention of evil spirits.

The Buddhists, besides believing in various grades of exalted spirits, whose distinctions and qualities agree entirely with the accounts of such given by spirits at our seances, as far as they go, all believe in the existence and constant presence of two or three classes of "undeveloped spirits" haunting the forests and cities of this lower earth, and sometimes creating disturbance and mischief, although incapable of doing much actual harm. They regard these beings as quasi material, i. e. to a certain extent composed of material elements, and believe them to be so numerous in the haunts of men that they represent a medium who had the power of seeing them as being afraid to walk through the deserted streets of a city for fear of injuring the crowded spirits there.

Amongst the Druses of Lebanon physical manifestations of a most remarkable kind, such as making a staff go through the attitudes of assisting in human progression, without any visible human form accompanying it; making a pot of water wheel round and round, and then empty itself out without approaching it, etc., have been witnessed by travelers in broad daylight; chiefly in the presence, and beneath the tent, of a certain old shiek of the tribe. The Buddhists of Thibet, especially the monks in the monasteries, would appear to have had many wonderful mediums amongst them, some description of whose wonders may be read in Father Huc's account of his journey to Laassa.

The modern Egyptian magicians, who used to describe spirits seen in a pool of ink held in a boy's hand, were probably also real mediums, since many of their descriptions were quite satisfactory, although no doubt some travelers have met with impostors. The fellahs of Egypt believe in undeveloped spirits whom they call "afrits," and exalted ones whom they designate "genii." Descriptions of these we have all read as children in the Arabian Nights entertainments. They, like the Buddhists of Ceylon, think that afrits are quasi materialized beings; and although usually invisible and unpalpable, yet substantial enough to be dispersed by a musket or pistol ball, and to leave a residue in the form of a few grains of black dust, or ashes, behind, when thus suddenly and forcibly unmaterialized.

Many savage nations have beliefs closely analogous to, if not identical with these. I remember reading an account given years ago in the Corn Hill Magazine, about the time of the first colonial troubles with the Maoris in New Zealand, of certain heathen ceremonies common amongst them with reference to the dead. The writer, who evidently spoke in good faith, described having been present at one of these meetings, which took place in a darkened hut; where, after some chanting in honor of the deceased by the female relatives, a voice recognized by them as that of the departed, addressed the company apparently from the roof above them, and held quite a long conversation with them. Those who have talked with Jim Nolan at Mrs. Hollis' seances, will be struck with the identity of the conditions and the phenomena in these two cases, so dissimilar and wide apart in every other respect.

The Highland Scotch have always believed in second sight; the Islanders of Man in witchcraft and the black spectral dog; and tales of ghosts which sometimes spoke and sometimes acted physically upon their material surroundings, have come down to us in legions from our own freinds and ancestors, and may be found, if sought for, in the traditions of every tribe and nation under the sun, in equal quantity; and certainly in many cases with strong evidences of authenticity. Such stories are very numerous in Germany, and the polter-geist, or noisy, knocking spirit was known to every peasant in Germany ages before the Fox girls first interpreted the knocking of a polter-geist at Hydesville. Similar accounts are handed down to us in all the literature of antiquity; as well that of the Greeks and Romans, as that of the Jews and Christians. A Christian not a Spiritualist!! Why a book more full of "Startling Facts in Spiritualism" I have never seen than the "Acts of the Apostles," till I read Dr. Wolfe's interesting work, bearing the above title, the other day. The appearance of Cæsar's spirit to Brutus, and Samuel's ghost to Saul, will occur to the memory of all.

Nicholai, the celebrated bookseller and publisher of Berlin, who lived in Goethe's time, was troubled for years by the constant presence of spectres, which moved about and talked around him and with him, sometimes bearing the forms of deceased, and occasionally, but not quite so often, those of living persons. This latter fact was supposed at that time—we know better now—to be proof sufficient that the phenomena was a mere illusion dependant upon some functional derangement of the circulation, or of the brain; and thus Nicholai, who was the fierce anti-Spiritualist of that age, always looked upon it. He was ultimately cured by the application of leeches. Although Nicholai had many times conversed with the spectre of his dead son, and with those of other friends departed, yet he wrote a book, after he ceased to be mediumistic, to prove that the phenomena were nothing after all but an optical delusion.

There is a curious scene in Goethe's walpurgnacht, or May night's dream, the scene of which is laid at the witches feast on the Brocken, in which Goethe, who was a Spiritualist, in common with Shelley, Byron, and all true poets, introduces Nicholai, and ridicules his obstinate Materialism. In this scene the Proctophantasmist, (Nicholai) philosophically and skeptically regarding the ghostly troop of dancing witches, etc., says:

You cursed rabble! what! how dare you then?
Have we not made it clear, must we repeat
That no ghost treads on ordinary feet?
And here you dance, just like us other men!

THE BEAUTY (as she dances with Faust):

What can he want then at our ball, the bear?

FAUST (as he dances):

That fellow! oh! he's everywhere!
Whilst others dance, their dances worth he'll tell you,
And if each step he cannot undervalue,
That step is just as though it ne'er were made,
He's angriest when we go ahead.
If in a circle you would waltz round blindly,
Just as he tramps it, harnessed in his mill,
In any case he'd call that fair and well,
Especially if therefor you should thank him kindly.

PROCTOPHANTASMIST:

What! not gone yet? Intolerable assurance!
Vanish I beg! This is beyond endurance.
We've cleared you out once! Devils scout all rules.
So wise are we, yet ghosts still make us fools.
How long ago swept I this trash to hell,
And Tegel's haunted yet! intolerable!

BEAUTY:—Cease then, at least, to bore us here, Sir Worrit!

PROCTOPHANTASMIST:

I tell ye spirits plainly, here arisen,
I'll not allow this Spiritualism,
My SPIRIT I declare cannot endure it.
(They dance on still.)
To-day I see, I nothing shall effect.
And then, for once I'll take a trip with you,
And I shall hope, before my journey's through Poets and ghosts to force to be correct.

MEPHISTOPHELES:

He'll seat himself down in some puddle straight,
For that's the way he soothes his wounded merit;
And when the leeches revel on his seat,
He'll be quite cured of SPIRITS and of SPIRIT.

The above interesting passage shows plainly enough what were the sentiments of this gigantic intellect about Materialists, such as Nicholai, and the phenomena of Spiritualism, in which he was a firm believer, as all his writings show. He said elsewhere of Nicholai, who was a great traveler: "Nicholai travels still; long will he continue to travel; yet will he never find his way into the land of wisdom." Carlyle says of the same man: "He never could persuade himself that there was anything in heaven or earth that was not dreamt of in his philosophy."

The aspect persistently preserved hitherto by most of our men of science towards Spiritualism has been so identical with that of Nicholai, and the words of the poet so exactly apply to them now, that I cannot forbear quoting them at length. They must have been written some sixty or seventy years ago. Tegel was a small place near Berlin, where W. Humbolt since resided, in which there happened an affair about this time much like the Cock Lane ghost, a poltergeist in fact. It created much attention at the time in Berlin. In spite of their previous enlightenment by such philosophers as Nicholai, on two different occasions a deputation of distinguished scientists went to ascertain the nature of the spectre, and the cause of the phenomena; and as scientists usually do, made just such a report as the learned professors made the other day at Oakland. Science will acknowledge anything rather than that there are laws and facts for which it can offer no explanation. With your permission I will continue the subject in another letter. Yours, MEDICUS.

WHATEVER IS, IS WRONG.

A REPLY TO "WHATEVER IS, IS RIGHT."

EDITORS COMMON SENSE:—On "Don Fulano's" assumption that there is a "perfectly good and all-powerful God," there could be no evil. We know there is evil. We cannot know that there is a God who could have prevented it. It is not common sense to assume what we do not and cannot know when it goes counter to what we can and do know. I have asserted (above) that all is wrong. I challenge—I respectfully defy Mr. "Don Fulano" or his "optimist" friends to bring one particle of reason, argument or fact in support of his affirmation that I cannot bring the like and as good in support of mine. Both assertions are false. I, of course, should assume an "all-powerful" devil. Good and evil, which means happiness and misery—pain and pleasure—are alike real and positive. Hatred is as natural, actual and positive as love. Hatred pushes—love pulls. Both sometimes give pleasure—sometimes pain. Neither good or evil alone can be infinite, since one limits or bounds the other. There can be no rational doubt that both are a necessity, and eternal. Of course if any being could have prevented suffering, he, she or it would have done it. It has not been done. Suffering then is over all Gods—all good beings. All good beings sympathize with suffering. Sympathy is suffering per se. Hence all good beings, all Gods, if Gods, must suffer.

"Light and heat" are not distinct entities. Both result from motion. So both good and evil, happiness and misery, are only the effect of motion. Motion must have been, and must be, as eternal as that which is moved. In the same sense that there is no evil, no wrong, there is no good, no right. As well call good less evil, as to call evil "less good." If any or all the optimists in the universe can give a candid and rational reply to this, no man can be more interested in it than the writer of this. He has seen evil ultimate in good, and good as truly ultimate in evil, for sixty-five years.

AUSTIN KENT.

Stockholm, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., August 12, 1874.

A man prostrated by disease, and with little hopes of recovery, was asked by his friends if they should not send for a minister of the gospel. He answered: "No, I am a Granger, and opposed to middlemen; and if I go to heaven, I propose to go direct.

CHRIST THE HOPE OF THE WORLD.

BY J. W. MACKIE.

Salvation from ignorance and hereditary defects in our constitution, and consequent crime and misery, has been the great end of all reforms and the problem of every age. The experience and teachings of thousands of years has failed to make the world a paradise. Crime, poverty, disease, tyranny and slavery abound in the world to-day in spite of all the efforts to produce the contrary.

Christianity has been presented to us as the panacea for all the ills which afflict humanity. For eighteen hundred years Christianity has been weighing in the scale, and been found wanting, taking the condition of Christendom to-day as evidence. Since its inception to the present time, its history has been a record of blood; though embracing in its tenets gems bright and sparkling, full of truth and beauty. What is contained in Christianity that neutralizes so effectually the good which should follow the teachings of the Golden Rule and the superhuman morality of the Sermon on the Mount?

After eighteen hundred years exemplification, why is it so difficult to determine what Christianity really is? What grand center do Christians possess around which they can all move in consentaneous agreement in one united church, leaving the members thereof to shine in the strength and sphere of their own individuality, like the planets and their satellites around one common center? Were I to be convinced of the truth of Christianity to-day, would I be any nearer the truth? What have I to gain in leaving the philosophies of the day, with all their uncertainties and hap-hazard guesses and theories? What but this: to wander among the bogs and quagmires, and ignes fatui of Presbyterianism, Episcopalianism, Methodism, Mormonism, Catholicism, Calvinism, Armenianism, Swedenborgianism, Quakers, Trinitarians, Unitarians, Baptists, and Pedo-Baptists. I like not the task. Salvation from this endless medley of opinion would be a salvation worth having. Is it possible?

One of the rich gems contained in the Gospels is the following: "And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." When we shall know the truth concerning ourselves, concerning the relationships and duties existing between us and society, whether as a family or a nation, and all nations—concerning the world on which we live, and its relationships—we shall be free! free from doctors, lawyers and clergy, from kings, priests and presidents, from every ill which makes these social excrecences a necessity.

"It is the hope of the ages that this time is coming
When man to man the world o'er
Will brothers be an' a' that."

Judaism points forward to this glorious time, but Christianity pronounced Judaism a failure eighteen hundred years ago, as something which could not make the comers thereunto perfect. And for four thousand years this poor doomed earth was peopling hell, while this glimmering light from heaven was confined to the land of Palestine, among a race, by their own showing, the most despicable of mankind. But inasmuch as Judaism failed, in what has Christianity succeeded? Is the world saved? And yet there are teachings in Christianity which if applied would save the world, and chief among them the already quoted passage, "The truth shall make you free." But is not that Christianity? some one asks. No. Nor Judaism, nor Mohammedanism, nor Brahminism, nor any form of Christianity, Protestant or Catholic. It is the common property of every age and of every people, and every system. And all ages, people and systems have failed for lack of faith in truth, in the undiscovered truth, the algebraic  $x y z$  of truth. Truth in its very nature cannot be dogmatic or sectarian. Creeds, systems and churches fence the mind within a given circle beyond which it must not go. But truth is freedom itself, illimitable as space, and free as the air we breathe. Christianity has all along been a creed crystallized or fossilized. Liberty to think beyond its limits is a heresy, which it considered a duty to punish in the extreme. Circumscribed liberty is not freedom, and what is not freedom can never be truth, for truth maketh free.

There has always been something in Christianity to believe on which depended our salvation, if not in this world, at least in the world to come. I know too little of the world to come and the conditions of life there to judge of the saving efficacy of a belief in Jesus' death in that world; but in this world it does not prevent disease, and want and misery; it fails to bring harmony into society, purity in the pulpit, or integrity in the pews. Nor because other systems have failed to free us from slavery to error and passion is Christianity less a failure. The failure of other systems is not extraordinary nor discouraging to other systems, for all that any human devised system can claim to do is to clear the way to truth, to approximate; every failure being the highway marks of travel to truth and freedom.

But with Christianity it is different. It claims a divine, not a human origin. Inaugurated by the advent of God himself in the guise of a man, offering himself a sacrifice to satisfy divine justice and render it possible for God to be just and justify the ungodly.

Ushered in amid signs and wonders and anthems of angels, heaven and earth joining in their efforts to welcome the new-born god with the Holy Spirit of God which was to lead to all truth, sanctioning the whole by its active presence, and promising to be with the new system to the end of all things, and by a divine law of entail, the powers exhibited by Jesus were to be the property of every believer, in every age to come. A system, the product of divine wisdom, concocted in the chambers of eternity, by the Almighty himself, should know of no failures.

Robert Owen, bounded by inexperience, prejudice and vanity, in himself and others, concocted a scheme, a beautiful scheme, to save mankind, and failed; and ever since Christianity has laughed and pointed its finger of scorn at the failure of a noble scheme by a good man to ameliorate the condition of his fellow men in a Christian country. But his attempt to better the condition of society in itself was a reproach to Christianity, was proclaiming its failure to its teeth; therefore, Christianity hated him. Yet Robert Owen was only a man, carrying in himself much of the evil from which he wished to save others. But Christianity, claiming to be from God, has no such plea. Its failure proclaims its human origin, like all other human imperfect efforts to reach truth.

When we seek to free ourselves from an institution which the ages pronounce a failure, we are denounced from every pulpit, and held up as things only to be hated. The names of Voltaire, Paine, Hume and others are only spoken in bated breath, or encircled in theologic venom. We are told, and it is forced into our teeth, that we reject Christianity because of the exceeding sinfulness of our hearts. What has the wickedness of our hearts to do with the truth of tales we cannot receive for lack of sufficient evi-denice? Were we as pure as the throne of God, would that prove that a man by his mere volition could shift the center of our solar system as he pleased? Were we as immaculate as the angels, would that certify that we possess any reliable evidence that Jesus died, rose again, and ascended into heaven?

But this pre-judging of our motives places us at a disadvantage with those who accept of the judgment, and they who profess to follow him who said "Judge not lest ye be judged," are not slow to take this advantage.

O, how often the French Revolution is thrown in our teeth as an example of what the world would be without Christianity. The French Revolution will stand in history as an example of the terrible issues of a practical Christianity. Robespierre and a number of liberty-intoxicated men who, in the delirium of a newly acquired freedom, destroyed it by their eager and insane enthusiasm, remembered only the instruments of the system which had enslaved and dehumanized them, and became the demons of cruelty and injustice which they had despised and hated in others; yet it was only the outburst of a volcano which Christianity had been building and protecting for centuries. But even French infidelity was only human, and 'tis human to err—to err terribly. But Christianity, the favorite scheme of God, should know of no St. Bartholemew's Eve, in its history; the diabolical reigns of Mary and Elizabeth should not have disgraced its annals, nor should the intolerance of the New England Puritans, English Episcopalians, and the school of Geneva have marked its progress. But here I will be reminded that that was not the fruit of genuine Christianity. Was the French Revolution the result of genuine Philosophy? Is the adage "a tree is known by its fruit," applicable to all other systems, and is Christianity an exception? Or has Christianity as a system ever existed? Did it die with Paul or Polycarp? Did St. Augustine crown the last of Christianity? Or is its re-birth due to Martin Luther? Or is it locked within the lids of the Bible? Protestants, reply! Am I to look for it amid the clatter and din of contending sects? Or will ye tell me that, as a system—only as universal truth is a system—Christianity has never existed? Then, ye priests, throw aside your sacerdotal robes—your stolen livery; convert your churches into schools, libraries, useful everyday institutions, or places of refuge for the suffering poor; burn your commentaries; cast aside your creeds; look no more into this much abused and misconstrued Bible, but as ye believe in God, demand of him the holy spirit which leadeth into all truth; and, if ye will preach, let it be the outpourings of your heart as it beats in unison with the great heart of Nature—the light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world, whether it agrees with Luther or the Pope, or the Fathers, with Paine, Voltaire, John Stuart Mill or Spencer, or whether it contradicts the words of every man who hath ever spoken. And thus ye will assist in reaching Truth, the only Savior of humanity.

The Sunday Morning Conference at Charter Oak Hall continues the consideration of the question as to the evidence of the fact of spirit communion. Friends and opponents here meet on equal ground, and all interested are invited to attend.

ERROR.—In the advertisement of Mrs. C. M. Morrison, clairvoyant, of Oswego, N. Y., given on the third page of the cover, the price for diagnosing disease by lock of hair has been given as $5—a printer's error. It should be one dollar, a price within the reach of all who may wish to test her powers.

POPULAR ABUSES.

[For Common Sense.]

A thousand wrongs are committed daily because it is popular to practice them. Many a hoodlum maltreats a Chinaman, not from provocation, but because the Chinese are generally despised. While Galileo lay in prison many a patist cursed and anathematized him, not because Galileo had injured any one, but because it was popular to abuse him. While Fulton was building his first steamer, the young hoodlums of the day would shout after him as he hurried through the streets, "Fulton, the fool! Fulton, the madman!" etc., simply because it was popular to make sport of this devotee to science. The same spirit is everywhere rife to-day, characterized by the same ignorance that distinguished the revilers of Galileo and Fulton. Take, for instance, the following item, copied from the San Francisco Chronicle, and which is evidently floating through the popular journals of the day:

"It is said that the conjunction of Saturn, Venus and Mars, has caused hundreds of superstitious citizens to consult the astrologists."

No one at all familiar with either astronomy or astrology would ever pen or steal such a mass of absurdity. There has not, for years, been any such conjunction; true, in California, July 12th, 1874, between six and seven A. M., California time, there was a conjunction of Jupiter and Venus. [At Greenwich, with Greenwich time, this conjunction did not occur until between two and three P. M. Jupiter had 1 deg. 9 min. N. latitude, and Venus but 17 min. N. latitude; so at the conjunction east and west, while Venus was passing Jupiter, they were still 52 min. distant north and south]. But we find nothing marvellous promised in astrology in consequence of this conjunction, which is continually repeated in a little less than nine months, upon an average, the period varying in length according as Jupiter is retrograde or direct.

Of the long list of fortune-tellers and "astrologers" advertised in the various papers of San Francisco, there is not even one who can calculate the obliquity of the ecliptic for any given latitude, much less measure the arcs of directions by Logarithms. I might multiply facts showing the absurdity of the item quoted, but deem these sufficient for my purpose. They illustrate how ready people are to scoff at whatever is unpopular, however profoundly ignorant they may be of the subject ridiculed.

In this case astrology is the real target, and as I am an astrologer I feel called upon to defend the astral science. Usually the attacks are made upon me personally, as in Salem, Oregon, while walking the street on the day of my first arrival, I heard a boyish voice exclaim: "There goes the old fool now!" and turning my head saw that he was pointing at me. Now this boy would never have thought of speaking thus of a stranger, had he not heard it from older persons. So it goes; the honest man is insulted, or the scoundrel praised, according to the way the popular tide is setting.

W. H. CHANEY.

Sacramento, August 15th, 1874.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

COMMON SENSE is furnished to subscribers for Three Dollars per annum, in advance. Letters intended for the Business Department should be addressed:

A. T. CLARK, BUSINESS MANAGER, 236 Montgomery st.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

Spiritual Phenomena—Medicus	184
Whatever Is Is Wrong—Austin Kent	185
Christ the Hope of the World—J. W. Mackie	186
Popular Abuses—Prof. W. H. Chaney	187
H. W. Beecher—Ed	188
A National Religion Prophected	189
Book Notices	190
J. L. York's Address	191
Lycium for Self Culture	192
A Rich Man's Soliloquy—E. Hughes	193
God in the Constitution	194
Chaplain—A. Gaylord Spalding	195
Brief Extracts	196
Poetry and Special Notices	197

COMMON SENSE.

WILLIAM N. SLOCUM, EDITOR.

AMANDA M. SLOCUM, ASSISTANT.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, AUG. 29, 1874.

JENNIE LEYS.—This lady has arrived, and will speak at the Hall, 911 Market street, to-morrow (Sunday) afternoon, previous to the seance. On the following Sunday she will speak afternoon and evening.

MAUD E. LORD, the celebrated physical medium, now in attendance at the Vermont Spiritualist Convention, will start on her western trip about the middle of September. She will probably be in California in October.

In a private letter written by Andrew Jackson Davis, July 17th, he says:—"To-day, Mary, the good and the true companion of my life, is fifty years old; and she is just as good as new—a noble, graceful, gentle, gifted nature—modest, intellectual, self-governed, and progressive. I would that every man had so excellent a friend, sister, wife. Amen!"

FREE CONFERENCE.—The meeting at Anthony's Hall last Sunday afternoon was harmonious and eminently satisfactory to those who attended. The pervading spirit was calm and reverent. When we can learn to respect the views of others as much as we are apt to do our own, and seek to learn the possible agreement that we may have with our friends under different modes of expression, we shall have accomplished much. A great accession of members to this meeting does not seem desirable unless they can bring with them the tranquil, friendly spirit that has hitherto characterized these meetings.

THE OVERLAND.—The Overland Monthly for September contains a number of thoughtful articles. Bishop Kip, J. Ross Browne, Junius Henri Browne, Josephine Walcott, Prentice Mulford and T. A. Harcourt are among the contributors. The new editor pays a deserved tribute to Benj. P. Avery, one of the noblest and best of California's old citizens, now Minister to China. The "Etc." is interesting, especially to spiritualists. The editor has waded through a little "spiritualistic chaff" without finding even one grain of "common sense." He became discouraged, and backed out; and now he thinks men of science are not called upon to investigate the subject.

"OUT OF HIS OWN MOUTH IS HE CONDEMNED."

[The following, written for last week's paper, was unavoidably omitted. It is now rather late in the day, but not altogether worthless.]

The statement of Mr. Beecher is at last before the committee, and a decision is looked for with impatience by the country. There are not wanting those who yet pretend in Mr. Beecher's innocence, and who seem to expect that the committee will acquit him of all blame. We cannot see how such a conclusion can be reached. If we admit nothing but Mr. Beecher's own statement, that alone carries conviction to our mind that he is guilty as charged. He says he was a frequent visitor at Mr. Tilton's. He admits that Mrs. Tilton told her husband that she had ignored her marriage vows with him, her pastor. He tells us that Tilton told this to him, and he went to see her. He found her in a terrible state of excitement, was left alone with her, and got her to sign a paper denying the fact, and exculpating him. He pretends that she told the story simply to place herself on a level with her husband, who had confessed similar peccadilloes to her. He left with this paper in his hand. Tilton learned of his wife that she had signed a paper for Beecher, and sent his friend Moulton to demand it back, as having been obtained under undue influence. Moulton found Beecher at home, showed him a pistol, obtained the paper, and afterwards another paper, signed by Beecher, full of strange agony and humiliation, self-condemnation, despair and entreaty for peace and quiet. Soon after this we find Beecher (as he says) passing over to Tilton $7,000, without consideration or hope of repayment. And we believe these facts to be inconsistent with any other theory than his guilt.

We cannot believe that Mrs. Tilton, for the purpose named, slandered her pastor. It is not in human nature. Her present feeling towards him seems to forbid the idea. We cannot believe that Beecher, a man of fine intellect and much manhood and experience of the world, if innocent, could have been thrown into such a perturbation by Frank Moulton and his pistol. We cannot believe that without some very weighty and hidden motive he paid over $7,000 for the benefit of the Tilton family, knowing at the same time that Tilton was a libertine, a convert to free love, that Mrs. Tilton had grossly slandered himself, and that Moulton, to whom the entire matter was confided, had threatened him with a pistol.

A good, brave and sensible man does not do such things without having first laid a snare for himself out of which he had no other escape. Should the committee acquit Mr. Beecher the world will not; and the courts will most assuredly reverse the judgment whenever it is presented for consideration. Taking his own statement as true, we find it impossible to believe that the charge is without foundation. Had he confessed at the start, his weakness would have elicited a general commiseration. But this disclaimer, this special pleading, this partial and iniquitous trial, and this lame statement, together with his baseness towards Tilton and Moulton, have wasted his good name till it smells rank and poisonous to the moral sense of all. He is lost! All his eloquent declamation, his fine sermons, his Life of Christ, cannot redeem him from the charge of having been a hypocrite and an impostor from the beginning, and in the end an injurious and prevaricating falsifier.

A NATIONAL RELIGION PROPHECIED.

A few years prior to the late civil war, a singular prophecy was published in various papers of the United States, called the "The Vision of Joseph Hoag." Thomas R. Hazard, of Rhode Island, recently sent a copy of the prophecy to the London, (Eng.,) Spiritualist, from which we copy a portion. After stating that the vision was in the year 1803, and that a "voice from heaven" told him how the people of America had become proud, and had run into every abomination of which the old countries are guilty, Joseph Hoag says of the vision:

And I saw them dividing in great heat. This division began in the Church on points of doctrine. It commenced in the Presbyterian Society and went through the various religious denominations, and in all its progress and close its effects were nearly the same. Those who dissented went off with light hearts and taunting language, and those who kept to their first sentiments appeared exercised and sorrowful; and when the dividing spirit entered the Society of Friends it raged in as high degree as any, and, as before, those who separated went off with a lofty look and censuring, taunting language, and those who kept their ancient principles retired by themselves.

It next appeared in the lodges of the Freemasons, and broke out like a volcano until it set the whole country in an uproar for a length of time.

Then it entered politics throughout the United States and produced a civil war, and abundance of human blood was shed in the combat. The southern states lost their power, and slavery was abolished. Then a monarchical power arose, and took the government of the States, and established a national religion, and made all societies tributary to its support. I saw men take property from friends to a great amount. I was amazed at all this, and heard a voice proclaim: 'This power shall not always stand, but with it I will chastise my Church, until they return to the faithfulness of their forefathers. Thou seest what is coming on thy native land for its iniquity and the blood of Africa, the remembrance of which has come up before me.'

This vision is yet for many years, but it became such a burden that for my own relief I have written it.

JOSEPH HOAG.

Mr. Hazard comments on this vision, saying that all of the events first pictured have actually occurred in this country, namely, the division among the Quakers, the Freemason excitement, growing out of the abduction of Morgan, the anti-slavery excitement and war, and concludes as follows:

Tens of thousands of mourners for their slaughtered dead still survive to testify to the truth of the prophet's prediction, made more than half a century before the events were accomplished, in regard to the 'abundance of human blood that was shed in the combat' through which 'the southern states lost their power and slavery was abolished.'

All these predictions have now become stereotyped history to the very letter, and are recorded in exact order of time. But yet the people, so far from manifesting any signs of profiting by the severe inflictions, seem to be running with accelerated speed into every abomination and evil practice conceivable. God grant that Hoag's predicted woes in the future may not culminate in that worst of all forms of government, a priest-ridden theocracy, toward which, I think, many signs of the times seem pointing.

In connection with this singular prophecy, it may be porth while to notice that there is a belief in the mind of many persons in Europe and America, and it is openly stated by many spirits, that the world is on the brink of the most terrible religious struggle it has ever seen. The spirit of Jimmy Nolan told this to our correspondent, "Medicos," last January, and said that "spirits shuddered with horror at the woes and the bloodshed which they foresaw were about to deluge all Christian lands." He spoke both of Europe and America.

Mr. Disraeli has now, for the third time, hinted at the probability of the troubles of Europe culminating in a general and terrific war. He thinks that the death of the Pope, now necessarily near at hand, will precipitate matters, and that the French, who never were so well prepared for war as now, will take advantage of the probably distracted state of Germany, in consequence of Catholic resistance to Bismark's repressive measures, to strike for the recovery of Alsace and Lorraine, and of their lost power and prestige.

The civil war now raging in Spain, and as far from settlement as ever, is in fact a religious war, between the Progressistas and the Catholics.

Mother Shipton, in her prophecy, made in the 15th Century—all other particulars of which have been fulfilled to the letter, puerile as it seems—speaks of 1881 "as the end of the world."

Professor Chaney, the astrologer, and English astrologers also, say that in 1881 the aspects of the planets forbode terrible and unheard of evils to the Earth.

All fingers, mortal and spiritual, prophetic and practical, seem just now to point to a rough time coming.

PUBLIC SEANCES.—The seance at 911 Market street, on Sunday last, was more than usually interesting. The poem "Over the River," was read by Mrs. McKinley, after which, (under control of Dr. Rush,) questions sent up by the audience were satisfactorily answered. Mrs. Whitney sang in her best voice, eliciting hearty applause. Mrs. Clark gave descriptions of many spirits, all of which were recognized; she also, in response to the names sent up by the audience, gave accurate delineations of spirits corresponding to the names written, which was a very pleasant feature. Dr. Dunlap, a blind medium gave the name of Samuel Brown, and stated some facts concerning his death. Mrs. McKinley gave a description of two children standing in front of a lady, and said: "They call you Mother. The girl has light hair and blue eyes; the boy is two years younger, and of darker complexion." The controlling spirit of a gentleman was lucidly described. Several mediums are expected to take part in the seance to-morrow afternoon.

The seance at Charter Oak Hall was conducted by Mrs. Foye, and the tests were as usual, excellent. The audience was very large. Most of those receiving tests were strangers to the mediums. Some of them, it was stated, have no acquaintances in this State, having just arrived. Seance to-morrow, at 2 P. M.

Book Notices.

STARTLING FACTS.

We have recently received from the author, Dr. N. B. Wolfe, of Cincinnati, copies of his extraordinary work on Spiritualism, and were so much gratified by its perusal that we have cordially recommended it to all our friends who are interested in the investigation of modern spiritualism. The book is just what it purports to be—a plain record of facts. The author does not try to enforce his own opinions. He gives information, and leaves his readers free to judge for themselves. Neither does he withhold his opinions. He presents them boldly, yet not as if they are to be accepted without question. He does not put them forth for approval; but because they are crystallized convictions of his mind, which in such a work must necessarily find utterance.

Our correspondent "Medicus," having had much personal experience of the kind related in this work, we gave him a copy for perusal, and here is his report:

I have read with great pleasure Dr. Wolfe's very interesting work entitled "Startling Facts in Modern Spiritualism." Dr. Wolfe's very careful examination into the qualifications of other mediums, and his readiness to reject all testimony that is not borne out by an exhaustive examination into facts; his original extreme skepticism about the facts themselves, all point him out as an excellent witness, and one who can be relied upon with perfect confidence. He disbelieves in Lizzie Doten and Judd Pardee. The probability is that in their cases, as in that of so many other mediums, the facts are twofold; they are sometimes inspired, and sometimes speak of their own instance, allowing spectators to fancy them under influence.

Having myself witnessed many of the wonders of Mrs. Hollis' marvellous mediumship, and satisfied myself and a very skeptical friend that all was perfectly genuine, I am in a position to add my testimony to Dr. Wolfe's, and in some sense to be able to confirm his statements, none of which—after what I saw myself—I should dream of doubting; although he witnessed phenomena far more wonderful than any seen by me. The direct writing, performed in a way that absolutely precluded all suggestion of fraud, I witnessed myself; and can confirm every statement of Dr. Wolfe on the subject. The materializations repeatedly observed by Dr. Wolfe, surpass, I think, anything we have heard of elsewhere, except those manifested through Miss F. Cook and the Eddy family.

The French spirits attendant upon Mrs. Hollis, are—as all spirits seem to be now declaring themselves—reincarnationists; and among other very singular statements made by them, the most singular are these: That the late Emperor of the French, Louis Napoleon, was not the son of his reputed father, but of Napoleon I, by Hortense after her marriage, and that Napoleon Bonaparte is now about to be reincarnated, will reappear in France about 1903, and will free France from obscenity and anarchy. It is true that this was written in very bad French; but there can be no doubt that the writing was done by spirits, and it is reasonable to suppose that the character of any communication, however genuine, is influenced by the ignorance of the medium. This seems to be a law of mediumship, and one as yet little understood. Altogether Dr. Wolfe has proved himself a very able and competent witness, a careful observer of facts, and one whose word may, I have no doubt, be implicitly relied upon. No more interesting relation of modern spiritualistic phenomena has yet appeared. [For sale at this office. Price, $2 50.

REV. MR. WATSON'S NEW BOOK.

Quite in contrast with the remarkable book of Dr. Wolfe is that recently written by Rev. Samuel Watson, author of The Clock Struck One, etc. The new book is called The Clock Struck Three, and it contains many interesting facts, faithfully portrayed, and phenomena carefully described, but the book does not prove what its author attempts, a harmony between the Christian religion and modern spiritualism. In this respect the book is a failure. The author is frank in his admission that spirits, like men, are of all creeds; but when giving what a Christian spirit says, he forgets that nothing is really proved thereby. If he had studied the philosophy of spirit intercourse, he would ere this have discovered that "like attracts like" there as well as here. He is a Christian, and it is really no proof whatever of the truth of Christian doctrine that spirits communicating with him testify thereto. His influence, evidently, was strongly Christian, and only "high-toned" Christian spirits came to speak with him. These stated, with perfect truth, that they meet there only those who were redeemed through Christ. But this proves nothing beyond the mere fact that Christians know each other there, and are attracted together, there as here. Infidel spirits could furnish similar testimony.

CHRISTIANITY AND SPIRITUALISM.—On Sunday evening last, at the Hall 911 Market street, "Brother York" gave a discourse on The Uses of Spiritualism, during which he drew a startling contrast between Christianity and Spiritualism, showing the latter, of course, to be infinitely superior. He asserted that Christianity makes infidels and hypocrites. It is impossible for a thoughtful person to believe a doctrine so contrary to nature. Those only are good Christians who "go it blind." Spiritualism is the religion of nature; it is in harmony with law; it is the religion of science. Christianity professes to keep people out of hell; but Spiritualism keeps hell out of the people, by teaching them to obey the law. It does not promise forgiveness, but on the contrary assures offenders of speedy punishment for all infractions of law, moral and physical. It is a hopeful religion, ever presenting before us inducements for the leading of a better life. True, many angular characters are floating on the surface of Spiritualism. It takes time to bring order out of chaos. Modern Spiritualism is a cloud-burst, and the waters are now carrying a great deal of drift-wood and other debris, the remnants of the great break-up. As the churches continue to disintegrate, we shall have more of this drift-wood, but in a few years it will become moulded anew and made over into something like sensible human beings, by the force of this new power—this religion of science. The present period is one of transition, and there are many who do not know how to use their new-found liberty; but there is a better time ahead, for Spiritualism is a complete system of science, based on principles in harmony with nature, and it will, ere long, become the religion of the civilized world. Mr. York speaks at the same place again to-morrow evening. The subject is: "What Shall We Do with Our Criminals?"

LYCEUM FOR SELF CULTURE.

The meeting at Dashaway Hall last Sunday afternoon was one of the most lively and interesting held for some time. The exercises were opened with good music by Mrs. Melville. Rev. Dr. Carpenter followed, endeavoring to show that Jesus Christ was the only way of Salvation. The Rev. Dr. is a good speaker, and gave an effective exhortation to seek Christ, and trust and believe in him. He did not believe that debates upon these matters are the best means of promoting self culture; that religious and sectarian strife has done much harm to the cause of Christianity; that people should put their minds in a state of simplicity and purity, and accept the truth as God gives it, not contending as children over a dinner. We limit our faith to the works of nature, and there is nothing gained by debate. He opposed the bigotry that says "The Lord shall not come down to man." Of skepticism he said it is a much abused word, and that substantially no odium is to be attached to it. The skeptics were Christ's true friends, and went right out to them. Because persons are skeptical upon any subject, they need not get into a fuss and clash, wrangle, twist, squirm, and tilt—in these times particularly—for, said he, we've had tiltin' (Tilton) enough lately, and don't let's get into a discussion.

Dr. Carpenter was followed by Mr. Knight, who began by thanking the Dr. and also the Rev. Mr. Hemphill, who came two weeks ago, for their efforts to enlighten us on this matter. He said, we have been discussing this thing among ourselves, and have generally come to the conclusion that this story of Christ and his atonement is not true. We might perhaps have been hasty and shortsighted in reaching this conclusion. We might not have had the other side ably advocated. But here now we have heard two great guns of the other side, two learned divines, who know every argument possible on that side. We have heard them, and our conclusions are confirmed. They have failed to show that Christ was the son of God, by any scientific or historic fact. They have failed to show that either his life or his death or his teachings have purified mankind from ignorance and sin. And if these gentlemen cannot do it, it is fair to presume that it cannot be done.

The Rev. Mr. Carpenter arose to a question of privilege, and stated that he had not entered into a debate, had raised no question, and offered no proof. He said, I simply stand among you as an inquirer.

Dr. White said it is written that the shepherd shall be crucified and the flock scattered; and as a proof of divine interference for our salvation, cited the story of Paul who he said was a great man in his day, and after the resurrection of Christ was on his way to seize some fanatic Christians and put them to death, when a great light shone around him which was so bright that he fell confounded. That light was Christ. Josephus, the greatest benefactor that ever lived, speaks of Jesus(?) as a doer of righteous works, and says that when Pilot condemned him to the cross, his friends did not forsake him, for he appeared to them alive again.

Mr. Battersby said there is no evidence of the truth of the theory, and that it is no wonder that infidelity is spread over the land. The church people very much deplore this state of affairs, but do not know the prime cause of it all is themselves. [We will endeavor to publish Mr. Battersby's address next week.]

Mr. Turnbull, said he did not come in search of truth;

he had already found it. He said: "The reason why you cannot believe in Jesus Christ is because he does not make himself manifest to you. There is a true rock, and a sham rock. A counterfeit presupposes a genuine. There can be no imitation, without something to imitate. A wicked and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign."

Mr. Mackie made an address, which will be found on page 186.

Mr. Martin said Jesus claimed that he brought a new way of teaching; that he came from God as a human being, and if any man can show that Christ is not the true Savior, then our plan is overthrown.

Mr. Farrell wished to inquire if, after all the arguments of the preceding speakers, any one was convinced of anything. He contradicted Dr. White's statement concerning Josephus: and said the quotation was interpolated by Christians; that Josephus never wrote a word of Christ in the original version.

The subject was continued for discussion to-morrow afternoon.

For Common Sense.

A RICH MAN'S SOLILOQUY.

Scene.—A cosy little library; bright fire burning. Mr. Croesus, sitting in an easy chair before the fire, soliloquizes thus, between the leisurely puffs of a prime Havana: I am a man of leisure; can do just what I like; what is there to hinder? Can go to any part of the world and be just as much respected there as I am here, for can't I everywhere give good dinners to the men, and presents to the women? And who, after all, is so great a man as Mr. Croesus, and the power behind him? What is there that I can't have if I want to? The simpering crowd of women and the babbling crowd of men must do as I wish to have them do or suffer the consequences. Talkers! people with ideas—women with ideas! Oh the farce and the folly! They cause all the trouble and disturbance in the world. We have no business to have any ideas but what we pay for in good sound coin, value received, collected on delivery. I pay for the best pew in the church, and I have the best house in town; I like to do things in good shape and get my money's worth. What do they mean by true hearts, and all that silly, romantic stuff? A man must be true to himself and his own interests, if he is going to control the market. Well, I have good health, and everything is going on wheels. How money rolls in after the tide once turns. That last contract—fifty thousand in one day; good day's work that; more than a whole year of Beecher's salary. By the way, I must send him a hundred or two to help him out of his scrape—silly piece of business that; but it won't do to let outsiders see too much of our nice little games in the inside ring. The man has a good head, and he is a jolly fellow, but there is a soft place in his heart somewhere that has been the ruin of him [Puff! puff!] The only difference between one man and another is that one man covers up his tracks and the other don't. [puff.] The women were mixed up with it. That's enough; women and horses lead a man straight to the devil. If we could only suppress the talkers and scribblers, we might govern the people easily enough. [Sighs, remains a while in thought, suddenly brightens.] Well, but we can buy them! Buy them? Yes, indeed, what can't we buy?

E. HUGHES.

GOD IN THE CONSTITUTION.
NUMBER ONE.

The Banner of Light, of July 18th, contains a timely appeal for all Liberalists, of whatever name or shade, to unite their forces and prepare themselves for the coming conflict. It says: "There is no parleying with the forces of bigotry and tyranny that are industriously securing lodgment in the existing institutions of State and Church, and there entrenching themselves for offensive purposes only," and so goes on, and gives a vivid description of the dangers which threaten our free American institutions.

Thinking minds cannot help seeing the rapid growth of this ecclesiastical Hierarchy. The priests intend to strangle this free government, if they can. The people of the United States ought to understand fully and know what has been done in regard to it by the different societies and the clergy, who have been working for that object during the last ten years, and the powerful proportions it has already assumed. I advise all thinking men and women to read Jamieson's book entitled The Clergy a Source of Danger, in which he gives an account of the meetings held, and some of the prominent speeches made, and by whom, and a great deal of useful information which could not be given through the columns of COMMON SENSE, the only liberal paper on this Coast. Nevertheless, I will write a few short articles, merely to call your attention to it, and hope some abler pen than mine will bring this subject more prominently before the readers of your paper.

Liberalists are over-confident in the strength of their Government. The feeling of security among the masses only serves the plotters to so much easier overthrow our liberty. If Christianity should ever become the established religion, Congress would only be composed of Christians, as none other could be elected; may God and the strong arm of Liberalists prevent such a disaster to this nation. What reader of history does not know what Christians, as Christians, in all past ages have done? The cruel reign of terror, persecution, war and wholesale murder, for eighteen hundred years, that has been perpetrated upon innocent, ignorant Humanity, all in the name of religion and the glory of Jesus, and him crucified! I shudder when I contemplate the thought that we are on the verge of another such bloody, religious war. That the Fathers of this Republic fully understood the situation, the following extract will show: "Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." This was an amendment of the Constitution in the first Congress. Thomas Jefferson, in a letter dated January 1, 1802, said:

"I contemplate with sovereign reverence that act of the whole American people which declared that their Legislature should make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, thus building a wall of separation between Church and State," and also says: "I have refrained from prescribing even occasional performances of devotion."

He considered such proclamations improper in a purely secular government like ours. In a letter to his friend, General Lincoln, he says:

"The Baptist address, now enclosed * * furnishes an occasion which I have long wished to find, of saying why I do not proclaim fasting and thanksgivings, as my predecessors did. * * I know it will give great offense to the New England clergy, but the advocate for religious freedom is to expect neither peace nor forgiveness from them."

This shows how jealously the Fathers of this Republic guarded against the interference of religionists with the affairs of State. They were fully aware of the despotic power of the Christian religion whenever and wherever it assumed control of human affairs. They feared this very calamity which is coming upon us—religious dictation in secular affairs—and for this reason they rendered it powerless in the State; but the Evangelical Alliance—the priests of a Jewish-Christian God—is striving to retrieve their lost cause by making it mistress of the State. The historian, Bayard, says of the Colonists: "The anxiety of the people to secure their liberty against every invasion, would not permit them to leave any room for doubt on this subject." [Church and State union.] But now these thousands of Christians wish to substitute Christianity for true democratic principles. The Constitution is too broad, too liberal, too free for them; it is as free as infidels could make it. It is a fact, admitted by eminent Christians themselves, that they had little to do with its formation, and that at the time of the adoption of the National Constitution their influence was very feeble. President Blanchard says: "French infidelity * * had become strong enough to exclude the very name of God from our National Constitution in 1787. In that evil hour Satan had suddenly turned democrat." Thanks, then, to Satan and Thomas Jefferson, who was hated by the clergy of New England, on account of his advice, "Let the eye of vigilance never be closed." Treasure this maxim, given to us by one who as President would not proclaim fastings and thanksgiving, and who was the author of the amendment to give us religious liberty, which saved us from Christian rule.

A FRIEND OF LIBERTY AND FREEDOM.

PHYSICAL MANIFESTATIONS.—Dr. Crawford, a medium who has recently been developed for physical manifestations, has engaged rooms at 704 Howard street, near Third, where he will give public seances each Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday evenings. At several of the seances given by this medium at the house of Mrs. Cummings, iron rings were placed over the arms of persons not mediums while holding the medium by both hands. After a committee had securely tied Dr. Crawford, rings brought by visitors, some of wood and some of iron, were placed on his arms and body, inside the rope. His coat was also taken off and replaced, while his hands were securely fastened. A tumbler of water was taken from the floor, the water disappeared, and the tumbler was placed on the medium's head. Meantime, the medium was touched from behind by a gentleman who asserted that he (Dr. Crawford) did not move from his seat. These performances, although similar to the tricks of a juggler, are done without attempt to conceal anything. They are open to the inspection of all sitting in the circle around the medium, light being excluded only for a few moments at a time, and even during this darkness the committee are at liberty to examine the ropes, and ascertain if the medium still remains securely tied. The manifestations are therefore believed to be genuine.

To speak little and think much, this is the way to acquire good sense.

[For Common Sense.]
ABOLISH CHAPLAINS—ECONOMY DEMANDS IT.

BY A. GAYLORD SPALDING.

Yes, that is what I say: Do away with that extra foolish tax of old time priesthoods and monarchies. It helps to feed, clothe, shelter or benefit none of the countless numbers of workers now deprived of employment and wages. The office of Chaplain in Congress, Legislature, State Prison, Public Asylums, or the Army and Navy, no working man needs to sustain, for it is a non-producing superfluity of expense—a dry bone of old foggy custom, superstition, and aristocracy. The chaplain's duty is simply to slobber over the assembled audience with a sanctimonious ceremony, called prayer, which serves merely as a fancy trimming to business—though it is no part of the business, and is wholly unnecessary. It is an ancient formality and habit that we have outgrown. Abolish it, and the people will save many thousands of dollars every year.

Any band of workmen, in the plowing or harvest field, the lumbering camp, the mill, mine, factory, or mechanic's shop, need a chaplain, to sober and sanctify them and their business, just as much as our representatives and senators, or our convicts, lunatics, or soldiers. Think of employing, at a generous salary, a chaplain in a blacksmith shop, saw mill, or livery stable! Yet that would be just as proper and legitimate—legitimate nonsense.

In the army, the chaplain is paid tenfold more than the hard fighting private—though he (the chaplain) neither works nor fights. He holds his position merely as a dressed-up privileged gentleman—to say over holy and solemn words (a solemn farce) which give an air of pride, dignity, respectability, and sanctity, to the brutal, bloody, horrible, and ghastly business of war. Yet working soldiers, who are strangely willing to sacrifice themselves to the hideous Moloch, are made the excuse for bestowing easy and rich living on such a lazy deadhead class of men! Let these simple and honest hearted workers take shame to themselves, and get up and git. They are unwittingly their own worst enemies, and willing cat's paws to the ruling powers, and of professional priestly aristocrats and monopolists.

But now, let the high command of workingmen go forth to all legislators, to drop that needless and senseless official appendage, expecting every able bodied man to be his own chaplain, do his own praying, and consecrate and sanctify himself, in and out of the capitol. Import a Buddhist praying machine—if you must have the ceremony. That would be something cheap and permanent. But get rid of the privileged aristocracy—the leeches and sponges—that constantly suck the life-blood of the people. They are two legged grasshoppers that infest the whole land. Require all men to be honest, and eat the bread of equal labor and equal rights. Common sense and economy is the true motto for workingmen and women.

Champlin, Minn., Sept., 1874.

A Utica rooster catches rats; four a day is his average.

BRIEF EXTRACTS.

Theft is the law of "christian society, every one taking what he can lay hands on with no regard to the general good.

A small steamboat which is claimed to be the fastest in the world, possessing a speed of 24.61 miles per hour, has been constructed in England for the East Indian Government.

Things would go badly with society if everyone was to tell all that he or she knows of self, friends, or neighbors. Few of us lead such beautiful lives that we can afford to have them dissected piecemeal, and examined all round.

It is no doubt true, and must be held in constant charitable remembrance, that the great majority of criminals are born to crime. This being so, to parents, and especially mothers, does the subject of crime and its prevention primarily appeal.

It seems odd, in face of the general sanity of society, that half the misery which comes to us from the publication of our private doings comes, not from the unfriendly spying and treacherous betrayal of others, but by our own absurd inability to keep our own secrets.

So long as we keep our own counsel we are safe; but once let loose the guard—once take man or woman into our inner confidence—and henceforth we are slaves and in perpetual peril, holding our good name by the good will of another, and sure to be betrayed sooner or later.

If we work upon marble it will perish; if upon brass, time will deface it; if we rear temples they will crumble into dust; but if we work upon our immortal minds—if we imbue them with principles, with the just fear of God and love our fellow men—we engrave on these tablets something which will brighten through all eternity.—Webster.

Theodore Parker said of Thomas Paine: "I think he did more to promote piety and morality among men than a hundred ministers of that age in America. He did it by showing that religion is not responsible for the absurd doctrines taught in its name. For this reason, honest but bigoted ministers opposed him. They had a right to, but they misrepresented his doctrines."

Under our republican form of government are two classes—the men who labor and the men who live off the proceeds of others' labor—the robber and the robbed, and the further anomaly, that those who labor the longest number of hours are those who live from hand to mouth, while those who toil not, revel in luxury and wealth. A social system which produces these results must be radically wrong.

"A happy wedlock is a long falling in love." Marriage is very gradual, a fraction of us at a time. And the real ministers that marry people are the slow years, the joys and sorrows which they bring, our children on earth and the angels they are transfigured into in heaven, the toils and burdens borne in company. These are the ministers that really marry us, and, compared with these, the ministers who go through a form of words some day, when heaven and earth seem to draw near and kiss each other, are of small account. And the real marriage service isn't anything printed or said; it is the true heart service which each yields to the other, year in and year out, when the bridal wreath has long since faded, and even the marriage ring is getting sadly worn. Let this service be performed, and, even if the marriage was a lottery to begin with, this would go far to redeem it and make it a marriage of co-equal hearts and minds.—Sermon by John W. Chadwick.

TILL LOVE BE WHOLE.

The soul I dwell within Forgets my load of sin,
And circles me
With amorous glee,
To win my first faint smile
Of love that bodes no guile:
Unfolds my heart the while,
And sets me free.

Delights she to surprise
Me with some thought that hies
To heaven straightway:
Then all the day
I wander o'er the earth,
And find not half its worth;
Yet lose I not my mirth,
And pray, and pray.

Oh! I am precious seed
Thus planted for her need:
My offish ways
And long delays
She takes no notice of,
But steadily doth move
Upon my heart with love,
Nor doubt displays.

Now shall I make return,
And my love's taper burn
For my good soul,
As towards the goal
My steps I hourly bend;
And to the flame yet lend
Increase, far to the end,
Till love be whole?

MADAM GRUNDY.

BY MRS. L. E. BAILEY.

I once knew a woman of manners genteel,
Who, for the woes of humanity deeply did feel.
She was pretty, and witty, most winning and gay.
Accomplishments many, I'm sure you'll say;
And last, but not least, a "tongue" she could use
With the greatest of skill, whenever she chose.

Now this lovely woman was "very respectable",
And was also considered remarkably capable.
She had learned the full history and secrets of all
The old and the young, the great and the small;
And besides—"had a 'mission' on earth to perform,
Was the reason" she said, "for which she was born."

Well, I often have wondered, but never knew how,
She was every-where present to make the first bow.
You might travel the earth, or rise to the sky,
Yet still meet the glance of her meek looking eye.
And sometimes I've thought, (though it cannot be true,
A secret it is, so I'll only tell you.)

This same noted woman and most worthy dame,
Has a child or two some-where,—related by name.

Of her kindness in deeds, I also will mention,
And allude to the genius she possessed for invention.
She never forgot the same story to tell,
(Or if so a new one would do just as well.)

She knew all the "locals" before they were out,
And saw Mrs. Phillips go riding about.
And "knew how 'twould end, I told ye," said she,
It never would happened, if she'd listened to me!

Now it chanced one day, Madam Grundy espied
Some weeds that were growing, so over she hied
To Mrs. Love's garden, on her mission intent,
As on errands of kindness (?) she frequently went;
So with her large heart, and with her long tongue,
She toiled and she talked, till her labor was done.

Just then Mrs. Love, coming home from the farm,
Held upwards her hands with a cry of alarm:
"My dear Mrs. Grundy! O, what have you done!
You have ruined my garden, destroyed every one
Of the beautiful flowers I purchased of Vio;
If the veriest urchin had done such a trick,
I'd"— Here Mrs. Grundy interrupted her speech,
By hastily taking herself out of reach.

And homeward she sped with crest-fallen air,
And seated herself in her own easy chair.
She thought how ungrateful people could be,
While she was so kind to everybody.

Then out of the window she happened to gaze,
And lo! what a sight filled her heart with amaze;
There, real weeds were growing in her garden at home,
While she on mistaken duty did roam.

MORAL.

If we would be honest, upright and true,
The bright path of virtue, strictly pursue.
If we would give wisdom and knowledge a place,
And thus truly bless the good of our race,
We must spend all our time, labor and toil,
To cultivate well our own mental soil,
And keep clean at home, our own business mind,
Nor seek in another imperfections to find.

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.

AN ACROSTIC.

For Common Sense.

Great poet, author, hero, sage,
Earth holds no other in this age
Richer in wealth of mystic lore;
Already thou hast oped the door
Like prophets of the olden time;
Dispensing truth in every clime.

Myriads of spirits walk with thee;
Angelic faces pure I see;
Seraphic gleams of visions bright
Sweet dawn upon my raptured sight.
Entranced, I read: "The Coming Man Yields thee the palm: Go, lead the van."

IF I SHOULD DIE TO-NIGHT.

If I should die to-night,
My friends would look upon my quiet face
Before they laid it in its resting place,
And deem that death had left it almost fair;
And, laying snow-white flowers against my hair,
Would smooth it down with tearful tenderness,
And fold my hands with lingering cares.
Poor hands, so empty and so cold to-night!

If I should die to-night,
My friends would call to mind, with loving thought,
Some kindly deed the icy hand had wrought;
Some gentle word the frozen lips had said;
Errands on which the willing feet had sped:
The memory of my selfishness and pride,
My hasty words, would all be put aside.
And so I should be loved and mourned to-night.

If I should die to-night,
Even hearts estranged would turn once more to me
Re-calling other days remorsefully.
The eyes that chill me with averted glance
Would look upon me as of yore, perchance,
And soften, in the old familiar way,
For who could war with dumb, unconscious clay?
So I might rest, forgiven of all, to-night.

Oh, friends, I pray to-night,
Keep not your kisses for my dead, cold brow.
The way is lonely, let me feel them now.
Think gently of me; I am travel-worn:
My faltering feet are pierced with many a thorn.
Forgive, Oh, hearts estranged, forgive, I plead!
When dreamless rest is mine I shall not need
The tenderness for which I long to-night

Special Notices.

For the very best Photographs go to Bradley & Bulofson's Gallery, with an elevator, 429 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

For a stylish and well finished Photograph go to Kinit's New Photographic Establishment, No. 28 Third street. All work warranted superior to any in the city.

Those suffering from that most annoying of the minor miseries of human life—a cold in the head—or from catarrh in any form, should try Dr. Evory's Diamond Catarrh Remedy. Just try it—that's all. Sold at this office, and by all druggists.

For a short time only, P. W. Poulson, M. D. the Scandinavian Physician, and Graduate of the Homoeopathic Medical College of New York, can be found at his rooms No. 50 Farwell st., near the corner of Dupont and Market. His magnetic and homoeopathic treatment is very potent in removing diseases of a painful and protracted standing.

Send Austin Kent one dollar for his pamphlets on Free Love and Marriage, etc. He has been seventeen years physically helpless, confined to his bed and chair, is poor and needs the money. He sends four or five well-written essays for one dollar. His address is AUSTIN KENT, Stockholm, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., Box 44.

AFTER THIRTY YEARS EXPERIENCE in the Roofing Business, and carefully noting the weak points in the different styles of roofs, and the different materials composing them, I believe that I can offer to the public a roof that will combine all the qualities and points requisite to constitute a permanently Water-tight Roof, while at the same time it shall be the ne plus ultra of Fire-proof Roofs.

H. G. Fiske, 809 Market st.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, NO. 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

COMMON SENSE can be purchased at the following places in this city: Patten's, 773 Market; Cooper's, 760 Market; Choyanski's, 146 Second; Snow's, 319 Kearny; Sharp's, 238 Montgomery, and at this office, 236 Montgomery street, up stairs. Price of single copies, ten cents.

AGENTS IN THE INTERIOR.

Contra Costa county ..... E. H. Kimball, Antioch
Inyo county ..... Mrs. L. Hutchinson, Bishop Creek
Monterey county ..... W. M. Wilson, Salinas City
Santa Barbara county ..... Mrs. Clara R. Crane, Santa Barbara
San Bernardino county ..... Dr. J. P. Greves, Riverside
Santa Cruz county ..... Mrs. Georgiana B. Kirby
San Joaquin county ..... W. S. Sturgeon, Stockton
Ventura county ..... J. W. Stevens, San Buenaventura
Yolo county ..... J. G. Hudson, Woodland

TRAVELING AGENTS, Abby W. Baker, Prof. W. H. Chaney, J. L. York, J. I. Ferree.

COMMON SENSE.

A Journal of Live Ideas.

VOL. 1.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1874.

No. 17.

Signs of the Times.

The Salt Lake Tribune declares that the Mormon Church is on its last legs.

An Iowa Court holds that a promise to marry must be in writing in order to bind.

As was anticipated Beecher's self selected jury acquitted him of all blame in the Tilton affair, and the decision was endorsed by Plymouth Church. The end is not yet.

"Out of Her Sphere," is the title of a readable story by Lizzie Boynton Herbert, of Des Moines, Iowa. It is a book for "our girls," and the lesson it teaches is that woman's sphere is a little larger than many suppose it to be.

A Wyoming paper has an original way of writing obituary notices. Here it is: "Our friends, Mr. and Mrs. Smith, have been called upon to contribute one to 'the little angel band' that has been so largely recruited from Laramie city during the last few months."

A "Woman's Peace Society" has recently been formed in London, which has published an offer of $100 for the best tract written by a woman on the subject of Peace. The title must be, "In what way do wars affect woman, and how may they best use their influence to prevent war."

The money spent in New York City for liquors is put down at $50,000,000, and for public schools $3,000,000, a year. It may be set down, proportionately to the population, as the same here. Were these figures reversed, or the pro rata of fifty millions spent for education, and a fraction of the three millions only spent for liquors, the brood of hoodlums would be vastly diminished.

MRS. WEBSTER, writing from Florence July 25th, says:—Mr. Home and his wife have left us, en route for Rome, whether to return or not this winter is doubtful. Everyone who met them were charmed with them both, and as for his young and pretty wife, her exceeding grace and distinction were the theme of general comment and admiration, the Italians being great connoisseurs in such matters.

The Banner of Light says: "Spiritualism on both sides of the Atlantic, abandoning the mere defensive ground of a tolerated belief, is mustering its forces, through a deepening and multiplication of the phases of its phenomena, for a new, forward and aggressive movement, in the direction of demanding from the human intellect either a material solution for its wonders, or the acceptance of them on the ground claimed, viz: that they are the work of disembodied intelligences, once denizens of material forms, and as such, incontrovertible evidences of our own immortality."

Spiritualism, according to the New York Times, is rapidly becoming the National religion of the United States.

The Israelites of America contemplate the erection of a monument at Washington during the centennial, as a tribute to the country of their birth and adoption.

Scientists are now fast becoming converts to a belief in the appearance of spirits, a belief which scientific men a few years ago scouted as folly and delusion. Times change.

The office-holders, the speculators in currency, stockholders in National Banks and others interested in the re-election of Grant, have contributed $500,000 for the establishment of an Administration organ in New York City.

The San Bernardino Gardian says: "All the advanced Protestant beliefs are fast gravitating toward spiritualism. The most skeptical can no longer deny that there are many manifestations in spiritualism which cannot be explained on any human hypothesis."

A widow in Mattoon county, Illinois, recently obtained $2,000 damages under the "Civil Damage Act," from three saloon keepers for contributing to deprive her of her means of support, having sold to her husband intoxicating drinks which caused his death.

The Christian Union, Beecher's paper, says, notwithstanding the present tumult, Beecher will one day shine out clear and noble in the eyes of the world; a man who made many mistakes, but never erred ignobly, who held himself throughout pure and upright, the friend of men and the servant of God.

Prof. Le Conte says it is proved that should the largest comet strike the earth no harm would ensue. Per contra, M. Faye calculates that if the nucleus of a large comet should encounter the earth, the heat that would be generated in consequence would volatilize a part of the solid crust of our globe, and no human being could survive.

At a meeting of the Oberlin Theological Institute, recently, Rev. R. G. Hutchins of Columbus, read an essay on "The Law of Hereditary Transmission," which excited much interest, but the subject seems to have been shocking to the sensibilities of many of the Reverends and Professors, and it was condemned as improper for discussion in the pulpit.

While the churches of the country are increasing in wealth with astounding rapidity, they are relatively decreasing not only in numbers but in members. This, says the Banner of Light, is sufficient reason to show not only that church property ought to be taxed like other property, but that exemption from taxation is as unnecessary to the churches as it is unjust to the people.

For Common Sense.

THE NEWSPAPER. THE PEOPLE'S BIBLE.

The World's mighty Thought Machine—Does its own Preaching—Contains no Obscene Literature and allows no Infidelity—Cheap—Makes every Man his own Lawyer, Doctor and Minister—Dismisses the old Clerical Machine—Common Sense a Workingman's Bible.

BY A. GAYLORD SPALDING.

That most ancient and venerated document entitled the Holy Bible is idolized by the church-going world, and claiming to come direct from heaven it is considered the book of books, and the source of all wisdom and perfection to mankind. Our schoolmaster in past generations, it is now getting so old that, like the deciduous tree, its sacred leaves are fast falling to the ground, and its trunk and branches are withering with age and decay. As a natural result, therefore, its faithful pupils are now rapidly graduating out of the old bible into the new, styled the Newspaper, or People's Bible.

The old bible is losing respect everywhere, even in the best society, being seldom used except on funeral occasions and for Sunday worship, and sometimes in family prayer it is read only as a very solemn duty, having reference to preparation for death. Then it may be laid away on the dusty shelf. As a matter of business the old book is mainly a priestly interest to gain a living out of the working class; while it really belongs to antiquarian literature, and is never wanted for common reading. It is taken somewhat as medicine, not for regular diet. But the new bible—the newspaper—is a daily, hourly and constant companion, welcomed by all, ministers and people, old and young, grave and gay, church members and non-church members. It is found in parlor and kitchen, in store and shop, in city and country, and in every man's pocket. It is everywhere, all the time, our instructor, preacher and lecturer, our lawyer, doctor and farmer.

The newspaper is the poor man's college, and does more for education, moral reform, philanthropy, and human freedom and progress, than all the holy bibles in christendom. It is the champion of the farmers' grange movement and social and labor reform—not the old bible. It is read by all intelligent persons a hundred times more than the old bible; for that is the way they become intelligent. The newspaper bible is a library on wings that flies like a carrier dove over all the nations. It is the bible of civilization, and the more civilized the more newspapers; and the children of the common people sing and dance in its genial sunshine. But the old bible travels like a Red river ox go-cart—heavy, slow, squeaky, rickety and clumsy, and with a most terrible cost for greasing the wheels, expounding and commentating. The one single item of meeting-houses is a world full of dead expense that alone would feed and clothe millions who now are paupers.

A family that never reads a newspaper is a herd of human cattle, amounting to very little in the social and business world, no matter if their house be packed full of bibles.

Our new bible is COMMON SENSE and other liberal papers. All the very best things in the old bible are copied into the new, leaving out only the mythical and traditional, the rubbish and old foggyism, about war and slavery, murders and seductions, polygamy and concubinage, and woman's subjugation; also the great frightful devil, the awful brimstone hell and everlasting damnation. But so much as relates to truth, right, love, justice, humanity and brotherhood are most carefully preserved. The new bible contains no obscene literature, but its style is so perfectly pure and chaste that it may be safely read in the most select and refined company; which cannot be said every time of the old. The old bible teaches the duty of blind faith, independent of the five senses of reason. But the new bible is a book of demonstrated truth, appealing to the highest thought and sense of man, to which there can be no infidels, for a man is always forced to believe his own wide-awake senses.

The world's past progress is a sure prophecy of the future; since the human race is progressive, and all that is good and beautiful in heaven will be realized by mankind on earth; because the quality of the heart and life makes heaven, and is heaven. The new bible is progressive, being filled daily and weekly with the fresh, glowing and divine inspirations of God and common sense through the human soul. The worship taught in the new bible is that of brotherly deeds and a good life. It requires no Sunday show of long faces nor long sermons, nor God-houses, nor sacraments of wine, nor baptisms of water, for the sake of passing the soul safely through death. Therefore it is a cheap religion—such as workingmen need—and does not cost a hundred millions a year for the nation, nor six or ten thousand dollars for a few churches in a small town.

In the days of the Apostles no printing press had been invented; therefore itinerating preachers and lecturers were quite proper and necessary to instruct the people. But the printing press, at the present period, is the Archimedean lever of the intellectual world; and, like our western threshing machine, which will do the work of a hundred men with the old flail, one press may be equal to a hundred clergymen—aye, perhaps many hundred—to teach and enlighten mankind. What farmer on our prairies would go back to hand-threshing? His grain would not pay the cost. So with the press. It is the wonderful thought machine, which saves the need and expense of oral professional speech, that costs a hundred times as much. The cheap avenue of all knowledge—religious, legal, medical, scientific and literary—is through newspapers, books, magazines and tracts; and what sensible man will pay a hundred dollars for a certain amount of information, when he can get the same by another method for one dollar? Or who will contribute to erect a ten or fifty thousand dollar church, when all the knowledge to be got in it may be obtained at home for nothing? No reasonable man, of course.

All wealth comes from productive labor. The professions generally produce no wealth, but only consume it. When working people come to realize this fact, it may tend to change their course of action. They will appreciate themselves more highly and protect their own interests. No laboring man of good sense will give his hard and honest earnings to a professional minister, attorney or physician, for him to live in style and ease, when he may become his own preacher, lawyer and doctor. That he can do, and let these proud aristocratic professionals raise their own potatoes, and manufacture their own broadcloth. Let the workers combine and co-operate for self-employment, self-direction and self-protection.

The press is like the blazing sunlight to the mental and moral world, and its rays are for every human being; and, if it is to bless mankind, the time has come for it. Let no man be cheated out of it. The world is like a beehive—the working bees making all the honey, but the drones eating the most of it. The drones must be killed off, or forced to join the workers. The drone class, or monopolists and extortionists, consists of many sorts: Military drones, political drones, clerical drones, legal drones, gambling drones, speculating drones, office-holding drones, fashionable drones, etc. These favored ones always stand in the places of queen bees, kings and rulers, while the workers—the producers—are merely their drudged and cringing servants.

But the day of revolution is at hand, a war portends, and is even now declared. The wars of the old bible, and of all past time, have been brutal and bloody, covering their fields with the mangled dead. But now we wage a new style of warfare altogether, for it will be bloodless. It will leave no widows nor orphans in its fiery trail, nor destroy any man's property; for our battle ground is the printed newspaper. Our powder is printer's ink, and our bullets the leaden type. Every thinking man or woman is a brave soldier, who will discharge effective shots of flaming ideas into the heavy brains of the stubborn enemy. Victory to our noble cause is assured. Yet no one can possibly be hurt, for it is a harmless battle of ideas.

"The pen is mightier than the sword!"

All hail then to the new bible! Magnify and extol the newspaper—the COMMON SENSE! It is a thousand-brain power machine for thought and for preaching. And it is so, so cheap! Dismiss then the antiquated and dilapidated clerical machine, and lay it away with the old barn flail. It belongs to a former age, before the printing press and COMMON SENSE were known. Circulate the good newspaper in every family, like the thick apple blossoms of spring, and it will teach every man to be his own minister, doctor and lawyer, and save the foolish waste of money that belongs to the old bible system. Disband the bloody army of the dark and cruel past, and fight henceforth with peaceful weapons only, on the fair battle field of the plucky newspaper. Carnal weapons are the old bible style.

The questions now are: The old or the new; the right or the wrong; blessings for the many or the few; equal rights or monopoly; manhood and labor, or capital and oppression; unity and co-operation, or wages, labor and slavery? Let it be settled by that grand tribunal of our glorious era—the People's Bible—COMMON SENSE. An extensive reading of this new COMMON SENSE Bible will develop a new church—the Newspaper Bible Church—which will overshadow and outweigh all others combined, and California will stand No. 1 in the new dispensation.

Champlin, Minn., August, 1874.

The readers of COMMON SENSE are under many obligations to A. Gaylord Spalding, a helpless, cripple printer of Champlin, Minnesota, for his excellent letters, which we would gladly pay for if the income of the paper warranted. As it is we rely entirely upon voluntary contributions from friends; but there are cases where justice seems to require some remuneration. We have no authority to ask aid for Mr. Spalding, yet we feel quite sure that if some generous California capitalist would volunteer to send him a check for a hundred dollars, or less, it would be "accepted with thanks." We still have three or four letters by M. Spalding, on file, waiting for room. They are all good.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

EDITORS COMMON SENSE: In your edition of July 18th I find this sentence in a communication from a Virginia City correspondent. "Woman's present position in this country is a degrading one, notwithstanding the homes so dearly purchased—just how dearly the victims only know." Being myself a woman I feel moved to say a few words upon the subject with this assertion as a starting point.

The correspondent writing thus pretends to be a strong advocate of female suffrage. I myself am also in favor of woman's having the right of the ballot, and I don't believe any man or set of men have any God given right to deny us said privilege, but if our present position is one that has degraded us, then are we unfit to take the right, even if granted, as we have had quite enough of laws made and enforced from a like condition of the opposite sex. I conclude if our position is a degrading one, we have most of the time had the company of the men in our degradation. If the men by their persecutions have placed us in such a position, they must have descended to that level in order to place us there, and are consequently voting from that region.

These are my sentiments regarding this question:

First—That woman is not ready to assume the right of ballot, not because of her degraded position, but, simply because all these years she has not made a proper use of the rights already belonging to and acknowledged as hers; and all of them, according to my views, of much more importance to themselves and the world at large, than this so much wrangled over question of female suffrage.

Second—The right which to me is the all important, the one which will lay the foundation for a world reform religiously, socially and politically, is for woman to know herself, to know and understand the working of the great creative power through her being. The total neglect or abuse of this right, has brought the earth to its present inharmonious condition. This is a subject deemed unfit for public discussion, and I think should be lightly touched upon, but the place where it should be taught, is in the home circle, by the father and mother, just as the alphabet is taught, for I think it of vastly more importance than the a b c. It is the alphabet of life—the foundation of exterior life, the thing to be first learned truthfully by the parents; then taught to their children; and so in this way all future generations may be blessed. When this is accomplished, then will there be a perfect foundation for the building up of woman's rights, and no more discussions upon the subject, as every voter will be truthful, whether male or female.

PEARL MELWOOD.

God made this beautiful world, which whirls on its axis at the rate of 1000 miles per hour, and rolls in its orbit at the rate of sixty-eight thousand miles per hour; and he made millions and billions of other worlds, now revolving through space, filled with men, plants and animals like ours; all, all by himself, without the interference of a single parson of priest; but he can not, or will not, so say the parsons, save a few pigmy souls, only one in a hundred of this nation's population, without the herculean labors of sixty thousand elaborate neck-ties!—Common Sense.

[For Common Sense.]

OPTIMISM.

DEAR SIR:—It is comparatively a simple thing for an optimist to confute an orthodox theologian. The latter sets out with the proposition that there is an all-powerful, all-good and all-wise God, i. e. a perfect God. The optimist also either agrees with him thus far, or substitutes perfect laws for a perfect God; which seems to me to be simply a denial of the personality of the supreme being; and personality seems to imply limitation and therefore negative infinity.

When, therefore, the theologian affirms the existence of evil, the optimist, starting from the common ground of the absolute perfection of the supreme power, objects, that if evil exists in God's universe, it follows either that God could not prevent it, or would not, or did not know how; the first theory disproving his omnipotence, the second his benevolence, the third his perfect wisdom; all which had been theretofore conceded. What we call evil is not seen as evil to a more perfect being, but only as good in an imperfect and undeveloped state. This is all plain sailing enough; but to disprove logically the arguments of a man who takes the very singular and unusual ground of Mr. Austin Kent, that both evil and good are equally real, co-existent, normal and eternal, is a very different matter indeed, and by no means so simple.

Throughout all historic ages, to man's sensations and perceptions, evil has always had an actual positive existence, and been a far more palpable ever-present entity than good. So to the perceptions and sensations of the Esquimaux, is cold a more palpable entity than heat. Yet it would be just as sensible and true (neither more so nor less) to speak of heat as less cold, as to speak of good as less evil. It is not at all unlikely that the inhabitants of the polar regions—and Mr. Austin Kent would appear to be an inhabitant of the ethical polar regions—do thus speak of it; yet we know that cold and darkness have no existence whatever, in fact, any more than my property has when I say that I am worth $1,000 less than nothing; they are all equally minus quantities. Minus quantities are only imaginary quantities; they have no real existence; yet a good deal of that which makes up to us a very real and palpable external world is probably composed entirely of minus quantities, which to a being in a superior state, who sees the truth of things, have no actual existence. We are here in an imperfect state of sensation and perception. Our knowledge is all relative, not positive; and is therefore not the truth of things. I would illustrate what I mean by the example of a pencil landscape drawing. Here is a very fair and beautiful representation of our external world; nothing can be more realistic, and yet every pencil stroke that goes to make it up is, or may be, nothing but the equivalent of a shadow, a minus; somewhat less sunlight.

Mr. Kent ridicules the idea of heat and light being entities. We may be mistaken here as elsewhere, but assuredly these are as real entities as any forces with which we have to deal. To speak of them as forms of motion, merely, conveys no idea to my mind, and does not alter the case. They are motion of something, and not of the same thing, for you can have one without the other. As well talk of them, and all the other elements of our material universe, as mere forces. I have no objection to that, but then these forces are certainly entities, and many of them distinct ones. If we know anything, we do know this, that light and heat are plus or positive, and darkness and cold are minus or negative, as far as we are concerned, and we know as much of goodness, and may reasonably predicate the same of its opposite. When a man stands in the sunlight, his shadow against the wall is a very real thing to him, and yet it is only a minus—the interception of so much sunlight.

In this state in which I now am, I find myself opposed on every side by what seem to be very real and positive obstructions, which I call material; and yet I am not at all sure that the quality—in me and them—which constitutes this material obstructiveness, may not be a minus, a negative quality, which has no real existence, but is a mere matter of state. Many of the manifestations of modern Spiritualism, such as placing a tight fitting iron ring around a medium's neck, would seem to favor this view. Gravity itself, which is so very real a law to us now, may be in the same category for all I know. So evil seems to us a very real and positive thing, and I don't know that I can prove logically that it is not so, any more than I can prove, when my hand strikes a table, that the obstruction I feel has merely a relative, and no positive existence. Yet I do undoubtedly feel sure that both phenomena are only relative, mere matters of state, which have no positive existence as such at all. However I have two other reasons for thinking that right is on our side. The universal instincts of mankind point to the existence of perfection somewhere: to a perfect God, or to perfect laws governing this universe. Again, we are certainly able to form an ideal of perfection. How could we do this if it did not pre-exist in the power that brought us and the universe into being? If we could prove this pre-existence, we could logically prove the truth of Optimism, but just here is the missing link. And since we cannot prove this, I don't think that we can get further than a very strong presumption in favor of the truth of our theory.

A still further argument in our favor I derive from the great lameness, and for the most part the very palpable absurdity, of all the theories that have been invented by priests since the world began to account satisfactorily for the origin and existence of evil. Priests and kings, since the beginning of historic times, have always used this belief in evil as the very potent means of enslaving to themselves the bodies and souls of men. Our explanation is simple and consistent; "the thing you fear is an illusion; it has no existence; evil is simply good in disguise."

Power there must be somewhere at the head of things; if there be such a thing as evil then that power must be both good and evil. Either then no perfect power exists, which is, I believe, negated by our acknowledged capability of conceiving of a perfect thing, or else there must be two distinct equal powers of good and evil.* Of all theories but that of the Optimist, this of the Ahriman and Ormuzd, of the ancient Persians, has always appeared to me to be the most consistent and philosophical. Almost all others which have supposed the existence of an all-good and omnipotent power, permitting that of an inferior power of evil, are not worthy for a moment the serious consideration of a philosopher.

I should be exceedingly sorry to believe with Mr. Austin Kent that evil and hatred are just as real and eternal as goodness and love; but in justice to him I would remark that the most widespread and philosophical religion that we know anything about appears to me to take just his ground. The Buddhists profess to know nothing about a supreme Deity. Their priests and sacred writings make no statements about any perfect God, or perfect laws of the universe at all. They do not pray. They adore Buddha, (acknowledged to be only a man,) the law and the assembly of the faithful; the three holy ones, as they call them. They represent the myriads of worlds of space as being inhabited by beings in different states of imperfection, who get worse and worse till, in lapse of ages, they forget the teaching of the last Buddha, and at length they are utterly destroyed. These worlds are each surrounded by its own heavens and hells, and after each destruction are renewed again to go through the same process ad infinitum. Each world lasts a certain definite time, and successive Buddhas appear periodically in different worlds, and re-instruct all grades of sentient beings in the knowledges of the law.

*A perfect power exists; and that is the law which inheres in matter. All matter and all spirit is controlled by law. Matter was never "created," nor was law created, but both have eternally existed.—Ed. C. S.

But evil and good are with them equally real, and co-exist forever and ever. Individuals go on circulating through the different grades of devils, beasts, undeveloped spirits, men and deities, till they obtain perfection in absolute quiescence. About the origin of man, and of evil, in this world and æon, they have a curious tradition so utterly opposed to the Darwinian, which in a general way appears to be also a theory of theirs, that it may be worthy of mention in this connection. This tradition, which is of doubtful authenticity and orthodoxy, says that men were created spirits; that they had no appetites or passions; but that after a while they acquired a taste for a certain kind of rice, and became able to eat this. Eating this caused them first to use the words "mine" and "thine," and thus gradually property and selfishness were introduced into the world; and these spirits thus degenerated morally, became altogether materialized, and lost almost all the properties and powers of spiritual beings.

The Buddhist priests are not allowed to possess property of any sort except their necessary suit of clothing, their rice bowl and water strainer. They must never eat meat or take life, and have to preserve an absolute celibacy. In fact their duty is to extinguish as much as possible all appetites and passions, so as to return as nearly as may be to the primitive state of purity and spirituality. Perfection with the Buddhists, Nirwana, consists in the utter extinction of all selfishness; nay of the very selfhood; so that good and evil can have no further application to the individual at all. Then only, to use the words of Buddha, does the saint become "freed from the endless circle of existences," or re-births, and enters into Nirwana. Some sections of heterodox Buddhists, and most foreigners, regard Buddha's Nirwana as absolute extinction. That this is not so is proved by the fact that Buddha entered into Nirwana before death, and that it is often spoken of as a state of perfect bliss. Amongst much that I hope is puerile and absurd in his teaching, to wit, the endless destruction and reformation of worlds which never seem to progress, and the apparently eternal persistency of sin and evil, the fact still remains, that Buddha, in the flower of his youth and glory, recognizing the unsatisfactory nature of all earthly joys and honors, descended from his high estate, entered upon and carried out to the bitter end the most perfect life of utter self-abnegation of which there is any historic account, and gave to the East Indies the most perfect system of ethics, and the most self-consistent account of the nature and destiny of man that the world has ever seen; and although I cannot help disagreeing both with Buddha and Mr. Austin Kent in the above particulars, yet could I take off my hat with the most profound respect to any man who thinks alike with the greatest moral philosopher the world has ever seen.

Yours respectfully, DON FULANO.

IF A ROBIN DIE, SHALL IT LIVE AGAIN?

ED. COMMON SENSE: Having had abundant proof of the continued existence and identity of Man, the question arises: "What of the lower grades of Animal life?"—Inclosed I send you a photograph of Wes-te-ka and her pet robin, taken from an spirit painting. [The picture may be seen at this office.] The spirit, Wes-te-ka, is an Indian girl; the robin perched on her hand was a pet of hers in earth life. It died, and, soon after its death, Wes-te-ka passed to the other life, found her pet robin there, and has taught it to materialize and sing. Sunday evening August 4th 1872, at a seance (Mrs. C. M. Morrison, medium) for the first time, and according to promise, chirping and singing was distinctly heard, to the delight of all present. From time to time during two years these manifestations have continued, and we are often delighted now with its song. I believe Nature has provided for the continuation of all life, and as Spirit Chemical Science makes conditions peculiar to the mundane sphere, we get tangible evidence of that continuation. The singing and chirping of Wes-te-ka's robin is but another link in the chain of the various manifestations which are now awakening mankind to a knowledge of the after life and its conditions.

Oswego N. Y., Aug. 15, 1874.

H. B. WILCOX.

GOOD NEWS FOR HUMBOLDT.—Our friends in Humboldt county will be glad to learn that J. L. York, a live Free-thought speaker, is about to visit them. He will probably speak at Eureka, Rohnersville, Arcata, Hydesville, Petrolia, Ferndale, and other towns in the neighborhood. Mr. York is a good speaker, and a worthy man—one our Liberal friends there will be glad to become acquainted with. He has recently returned from a successful tour in the extreme southern counties of the State, and left a favorable impression, as he does wherever he goes. He had hoped to be accompanied to Eureka by that staunch radical, W. J. Sweasey, but business will detain Mr. Sweasey in this city until the next steamer; he will consequently be unable to introduce Mr. York to his neighbors; therefore we take the liberty, unsolicited, of bespeaking a kind reception for one of the best workers we have in the Liberal ranks on this coast. The San Diego World speaks very highly of Mr. York as a Liberal speaker. Mr. York gave fourteen lectures there to crowded houses. At San Bernardino Mr. York gave ten lectures. The Argus, of San Bernardino, says: "As a speaker, Dr. York is as successful. He captivates his hearers and at once enlists their sympathies. His diction is good, his illustrations pointed and a vein of good humor and wit adds peculiar interest to all he says. He is liberal and charitable in all his discourses, and even those who do not agree with his theories give him credit for candor and charity. Few gentlemen have ever visited this place who made more friends and gained more admiration."

John R. Buchtel, founder of Buchtel College, a Universalist institution at Akron, (Ohio,) offered to give $20,000 to endow two professorships to be filled by women, provided the Universalist women of the country would raise the same sum for the same purpose. They have done it, and Mr. Buchtel has paid over the money he pledged.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

COMMON SENSE is furnished to subscribers for Three Dollars per annum, in advance. Letters intended for the Business Department should be addressed:

A. T. CLARK, BUSINESS MANAGER, 236 Montgomery st.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

The Newspaper the People's Bible—A Gaylord Spalding .....	196
Woman Suffrage—Pearl Melwood .....	197
Optimism—Don Fulano .....	198
If a Robin Die, Shall It Live Again? .....	199
Church and State—Ed .....	200
The Clergy on Spiritualism .....	201
Mr. York's Address .....	201
God in the Constitution .....	202
A Troublesome Spirit .....	202
Salvation by Christ—Jas. Battersby .....	203
The Creed of Plymouth Church .....	203
Materialization of Spirits .....	204
The Devil in Milwaukee .....	205
Poetry and Special Notices .....	206

COMMON SENSE.

WILLIAM N. SLOCUM, EDITOR.

AMANDA M. SLOCUM, ASSISTANT.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, SEPT. 5, 1874.

ELEANOR L. LINDSAY is a Deputy of the Industrial Brotherhood, and persons in Sonoma county desirous of forming lodges of the Order can address her at Windsor. Residents of other parts of the State may apply to the local deputies, or to William Dunn, State Deputy, Sacramento.

THE tone of the San Francisco Chronicle during the last month has noticeably improved. It appears now to aim at the truth in its reports and telegraphic news, as well as editorials. If it continues in this way it cannot fail to become the leading paper of the State, as it has long been the most enterprising.

JENNIE LEYS, who has the reputation of being one of the best inspirational speakers in America, will make her first appearance before a San Francisco audience on Sunday afternoon at the new hall of the Spiritual Union, 911 Market street. She will also speak in the evening of the same day. After the afternoon address, which will be brief, the usual seance will be held.

WOODWARD'S GARDEN.—Among the new attractions at Woodward's is the sacred cow, a handsome, mild-eyed animal, as gentle as a lamb. There are also a pair of flying squirrels, two beautiful specimens of the humming bird, etc. The "ghost window" is still to be seen in the rear of the museum, and it is amusing to note the variety of opinions expressed concerning it. Some of the visitors have no difficulty in making out the figure of a man with huge whiskers; others see nothing but a cracked glass and a smoky mass of shapeless shadow on the lower part of it. Go out and see for yourselves. Next Wednesday, the ninth of September, is "Admission Day"—the twenty-fifth annual celebration of California's birth as a State in the Union. It is to be celebrated at Woodward's by the California Pioneers. Delegations from all parts of the interior will participate. Grand procession, escorted by Gen. Hewston's brigade. Interesting exercises, oration by Dr. Stillman, poem by Mr. Chamberlin, grand banquet, excellent programme of performance, concerts, dancing, and trial trip of the new reconstructed balloon.

CHURCH AND STATE.

For long ages it has been the fashion in Europe to make the church a part of the State, and to wed the State to the church. The great catholic church demanded this as a right. Its bishops sat in the parliaments, crowned the kings, and presided over the schools and universities. Taxes were levied upon the people for their support. The church was enriched with lands, buildings and tithes and imposts innumerable. This system was brought over to the new world by the catholic church, and fastened upon Canada, Mexico, and most of the States of Central and South America. The Pope claimed the naming of the bishops thus endowed with rich livings, and while Rome was all-powerful, the proudest kingdoms of the earth were frequently oppressed and abused by bishops maintained by themselves, but appointed by the Pope, and true servants only to him. In the advance of intelligence this condition of things has been amended from time to time. England threw off the papal appointments, but retained the State church, and more recently France, and now Germany, Austria and Spain, finding their free action toward a larger liberty impeded by these appointees of the Pope, are resolving to take their churches under their own control, and make the bishops subordinate to the civil power. The Pope and the bishops resist. They insist upon it that they have a right to occupy fine palaces, and live on huge salaries, supported by the people, and yet to be the sworn servants of the Roman pontiff, and enemies of the State and nation that furnishes their fine houses. This is the kind of persecution of which the church complains in Germany; but if we read the times aright, its complaints will be unheeded, and the march of reform will go steadily on till the church, whether catholic or otherwise, will be entirely separated from the State, and made to depend upon the generosity of the people for its support. There is no middle way with these ecclesiastics; you can never satisfy their craving for wealth and power. However rich, they are never willing to disgorge; and if you give them a dollar they are forever intriguing for two more. In our own country, though we have no church establishment, they contrive to draw millions out of the public purse, and need a constant watch lest they should seize our colleges and schools, and eventually the government itself. But the spirit of church reform is abroad, and will not be stayed. It has now reached even Peru. Some time ago the Jesuits were ordered out of that State by law. We now find that they have been fostered, contrary to the statute, by a bishop appointed by the Pope. But now the president has seized the bishop for trial, and the right of the Pope to appoint bishops who may be traitors to the State is seriously questioned. In our country we are happily saved from these troubles. We have no State church, and we want none; though there are those among us who would willingly put God in the Constitution, and follow up the work by establishing a national religion. The friends of freedom will see to it that their rights are not betrayed in this way.

THE CLERGY ON SPIRITUALISM.

The clergymen composing the Presbyterian Union, in their last weekly meeting, took up the subject of Spiritualism, and vied with each other in efforts to show not only how little they know of the matter, but how little they desire to know. To use the expression of one of them: "It is a subject I dare not investigate." Mr. Poage said he believed he was forbidden to invoke the spirits, consequently he never attended seances. He believed in the devil and his angels, but did not believe the spirits of the dead can return. The good, he said, are in heaven, and can have no desire to come back, while the bad are in hell, and cannot return. [That settles the matter. Though people, when they leave this life, are of all grades, from the most virtuous to the most vile, yet there are, after death, but two classes, the saved and the lost! Such a damnable doctrine as this—such an insult to common sense—such an outrage of all idea of justice—is too weak and too wicked to longer hold the world in thrall. Its day has passed.] The longest speech was made by Rev. Mr. Wells, and the drift of it, all the way through, was Devil! Devil! He said:

The bible is full of them. The apostles recognized them. These spirits are called devils in Luke and Mark. Spiritualism has the same characteristics now. As a class, Spiritualists hate the bible. I met a Spiritualist the other day and he said, "The very soot of hell would whitewash the character of the God of the Bible." These spirits were called unclean spirits. Are not the whole Tilton crew Spiritualists? If you can convince me that H. W. Beecher is a Spiritualist, you will go a long way to convince me he is guilty.

After repeating that Spiritualism is the work of the devil, he adds.

Go with me on my regular beat, and I will show you as much devilry as existed in Christ's time. [No doubt of it.] "The first seance," says the Rev. Wells, "was held in the garden of Eden. The snake was the medium, and a woman was operated on. Ahab's prophets were influenced by the devil; Jesus' agony in the wilderness was caused by being tempted by the devil. We are taught in the bible that hell was prepared for the devil and his angels, or these evil spirits. There is a power for evil now in the world that we have had no conception of."

[Poor man! what can he think of a God, who, as he believes, created all these evil beings, and sent them here to tempt men astray, that he (God) might have an excuse for plunging human beings into everlasting torment? Should not this God be called the chief devil of all? and would not soot look white in comparison with such a monster of darkness?]

Rev's. Burrows, Gibbon, Frazer, Pierrepont, Eells and others, talked in the same strain. The only sensible views were expressed by Dr. Carpenter, who asked whether they had not overlooked the facts mentioned in the bible of the presence of good spirits. Do not the Scriptures abound in testimonies of the return of the angelic messengers in human form? It is, he said, unfortunate if the world is encircled by evil spirits and the good are not allowed to come. The bible is replete with the ministrations of good spirits.

Dr. Eells said the bible is sufficient for all human needs, not only now, but for all coming time. As to the claim of Spiritualism that it brought messages from the departed, how could we know it to be true? How could he know that the spirit which claimed to be his mother was his mother?

It is for just such infidels as Rev. Brother Eells that Materialization, the latest phase of Spiritualism, is adapted. By this means, men have been brought to see their mothers face to face; have talked with them, and have become cognizant of the spirit presence by touch as well as sight and hearing. If it is the devil that does this also, then what of the God who permits it to be done? Is he not infinitely worse than the devil himself? But Spiritualists believe neither in a personal God nor a personal devil. They consider these mythical beings but the creations of an age of ignorance. Educated men in this era of scientific research should blush to admit that they still cling to such relics of a barbaric age. Devils! indeed!

MR. YORK'S ADDRESS.—At the new hall, 911 Market street, on Sunday evening, J. L. York discoursed on the question, What Shall We Do With Our Criminals? He spoke against capital punishment, and deprecated cruel treatment. If the object of punishment is revenge, our present system is good enough; but if it is reform, then we make a great mistake. He said he longed to see the time when woman's moral influence will be brought to bear on this subject at the ballot box. We need a remodeling of our criminal system. Mr. York said that crime is a disease, and should be treated as such. It is a disease too that is in part inherited from parents, and in part fostered by a wrong social system. There is no reason why a morally diseased person should not be treated as kindly as one physically diseased. The birth of criminals should be prevented by the education of the people, and the State should see to it that no child is allowed to grow up in ignorance and vice, a curse to society. Mr. York spoke of taxation, and said there is no justice in the doctrine of "equal taxation." The rich should pay a higher percentage than the poor, and the laws should be so formed as to discriminate in favor of the workingman, and against the capitalist, so as to assist in equalizing the struggle of life. He said the burdens of the country should rest upon the surplus capital of the country, and not upon the industry of the people.

THE MEDIUM'S SEANCE at Charter Oak Hall will hereafter be held in the evening, and the conference in the afternoon. There will be no morning meeting during September. On Sunday last the principal tests given at the seance were through Mrs. Cummings, who was held under control nearly two hours, giving during that time a large number of names and descriptions, every one of which were recognized. To-morrow evening Mrs. Foye will give the ballot test at the conclusion of the seance.

We call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of Mrs. Johnson, in another column. Magnetic Baths are splendid for all nervous complaints, and the price is extremely low.

GOD IN THE CONSTITUTION.

NUMBER TWO.

"Woe to the priesthood! woe
 To those whose hire is with the price of blood,
 Perverting, darkening, changing as they go,
 The searching truths of God!
 Their glory and their might Shall perish; and their very names shall be
 Vile before all the people, in the light
 Of a world's liberty."—JOHN G. WHITTIER.

The first united efforts by the Christians to secure a legal recognition of God, Jesus and the Bible, since the establishment of this Republic, was made in Xenia, Ohio, February 3d, 1863, whilst the black cloud of war, with all its horrors, covered many portions of our beloved country, laying the seed to another more cruel and fierce than the one we were then going through. At this convention delegates from seven States and eleven different protestant denominations were present. Whilst our "boys in blue" were fighting the monster slavery, these religious bigots aimed the first blow against religious and civil liberty in the guise of the angel of patriotism. The programme had been fully laid out before the assembling of the convention, yet some of the committee in charge of the order of exercises and business, opposed the reception of the proposed amendment. The friends of the movement, in order to smooth over the inharmony, declared no harm was meant to the Republic, and none could come to it by merely inserting the name of the Almighty in the preamble—the appropriate place for insertion. It is only to do God honor, perfectly harmless. The original form of the amendment is as follows: The proposed additions are in italic.

We, the people of the United States, [recognizing the being and attributes of Almighty God, the divine authority of the Holy Scriptures, the law of God as the paramount rule, and Jesus, the Messiah, the Savior and Lord of all,] in order to form a more perfect union, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defence, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and to our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

The author of this amendment was Rev. John Alexander, now of Philadelphia. Although an account of the inharmony produced then it was altered, yet the spirit of it nevertheless remains the same. The above is quoted from the official organ of the Christian Alliance, the Christian Statesman, and is therefore correct. Perhaps the question may be asked, Who are the leaders in this movement? We find Judges, Senators, Governors, Bishops, Lawyers, D. D's. and M. D's.; in fact men of eminence, and some holding high positions under the government, who are fully committed to the attempt to overturn our secular institutions by this religious amendment to the National Constitution. Although they have tried and failed once already, yet, friends of liberty, do not flatter yourselves they are discouraged. Oh no! I will prove before I finish these articles that they are determined to try only so much the harder. They have set all the intrigues on foot which will help them to carry it through the next time—a demonstration of which we have had but lately here under the guise of "Local Option," where some very pious women, under the influence of cunning priests, made common cause with those they at other times called strong minded, short-haired ranters, unsexed, masculine women, and the like epithets. I have no doubt they will join with the Woman Suffrage cause, in order to secure the ballot by which they certainly can and will secure their end, although they have heartily despised that class of women heretofore.

In our next I will give the progress of the movement, the action of subsequent conventions, and the demands of the committee appointed to visit Washington.

A FRIEND OF RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.

A TROUBLESOME SPIRIT.

The Wheeling (Va.) Intelligencer gives the details of a singular ghost story, the truth of which is vouched for by a number of well known citizens of New Martinsville, West Va. John Nolan, a boy, thirteen years of age, son of Henry Nolan, a wealthy "but respectable" gentleman, has for some months asserted that he was followed about the house by an old gray headed man. The boy's health began to fail, and he was sent away from home. On his return the same thing occurred, and he left several times, always recovering health and spirits only to lose both on his return home. Finally the boy said the old man threw stones at him, and stones were seen to hit him, and also to fall on the roof of the house. Finally a number of the neighbors convened at the house for the purpose of catching the "old man." They saw the stones fall, but could not see where they came from. John could distinctly see his old assailant in the field, so with rifles cocked the men moved in that direction. The boy described the ghost as sitting in a small bunch of briar bushes. The patch was surrounded, rushed upon with clubs and stones, and John saw the old man enter another. This was in its turn surrounded, but with the same effect. Sometimes after coming from a patch the old man would enter another a few feet away, sometimes dash across the field. All Sunday the search went on, but without success. On Monday, however, while the storming party were running from briar heap to briar heap, their victim became suddenly visible to all. He was dressed in blue trousers and shirt, of fine looking appearance. He was hatless, but his long white flowing beard and hair hung in profusion around his shoulders and over his breast. His face was pale, his eyes clear and sharp, and black as night. He was ordered to surrender, but did not. The men then closed upon him, but he darted off like a deer. Meanwhile the stones continued to rattle down, though propelled by some other power than the arm of the phantom. The chase was kept up at intervals several days, the ghost being sometimes visible, and sometimes not. Finally, when the old man was in plain sight, it was decided to shoot him. One of the men took deliberate aim with his rifle and fired. The old man, unhurt, bounded off. Another pursuer fired, but in vain. The two men prepared to reload their rifles, but both the gun locks had disappeared. At last accounts the boy had again been sent away from home, and the affair was as great a mystery as ever.

SALVATION BY CHRIST.

ADDRESS BEFORE THE SOCIETY FOR SELF CULTURE BY J. BATTERSBY.

Guided by the light of reason, aided by the consciousness of a sincere desire for the truth, and having obtained new and, to us at least, more intelligible impressions concerning the moral significance and value of the "Gospel and Cross of Christ," we shall enter on the discussion of this confessedly important matter with the avowed intent to strike out in a new direction of enquiry; and the reasonableness of the course we trust will commend itself.

Having studied to some extent the history of doctrinal development in the churches, from the earliest ages down to the present time, the study did much toward setting us free from our earlier confidence of popular and what is called "evangelical" opinions, and their necessary perfectability. The revolution in our mental experience while it has loosened our hold on scholastic theology and the "traditions of the elders," has opened up to us a "more excellent way" to the elevation and salvation of humanity, than the great judicial tragedy of the cross presents, with its dying Christ, the beloved Son of the Father, as a broken and bruised substitute for sinners groaning and trembling under a sense of oppressive wrath, and the great loving God transformed into a demon bereft of all filial tenderness, and assuming the role of an omnipotent executioner. We have a very high estimate of the learning and ability of the reverend gentleman, Mr. Hemphill, who addressed us a few Sundays since on this subject. His allusion to the expiatory sacrifice and death of Christ was, however, vague and misty, and in the total absence of any argument in confirmation of his theory, we might simply dismiss the case with the verdict of "not proven;" but we want evidence of the statement being true—we have evidence of its being false. True, the effort was made to make the theory appear somewhat plausible by exhibiting the moral perfections and beauty of Christ's character, and there can be no robbing him of that glory if you please, but the amalgam of offensive and contradictory absurdities involved in the misnamed "atoning blood of Jesus" shocks the moral sensibilities, and has no influence save a detrimental one on the masses of society. It has been made the instrument to repel men from one another, to foment prejudice, party feeling, and even violent persecution. Oh! of what wrong and wickedness has not this same cross been made the symbol and servant. When it was erected into a power it was made the power of violence and bloodshed and murderous wars. This hideous and unnatural doctrine has weighed like an incubus on the energies of the people until they are well nigh cast afloat without anchor or helm. No wonder infidelity, so called, is diffused through the land. The churches see and sorrow over this unwelcome fact, but alas they see not that they themselves are the fruitful cause, the creators of the evil they deplore. All christendom is alarmed, and are seeking specifics, thinking to cure the evil by a more diligent application of its cause. It is a well known maxim in physical ailments that desperate diseases require desperate remedies, and whatever worth there may be in homoeopathic remedies and doses in Materia Medica, their application is valueless in intellectual and moral diseases. The medicine for the mind and heart is not that which perverted and deranged them—truth, not error, is the only cure for error. The orthodox churches are not the spiritual physicians of the age; we would not speak cynically or judge harshly the men who are peddling out this "balm of Gilead;" but history and experience attest the fact that they are empirics who have well nigh extinguished all moral, social and spiritual life and health.

Suppose we give a little more careful attention to this plan and hope of salvation for man. Did it ever occur to you that the cross was the gibbet of the ancient gentiles, and only became identified with the man Jesus because the Jews rejected him and resisted his sublime teachings and principles? Surely you dare not affirm that this was planned and demanded by God! The honor of his moral government of his creatures could not be upheld by an act of rebellion against that government. Why, your own scriptures being authority, the crucifixion of Christ was a crime, the highest and most aggravated and heinous of all crimes; and now we ask you in all candor, can crime be cleansed by crime? Is it indeed a law of the Christian revelations and principles that the fouler and more damnable the crime, the more perfect it becomes as an agent of moral purification? What! sin sanctify sin! Sin give a satisfaction for sin! Sin save men from sin, and its consequences! Oh! if this be the philosophy of the churches, the Christian orthodox churches, my soul come not thou into their secret or embrace. In the language of the learned apostle Paul we exclaim, "Beware lest any spoil you through philosophy." It is just such vain philosophy as this that props up, gives color and plausibility to infidelity,

TO BE CONCLUDED IN OUR NEXT.

THE CREED OF PLYMOUTH CHURCH.

I. THE SHAM.

We believe in God, the Father Almighty, and in Jesus Christ, his real and only son; and that Christ came down upon earth to instruct and save sinners. We believe in his words, that a man should be humble and lowly, and kind and charitable, dividing with the poor, and eschewing the pomps and vanities of this wicked world. We believe in open fairness, in candor and truth, in returning good for evil, and forgiving our adversaries, that we may be forgiven ourselves. We believe in the resurrection of the body, and in everlasting happiness and glory for those who believe and practice these things. And we do most devoutly believe that our pastor, H. W. Beecher, is clearly innocent of the adulteries laid to his charge. We do confess and declare that we accept the whole of the above as the articles of our faith, and do most solemnly receive and practice the same—in a Pickwickian sense.

II. THE REALITY.

But in real truth and earnest we do say and aver that we do not know whether the said Christ was verily the Son of God or not, any more than all other good men are. We aver that we have an abiding faith in riches and honor, high salaries, fine churches and fashionable preachers, even if a little adultery does attach to them; and as to Theodore Tilton and Frank Moulton, and other adversaries of the holy church of Brooklyn, we would like to slay them in front of the altar. Henceforth we shall carry weapons for that purpose. As to the poor, let them take care of themselves. We believe that a man is in a state of grace, and in the way of salvation, when he has plenty of money. We think it fair and honorable for the accused to appoint his own judges, to have counsel, while the accuser has none, to examine what witnesses he will; and for the judges to ignore the facts, and to decide contrary to the evidence. We do also solemnly believe that it is right to go to church armed, and shoot down any body that may question the decision. And all this in no Pickwickian sense, but as the approved creed of our church.

MATERIALIZATION OF SPIRITS.

This phase of manifestation has now become so common, especially in Europe, that if we should copy one-fourth of the accounts given in the various journals, there would be no space in our paper for anything else. The following brief extracts are from the Medium and Day-break, (London) of August 7th. James Sutcliffe writes of a seance at Rochdale:

We had at one seance as many as six different materializations in one night, showing great contrast in form and feature, coming up to the sitters and patting them on the head, cheek, hands; and finally "George Holt" would bring his wonderful lamp or spirit-light. It is about the size of a good big orange, and very similar in appearance to "John King's" lamp in brilliancy.

T. P. Barkas, of Newcastle on Tyne, describes at great length several seances. He says:

In about ten minutes a small figure timidly emerged from behind the screen and stood near the mantelpiece, and I saw that its extreme height was three feet nine inches. It spread out the skirts of its dress upon the floor, and then passed behind the folding door of the screen, leaving its skirt on the hearthrug. The portion of dress on the hearthrug gradually faded away. While the dress was visible I turned a pocket spectroscope upon it, but it did not give any spectrum. The figure again emerged, and this time it was carrying a very small baby. The infant did not appear to be more than fifteen inches long, and it three or four times uttered a plaintive infantile cry. Child and baby retreated behind the screen, and shortly afterwards a decrepit aged female form appeared. She tottered across the floor, and, on passing the fireplace, took up the poker, and using it as a walking stick, struck the floor with the point of the poker, as she walked across the room. She sat down upon a large arm-chair, with all the appearance and form of extreme old age.

* * * * *

The next figure that appeared was a man with a dense black bushy beard. He seemed very timid, and waved his hand as if he desired some one to approach him. I said, "Shall I come?" and he shook his head; others said, "Shall I?" and again he shook his head. He repeated the waving of the hand, and a gentleman on my extreme left said, "Shall I come?" the figure waved his hand for him to approach, he went forward, took the hand of the "psychic" form, was led by it behind the screen, and when he returned he said he had seen the medium lying in a trance upon the floor, and the masculine figure which led him was bending over her and looking at her.

Fenwick Pickup writes of a seance at his house in Newgate street, London, saying:

A clothes-horse, six feet high, was used as a screen. The medium was dressed in deep black, and lay on the floor behind the clothes-horse screen. The light used was an ordinary paraffine lamp, and there was during the whole sitting a good light in the room. Some hymns were sung, and in about fifteen minutes a female figure appeared, of middle stature; she walked round the circle, and turned round before us; she sat upon a chair and gave the company to understand that her name was Emma. After an interval of two minutes another female form appeared; this figure was unveiled, the face could be seen, and I recognized it as my mother, who entered the spirit world thirty-seven years ago. She bowed an affirmative answer when asked if she was my mother. She was asked to shake hands, but declined, and eventually before retiring she caressed me, rubbing my head and face, and finally took the hands of myself and Mrs. Pickup, who were separated by Mrs. McDermot, and afterwards retired to the cabinet, bowing to the audience as she departed. Another female figure appeared, walked round the room, and intimated that she was the mother of Mrs. E. The next figure was masculine; he had a long beard, walked to the vacant chair and sat down in it, sat for nearly five minutes, and then taking the round of the circle shook hands with all the sitters in succession.

Helen Bullock Webster writes from Florence, July 25, concerning several seances held with Mr. Home, who stopped at Florence on his way to Rome. She says:

Presently the whole table rose horizontally from the floor to a height of several inches, and then the entire floor of the immense room in this massive old palace, which is 45 metres long, and dates from the days of the Medicis, shook beneath our feet as if by an earthquake. Then hands came up on all sides from under the table-cloth, grasping our hands and arms with palpable living fingers, as real and tangible as a human hand, and this while human hands present were laid flat on the table in view of everyone by the light of the candle on the table. Some of these hands were infantine, others delicate like a woman's, others strong and massive.

Musical instruments were played by spirit hands plainly seen fingering the keys. Mrs. Webster adds:

After having at last witnessed these marvels with my own senses, the most forcible impression that remains on my mind is absolute stupefaction to know that these things are facts, that they can be and have been witnessed by numbers without end all over Europe under conditions leaving no room for question or doubt, in broad candle, or lamp, or day-light, in people's own private houses or those of their friends, by people of cultivated intelligence and belonging to the first classes of society; and that scepticism should still have a leg left to stand upon, that it can still hold its ground against such palpable and absolute evidence as that which Mr. Home's rare and wonderful mediumship affords, is to me scarcely less phenomenal than these wonders themselves. One asks oneself of what nature can be the eyes and ears and the flesh and blood of the individuals who can see eight or ten hands come out from under his own dining-cloth, with the hands of every visible individual present staring him in the face; and can feel the living pressure of the flexible human fingers clasping him, and question for a single instant what they are.

Sebastiano Fenzi, at whose villa some of Mr. Holmes' seances were given, writes to the Medium as follows:

The hand that patted my knee was rapped out as being my wife's, and when, on putting my hand under the table, I asked if I could be allowed to feel our infant child Carlino's hand, a wee hand, like a small child's, was placed in mine, which it caressed, and gave sign of farewell by pinching my little finger. This in itself is so palpable and great a phenomena that all science put together could not possibly manage to afford a more important one. And yet how strange that people should shrug their shoulders and laugh contemptuously, as if we were all mountebanks! When these our annals will be read by future generations, they will find it difficult to believe that such was actually the "credulity of incredulity" in matters of such importance, as they actually change man's destiny on earth.

Mrs. C. E. Turner, of Ames, Iowa, has been appointed to the chief management of the editorial department of Western Farm Journal.

THE DEVIL IN MILWAUKEE

Some extraordinary spiritual performances have recently occurred in Milwaukee, Wis., which are detailed at great length in the Milwaukee papers. The occurrences took place unexpectedly, and much to the annoyance of those most concerned, as much damage was done to household furniture, crockery ware, etc. The supposed medium is an ignorant Polish girl, of fourteen, who has been so often beaten and otherwise cruelly treated by her father that she has become exceedingly timid, and fearful of injury at every noise. The girl lived with the family of a Mr. Giddings. When she was in the room, but not at any other time, articles of furniture and pieces of crockery would fly about, as if thrown by an unseen hand. The occurrences were witnessed by many of the neighbors, as well as by newspaper reporters.

Mrs. Mead, one of the neighbors, says on the day the occurrences commenced, the girl, Mary Spiegel, ran into her house, saying somebody was throwing eggs at her, and that the dishes were "going every way." When she went in, she saw the broken dishes, the sausages under the stove, the exploded currant pie, the eggs, and so forth. Whilst she was looking on, the kettle on the stove turned over and spilt the water; and there was nobody near it. She sat down with Mrs. Giddings, who commenced telling her all the trouble, when the iron crook of the stove flew at her; and then the spider slid off the stove. The spider did not fall, but slid, and lighted on a dish, which it broke. Mary, all this time, was tearfully doing her work, in obedience to Mrs. Giddings' commands. This last experience was enough for Mrs. Mead, and she went home; but stood by the back door, when a heavy stick of wood came over the fence. Mary was in sight, but she was not near the wood pile, and could not have hurled the wood. She looked quite frightened, as though she wanted to run away. A sloop-pail full of water then come up over the fence, spilt some against Mrs. Mead's clothes line, dirtying the drying linen, and then went back. A large number of similar occurrences are testified to. After a few days of such doings, the girl Mary was told to go home, as Giddings had come to the conclusion she was too expensive to harbor. The girl, fearful of being whipped by her father, cried and entreated, and finally hid herself in the woodshed, where her father found her; and, by way of mending matters, he began to beat the already terrified and bewildered child. The girl then threw herself into the river, but was rescued. She said she was hunted and hounded by everybody and couldn't endure her life. She passed the night in her parents' house. The next day Mrs. Giddings sent a supply of victuals to the Spiegel family, and Mary returned with the empty dish. No sooner had she entered the kitchen, than the kettle, which had been singing peacefully, walked off the stove and smashed to bits on the floor.

A spirit, purporting to be an Indian, states through Dr. Herring, a magnetic healer of Milwaukee, that these things were done by a band of spirits working through physical mediums. There were three mediums in this case—the little Polish girl (the servant) being the chief one, used in with Mr. Giddings and another man who was then at the house. The Milwaukee Sentinel, of a later date, states that the girl has been taken into the family of a well known physician of that city, and scientific men are making investigations. The Sentinel hopes ~~for~~ some law or force of nature will soon be discovered that will account for such strange phenomena."

Such phenomena are not half as strange as the wise comments men who are otherwise intelligent sometimes make. Of course these things are in accordance with "law," as everything is that exists or occurs; and the same may be said of "some force of nature." It is a force, and an intelligent one. It is also perfectly natural. The word supernatural has no meaning in the spiritual philosophy. It is a term for something that does not exist. One of the Milwaukee wise men is represented as saying that it is undoubtedly caused by a "peculiar electrical condition of the atmosphere." This theory is ridiculed by the Indian spirit, who asks: "Whoever heard of electricity going round picking up bars of soap and throwing them at people's noses, or of lifting sloop pails over fences? Such things could never be done without being connected with some organized intelligence."

DO SPIRITUALISTS BELIEVE WHAT THEY PROFESS?—We say emphatically very few of them do. They do not seem to realize the tangibility of a spirit. Their faith, like their idea of a spirit, is vague and shadowy. Now if they really believed as they profess they do when pressed to a point, that spirits or angels can by their clairvoyance foresee coming events, they would unquestionably be governed by that belief, and make the acquisition of spiritual wealth a primary object of life, instead, as now, a secondary one. Spirits are active in urging it upon the minds of their earthly friends to not continue to heap up piles of dust, which the storms of a gathering revolution will sweep away in a day, but to give their attention to the acquisition of spiritual wealth. And yet these same Spiritualists will often ask the spirits before leaving the circle how to do to make the most money. Good business mediums are always the best patronized. They buy and they sell, they marry, eat and drink, as unconcernedly as the infidel or dark-cruised theologian. Oh for shame! Do you not believe us from spirit life when we assure you, as God lives, that you are living in the end of an age or epoch when mighty revolutions in all that pertains to human life are at your threshold?—Kingdom of Heaven.

In the cross-examination of Beecher, he was asked if Mrs Woodhull has any of his letters, and he replied: Two, I suppose, unless she has sold them. To this, Woodhull and Claplin's Weekly says:

Permit us, in turn, to ask Mr. Beecher: Did you buy them? and to add that, if he did, it is his duty to show us up; for we can truly say, with more charity for him than he appears to have for us, that all through this disgusting business we have had no personal ends to serve, and that all we have desired to expose is the truth. In return for his compliment we add that the above-mentioned slur may be excusable in a clergyman, but it would be disgraceful to a gentleman.

The Columbus (Ga.) Sun says the Columbus Iron Works have perfected machines by which they can make a superior quality of ice in quantities limited only by the capacity of the apparatus, at a cost ranging from seventy-five cents to two dollars per ton, the latter being the maximum, or one tenth of a cent per pound.

THE MANGO TREE.

He wiled me through the fuzzy croft,
He wiled me down the sandy lane,
He told me his boy's love, soft and oft,
Until I told him mine again.

We married, and we sailed the main—
A soldier, and a soldier's wife;
We marched through many a burning plain—
We sighed for many a gallant life.

But his—God kept it safe from harm;
He toiled, and dared, and earned command;
And those three stripes upon his arm
Were more to me than gold or land.

Sure, he would win some great renown;
Our lives were strong, our hearts were high;
One night the fever, struck him down;
I sat, and stared, and saw him die.

I had his children—one, two, three;
One week I had them, blithe and sound;
The next, beneath this mango tree,
By him in barrack burying-ground.

I sit beneath the mango shade;
I live my five years' life all o'er;
Round yonder stems his children played;
He mounted guard at yonder door.

'Tis I, not they, am gone and dead:
They live—they know—they feel—they see:
Their spirits light the golden shade
Beneath the giant mango tree.

All things, save me, are full of life;
The minas, pluming velvet breasts;
The monkeys, in their foolish strife;
The swooping hawks, the swinging nests;

The lizards, basking on the soil;
The butterflies, who sun their wings;
The bees about their household toil,
They live, they love, the blisful things.

Each tender, purple, mango shoot,
That folds and droops so bashful down,
It lives; it sucks some hidden root;
It rears at last a broad green crown.

It blossoms; and the children cry,
"Watch when the mango apples fall!"
It lives; but rootless, fruitless, I—
I breathe and dream; and that is all;

Thus am I dead; yet cannot die;
But still within my foolish brain
There haunts a pale-blue evening sky;
A fuzzy croft; a sandy lane.

CHARLES KINGSLEY.

SIR MARMADUKE'S MUSINGS.

BY THEODORE TILTON.

I won a noble name, But, with a sudden frown, The people snatched my crown, And in the mire trod down My lofty name. I bore a bounteous purse, And beggars by the way Then blessed me day by day, But I, grown poor as they, Have now their curse. I gained what men call friends, But now their love is hate, And I have learned too late, How mated minds unmate, And friendship ends.	I clasped a woman's breast, As if her heart I knew, Or fancied, would be true, Who proved—alas, she too!— False, like the rest. I now am all bereft— As when some tower doth fall, With battlements and wall, And gate, and bridge, and all— And nothing left. But I account it worth All pangs of fair hopes crossed— All loves and honors lost— To gain the heavens at cost Of losing earth.
---	---

So, lest I be inclined
To render ill for ill—
Henceforth in me instill,
O God, a sweet good-will
To all mankind.

PETRUCIO:

But for my bonny Kate, she must be with me.
Nay, look not big, nor stamp, nor stare, nor fret!
I will be master of what is mine own:
She is my goods, my chattels; she is my house,
My household stuff, my field, my barn,
My horse, my ox, my ass, my anything;
And here she stands, touch her whoever dare;
I'll bring an action on the proudest he
That stops my way in Padua. [Taming of the Shrew.

A GOOD PLATFORM.

The following nine propositions by Francis E. Abbot, of THE INDEX, we endorse most cordially, and they are approved by liberal minds all over the country:

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in congress, state legislatures, in the army and navy, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for any sectarian-educational-charitable institutions shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand the appointment, by the President of the United States, or by the governors of the various states, of all religious festivals or fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and all other departments of the governments shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation, under the pains and penalties of perjury, shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws, directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the constitution of the United States, and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion. That our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis and whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly and promptly made.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

[From Hull's Crucible.]

COMMON SENSE is the title of a Reform and Spiritualistic paper which reaches us from San Francisco, Cal. The paper is ably edited and well printed.

[From The Kingdom of Heaven.]

A new contemporary has arisen in San Francisco entitled COMMON SENSE, which is a live, racy, go-ahead journal.

[From the Visalia Delta.]

COMMON SENSE.—The world is so full of everything but common sense that W. N. Slocum has established a newspaper in San Francisco for the manufacture of the article. From the few numbers we have seen we notice that he is a fresh, terse and vigorous writer, backed by able and searching correspondents. It is of the liberal order of journalism, and will be found well worth the price, three dollars per annum; is printed in quarto form; on fine paper, wide columns and clean type. Send to A. T. Clark, 236 Montgomery street, San Francisco, business manager, for a sample copy.

[From "The Word" Princetown Mass.]

COMMON SENSE has at last got into journalism. Weekly, Edited by W. N. Slocum 236 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal. Well-printed, ably-edited, full of interesting matter; it is, what it claims to be, "A Journal of Live Ideas." Send for it.

From the "New Age," San Francisco, Cal.

"Common Sense—A Journal of Live Ideas." This is a new enterprise started in this city by Mr. and Mrs. Slocum. The paper is devoted to the dissemination of free thought on religious and philosophical subjects, and however diverse may be one's opinions on such subjects, there can be but one opinion as to the excellent paper presented. It is creditable editorially and typographically to all concerned, and we wish it a hearty God-speed.

Special Notices.

PERSONAL.—A few weeks since Prof. W. H. Chaney wrote me concerning the Secret Order U. O. F. P. several letters, which, by permission of the writer, were given by me to A. C. Stowe, one of the originators of the Order, and have been exhibited by Mr. Stowe to various persons in Sacramento, whereby some people have been led to believe me guilty of a breach of confidence. I therefore consider it due to myself to make this explanation, and for corroboration I refer to Professor Chaney, the writer of the letters.

W. N. SLOCUM.

For the very best Photographs go to Bradley & Bulofson's Gallery, with an elevator, 429 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

For a stylish and well finished Photograph go to Kluit's New Photographic Establishment, No. 28 Third street. All work warranted superior to any in the city.

Those suffering from that most annoying of the minor miseries of human life—a cold in the head—or from catarrh in any form, should try Dr. Ewry's Diamond Catarrh Remedy. Just try it—that's all. Sold at this office, and by all druggists.

For a short time only, P. W. Poulson, M. D. the Scandinavian Physician, and Graduate of the Homoeopathic Medical College of New York, can be found at his rooms No. 5 O'Farrell st., near the corner of Dupont and Market. His magnetic and homoeopathic treatment is very potent in removing diseases of a painful and protracted standing.

Send Austin Kent one dollar for his pamphlets on Free Love and Marriage, etc. He has been seventeen years physically helpless, confined to his bed and chair, is poor and needs the money. He sends four or five well-written essays for one dollar. His address is AUSTIN KENT, Stockholm, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., Box 44.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, NO. 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

COMMON SENSE can be purchased at the following places in this city: Patten's, 773 Market; Cooper's, 750 Market; Cheynski's, 146 Second; Snow's, 319 Kearny; Sharp's, 238 Montgomery, and at this office, 236 Montgomery street, up stairs. Price of single copies, ten cents.

COMMON SENSE.

A Journal of Live Ideas.

VOL. 1.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1874.

No. 18.

Signs of the Times.

Tribes which practise cannibalism are said to be superior mentally to surrounding tribes not cannibals.

John Stuart Mill anticipated that the publication of his essays on religion, after his death, would extinguish all the reputation he had in England.

The Boston Post says the cause of morality could not be sustained if it had to establish itself on the "ragged edge" of such a defective narrative as Beecher made in his defence.

The amended constitution recently rejected by the people of Ohio was in the main a good one, but the people were too indifferent to read it, and voted against what they did not understand. A bad sign.

The Supreme Court of California has decided that the Steamship Company must take back to China the last importation of Chinese prostitutes. The women, 22 in all, will be placed on board the next out-going steamer.

In almost any society, be it the fashionable club-house, or the blacksmith's shop, a license of speech is tolerated, where men only are present, which those same men would resent instantly, if their wives and daughters were there.

Mary Pomeroy's grave was surrounded by women who pityingly said: "Poor girl, poor girl." How many of these sympathizers would have taken the "poor girl" by the hand, and stood by her in her hour of trouble, had she lived? Very few.

Dr. Haskell was refused the use of the M. E. Church at Vancouver, for a second temperance lecture, because at his first, he, in the language of one of the Deacons, "defiled the house of God" by using a pack of cards to give an illustration of gamblers' tricks.

The Lansing Republican, the Ypsilanti Commercial, the Marshall Statesman and other influential Republican papers of Michigan, urge the endorsement, by the Republican State Convention, of the proposed amendment to the Constitution extending the ballot to women.

Three members of Glendenning's Church, Jersey City, have been arrested for threatening to have a young man named Nutter prosecuted for larceny because he would not confess himself the father of Miss Pomeroy's child, which she, on her death bed, swore was the child of Glendenning.

The Methodist Conference for this District have recommended the Annual Conference which meets on the 16th of this month, to ordain Mrs. Van Cott. As this lady has already had seven examinations, and has been seven times rejected, solely because she is a woman, it is hoped and believed that the California Conference will now set their Eastern brethren a better example.

Henry Morford has become editor of the Aldine.

In London, Mr. Bennett was recently mobbed for lecturing to women on watchmaking.

The Index says Liberal Unitarianism will yet come forward to Free Religion; but Free Religion will not go back to Unitarianism, no matter how "liberal it may be.

Miss Eliza Benton, of Coldwater, has accepted a position as instructor of mathematics and the sciences in the Pontiac Union School. Miss Benton is a graduate of Michigan University.

Rev. W. H. Buttner, pastor of St. Luke's Church, in 43d street, New York City, has been obliged to resign in consequence of "deceiving" a young lady of his church under promise of marriage.

Mrs. Ovington, at whose house Mrs. Tilton has been staying, made several efforts by letter and in person to obtain an interview with Tilton last week, but he positively refused. What her object was is not known.

The Bedford (Pa.) Gazette says that "there are in Pennsylvania 150 Post-mistresses. It has been common for many years to appoint women to that position, and they are always efficient officers. We believe no one has ever proved a defaulter to the government."

Mrs. Celia Burleigh, widely known as a speaker, and writer in the Woman's Journal, and widow of the late William H. Burleigh, the Connecticut poet, has recently gone to the City Hospital in Rochester, N. Y., probably to spend her last days, she being far advanced in consumption. She has, it is stated, neither a home nor near relatives.

Prof. Huxley has declared for Woman's co-education. While he sees no reason to believe that women are, on the average, so strong physically or intellectually as men, he does not shut his eyes to the obvious fact that many women are much better endowed in all these respects than many men.

Hull's Crucible says the Young Men's Christian Association is a pack of Protestant Jesuites, organized on purpose to kill the tree of liberty, and that unless liberals organize, they may yet be compelled to shoulder muskets and fight for the liberties the Y. M. C. A. are organized to destroy.

T. W. Higginson says: "When I was a boy in Cambridge, the afternoon of Class Day used to be a scene of brutal intoxication and license around "Liberty Tree," and no efforts of the Faculty could break up the practice until, about 1840, they bethought themselves of the very simple remedy of providing a band of music and allowing the young men to invite their sisters and friends to a dance on the green. From that moment Class Day was purified."

GOD IN THE CONSTITUTION.

THE PROGRESS OF THE MOVEMENT FOR THE AMENDMENT.

NUMBER THREE.

In my previous article I have given the form of the amendment; I will therefore proceed with its progress without comment—let every one judge for himself:

At the Xenia Convention it was decided to hold another meeting in Pittsburg the Fourth of July, the same year, to urge the matter forward. That meeting was not so well attended as the first, but the address to the people adopted at this meeting plainly foreshadowed their intention. Their pretense that God should be recognized in the Constitution in order to prevent his wrath, was rather unluckily demonstrated in the Constitution of the Southern Confederacy, which acknowledged him, yet they were beaten by people under the Godless Constitution.

The next meeting of the convention was in Alleghany, on the twenty-seventh of January, 1864, which was very earnest and determined, and at which delegates were chosen to visit Washington and lay their petition before President Lincoln, and memorialize congress. The delegation consisted of Prof. J. H. McIlvaine, D. D., Princeton, N. J.; Prof. J. T. Pressly, D. D., Pa.; Rev. J. Douglas, D. D., Pa.; Rev. D. C. Page, D. D., Pa.; John Alexander, Esq; Ohio; and five others. They met at Willard's Hotel, Washington, on Tuesday evening, the ninth of February, 1864. The Rev. Dr. Gurley, Rev. Dr. Channing, Chaplin of the U. S. Senate, J. J. Marks, D. D., Rev. B. F. Morris, Rev. R. D. Johnson, and Rev. R. N. Crow, of the District of Columbia, met with them, heard the address prepared by Dr. McIlvaine, the chairman of the committee, and gave it their hearty sanction, and most of them signed the address and waited on the President with the delegation. Through the aid of Senator Sherman, of Ohio, an arrangement was made with the President for an interview on Wednesday at half past 3. P. M., when the delegation was introduced to the President by Dr. Gurley, and the chairman made an address, commencing:

Mr. President—The object for which we have taken the liberty of trespassing a moment upon your precious time can be explained in a very few words. We are the representatives of a mass convention of Christian people, without distinction of sect or denomination, which was held in Alleghany City on the twenty-seventh and twenty-eighth of January last (1864), and we are instructed to lay before your Excellency the action of that convention.

After reading the resolutions of the convention and the memorial to Congress, embodying the proposed amendment, the address continued as follows:

We are encouraged, Mr. President, to hope that you will give the great object for which we pray, your cordial and powerful support, because you have already shown, by many significant acts of your administration, that the principle on which it rests is dear to your heart. This principle is a national responsibility to God, which you have expressly and repeatedly recognized. We remember when, under one of your predecessors, an anti-Christian power had refused to treat with the United States on account that we were a Christian nation, the objection was removed by the authoritative statement that we, as a nation, had no religion; also that several of your predecessors refused, when earnestly importuned, to appoint days of national fasting and thanksgiving for the same reason, whilst you, sir, within the space of a single year, have thrice, by solemn proclamation urged prayer for our many and grievous sins, especially our sin of forgetting God, and national thanksgiving for his unspeakable mercies. You, moreover, as no other of our chief magistrates ever did, have solemnly reminded us of the redeeming grace of our blessed Saviour, and of the authority of the Holy Scriptures over us as a people, and therefore represent them in feeling the want of a distinct and plain recognition of the Divine Authority in the Constitution of the United States, etc., etc. We believe that our civil and religious liberties, our free institutions and all our national prosperity, power and glory, are mercies and blessings derived from God to us through the channel of Christian religion. (!) * * We ask for no union of church and State—that is a thing we utterly repudiate (!) We ask for nothing inconsistent with the largest religious liberty, or the rights of conscience in any man. [We will see before finishing these articles.] We therefore do earnestly hope that you, our beloved Chief Magistrate, will not be indifferent to our prayer. * * Knowing the respect and deference with which your sage counsels are listened to by the whole people, and deeming the present time and occasion most opportune, we are persuaded if you will give this movement your favor and support, it will be successful.

The President replied as follows:

"Gentlemen, The general aspect of your movement I cordially approve. In regard to particulars I must ask time to deliberate, as the work of amending the Constitution should not be done hastily. I will carefully examine your paper in order more fully to comprehend its contents than is possible from merely hearing it read, and will take such action upon it as my responsibility to my Maker and our country demands."

It is a well established fact that Mr. Lincoln was a Liberalist, if not an avowed Spiritualist, and had he lived would not have given his support to the movement.

A FRIEND OF RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.

PLAYING DEAD.—During the noontime playspell, at one of our schools, a short time since, some little girls conceived the idea of playing dead, some one of them assuming the role of corpse, and suffered herself to be "laid out" on one of the benches, to be viewed and remarked upon according to the manner of their elders. Their teacher had laid himself out on one of the benches in the school-room, pretending to be asleep, but really enjoying the frolics of the children, when one lisping five year old discovered him, and straightway exclaimed to her mates, "O teacherth's dead!" They were all immediately interested, and began their remarks, which made him also feel interested to hear the opinions of his several pupils. They passed around him laying their little hands upon his forehead, shaking their pretty heads in all solemnity, each one making her own little remark, such as "He makes a pretty corpse;" "How his mother must feel;" "It's a pity he died so young;" "He looks natural;" etc. Then came little five year old, who, with earnest countenance and subdued voice, said: "yeth he lookth natural, but he smells bad." The fun had reached its climax; the teacher rolled off the bench in a fit of laughter, and the children ran away.—Ex.

SALVATION BY CHRIST.

ADDRESS BY J. BATTERSEY—CONCLUDED FROM PAGE 203.

The candid inquirer must be struck with the unnatural supposition of placing Christ in the attitude of an imputed criminal, expiating the world's offenses by suffering the penalty due those offenses—to be looked upon as the incarnation of a world's guilt—the great God standing afar off as an avenger of sin by destroying and putting to an ignominious death his only, pure, innocent and well beloved son. Now let it be borne in mind that the teachings we have listened to here in this hall, oblige us to accept and recognise Christ on the cross as the only reliable hope of life and salvation; and yet he is an imputed criminal, so viewed and regarded by God and his own personal consciousness. It is, perhaps, proper here to say that this theory is subversive of itself, and that the actual incidents of the crucifixion confront this theological explanation. It is like the boomerang of the Australian; let it sweep ever so far, it returns to the hand that throws it. Is it not natural that we should demur to your conclusions, when we find that Christ—the one sustaining the part of a substitute for sinners, and therefore a criminal by imputation—should be found commending himself in his dying moments to the very sovereign whom, by his substitutionary attitude, he is supposed to have wronged? How inconsistent and unsuitable is the language "Father into thy hands I commend my spirit." This, too, in the very hour of his judicial execution! Now suppose, instead of the substitute, the sinners themselves should suffer the wrath which it is said God is morally obliged to inflict on the violators of the law; can we imagine any language more improper and offensive to the majesty of God? Christ is said to have suffered what, in the sinner's experience, would have been the terrible hell punishment. If then the substitute could so commend himself to God, so too it might appear could the sinners themselves whom he was then representing, and thus we may conceive of sinners in hell commending themselves to God in the language of confiding self complacency. Such a theory, my friends, is loathsome; it gives license to man to sin on, knowing that in the judicial expiation on the cross of Christ there is an unfailing remedy for all ills. It transforms wrong into right, human wickedness into a manifestation of divine rectitude, and asserts the possibility of what the prophet so confidently challenges when he asks, "Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean thing?"

Time fails to note more in detail the inadequacy of this plan of redemption for man, yet I cannot close without advancing another objection. It is this, that the whole system is a failure, inasmuch as it is partial, and consequently unjust, being narrowed down in its saving influences to a select and a chosen few. You preach to us a bright heaven for a blessed minority, but show us a hell as fierce for innumerable millions. This simply blinds us; and whatever good may be in your plan its lustre is dimmed, the glory vanes, and many an honest hearted skeptic is led to exclaim with the imprisoned baptist, "Art thou he that should come, or do we look for another?" Christianity, you tell us, is the only reliable hope for this weary, distracted and sorrowing world. If you are verily the interpreters of it, and thus proclaim that after this brief span of life is o'er, there is nothing but unmitigated despair, the blackness of darkness for ever, and insufferable misery for all, except the faithful few of its votaries, then do we say you slam to the door of hope forever, double bar and bolt it on more than three-fourths of the human family! and yet the heart of your good shepherd is abundantly satisfied for all the travail of his soul!! Pardon me, friends, if my whole nature revolts at your one-sided gospel. I stand this day on a broader, a surer basis—on a law of love which encircles all humanity. I say deliberately that the worst thing that can befall a people is such a system or theory which you present in Christianity—paralyzing noble efforts, robbing us of the true incentives to work out our own salvation, and offering to mankind no well grounded hope for a broad and blessed reform. In opposition to this we speak of individual personal culture, of mutual duties and common responsibilities. It is admitted the evils of our religious and social states are various and vast, yet in actual life, as in mental vision, we see rising a noble spirit of discontent, a longing and working for a fairer day. The squallor, the misery and the disease, the ignorance, bigotry and superstition which lurk in every corner of Christendom, are the foes we resolve to grapple with. In this war we care not to clothe ourselves with saintly patience, but with manly heroism, self sacrificing fortitude, a brave carelessness of human judgment, and an absolute self surrender to the high and holy purpose of the complete and universal salvation of human kind.

GOD IN THE CONSTITUTION.

The following is an extract from a private letter recently written by Mrs. L. Hutchinson, of Bishop Creek, Inyo county:

What do you think will be the extent of the conflict of ideas and opinions in regard to putting God, or, as some one has it, Abraham's grandfather, into the Constitution? Don't you think the God of the Bible will be tried and impeached before the tribunal of reason and the enlightenment of the present era of investigation, and be consigned a place with the gods and divinities of Mythology, where he properly belongs? Then the bible will take its place as an ancient record of the primitive history of a portion of mankind, and its blind devotees will then begin to read and understand it for themselves, and need no other interpreter but their own enlightened minds. The worst of all slavery is mental slavery, wherein one dare not think for themselves, and must pay others to do it for them, who have less regard for truth and right than for their own profits and popularity. I think if Mrs. Woodhull succeeds in making people dare to think on any and all subjects which affect humanity for weal or woe, she will have rolled the stone of bigotry and fear from the long guarded door of the mind, and let the risen principle of love come forth and proclaim to the world the resurrection to a higher life. I shall be pleased to have you write when you can spare thought and time, as a mind like yours serves to bring to the surface the living waters of truth, of which, if we drink, it quenches the soul's thirst.

The objection to Woman's voting because her department of labor is the home, and the rearing of children, instead of being well founded, or any objection at all, is the very reason why she should have the right conferred upon her; being the mother of men, taking care of them during their infancy, childhood and early manhood makes her the educator of the germ of the nation.

[ For Common Sense.]

EFFECT OF CHURCH RULE.

BY LIGHT.

The entire family of man have a common faith in the immortality of the soul and future state of existence; and are more or less impressed with the necessity of its culture in order to insure happiness here and hereafter. This faith is as immutable and omnipresent as natural law; ingrained in our organizations; a part and parcel of the immortal being. Endowed with a sentient and ever present monitor, indicating with unerring precision every variation from the law of our being, its pleasurable or painful admonitions directing us in the paths we should follow, man seldom requires other or safer guide for his well being here and hereafter. The ceremonial appliances thrown around the simple faith by civilized man may be due to his cupidity as much as his devotion, causing him to make religion, or formal worship, a commercial article, and traffic in the soul's welfare, making it as costly as his cupidity is great, imposing a tax on the body to insure a proper destination of the spirit. And as they would have us believe it to be not only a risk against fire, but against eternal damnation, it is not surprising that cupidity and fanaticism on the one side, ignorance and fear on the other, has made this a very general and profitable business. This imposed tax on emigration, and by those who have no more authority or vested rights in the spirit land than those who are taxed, is simply a fraud before God, and a curse on mankind, and has cast its withering blight on all nationalities which have been under its influence, as evidenced in the decadence of all nations which have been under church governance.

Wherever the church has dominated we find the people sunk in ignorance, bigotry and superstition, and instead of advancing in the scale of progress they sink into premature decay. Church rule and national decadence have ever gone hand in hand, and are as inseparable as cause and effect. Look over the world and see if you can find an exception to it? Look at Italy, the mother, and then at her brood, Ireland, Spain, Portugal, Austria, Poland, Mexico, Central and South America. And France may now be included; although she has had no more papistry than infidelity, yet she has had enough to turn her in the downward scale, and if she ever attains her former prestige it will be by conquering the enemy at home.

North America, with religious toleration, has advanced rapidly in the path of progress, while Mexico, Central and South America, although possessing superior advantages in climate, soil and mineral wealth, fell into early decadence, and are now struggling in death throes under the toils of priestcraft. Our own nation may be justly proud of her prosperity and free institutions, and more so in having freed her bondsmen, yet she is being fettered by bonds more to be dreaded than those which held the bodies of the blacks—the bonds that fetter the soul as well as the body, which are so insidiously encompassing her. America can never be entirely free so long as she pays tribute to Rome.

MAGNETIC HEALING.

This system of cure, now so little understood, will in time be the chief method of treating disease; but not until the public mind can be enlightened concerning natural laws. That which has been called miracle will yet be known as the result of the action of natural law. Paul tells us it is a gift; but all persons have the power to heal some other person, while there are those who possess the power to heal the multitude. This is owing to a superior positive condition in their organization. There is also a great difference in those who practice healing. Some are magnetic or positive, others electric or negative. All diseases may be reached by the vital magnetic and electric treatment, but not on all persons by the same operator. There must be adaptation between patient and operator.

The bible tells us faith is required, but I say nay, in the sense there spoken of. It is adaptation, not faith. Patients should never sit under the manipulations of an operator whose magnetism produces nervous disquiet and a repulsive feeling. Magnetism is harmonizing, and anything that produces inharmony is injurious. The cause of disease is a lack of power in the system to harmonize and restore equilibrium of the positive and negative forces. A man or woman who practices healing should possess a goodly share of physical and mental vigor. The more fully developed, morally and physically, the better. Magnetizers should be benevolent—willing to give.

The finer the organization the more potent the power. A fine, delicate person possesses magnetism of a corresponding quality. Such person should not employ an operator who does not pay strict attention to his physiological condition. The stream is tainted by the bank through which it flows. A man who uses stimulants, tobacco, highly seasoned food, tea and coffee, cannot give spiritual magnetism. It will be gross, and therefore injurious, to a sensitive, spiritual person, though he will have power over those upon the same plane as himself.

PHYSICIAN.

BEECHER IN THE SHADE.—The whole patriarchal family, from Abraham with the Misses Hagar and Keturah, to Solomon with his seven hundred wives and three hundred concubines, Queen of Sheba and others, out-Beechered Beecher so far that his diminutive "nest hiding" is a mere drop in the licentious cesspool. And it is the fairest of inferences that these stories can have no other effect than to inculcate and encourage a repetition of such outrages by such as regard those Bible heroes as men "after God's own heart," and these accounts, as a portion of a divine record. Henry Ward has been prayerfully studying his Bible forty years, and Elizebeth for many years, too. The result is natural. If David could debauch Abigail and Bathsheba, assassinate Nabal and Uriah, then marry both widows, and have, in addition, numberless wives and concubines, and yet do naught but what was right in the sight of the Lord, Beecher logically concluded that, however much his conduct might be condemned by Infidels, it would not be without the fullest Biblical sanction, both by precept and example.—Common Sense, Texas.

[For Common Sense.]

THE IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL SCIENTIFICALLY DEMONSTRATED.

BY W. LONDON.

Materialists contend that consciousness, mind, and all the mental phenomena, are produced by the action of material forces; that the will itself is but the result of molecular changes in the brain. This assertion has never been proved, nor even been proved to be possible; and in making it a great leap into the dark has been taken from the known to the unknown. The greatest scientists, and best thinkers on this subject, have now adopted the doctrine that life is the cause, and not the consequence, of organization; that atoms, considered as minute solid bodies, from which emanate the attractive and repulsive forces, which give what we term matter its properties, could serve no purpose whatever; since it is universally admitted that the supposed atoms never touch each other, and it cannot be conceived that these homogeneous, indivisible, solid units are themselves the ultimate cause of the forces that emanate from their centres.

As, therefore, none of the properties of matter can be due to the atoms themselves, but only to the forces that emanate from the points in space indicated by the atomic centres, it is logical to conclude that they continually diminish their size till they vanish, leaving only localized centres of force to represent them. It has been demonstrated that the properties of matter may be due to such modified atoms considered as mere centres of attractive and repulsive forces—that each chemical element consists of a molecule formed of simple atoms, or material elements, in greater or less complex arrangement, which molecule is in stable equilibrium, but liable to be changed in form by the attractive or repulsive influences of differently constituted molecules, constituting the phenomena of chemical combination, and resulting in new forms of molecules of greater complexity, and more or less stability. Those organic compounds of which organized beings are built up consist, as is well known, of matter of an extreme complexity and great instability; whence results the changes of form to which it is continually subject. But this greater and greater complexity, even if carried to an infinite extent, cannot of itself have the slightest tendency to originate consciousness in such molecule, or group of molecules. If a material element, or a combination of a thousand material elements in a molecule, are unlike unconscious, it is impossible for us to believe that the mere addition of one, two, or a thousand other material elements, to form a more complex molecule, could in any way tend to produce a self-conscious existence. The things are radically distinct.

To say that consciousness, or mind, is a product or function of matter or of its molecular changes, is to use words to which we can attach no clear conception. You cannot have, in the whole, what does not exist in any of its parts; there is no escape from this dilemma. Either all matter is conscious, or consciousness is something distinct from matter; and in the latter case its presence in material forms is a proof of the existence of conscious beings outside of and independent of what we term matter.

These considerations lead us to the conclusion that matter is essentially force, and nothing but force; that matter, as popularly understood, does not exist, and is, in fact, philosophically inconceivable. When we touch matter, we really experience sensations only of resistance, implying repulsive force. Newton virtually denied the existence of matter as substance. Nothing remains but congeries of laws. If the ultimate particles of matter are mathematical points, as Newton assumed, it follows that if the particles of which the earth is composed were made to touch each other, the earth would be reduced to a mathematical point. This assumes that the laws of matter are in fact all there is of matter. It is now the conclusion of all scientists that matter, in its last analysis, is resolvable into points of force. If force or forces are all that exist in the material universe, we are next led to enquire, What is force? We are acquainted with two radically distinct kinds of force. The first consists of the primary forces of nature, such as gravitation, cohesion, repulsion, heat, electricity, etc.; the second is our own will-force.

I have already shown that will-force is not the result of molecular changes in the brain. It may be at once admitted that the muscular force of animals and men is merely the transferred energy derived from the primary forces of nature. This is in perfect accordance with all our knowledge of natural forces and natural laws. But it cannot be contended that the physiological balance sheet has ever been so accurately struck that we are entitled to say, that not one-thousandth part of a grain more of force has been exerted by any organized body, or in any part of it, than has been derived from the known primary forces of the material world. If that were so, it would absolutely negative the existence of will; for if will is anything, it is a power that directs the action of the forces stored up in the body, and it is not conceivable that this direction can take place without the exercise of some force in some part of the organism. If, therefore, we have traced our force, however minute, to an origin in our own will, it does not seem an improbable conclusion that all force may be will-force; and thus, that the whole universe is not merely dependent on, but actually is, the will of higher intelligences, or of one Supreme Intelligence.

These ideas appear to be more legitimate deductions from the facts of science than those which consist in reducing the whole universe not merely to matter, but to matter so defined as to be philosophically inconceivable. They substitute for the old and complicated theory, which leads to endless dilemmas and contradictions, the far more consistent belief that matter, as an entity, does not exist, and that force is a product of mind, and that mind is an entity, and therefore will ever exist.

Philosophy has long demonstrated our incapacity to prove the existence of matter, as usually conceived; while it admitted the demonstration to each of us of our own self-conscious, ideal existence. Science has now worked its way up to the same result, and this agreement between them should give us confidence in their combined teaching. The inductions and deductions which they now furnish, combined with a certain kind of phenomena presented by modern Spiritualism, seems to demonstrate man's immortality, or conscious existence as an entity after dissolution of his material body, as conclusively as any problem in Euclid can be demonstrated. And I have the means of knowing that many of the greatest scientists in Europe have recently come to this conclusion.

We were very sorry to see an editorial in Woodhull and Claflin's Weekly, urging people not to support papers which are less than two years old, unless they are issued by parties having capital. That was illiberal. Those having capital do not need the help others do. No paper can go down without its owners suffering more than its subscribers can, who have only from one hundred to three hundred cents invested. No, when you choose between two papers select the one you want. If its publishers are poor, there is more need that you help. Serve other papers as we did the Weekly; help them because they need it.—Crucible.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

COMMON SENSE is furnished to subscribers for Three Dollars per annum, in advance. Letters intended for the Business Department should be addressed:

A. T. CLARK, BUSINESS MANAGER, 236 Montgomery st.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

God in the Constitution .....	208
Salvation by Christ—Jas. Batterby .....	209
Effect of Church Rule—"Light" .....	210
Magnetic Healing .....	210
The Immortality of the Soul Scientifically Demonstrated .....	211
The People Are Not True to Themselves—Ed. ....	212
Jennie Leys .....	213
Colonization .....	213
Faith and Reason .....	214
Beechnuts .....	215
Woman Suffrage .....	216
Genes of Thought—Col. R. G. Ingersoll .....	217
Brief Extracts .....	217
Poetry and Special Notices .....	218

COMMON SENSE.

WILLIAM N. SLOCUM, EDITOR.

AMANDA M. SLOCUM, ASSISTANT.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, SEPT. 12, 1874.

With very little effort on the part of our present subscribers the circulation of COMMON SENSE could be doubled in a month. Will you not ask your friends to subscribe for the paper?

There is nothing that more conclusively proves the utter unfitness of the Medical Faculty of the State University, as at present composed than the ridiculous objection that they would be embarrassed by the presence of female students. A medical man who cannot forget sex in the practice of his profession is a brute, and should be excluded from the Faculty on the ground of preponderance of back brain.

H. H. SHUTE, who was a member of the first Spiritual Society organized in San Francisco twenty years ago, died at his residence in this city, on the 7th inst. He was a native of Boston, 49 years of age. His death was in consequence of a blow received on the head while returning home at night on the 4th of July, 1870. His assailant was never discovered, having approached from behind. After suffering greatly from the wound, a portion of the skull was removed by surgeons. A stroke of paralysis ensued, and during the last year Mr. Shute has been confined to his house. Death came as a welcome friend.

DASHAWAY HALL.—Last Sunday afternoon the Lyceum of Self Culture had a fine audience, and a very kind though animated discussion of the question at issue. Most of the speakers exhibited a spirit of candor and good nature truly commendable, and the auditors listened with serious attention. Next Sunday, September 13th, there will be a literary and musical entertainment for the benefit of the friends of the Lyceum. The bill of particulars is not made out as we go to press, but we have no doubt that it will be entertaining in the highest degree. All are earnestly invited to attend.

The editress of a monthly published in Oakland thinks so much of the truth that she gives it to her readers in small quantities, greatly diluted.

A. M. S.

THE PEOPLE ARE NOT TRUE TO THEMSELVES.

We have a republican form of government, in which every man is a voter. Three-fourths of all the voters of the country are poor working men. They can make the law just what they wish it to be, if they only combine and resolve to do so. And yet, here in California, we have the hugest land monopoly in the world. The quantity of land a person might own should be limited by law, yet we permit a few men to hold vast tracts, while thousands of the poor have not the means to purchase a homestead.

We permit the passage of laws which tend to make the rich richer and the poor poorer. We compel the poor to pay indirectly the taxes which should come directly from the surplus capital of the rich. We legislate for the interests of property rather than for the benefit of humanity. We have a railroad corporation that threatens to rob and dominate the whole State. We are building up aristocrats and millionaires, whose habits, manners and extravagances are a disgrace, and a danger to our liberties. We are permitting capital to degrade labor, till the poor man cannot earn bread for his children, that the capitalist may have gold fringe to his window curtains. We encourage the introduction among us of a servile class of people who can never become citizens, and who have little appreciation of and no ability to sustain our free institutions. These serfs reduce the rates of wages, degrade labor and make still harder the lot of our own poor. In consequence of these things, the sons of the working men become hoodlums, and their daughters are brought to lives of shame. Our poor men dare not marry, for they are not certain of the means of supporting a family. Our poor girls live in a state of celibacy for the same reason; or their unborn children find their way to the bay or the cess-pool. The increase of our own white race is thus retarded, and the women of China are bearing the future workers of America. The workers of California suffer these things, and yet they are voters, and could make it otherwise if they would. The power is in their hands. Will they use it? To cure these evils they should combine and vote for none but the friends of reform. Will they be true to themselves, and their own flesh and blood?

MEDIUMS' SEANCE.—At Charter Oak Hall, last Sunday evening, the house was literally packed by an eagerly interested and appreciative audience. The first hour was occupied by Mrs. Foye, through whose mediumship the ballot test was given with the usual success, convincing many who had previously been sceptical. The rappings were unusually loud and were heard to the farthest extremity of the Hall. Mesdames Hendee, Cummings, Low and Hubbard were privileged to see many apparitions of deceased persons, and described several of them with a minuteness that left no doubt of their identity.

During the month of September there will be no meeting on Sunday morning; the conference (ten-minute speeches) is held in the afternoon—free; and the mediums' seance in the evening—admission ten cents.

JENNIE LEYS.

The introductory address by this celebrated inspirational speaker was given on Sunday afternoon last, before a very large audience, and greatly to the satisfaction of nearly all in attendance. She is a delicate, refined woman, evidently of good intellectual powers and attainments, modest and graceful in manner, and a very pleasing speaker. She is at present laboring under an affection of the throat, which somewhat impairs the clearness of her voice. She spoke of the absence of love as a dominant power in the affairs of mankind, but said that the love principle is yet to be made conqueror. Injustice and oppression, cruelty and wars are to cease, and Christ is to come again, and the purity and unselfishness taught by him is to prevail. In the course of the lecture she made a number of allusions to the equal rights of women, and spoke also the existence of deity. The idea she gave of God was, however, far removed from any notion of his personality. She said God is eternally formless, eternally voiceless, without will, except as law may be called will, and without sex—the loving father and mother of man. [By “loving” we infer that as nature is perfectly adapted to all that exists, material and spiritual, she is therefore harmony, and harmony is but another name for love. Love, however, as a positive principle of nature, involves also the existence of hate, and true philosophy denies both, no matter by whom taught.]

In the evening Miss Leys spoke of the dangers that threaten the Republic by the efforts of Christians to force on the people their mode of observing the Christian Sabbath, and a recognition of other dogmas of the Christian church. She said nothing can avert bloodshed, but a combined effort on the part of the Free-thinkers to nip this threatened invasion of religious liberty in the bud.

Expecting the daily press of the city to report her lectures, we took no notes, hence this brief mention. Miss Leys is a fluent speaker, and her discourses are interesting, but it seemed to us that in her evening lecture she dwelt too long upon details. This, of course, is a matter beyond her control. Although she is perfectly aware of what she is saying, and even knows in advance of an utterance what thought is about to be given, she cannot dictate to her spirit guides what shall be said. They control her, not she them. She will speak again at the same place, 911 Market street, to-morrow afternoon and evening.

As many are anxious to pay their respects to Miss Leys personally, it may be proper to add that her rooms are at 110 Fourth street, where she will receive callers on Tuesdays and Thursdays only, between 10 A. M. and 1 P. M. She is under medical treatment, and is in such delicate health that she is obliged to seclude herself somewhat from the public. A portion of her time is taken up also with seances for materialization of spirits, a phase of mediumship for which, she has reason to hope, she will ere long be used.

COLONIZATION.

Many advantages are gained to settlers in new countries, and particularly in California, by the organization of colonies. In this way settlers secure the lowest rates of transportation, community of interest in the purchase and improvement of land, the construction of irrigating ditches, establishment of churches, schools and societies, and at the same time retain many of the old ties and friendships of their former homes. A system of colonization has already been established, and is in most successful operation. The following are the most prominent colonies: Anaheim, near Los Angeles; Westminster, near Los Angeles; Riverside, near San Bernardino; Cucamongo, near San Bernardino; Orange, near Anaheim, and San Fernando, twenty-five miles north of Los Angeles, and the Lompoc Colony, now being located in Santa Barbara county. The natural advantages of the tract of land owned by the Lompoc Colony render it a desirable place for new comers. The Santa Ynez river, over one hundred miles in length, runs through the tract from the east to the Pacific ocean. The Rio Honda rises in the southeastern corner, and empties into the Pacific ocean at its southwestern corner. There are several smaller streams, one of which, the Santa Miguelito, will furnish the town with an abundance of pure, cold water for household purposes, besides furnishing enough to run a mill, and irrigate all the gardens in the place. Very little irrigation of an artificial character is necessary on “Lompoc,” as the heavy Scotch mists from the ocean afford an abundance of moisture to insure good crops of grain, corn and tobacco. Fruits of all kinds, the grape and fig, will grow profusely.

The advantages claimed for “Lompoc” as a location for a colony are, that it is the key to a very large and rich body of land around it, and being immediately on the coast it will prove, in time, to be a prominent shipping point. The most of the land can be brought under cultivation the coming season, and large crops of wheat, oats, barley, corn, potatoes, and all kinds of vegetables, tobacco, etc., etc., can be produced, for which there is a sure market at higher prices than can be realized in the Atlantic States or Europe.

It will be divided into 5, 10, 20, 40 and 80-acre tracts, at prices ranging from $10 to $20 per acre, ten per cent. cash, 15 per cent. January 1st, 1875, and the balance 10 per cent. each succeeding January. The town lots will be 25x125, ranging from $10 to $20 each. Information can be had of Wm. H. Martin, General Agent “California Immigrant Union,” 534 California street, San Francisco, or of Mr. Hugo Nisbeth, General Foreign Agent of the “California Immigrant Union;” office of the Aftonbladt, Stockholm, Sweden; of Mr. George Grierson, Copenhagen, or of Mr. W. C. Thompson, Agent Central Pacific Railroad, 22 Moorgate street, London, E. C., England.

Those to whom this paper is sent, who are not already subscribers, are requested to allow us to add their names to our list.

FAITH AND REASON.

"Has Reason any Rights that Religion is bound to Respect?" This was announced in the papers last Sunday as the subject of the morning discourse of Rev. W. Ijams of the Green Street Congregational Church. Usually we are repelled rather than attracted by sensational church notices, but the impudence of this question was so barefaced that we were curious to see the man who would put it in the public prints. We felt that no man could treat the subject in the manner proposed without the expression of a decided opinion affirmative or negative. The form of the question inclined us to expect an orthodox sermon, extolling the saving virtue of a blind and indiscriminating credulity, and denunciatory of reason as dangerous and soul damning. We were agreeably surprised. The Rev. Ijams discoursed in a most kind and rational manner. He said Reason and faith are friends, and that when Reason leaves the side of Faith, superstition takes her place. He told his hearers that they must think; they must inquire if the book said to be the word of God is really so or not, and reason must guide them in their determination. The doubter may be pitied for his blindness, but he who believes without evidence is often even more reprehensible. The atheist who declares there is no God, has been called a fool; but he who pretends to believe in God, and clothes him with all the vile attributes of a monster, making him cruel and unforgiving, does even more than the atheist to dishonor God, and bring his worship into disgrace. There are many religions, he said, demanding our attention, and promising salvation as the reward of faith and obedience. Some of them are commended to our judgment as based upon sound practical sense, while others fail to stand the test of reason. The Roman Catholic proclaims itself infallible, and demands implicit submission. We have only our reason to enable us to select between the true and the false, and if we are to lay it aside, we might as well throw ourselves at the feet of the Pope, his abject slaves. Religion is nothing but the recognition of God and an earnest effort to do his will. He said God had given us two revelations, his written word and the great book of nature. They must be consistent with each other. There can be no conflict in God's truth. To say that there is, is to impeach the wisdom of the Almighty. If there is a quarrel between any man's faith and his reason, he may be sure his reason is wrong, or his faith is false. Reason is to enable us to ascertain if we have any special revelation from God, and to weigh the claims of all churches and all creeds. The Bible, he said, is both divine and human. The truth in it is God's truth, but man has expressed it in his own way, and it is the office of reason to interpret. So of the Koran, the Zend Avesta, the Shaste and even the Book of Mormon. None are to be accepted without examination. Reason is the gift of God; it is itself divine, the guiding star of life. Success in life, he said, does not consist in making money, but in making the most we can of ourselves. There is no such thing as a "successful villian," though there are villians who succeed in accumulating money. He only is successful who succeeds in becoming good and true and wise, charitable, loving and sincere, and who leaves the world better than he found it. He who elevates himself and assists others to become better and happier is the truly successful man. Reason teaches us that a true life and true happiness go together. Destiny follows character, and character is built up, little by little, the result of all the acts and all the thoughts of our daily lives. Let us seek to harmonize our lives with the infinite life of God.

It has not often been our privilege to hear such sensible views from an orthodox pulpit, and we congratulate the little congregation in the Green Street Church that they have the privilege of listening to such wholesome doctrine. If they do not become rational religionists it is not their preacher's fault. He points the way, and they need only the courage and good sense to follow.

MRS. VAN COTT is among us again. She has lately been in attendance at a camp meeting near San Lorenzo, and of course succeeded in making converts—i. e. psychologysing people, as she always does. She is a woman of ability and of "infinite tact." She frequently gives a broad hint under cover of an apparent illustration, like this: Wishing to let her hearers know that she is ready to receive gifts for the cause of the Lord, she says they must accept Christ without question, just as she accepts packages from friends without inquiring the contents. On one occasion it is a $50 bill she finds inclosed, and at another time a bright double eagle; but it is always something that pays. It is estimated that she took away over $1200 after her former brief visit to this State. What harvest she will reap this time is as yet a problem, but there is no doubt it will be a good one. Mrs. Van Cott knows on which side her bread is buttered. She is just as much a Spiritualist as any of us, but she knows that folks pay when they fancy they are kept out of hell, and do not pay when they are taught to believe that there is no forgiveness of sin—that they must suffer for their wrong-doing.

A WORD TO CORRESPONDENTS.—Our Business Manager several weeks since received a letter from Dr. Snell, of San Jose, which, on account of its brevity and point, the editor thought best to publish, and Dr. Snell was written to for permission. In reply came a request that the letter be returned for revision. This was done, and in a few days back came a document covering three foolscap pages; but not an additional idea. The Doctor had prepared it for publication, just as he wanted it, and under the circumstances the editor did not feel at liberty to erase any portion, nor did he feel disposed to publish three pages of words to obtain one page of ideas. This is a common fault of writers for the press, and it is a fatal one. The Doctor now complains that his letter has not been published, and we give this explanation publicly that other correspondents as well as himself may take a hint from it. Be brief and to the point; say what you have to say in the fewest words possible, and stop.

BEECHNUTS.

Professor Raymond says Beecher is a prophet of the Almighty, and that those who accuse him are striking against the throne of God!

Alas for poor Joseph! His temptation, though great, was nothing in comparison with those of the modern preacher, while his "virtue" is eclipsed entirely by the immaculate purity of Henry Ward.

The Christian Union says that from the beginning of the Beecher-Tilton trouble Beecher has received large numbers of sympathizing letters, and recently as many as sixty or seventy per day. They are from members of all Christian denominations.

During the experience through which Mr. Beecher has recently passed, we have been repeatedly assured of his cheerfulness, vivacity, playfulness and wit. Is this levity a sign of innocence, or does it prove his power of appearing cheerful and unconcerned while uneasily "sitting on the sharp and ragged edge of remorse and despair?"

No longer ago than July, 1874, Mr. Beecher threw his arms around Moulton's neck in the street, and said to another gentleman with him: "This is the truest friend heaven ever made." Soon after that he charged this "truest friend" with blackmail committed more than a year previous.

On the thirty-first of December, 1870, Frank Moulton extorted from H. W. Beecher, at the muzzle of a pistol, Mrs. Tilton's recantation, and on the seventh of February, 1871, Mr. Beecher addressed Moulton as his dear friend, saying: "Many friends has God raised up to me, but to no one of them has he ever given the opportunity and the wisdom so to serve me as you have."

Beecher, in a letter to Moulton, in 1871; says: "Would to God, who orders all hearts, that by your kind meditation, Theodore, Elizabeth and I could be made friends again. Theodore will have the hardest task in such a case; but has he not proved himself capable of the noblest things? I wonder if Elizabeth knows how generously he has carried himself towards me." In his defense Beecher says of Tilton: "For four years I have been trying to feed his insatiable egotism—to make the man as great as he conceived himself to be," etc.

The most disgusting picture of moral cowardice, ingratitude and base falsehood on record is Mr. Beecher's explanation of the Tilton scandal, in which he attempts to destroy the character of his "truest friend." That the man can sleep after such an act of baseness proves him without conscience. His original crime pales into insignificance in comparison with his unparalleled treatment of a friend who was true to him even after he was false to himself, and who tried to shield him to the very last.

In Plymouth Church lecture-room, on the evening of December 27th, 1872, Mr. Beecher said: "I am in the habit of seeing with the eyes of my imagination, and not by especial revelation, Christ living and going about in heaven as he did on earth, manifesting the same tenderness, sympathy, love and special attachment to his earthly friends. See how familiar he was, and lived with Mary and Martha! How Mary loved Christ, and he permitted her to do so." Now let the reader substitute, instead of Christ and Mary, Beecher and Elizabeth, and we have the whole thing in a nutshell.

THE BEECHER CASE.

Look at the case as it now stands, and it seems as if Plymouth Church en masse, and the great portion of all the moral teachers of New York, were incapable of appreciating the enormity of the crime charged upon Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Tilton. Look at the names connected with the miserable affair; at the men and women who have been covering up this crime, or trying to uncover it, by falsehoods, prevarications, indirections and contemptible subterfuges. How little of candor, of honesty, or truth, or fair dealing, appears upon the record! How it is blotted by breaches of confidence and double dealing on the part of persons we have delighted to honor, and how humiliating the whole abominable mess to those who recognize the common origin of the race! Yet it all grows directly out of the mistake which makes Christ himself the apologist for crime.

For one thing I am devoutly thankful, viz: That the woman who has caused this commotion was not "strong minded." She is, on the contrary, a model woman—small, beautiful, domestic, affectionate, pious—one of those amiable women who give their bodies into the keeping of male physicians, and their souls into that of male priests, and implicitly follow their directions. That a woman of this class should have effectually fascinated two of the leading men of the age, and plunged them into the abyss of ruin, is a sad comment on such a life, and ought to teach the importance of teaching all women to reason as well as to pray, to doubt as well as to believe. It is the strongest argument of the century against making the life of any woman to consist of emotion and devotion, of affection and subjection, of prettiness and pettiness, of love and lack of self.

Lamoille, Ill.

JAIN GREY SWISSELM.

"THE HOLY FAMILY."—Jesus of Nazareth was the illegitimate son of Joseph and Mary. [see John 1st chap. 45th verse]. How many "slips" occurred between the time of Joseph and his worthy ancestor Solomon the record does not show, but the "Holy Scriptures" relate the particulars which prove that Solomon was the son of David by Bathsheba, who was debauched by David while she was the wife of Uriah; and that David was the son of Obed, who was the result of the free-love affair between Boaz and Ruth—and that Boaz was the son of Rahab the harlot—the result of her illegitimate connexion with Salmon, who was the offspring of Phares, who was himself the result of the criminal intimacy between Judah and his daughter-in-law Tamar.

The church has been, and still is, the great robber. She has rifled not only the pockets but the brains of the world. She is the stone at the sepulchre of liberty; the upas tree in whose shade the intellect of man has withered, the Gorgon beneath whose gaze the human heart has turned to stone.

Frank B. Crane, of the old Briggs orchard, Marysville, recently forwarded a car of pears to Chicago by the express train. The freight on a car to Chicago is $900.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

A special meeting of the California State Woman Suffrage Association was held at Dr. Smith's Hall, on California street, on Tuesday last, for the purpose of amending the Constitution. Mrs. Sarah Wallis, President of the Association, presided. Mrs. Wilson acted as Secretary.

Article 4 was amended so as to provide for eleven members in the Board of Directors, instead of nine, and making the President of the Association one of the Board. The resignation of Sallie Hart was accepted, and Mrs. Irving, of San Rafael, and Mrs. Calhoun, of Berkley, were elected. The meeting adjourned until next Tuesday afternoon, and it having been ascertained that the Code requires the keeping of a separate book, to be called the Book of By-Laws, in which all amendments must be written and certified before they become valid, the election of the two members will probably be reaffirmed by another vote, in order to make it legal.

During the session on Tuesday the Secretary read a letter from Miss Susan B. Anthony, as follows:

ROCHESTER, August 24, 1874.

MY DEAR MRS. WALLIS: Thanks for your good note. No other woman on the continent has sold so many copies of my Trial as yourself. The twenty copies I now mail to you makes sixty in all, do they not?

It was a good meeting you had at your re-union, I judge from the newspaper reports as well as your own letter. I was very sorry I failed to get my word of greeting mailed in time to reach the meeting. I am rejoiced that so nearly all of the early workers on the Pacific Coast are now coming together and planning for earnest work. I wish the friends on the Atlantic Coast would follow your good example.

The kind of work that is now most needed is school district canvassing by earnest, true women, possessed of common sense—a very rare possession in these days—who should lecture in the school houses, visit the families, and leave with them tracts and pamphlets; get signatures to petitions to Congress and State Legislatures for protection for women in their citizens' right to vote. I wish we could pour into Congress a million signatures for woman suffrage; but our people are tired and disgusted with petitioning.

I am satisfied that the best individual work for each and every woman is to regularly present herself at the ballot box at each election and demand that she be allowed to vote. If all the women in each town and city, each voting precinct, would thus persistently make their demand to vote every year, it would do more to break down the objection that "Women don't want to vote" than all the talking we can do.

And another individual work is for each property-holding woman to refuse to pay the taxes assessed upon her—compel the officers to collect by legal process every time. If women would but do these two practical things, in their own quiet way, it would keep up the rubadub of agitation in every town of every State in the Nation. Hence, I say, to the women of the Pacific Coast! 1st, vote, or try to, at every election—and 2d, resist taxation.

I wish your society would circulate a petition to Congress to protect women citizens in their right to vote, as they now do negro citizens.

We shall hold our National Convention at Washington the 2d week in January next, as usual. I hope California will be represented. If you cannot send a delegate, send a letter reporting your work with the Legislature, etc., and appoint Mrs. Sargent to represent you—she is a most noble woman.

Give my best love to Mrs. Schenck, Mrs. Gordon, Mrs. Watson, Mrs. Knox—well, I cannot name all—but to one and all I send greeting. Sincerely yours,

SUSAN B. ANTHONY.

The Secretary also received a letter from C. C. Stephens, of San Jose, to the President of the Association. The following is an extract:

"Woman suffrage will never come till the women en masse demand it. As yet most of them are inert upon this question. They must be awakened. If they think, they will feel, and if they think and feel they will demand—then the victory is won. Therefore I pray you that whatever else you do, also do this: Devise ways and means to set in motion upon this question the brain and heart of the average woman. Other agencies may help, but this is the way; this will open the door."

The American Woman Suffrage Association will hold its sixth annual meeting for the election of officers and the transaction of business, in Detroit, Tuesday and Wednesday, October 13th and 14th. Julia Ward Howe, the President, in her official announcement of the meeting, says:

"Our Government is Republican only in name. In every town, in every ward we are controlled by cliques of trading politicians through the machinery of parties. Our nominations are made in caucus by less than five per cent. of our voters and are ratified at the polls by less than one-fourth of our adult citizens. A real political reform must enlist all the virtue, intelligence and patriotism of the nation in a struggle against vice, and ignorance, and selfishness. The whole American people must become interested in political questions. In Impartial Suffrage irrespective of Sex, lies the only salvation of American liberty. Come, then, friends of Equal Rights, to our Annual Convention! Help establish Impartial Suffrage, and thus check the despotism of monopolies, restore the supremacy of morals in public and private life, and redeem the future of the great American Republic."

TWO ELOQUENT ADDRESSES.—The admirers of oratory in this city are glad that Hon. Thomas Fitch, one of the most eloquent speakers in America, has again taken up his residence in San Francisco. He addressed a large audience in Dashaway Hall a week ago Sunday, giving the impressions made upon his mind by a trip to Europe. It was a delightful discourse. Last Sunday evening he spoke before the Father Mathew Society, in Hibernia Hall, on our treatment of Indians, taking the ground (the only sensible view of the case) that this land is the home of civilization, and that all men of whatever color or race should be equal before the law, entitled to like privileges and subject to like restrictions. The Indian should be allowed to earn his own living by the sweat of his brow, peaceably so long as he behaves himself; but he should not be permitted to use vast tracts of the public domain, murdering and plundering all who come within reach of his broad dominions.

The assumption of Protestants is that the bible is infallible instead of the Pope.

GEMS OF THOUGHT.

FROM A LECTURE BY R. G. INGERSOLL.

Universal obedience is universal stagnation; disobedience is one of the conditions of progress.

Every pulpit is a pillory in which stands a hired culprit, defending the justice of his own imprisonment.

The poorest bargain that a human being can make is to trade off his individuality for what is called respectability.

No man ever attempted to reform a church without being cast out and hunted down by the hounds of hypocrisy.

Suppose the church had had absolute control of the human mind, at any time, would not the words liberty and progress have been blotted from human speech?

Mental slavery is mental death and every man who has given up his intellectual freedom is the living coffin of his dead soul. In this sense every church is a cemetery and every creed an epitaph.

How many grand thinkers have died with the mailed hand of superstition on their lips? How many splendid ideas have perished in the cradle of the brain, strangled in the poison coils of that Python, the church!

Who can appreciate the infinite impudence of one man assuming to think for others? Who can imagine the impudence of a church that threatens to inflict eternal punishment upon those who honestly reject its claims and scorn its pretensions?

Suppression of honest inquiry is retrogression, and must end in intellectual night. The tendency of Orthodox religion to-day is toward mental slavery and barbarism. Not one of the Orthodox ministers dare preach what he thinks if he knows that a majority of his congregation think otherwise.

On every hand are the enemies of individuality and mental freedom. Custom meets us at the cradle, and leaves us only at the tomb. Our first questions are answered by ignorance, and our last by superstition. We are pushed and dragged by countless hands along the beaten track, and our entire training can be summed up in the word "suppression."

No two persons are alike in the whole world? No two trees, no two leaves, no two anything are alike? Infinite diversity is the law. Religion tries to force all minds into one mould. Knowing that all cannot believe, the church endeavors to make all say that they believe. She longs for the unity of hypocrisy, and detests the splendid diversity of individuality and freedom.

Reason has been denounced by all Christendom as the only unsafe guide. The church has left nothing undone to prevent man following the logic of his brain. The plainest facts have been covered with the mantle of mystery. The grossest absurdities have been declared to be self-evident facts. The order of nature, has been as it were, reversed, in order that the hypocritical few might govern the honest many.

The church demands worship, the very thing that man should give to no being human, or divine. To worship another is to degrade yourself. Worship is awe and dread and vague fear and blind hope. It is the spirit of worship that elevates the one and degrades the many; that builds palaces for robbers, erects monuments to crime, and forges manacles even for its own hands. The spirit of worship is the spirit of tyranny. The intellect has no knees, and whatever the attitude of the body may be, the brave soul is always found erect. Whoever worships, abdicates. Whoever believes at the command of power tramples his own individuality beneath his feet, and voluntarily robs himself of all that renders man superior to brute.

BRIEF EXTRACTS.

The growth of cities is due to the number and variety of their industries.

A great many children get on the wrong track because the switch is misplaced.

Might does not make right. If but one woman wanted to vote, she ought to, because it is her right.

Give Woman the ballot for the future good of the race. Then we shall have a nobler manhood and womanhood.

Upon men of small understanding nothing makes so deep an impression as what they do not understand.

The pencil mill at Castleton, which has been idle for three or four years, is now being put in running order, and will soon be turning out 50,000 pencils a day.

Woman's work as mother, in the past has been to give to the nation sons and daughters for the men of the nation to destroy by intoxicating drinks, by prostitution and by wars.

According to the census, there are only two men in America who made a specialty of the manufacture of hand-organs. Just think how easy it would be to kill those two men, and yet they still live!—[N. Y. World.]

The community abounds in cases of arrested development, which the divine sets down to depravity, which the sentimentalist accounts for by wickedness, but which thoughtful persons ascribe to immaturity.—Frothingham.

The wise man changes his mind; the ignorant will not. The former will acknowledge his error and correct it; but the pertinacity with which the latter adheres to his opinion always bears a just proportion to his ignorance.

If Woman conducted her department of labor with the same disregard of ends and effects that man conducts the National household, his department of labor, woman would be justly charged with being a set of lunatics.

Francis E. Abbot, in the Index, says: "We object above all things to talking about a person instead of a principle, a man instead of an idea. The Christian name means always and everywhere this Christian thing; and we disown the name simply because it means the thing."

We long to see the day when preachers of false dogmas will become teachers of science, and when temples and churches erected to an unknown God, where forms and ceremonies are vainly performed, shall be converted into institutions of truth and schools of science.—Truth Seeker.

Who at the present day can imagine the courage, the devotion to principle, the intellectual and moral grandeur it once required to be an Infidel, to brave the church, her racks, her fagots, her dungeons, her tongues of fire—to defy and scorn her heaven and her devil and her God? They were the noblest sons of earth. They were the real saviors of our race, the destroyers of superstition and the creators of science. They were the real Titans who bared their grand foreheads to all the thunderbolts of all the gods.

The home is the nursery of the nation, the ante-room of the Republic, the government in miniature, and she who has charge of this ante-room, this germ, should have the power to make the laws of the land in the interest of her department of labor, that she may give to the nation men of well balanced minds, that here, where the foundation of the nation's greatness is to be laid, or its early decay ensured, she, who has the greatest interest in its prosperity, should have the power to make this home just what its interests demand!

[For Common Sense.]

HAVE FAITH IN GOD AND MAN.

Thou, tempest toss'd upon the billowy deep
Of human passions, in thy wild unrest,
E'er on the compass Faith thy vision keep,
'Twill guide thee safely on tho' sorely press'd.
Have faith in God and man.

Thou lonely one, deceived in friendship, love,
Folding their ashes to thy sadder heart,
Believe not all are false, and thou shalt prove Far dearer ties, of thy own life a part.
Have faith in God and man.

Thou, toiler of the gifts that Fortune brings,
Tho' disappointed, bow not in the dust,
They who look down ne'er see her golden wing,
Nor ruin the treasure that she yields to trust!
Have faith in God and man.

Thou that hast sought to scale the dazzling height
Of great ambition, and become a mark
For cruel sportsman in thy lofty flight—
Review thy spirit with a livelier spark
Of faith in God and Man.

For faith doth draw from soul life for the power
That may achieve all possible in that
Of high attainment, thro' time's fleeting hour—
Before its might opposing force is naught.
Have faith in God and man.

If thou have faith 'twill gladden thee alway;
Like honey-bees, less affluent souls will come
To gather sweets for many a wintry day—
And they will bless thee in thy brighter home
Of faith in God and man.

Weak, doubting minds e'er feed on meagre fare;
Their lives are barren from the dawn till even;
But souls of faith in all things richly share,
All bounties of the earth, and all of heaven.
Have faith in God and man.

San Francisco, August, '74.

WHY IS THE SPIRIT WORLD INVISIBLE?

BY THE SPIRIT GUIDE OF CORA L. V. TAPPAN.

The eye of man, fashion'd by thought
Expresses in its highest form the life
That is intended for God's perfect plan,
To guide mankind upon the earth aright;
But only forms made visible by line, shape, and light
Come within range of outward human sight.
The air you breathe, the force of winds and waves,
Moved on by subtle purpose, th' breath that laves
Your being, and the touch of vibrant sound,
Alike cannot be seen; that which around,
Above, beneath most moves you, namely, thought,
Cannot by any magic power be brought
Within the range of vision; shall that world,
Finer than substances of which the air is made,
More subtle than the lightning's breath ere 'tis unfurled
With fiery power—that life that doth prelude,
That which makes pale death glorious, sublime, and free
Be prison'd in the dull and narrow masonry
Of human vision? 'tis the realm of mind;
Its substances are of such things as thoughts are made,
With vibrant wings of thought you mount through space,
And find that you—bodily—remain apace,
Gazing after the thought, mentally blind.
There are those who from infancy have gift
Of spiritual vision; to uplift
The eye beyond the grosser sense of time and space,
And gaze awhile where angels in their place
Perform their holy deeds and live their lives.
This power of vision all things else survives;
But 'tis impalpable to outward ken,
And all the grovelling thoughts of toiling men
Would mar the glorious fabric there upreared.
There are eyes that have seen, ears that have heard
The glorious beauties of that higher day;
But they cannot be captured in the ray
Of man's material vision. Other sense
And other thought awhile the recompense
Must take, and human beings must be brought
To higher range of vision, with life fraught.
When the veil falls—the mist that you call death—
When life is but a chain of living breath,
Outwrought from earth to heaven—lo! the eyes
Now blinded shall be opened with surprise,
And shall behold the higher, brighter day;
The light obscured shall gleam with rarest ray,
Not on the outward sight; its blest control
Shall light the glorious vision of the soul.

[For Common Sense.]

THE DIVINITY THAT SHAPES OUR ENDS.

BY LAKE.

The earth is red with marks of stern authority,
Legions of soldiers muster on its soil,
Waiting the word for blood and desolation.
The sentry walks the night with cautious tread,
Or peers into the gloom for hidden treason.
Mid-day beholds the serried legions step
To martial music, with bright burnished arms.
In every land proud battlements are raised,
With banners decorate, in thunder clothed,
To overawe and dominate mankind.
The sea is dotted o'er with warlike ships,
Defensive as the mountains, and with power,
That mocks the rage and anger of the gods.
On every hand the fate of men and nations
Seems edged about with rule inexorable.
Kings sit in state and say: "The world is ours;
We give direction, we exalt, depress,
Make war or peace, open to man
The avenues of light, or bind in chains
The present and the future at our will."
William, Victoria, Francis, Alexander,
Complacently as though 'twere God that spoke,
Say, "Let us meet and guarantee the world
Perpetual peace! Who shall withstand the fiat?
If we say peace who dares to draw the sword?"
Or thus, "Who shall obstruct our high decree?
We point the way, and nations tread the path,
Obedient and precise in every step."

Alas! alas! "They know not what they do!"
Within some meagre cell to-night, perchance,
A student of the natural rights of man
Burning in penury the midnight oil,
Evolves a truth, a new and beauteous truth,
Whose alchemy shall turn to dryest ashes
All kingly power, sink every warlike ship,
Raze every battlement, silence every gun,
Dissolve in air millions of men in arms,
And give new life and new direction
To every energy of our protean race—
Kings rule the world no more.
Knowledge is master. With its subtle voice
It whispers to the cottager: "Be man!"
It bids the church throw off hypocrisy,
And leaving kings to serve the public good
Within the serried lines on which rely
The masters of the world, its still small voice
Is passed from man to man, "You are free!"
The bayonet falls, the glittering banners droop,
The guns untouched are dead and motionless.
The battlements are crumbled into ruins;
And the king, neglected and alone,
Is but the mockery of his former state.
Such is the magic power of coming thought.

Special Notices.

For the very best Photographs go to Bradley & Rulofson's Gallery, with an elevator, 429 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Those suffering from that most annoying of the minor miseries of human life—a cold in the head—or from catarrh in any form, should try Dr. Evory's Diamond Catarrh Remedy. Just try it—that's all. Sold at this office, and by all druggists.

Send Austin Kent one dollar for his pamphlets on Free Love and Marriage, &c. He has been seventeen years physically helpless, confined to his bed and chair, is poor and needs the money. He sends four or five well-written essays for one dollar. His address is AUSTIN KENT, Stockholm, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., Box 44.

Dr. Bancroft's treatment for Dyspepsia and General Debility has benefited me more than all the medicine I have used for many years.

O. A. BRONSON, 519 Sycamore street, Milwaukee.

Dr. Bancroft's office is 204 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, NO. 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

COMMON SENSE can be purchased at the following places in this city: Patten's, 773 Market; Cooper's, 760 Market; Choyinski's, 146 Second; Snow's, 319 Kearny; Sharp's, 236 Montgomery, and at this office, 236 Montgomery street, up stairs. Price of single copies, ten cents.

COMMON SENSE.

A Journal of Live Ideas.

VOL. 1.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1874.

No. 19.

Signs of the Times.

Fall River, Mass., has more looms and spindles than Eowell, Lawrence and Manchester combined. It has forty-five immense mills, built of solid granite.

The Supreme Court of Illinois has forbidden public school directors to discriminate between white and black children by building separate schoolhouses for each class.

Jane M. Slocum, of the Michigan Law School, says it takes no prophet to foresee that the law of Coverture must, ere long, cease to exist as a part of our system of jurisprudence.

The Fort Wayne artesian well is to be sunk 500 feet deeper. That will make it 2500 feet in depth. The well is said to discharge gas to such an extent that people in the vicinity complain of it as a nuisance.

The great abuse is the usurpation, permitted and increasing, of political power by the Church. The great duty of radicals is to abolish this dangerous abuse from constitution, statute and administration.

In New York in 1827 there were about fifty benevolent societies, with an aggregate revenue of $500,000. There are now more than three hundred of these societies, whose receipts foot up nearly $10,000,000 a year.

Another secret circular has been issued, addressed to the Christian Alliance of the Pacific Coast. These fellows are at work, desperately, and ere long so called Liberals will wake up to the fact that they are in the power of the enemy.

The Government loans to the National Banks over three hundred and fifty millions of dollars without interest! and allows the Banks interest on the securities deposited for the loan!! Send no one to Congress who approves of this injustice.

If sworn statements, like Tilton's against Beecher, had been made concerning any Spiritualist Reformer, would the press have defended the accused on the ground that the charges were not proved? No; as Jamieson says: "Henry Ward Beecher is a living illustration of the powerful and dangerous influence of the clergy over the people."

Mr. Beecher, in his examination before the Committee stated that he had for years been in great danger of sudden death; but it has recently been ascertained that during the time referred to he secured several insurances on his life, to procure which he was obliged to affirm that he was in good health, and knew of nothing likely to shorten his life! Which statement is true?

Bayard Taylor is writing "All about Iceland," and the book is to be ready in time for Christmas reading.

Delaware has 25,000 adults who cannot read, and a large number of whipping posts to preserve order.

There are now in the United States upwards of fifty societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals.

Father Hyacinth does not want to form a new church, but to reform the old one. It is a hopeless task.

The contending factions in Louisiana have come to bloodshed, and fifty persons at last accounts, had been slaughtered.

Isaac Adams, inventor of a printing press, has planted an extensive forest in New Hampshire. Fourteen houses and a mill are inclosed within his wilderness.

One of the good results that will spring from the admission of woman to the study and practice of law will be the examination and reform of the laws affecting the marriage relation.

The Brahma Somaj, the reform religion of India, is said to be rapidly gaining converts. Its followers welcome truth from whatever source it may come. They believe in the brotherhood of men, and are the earnest advocates of moral and social reform.

The New National Era, of which Frederick Douglass is editor, recommends the colored people to remove from those States in the South in which they are in a minority to those in which they have a preponderance, and thus protect themselves from outrage. He thinks South Carolina, Florida, Mississippi and Louisiana are States which they may, by concentration, permanently control.

The Index says: "The radicals have this great point of transcendent importance to carry: the deliverance of the Republic from the desperate, tenacious, and tightening clutches of the Church. To secure this point, they ought to organize at once for discussion, for agitation, for determined action. When their eyes are opened, as they certainly will be by the course of events in the not distant future, they will doubtless be prompt to act; but if they would only learn wisdom from the war, they would act to-day."

The time has gone forever when the sexual subject can be shut out from public discussion. The press and the churches have tabooed it; but such affairs as the Beecher Tilton scandal break down all barriers to free discussion and it becomes the talk of the world. We never shall have a clean world, nor a manly, truthful press, till the sexual subject and relations are opened to free discussion and dignity of thought. How shall men and women love, and how shall they breed immortal beings, are questions of infinitely more importance than politics or the state of the money market.—Oncida Circular.

[For Common Sense.]

PATER MUNDI.

BY J. W. MACKIE.

A book bearing the title Pater Mundi, or Modern Science Testifying to the Heavenly Father, by the Rev. E. F. Burr, D. D., "being in substance lectures delivered to senior classes in Amherst college," has been kindly loaned me by the Rev. A. M. Bailey, which he hopes may be instrumental in bringing me to a "knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus," as it had been in the case of George Beal who, in consequence of reading Pater Mundi, left the pernicious doctrines of Infidels and Spiritualists after he, like Bunyan's "Weary-of-the-world," had been disappointed in worldly matters.

The book is worth reading as a master piece in rhetorical art. It is worth reading as showing the best that can be said for theism and theology. It is worth reading if only to admire the ingenuity displayed in drafting science into the service of theology. It is written for the benefit of "weak believers and unbelievers." Probably he means believers and weak unbelievers. There are two methods of finding out God, "who is past finding out," in this book, the experimental and the argumentative. Of the experimental he has the least to say, but what he says is direct and positive, and surely not difficult in application. What we know scientifically has been revealed principally by experiment; and if we can experiment on God there is at least a possibility of knowing something about him scientifically. We can venture upon this trial assured by a D. D. that though "it looks, perhaps, like irreverence and audacity and desecration," yet "there are direct practical trials of God and scripture which we can make for the benefit of faith, which are no setting up of our own wisdom, no presumptuous dictations to him who may prove to be the Most High," etc. He appeals to the promises of God, that liberality shall be met by liberality; which is neither a very certain nor satisfactory experiment. It, if successful, would neither test God nor the scripture, though it may be an excellent supplement to the text, "God loveth a cheerful giver"—to the church. But there is an experiment the application of which he challenges. He says:

"Again, it is written that if we pray for the Holy Spirit, and religious blessings in general, with sincerity and earnestness, they shall without fail be given. For blessings of this sort the language is, 'Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you, for every one that asketh receiveth, and he that seeketh findeth, and to him that knocketh it shall be opened.' Now, unbeliever or weak believer, make an experiment. Perseveringly put your heart into prayer for these blessings, and see whether they do not come. So will you put the alleged revelation to a practical test, and, as it were, bring the reality of its God and of its inspiration within reach of the senses."

Is it not something approaching a joke to ask an unbeliever to pray, when his prayer "is an abomination to the Lord," when faith is the only open sesame to the favor of God? As well ask us to fly in order to have wings, as ask us to believe in order to have evidence. Such believing requires no evidence. What was the reply to Prof. Tyndall when he proposed a practical experiment quite in accordance with promises as plainly made! A thousand lashes from a thousand pulpits scourged his metaphorical back, and but for the blessings of infidelity and science his literal back would have suffered. He would have learned that it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the—priests of the—living God. The experimental method is exclusively the property of the believer, and we outsiders can only watch the result of Christian experiment. Beyond the possession of pretentious cant and religious slang, who can tell the difference between believers and unbelievers?

The rest of the book is devoted to the argumentative method. After showing to the tender conscience of those who have reached God by other methods than logic, and "have a strong feeling against any logical religion," that there is no harm in it, and that it may be instrumental in, not convincing by argument, but in putting the yretched Infidel off his guard, in certain opportune and critical moments, certain Thermopylæ passages in his life, when conscience and Providence have spurred up the mind to some measure of candid thoughtfulness; and occasionally at such times the religious logic succeeds in getting such a firm hold of the roots of unbelief as enables it to dislodge the evil upas finally from the mind," he proceeds with his argument. His argument consists mainly in answering certain objections, such as the moral and physical disorders in the world, the obscurity of God, and the sufficiency of Nature. No intelligent Atheist would object to his conclusion that the first objection is applicable to the character rather than the existence of God; though nobody desires to know of the existence of an infinite devil. As to the obscurity of God I do not see that he is less obscure after reading Pater Mundi. And in this it is plain that the book was not written for the unbeliever. It would answer as well for any myth which may be conjured up and believed in throughout the whole range of mythology. What steps can we take to prove there are or are not men in the moon? If a D. D. should assert the existence of a satyr and show that there existed no scientific objections to his existence, would that prove his existence? One of the difficulties with which the Atheist has to contend is, that in denying the sufficiency of the evidence in favor of the existence of God, he is understood as denying the existence of everything else in the entire realm of causation, law, force, etc., and is continually represented as a believer in chance, in which he believes as little as in God. But Pater Mundi agrees with the Atheist in his disapproval of Pantheism.

"A God who is a mere idea, or the moral order of the world, or the sum total of nature, is no God at all to a truly English mind, and can issue no message."

For if nature is the result of a plan, a something designed, and if the planner, designer, be God, then God must be a person to be able to do these things. An impersonal God is only another name for Nature, and Pantheism is Atheism disguised with only a thin covering of Theism. But a personal God who is infinite, "whose center is everywhere and whose circumference is nowhere," is to me a contradiction in terms. As well attempt the reduction of the years of eternity or miles of infinity to figures, as reduce the eternal, infinite intelligence of Nature to personality. An infinite person everywhere present, is only another definition of Pantheism; giving to the qualities and attributes of Nature a name and a person.

In this limited space it is hardly possible to follow the author through a wonderful maze of well selected words and beautiful sentences. What he seems to dwell on principally, and aims to impress the more deeply on the reader, is that all real atheism can be traced to and find support solely in a bad state of the heart. A strange method to reach our hearts by calling us blackguards in a sense something more than "the bible-microscope and the bible-micrometer for inspecting and judging the hearts of men." He maintains that as men approach a belief in God so do they approach virtue, and as they lose faith in God so their virtue wanes. Then our criminals should be Atheists, our jails and penitentiaries should be full of them, and the gallows should have a rich harvest of atheists. But statistics maintain the contrary. Was Shelley the "mad atheist" or Spinoza the "god intoxicated" man, a sinner above others? Even his enemies admire the character of Shelley. But why is the very delicate task of maintaining purity of character laid upon the atheist always? Men, he tells us, "are very reluctant, especially atheists to put themselves on a strict course of conscientious living!" Out on all such pious insults! The very word atheist stirs up his most rancorous odium theologicum. He seems to admit, however, that the feeling of a need of God is not universal, for he says:

"There are persons who would as soon be without God as not; nay, there are those who could hardly hear pleasanter news than that the Theistic argument has been fairly overturned from the foundation and the impossibility of a God proved beyond all possibility of denial. Oh, how scoffing Voltaire, and licentious Rousseau and bloated Paine would have clapped their hands and shouted could they have fallen on some wonderful geometry which by its rigid demonstrations could compel even the most unwilling to give up their plea for deity."

There are men who would as soon be without God as not, but that class did not include those three gentlemen so wonderfully adjectived. They were each of them as persistent in their belief in God, and quite as logical in their demonstrations of his existence, as the Rev. author of Pater Mundi. But even a belief in God sufficient to inspire such a work is not sufficient to enable its possessor to speak the truth regarding an Infidel.

It is wearisome reading the arguments in favor of a man-made God. Puzzling our brains to discover a maker, regulator and preserver of Nature is as mad a task as finding out who made God. I prefer Nature without amendments, in the words of our author, She is to me the one worshipful Alma Mater; she is my all in all. Dear Mother Nature with what relief we turn from priestly inventions, from meaningless names to thee! To cultivate the purer, nobler sentiments of the heart by sympathizing with suffering in others; learning fortitude and patience by suffering ourselves, or reveling in the joys of love and friendship; to enlarge our mental faculties by searching into thy secrets which thou revealest to the diligent and faithful seeker, to gratify the love of sublimity, grandeur and beauty on the shores of the majestic ocean, amid towering mountains, in the starry fields of space, in sylvan retreats, in the quiet peace and calm found in a shady nook by a murmuring brook or rippling lake; in feeling thy renovating power in the sanctuaries of thy solitudes where thy free air fans care from our brow, while we retreat within ourselves in contemplation and meditation, in union and communion with thee. For all that we have and are is from thee.

AID FROM THE SPIRITS.

Earthly science is about to step over the threshold of Materialism and enter upon the spiritual arena. More courage is being manifested. Mrs. "Grundy" is getting so old she is nearly harmless. Sectarian hate and pious slander have not blasted the spiritual truths planted in the sacred soil of natural laws. Faith is established, but there is yet work to be done. The "Lost Arts and Sciences," must be regained, permanently placed among the sciences of to-day, Mundane wisdom and intelligence must reach out and up, and the invisibles will pass down the golden key that shall unlock the door leading into the arcana of spiritual truths. Says Ramohun Roy:

"The ancient Egyptian priests of the highest degrees were familiar with clairvoyance and magnetism. These sciences that are so little known to-day were well known in those days; at least by the Egyptian priests. Clairvoyance was an acknowledged science—communion with spirits a something not merely believed in, but positively known, and it governed all the acts of their lives. Magnetism, or the flow of healing forces through the body, was the most potent of all remedies in use for the sick, and the priest who could not heal the sick by this power was straightway deposed—could no longer hold the office after one failure."

What of the priests and clergy of to-day?

As we question these ancient spirits in relation to the gift of healing, the answer comes that they received those gifts directly from departed spirits. In short, they were mediums—the same law governing them as now. Ancient spirit bands are through media reaching down to humanity many scientific truths now wanted. We learn of them their lives, see their portraits, and they will ere long be a power to work in the midst of the people. We welcome them. We want to know of "Adehl," the alchemist of eight thousand years ago, of his discovery of the "water of life." We want to prolong physical existence. Adehl says the secret may be revealed again when the world is prepared to receive it. The lost arts and sciences are but waiting to come forth at the command of intelligence. Science will enlighten and unbind the race—Evangelical Theology never. Just in proportion as we learn of the forces of nature, and of the application of magnetism, diseased physical conditions will be alleviated, and humanity benefitted.

H. B. WILLCOX.

Oswego, September 4th, 1874,

An old volume published in London in 1787, entitled Rational Recreations, contains descriptions of various interesting experiments in optics, chromatics and acoustics, in which among others is described a mode of producing a "spectre" by means of a concave mirror. After proving that such an illusion can be so produced, the author, W. Hooper, M. D., says:

Nothing here said is intended to invalidate the belief that spirits may hold converse with men. He must be either very weak or very wicked who can wish to disbelieve an opinion that is so highly honorable and advantageous to humanity.

This is a remarkable statement for the year 1787.

[For Common Sense.]

MONEY THE NATION'S GOD.

It rules, Politics and Religion—Workingmen Nowhere—Good of Rattlesnakes and Earthquakes—The Working Aristocracy must Strike.

BY A. GAYLORD SPALDING.

There seem to be two most prominent things in this mighty country of ours: first, man; second, money. But the biggest is money. That is the power of church, state and society. "Money makes the mare go," and answereth all purposes. It builds railroads, steam mills, churches and whisky saloons, and buys silks, ribbons and fast horses. It therefore behooves every one to get the tin. No matter how—by speculation, stealing, railroad extortion or the salary grab. It is all the same. Secure the cash and you may go to college or to congress, be a governor or a minister. You will shine anyhow. Money is religion, civilization, fashion and popularity. It is government, law and order.

We prove religion by sky-rocket steeples and velvet-cushioned pulpits, with high salaried priests and ministers; and civilization is known by acres of fuss, feathers, ruffles and dry goods, with extreme Sunday solemnity and exquisite nip, strut, pucker and double refined social etiquette. And the sure evidence of law and order is in the abundant supply of richly paid lawyers, judges, sheriffs, constables and policemen, with plenty of full-employed gibbets, crowded courts, prisons and jails, and taxes most frightful! The perfection, beauty and glory of all these things produce an astounding and overwhelming dazzle, with an intensity, immensity and expensivity beyond all limit or calculation. It follows, therefore, that a proud and stylish city (like San Francisco, for instance, and other aspiring towns in California,) contains more religion, civilization, law and order, to the square inch, than, perhaps, any hundred miles of plain, honest country outside. The criterion and test is height, depth, breadth, show, bulk, noise, cost, brag, swell, parade and avoirdupois.

But where is man amidst all this? Non est inventus! He is buried in the rubbish. Real manhood and womanhood are hidden in the garret, cellar, kitchen, shop or field, or behind the glitter and shadow of cloth or title that wealth can purchase—reverend, honorable, general, professor, great mogul, nabob, grandee or mugwump. They can revel in women and wine without limit or disgrace. They own the splendid mill, shop, store, factory or meeting-house, which are vastly more important than any little folks that grub and sweat to produce them. What is labor? Mere dirty stuff, repulsive, contemptible! Behold the farmers in rustic dress—Irish, Dutch, Swede, Spaniard, Portuguese, Turk, French, heathen Chinese or Yankee—mechanics, laborers, miners and all that—mere lowing cattle. They ply the hoe, spade, saw and plane, and live in log cabins and slab shanties. They raise potatoes and build houses and railroads, and sich. But then money is another matter altogether, and belongs to such as luck or accident premits to get hold of it—through trade or office, watered stock or inflation, by hook or by crook. It is a financial operation or artful bank or gold manoeuvre. We sometimes hear that—

"A man's a man for a' that."

However, that is mere poetry, pretty to talk and sing. But the rough, sober fact is far otherwise, in spite of all oratory and declamation, or boasting religion, patriotism and civilization. Capital, monopoly and soulless corporations control in all departments, even in newspapers, and workingmen and labor are in helpless subjection. Yes, say what we will, it is a fact nevertheless, that the working class is actually driven to beg and to fight for its simplest rights. And, though comprising four-fifths of the people in every State, in whose hands should be the wealth and power of the country, yet probably not a tenth part of the property of the nation is owned and managed by them.

Now, brothers, sisters, workers, am I mistaken? Who has the exact figures? You know yourselves, at least some of you, how it is, and it is a pity and a shame. And what is our remedy? Money lords, like a Stewart, a Vanderbilt, Stanford or a Tom Scott, Sharon, Ralston, and other less conspicuous men, hold the people as in the hollow of their hand. They constitute a moneyed aristocracy of monopoly and strength not easily subdued or resisted. Their capital is admirably intrenched behind stubborn walls, as were the rebels at Richmond, and never will be willingly surrendered, or used for unselfish ends. Money is the God, and church and State bow subserviently to its glittering shrine. Thus politics and religion harmonize and co-operate, represented by leading politicians and clergymen. The official managers, both secular and ecclesiastical, are of the kid-glove, broadcloth, non-producing stripe, who flatter and support each other, while workingmen stand outside as mere ciphers, but at the same time the real drudged underpinning of pack horses for the whole tribe of proud uppertendom. Let no pious workingman be deceived by this matter of sanctimonious religion, which is used to sugar-coat the non-producing professions. Sweep the whole thing—a black line of distinction must run all the way, with productive labor on one side and non-productive on the other.

The working class are largely in the majority but, like dry sand, they lack cohesion and unity; while capital is always united and lynx-eyed for self-protection, with press and pulpit everywhere in its favor. What a change will be realized when such powerful machinery shall be set in motion for the rights of labor! But we may need a few more salary grabs and official swindles, rattlesnake bites and moral earthquakes, to wake us fully up. Let them come most speedily, and we will thank the Lord for such excellent medicine. As chattel slavery went up by spontaneous combustion through the channel of rebellion, so may the civil and social serfdom of the workingman by means of a labor revolution. The old cotton king abdicated his tyrannical throne in favor of the more powerful muscle of the greenback monarchy. And now the universal question is, man versus the money-god: which shall hold the supremacy? That old silk-stocking aristocracy of arrogant wealth, speculation and monopoly may now be requested to take a back seat, and a better sort will come to the front, namely: The aristocracy of labor and production. Let their fair banner wave in California and over all the land, while the faithful granges and labor clubs shall educate the people up to a full understanding.

The process of strikes among laborers is becoming greatly improved. To strike with the ballot does the work up strong. Yes, strike is the brave and vigorous word. Strike with the ballot! Every man strike for true manhood and a working aristocracy. But what about the women—the dear women? Have they no lot nor share with us? Some striking must be done for them, and by them. They belong to the Patrons, though yet disfranchised. But their day is fast approaching. Hope on!

The past year has produced encouraging changes to the advantages of the industrial masses. However, political elections are comparatively but a small part—mere weather vanes to indicate the moral and social progress. The main work is individual and social, and the good things we hope for are scarcely yet in the bud. Capital and monopoly are dominant and defiant, with the newspaper press and the pulpit generally in their interest. So, as workingmen, if we have struck once we must do it again and again, and never give up.

Champlin, September, 1874.

[For Common Sense.]

SPIRITUAL PHENOMENA.

In the year 1857 a most singular epidemic broke out in the little village of Morzive, in Switzerland. It appeared to the scientific men to be an epidemic of acute mania of an entirely new species. The inhabitants of this village were Roman Catholics. They traced the evil directly to the curses of a bad priest, who had been deprived of his office there for vicious conduct, and driven from the place. To them it seemed the effect of witchcraft. The priests called it possession by devils. The scientists gave it the fair name of hystero-demonopathia. Chiefly young girls and boys were attacked, but the disorder was not confined to these. The patients fell into trances, during which they prophesied correctly future events. Sometimes they received fearful gashes in the fleshy parts of their bodies from unseen hands, which gashes healed in an hour or so, and left no scar.

The bishop was sent for when the thing had spread so as to become a serious source of alarm, and he and his clergy convened all the peasants of the village in the church and exorcised the spirits, but when they attempted to use the holy water the possessed rose upon them, and with fearful blasphemies sought to tear them to pieces. The services had to be abruptly closed. The trouble increased. More and more became victims to the epidemic, and most of those attacked ultimately died. The French government at length sent a body of troops to quell the disturbances, and to awe the villagers; and a medical commission to enquire into the causes of the disorder. Dr. Constans, the Chief Chemist of France, was at the head of the commission.

A marvellous account of the doings of the possessed purporting to be authentic, was at that time published in the Corn Hill Magazine. I read this, and I also carefully read the report of Dr. Constans who, being a Materialist, laughed at the supposed diabolic origin of the disease, and treated it as a hysterical mania. But Dr. Constans confesses in his brochure the necessity of admitting the following facts, for which he offers no explanation: The affected did declare in their paroxysms that they were possessed by the spirits of bad men who had died in the vicinity, and whom they named. They did receive unaccountable wounds which healed preternaturally. Children under the influence did run up like squirrels to the tops of the lofty fir trees and stand on their heads on their topmost shoots; coming down unharmed. The affected did foretell correctly future events. Ignorant peasants when questioned in Latin by the cure, did answer correctly in the same language. Like Blind Tom they always spoke of themselves in the third person. The Doctor did not attempt to account for these abnormal symptoms.

About the same time that I read the narrative I met with a precisely similar epidemic in Ceylon. I had at the time the medical supervision of fifty coffee estates, employing altogether about 15,000 coolies; natives of the adjoining coasts of Travancore and Malabar. The East Indians are a highly sensitive, nervous and superstitious race. Their imaginations are easily excited. How much of what I am about to relate might be due to excited imagination I cannot tell, but it is noteworthy that—as far as I could judge—the symptoms and results of the epidemic observed by me were identical with those noticed at Morzive. I was sent for one day to go to an estate a few miles up the valley in which I lived. When I arrived I was told that a new gang of coolies, having lately come in from the coast, were put in a set of lines—the long low barracks in which they live are thus called—which had been long unoccupied. Some of the new men were, after a day or two, attacked with symptoms of mania; a few of them ran off into the woods, and some were then lying sick in their huts. The sick men whom I saw were all feverish, had foul, yellow tongues; could not sleep and would not eat. They frequently went into convulsions, especially when spoken to, and were sometimes violent. They invariably spoke of themselves in the third person. The coolies in the other lines all said that an evil spirit—moonnavdy as they called it—was in those lines, and that the men must be removed. All called the disease possession by a devil, and seemed to recognize it as a well known affection.

The lines were deserted and pulled down, but the epidemic lasted about a month; during this time numbers were attacked in succession with precisely the same symptoms. Medicine did no good at all, and every man who was attacked either died or ran off, and was lost in the woods. About thirty men perished in this way before the thing came to an end. It frequently happened to me while practicing amongst these natives, to be sent for to see a man who had been suddenly seized by convulsions. On enquiry I generally learned that this man had been cutting wood or grass, alone in the jungle, on the previous evening; that he had rushed into his hut crying out that he had “seen the devil.” That he then went into convulsions, refused to eat or drink, and could not sleep. I never yet saw one of these cases recover. When I was told that such symptoms followed on a man’s saying he had “seen the devil,” I knew that nothing I could do would save his life. MEDICUS.

The Southern Democrats learn nothing, and are as little to be trusted as ever. They have carried several elections by setting the white race avowedly against the black. If they had their way, they would reduce the negroes to a state of semi-slavery once more; and this in spite of the Cincinnati and Baltimore conventions of 1872. The decease of both the great parties is a consummation devoutly to be wished; but the work of the Republicans must continue till the Democratic party, as such, undergoes cremation.—Index.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

COMMON SENSE is furnished to subscribers for Three Dollars per annum, in advance. Letters intended for the Business Department should be addressed:

AMANDA M. SLOCUM, BUSINESS MANAGER, 236 Montgomery st.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

Pater Mundi—J. W. Mackie.....	220
Aid from the Spirits—H. B. Wilcox.....	221
Money the Nation's God—A. Gaylord Spalding.....	222
Spiritual Phenomena—Medicus.....	223
Moulton's Statement—Ed.....	224
National Progress—Ed.....	225
Horrors of the French Revolution.....	226
God in the Constitution.....	227
The Newspaper as a Bible.....	227
Theodore Tilton.....	228
Extracts from a Letter.....	228
What is Prostitution?.....	229
Brief Extracts.....	229
Poetry and Special Notices.....	230

COMMON SENSE.

WILLIAM N. SLOCUM, EDITOR.

AMANDA M. SLOCUM, ASSISTANT.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, SEPT. 19, 1874.

The most efficient aid the readers of this paper can render COMMON SENSE is to pay their subscriptions, and induce others to subscribe. Send the paper to your friends.

JENNIE LEYS' LECTURES.—In the afternoon discourse of Miss Jennie Leys, on Sunday last, she spoke of the fitness of Spiritualism as a guide in all the avenues of life, strongly recommending that it be made a practical, everyday religion, and that Spiritualists interest themselves in all that concerns the good of humanity. She cautioned them to beware of every approach of creedism, and to keep themselves free to investigate every subject which concerns our daily life. How we live is of more importance than what we profess to believe.

The evening lecture was on marriage. She said a divine marriage is a union of two persons so perfectly adapted in soul, mind and body that "they twain are one." She averred that what is often called marriage is not worthy to be dignified by that holy name. Referring to "marriages of convenience," mercenary marriages, and "arrangements" by which people are brought together from any but the highest and purest motives, she warned the young to utterly refuse any marriage not justifiable on such grounds. She spoke of the evils that result from inharmonious marriages—the loss of health to one or both parties and the curses that are entailed on innocent children—the mental imbecility and moral obliquity. No man or woman has any moral right to procreate under inharmonious conditions. It is a sin against nature—a defiance of law which brings most terrible punishments not only on the parties themselves and their children, but on society. True marriage is the highest, holiest and happiest relation we can ever know this side the silent river, but if a marriage is so unfit that there is no hope of assimilation and harmony, the sooner it is ended the better. Divorce should be as easy and inexpensive as marriage. It should depend upon the will of the parties, made known in some simple legal form. As to the disgrace attending separation, the real disgrace is living together without love.

Miss Leys will speak at the same place—911 Market st.—to-morrow (Sunday) afternoon and evening.

MOULTON'S STATEMENT.

The last statement of Frank Moulton is too lengthy for our columns, yet cannot be passed over in silence. It contains evidence which no unprejudiced person can study and remain unconvinced of its truth. For our own satisfaction it was not required. More than two years ago, when the story was first published, with particulars and names of witnesses, and not one of the persons named volunteered to deny its truth, we believed it, because compelled to do so by candid judgment, without respect of persons.

More recently, when Tilton, goaded to desperation by the attacks of Beecher's friends, made his statement, our belief was confirmed; and when Beecher admitted that Mrs. Tilton had confessed the adultery, and gave explanations so utterly inadequate to account for his own sorrow, belief became certainty. But this last statement places the matter beyond controversy. Those only can pretend it has no weight who deliberately refuse to see the truth—who hold Beecher's bare word in his favor of more account than his written evidence against himself, to say nothing of the mass of corroborative testimony, and the direct statements of an impartial witness.

Moulton appears in the part of a high-minded, honorable gentleman throughout this whole affair. He had no interest either way. It is not pretended that he accepted a dollar for himself, or needed it. He was silent as long as he could remain so, and did not disclose what had been confided to him till Beecher's willingness to save himself at his expense compelled him to strike in his own defense. His blow is a finisher.

Beecher tells Mrs. Tilton in one letter that his wife has gone away and the coast is clear; and in another, that she may write as she pleases, for his wife is off, and his sister keeping house for him. Beecher requests Mrs. Tilton's mother to call him her son; and she, in reply, alludes to the secret between him and her daughter, promises not to mention it, and asks for money. Mrs. Tilton, after her miscarriage, writes to Beecher that she has recovered, Spring has come, she feels the birds singing in her heart, and is ready for new joys. And all these letters are after the confession to Tilton and the employment of Moulton in the case. And up to within a few days of the trial, the man who is now charged as a blackmailer is addressed as a bosom friend and counselor.

Moulton has vindicated himself completely. He was called into a quarrel which he had no hand in making. Beecher beseeched him to be his friend. He made a peace, and became the depository of papers and secrets. He did well to keep the documents. Had Beecher's friends laid hands on them, they never would have come to light again. No church has ever yet shown itself capable of a fair, open and candid treatment of its opponents.

That man, only, is truly educated, who has been so trained in youth that his body is the ready servant of his will, and performs with ease and pleasure all the work that, as a mechanism, it is capable of doing.—Huxley.

NATIONAL PROGRESS.

It is interesting once in a while to contemplate the progress of the nations of the earth towards the principles of enlightened policy and good government. There can be no doubt there is a general advance all along the line. We see to-day what has never been seen before in the world, an opening of the doors of all nations to each other, a desire to learn of each other, and an inclination to adopt whatever is good and right wherever it may be found. For hundreds of years the religious sects of Christendom have been trying to spread their dogmas over the earth, and unify the population of the globe by bringing all races of men to one religion—but in vain. The Mahomedan, the Buddhist, the Brahman and the followers of Confucius, cannot see why they should abandon the traditions of their fathers to adopt those of the foreigner, which carry with them no greater evidence of truth. Equally improvable they have no power to displace each other, and to all appearance mankind might have remained forever divided, if religious teachers alone had been entrusted with the work of bringing them into harmony of thought and action. But science, the actual knowledge of things, the application of the great powers of nature to the service of man, has taken the work of regeneration into its own hands, and is carrying to the remotest bounds of the earth tidings of what knowledge can do for the human family. The missionary talks in vain of the Garden of Eden, its forbidden fruits and the consequent fall of man; in vain of his Christ God and the atonement by his crucifixion; in vain of the necessity of belief in these things to secure eternal blessedness; but the steamship with its huge guns and telescopes, maps, books, pictures and the ten thousand useful tools and implements, whether of war or peace, crowded into its cargo, carries to the most barbarous mind the conviction that knowledge is power, and that the people who make these things are worthy of attention and respect. Thus these elements of power that would seem at first glance to be merely engines of destruction, are actually messengers of peace, and evangels of light for the whole world. We shall never convince the Chinaman that Christ is better than Confucius; no amount of argument could do that. But one trial by an old junk against one of our war steamers sets John on an enquiry how these things are made, and the superiority of science over ignorance is at once confessed. The door once opened, even though by the thunder of cannon, a pathway is made for all the details of enlightened civilization. Thus the world of man is being roused to thought and action, and a uniformity and harmony are being spread over all. Self preservation demands attention to the warlike means of the most advanced; and men are never slow to adopt whatever is necessary to their own pride and self respect. Inquiry is abroad. A thirst for knowledge is infecting all lands. It must be satisfied. It is being satisfied. The material products of our workshops are finding their way into the most remote villages of inaccessible semi-barbarism with all improved ideas that attach to their use. They will inevitably be followed by increased comfort, advanced thought and more liberal and just government. China, Japan, Turkey, Persia, are now moving forward on the path of progress, and other nations of antiquity are beginning to wake up. In Europe there is gradual advance not only in material, but in moral conditions and governmental policy. No nation is making a retrograde movement, while many are looking forward to republican liberty in its widest sense. Another century will probably find anarchy virtually abolished, and assemblies and parliaments with open discussion and broad principles of right controlling the policy of nations. The entire family of man, brought near to each other by commerce and common interest, will adopt principles of justice and secure to all the right to pursue their own happiness in their own way, not interfering with the same right in others, and the reign of peace will be inaugurated all over the world.

THE JEFFERSON LEAGUE.

The following is a copy of the rules and pledges of this new League, which some of our mechanics and working men are organizing under, for protection against the growing power of money and tyranny of creed. One of the greatest objections to most secret societies is that they are incumbered by such a mass of useless machinery that the time and force of the members are used up in "working the thing," while the real objects of the organization are lost sight of. The Jefferson League" promises to be singularly free from such impediments.

OBJECT.—The more equal distribution of the necessaries, comforts, and responsibilities of life, by a proper use of the ballot, and political power.

All who are entitled to vote at any political election, and not antagonistic by means of business circumstances or position, are qualified to become members.

PLEDGE.—Sacred word and honor to keep secret all I may see or learn, in consequence of my connection with this League or any of its members.

2d. That I renounce allegiance to all other political parties.

3d. I will not vote for, or recommend any one for office or membership whose business, circumstances or position would naturally make him unfriendly to our cause.

RULES.—No books or records to be kept, except lists of names without headings or remarks of any kind. No initiation fees or dues to be charged, and no one to receive pay for services as an officer in the League. Expenses for rent of room, when required, to be provided for by assessment or contribution at the time they occur. All officers are temporary, their term expiring at the commencement of each meeting, when any one may be elected to fill the chairs.

A majority vote by yeas and nays, division or otherwise, to be the supreme power in all cases not otherwise provided for in these rules.

No question other than political, or having direct reference to our object, to be discussed in the League.

One League, by majority vote, may cooperate with others in elections, or for other purposes, if they think best to do so, each League being an entirely independent body, and each member on an equality with any other member, and entitled to the same respect.

Parliamentary rules to be observed in all meetings of the League; but in all cases the honor and judgment of man to be appealed to, and not his fear or prejudice. A committee of three have power to organize, take, and administer obligations to others, in any convenient place.

Any member may withdraw from the League by sending in his resignation in writing, with assurance that he will not violate pledge one.

Each League can adopt a sign of recognition and password for themselves; but everything of a useless character to be discouraged. Frequent communication from one League to another is requested.

HORRORS OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

During our wanderings among the churches, in our "Sunday Search for Heaven," we sometimes hear history quoted in support of Christianity, and in warning against Infidelity. On several occasions, recently, we have been reminded by the clergy of the "horrors of the French revolution," which they assert were the legitimate fruits of irreligion. Let us see:

In 1793 the French government, under Louis XIV and the Jesuit priesthood, had attained a degree of tyranny and corruption that was insufferable, and which naturally resulted in a reaction. No man's life was safe. A word against the church or the monarchy was followed by the bastille or death, at the will of the reigning powers. It was not called a reign of terror simply because the wrongs were perpetrated in the name of religion and bigotry. But it was a reign of terror, nevertheless, of abject submissive terror, in which all aspirations for justice and humanity were tortured into silence and obedience.

The French people bore these wrongs with patient endurance till death was preferable to further suffering. The humanitarian philosophers, the Voltaires, the Paines of France, could not fail to join, aye, even to lead in the popular outcry against the stern, regal and priestly despotism that was fastening its fangs on the vitals of their country. But they were not in the majority. The mobs of Paris, and the men they elevated to power, were naturally liberators, avengers raised in the catholic school of bigotry and intolerance, and who were turned against the church only by the mad frenzy begotten by unbearable oppression. They flew from one extreme to the other in a day. They displaced the monarchy for the most radical republic; they swept away the church and substituted a rude and uncultivated reason. In the disorder that ensued many excesses were committed. Suspicion, folly, cruelty, succeeded each other. Parties were overthrown and set up without regard to either law or justice, and each tyrant of the hour essayed to establish his power by the destruction of his enemies. No wonder that blood flowed freely, and that the people felt the changing policy of the Convention harder to bear than the steady oppression of the king and the church. These disorders were influenced and exaggerated by other causes which neither the French people nor the cause of Reason and Republicanism can be held responsible for. They came from without and operated in secret.

The Republic was surrounded by kings and princes, and prelates and priests who saw in the success of freedom the downfall of their own power. It was not in their nature to sit idly by and see peace and liberty firmly established in the centre of Europe. There was not a king who did not have his emissaries in Paris inciting to mischief, and plotting the downfall of every form of free government. The Pope had thousands of Jesuits at his command, and they were launched on devoted France in every disguise to promote ruin, disorder and discontent. As is usual with their order, the end justified the means, however cruel, treacherous and inhuman. Even England, with her semi-freedom, could not withhold her aid in the work of destroying the Republic. The letters of the great minister Pitt to his agents in Paris, yet preserved in the archives of the British government, show to what length even moral England was willing to go to shake the confidence of France and the world in civil and religious liberty. These letters show that Mr. Pitt had a numerous corps of people in Paris. Lucifer matches had just become known, and with a consignment of these, and some counterfeit French paper money, he sends his agents with instructions much like the following:

"I send you any quantity of French paper money, all imitation. Give it to your trustees. Let them pay it out freely and bring it into disgrace. I also send some newly invented matches; they will make fire anywhere; burn and destroy. Anything to ruin the country, harass the people and disgrace the government: Join all sorts of societies that promise sedition and disorder, urge the people to it, and give them money to carry it on. The more mischief you can do, the more destruction you can effect of either life or property, the better. We must create such a terror of free government in France that the people will eagerly reinstate the king. If you want more men or money they are ready for you."

With such agencies as these at work, is it any wonder that a reign of blood prevailed unprecedented in the annals of humanity? Is it any wonder that liberty became anarchy, and reason passion and licentiousness? And yet our pulpit orators, with these facts in their faces, cite the horrors of the French revolution as the natural fruits of reason in religion and liberty in government. They would have us cling to things as they are in religion, because the efforts of the French to throw off the tyranny of the catholic church were turned by the intrigues of cruel and bigoted Jesuits into a carnival of blood and disorder. They would have the people of Europe tolerate kingly despotism, because the French attempt at self-government was overthrown by the secret efforts of the Pope and the monarchs of the old world. We are not surprised to hear the ignorant dupe of the conventicle whine about these things; but we are shocked at the moral obliquity that can induce a man of learning to retail this stale trumpery in what we might otherwise regard as a respectable church.

My very soul burns within me as I trace the millions of outgrowths from this Upas tree of Woman's bondage. Its effects are traceable in everybody, everything and everywhere. Men are the sufferers, just as much as women. Even as the Southern slave-owners were debased by their most cherished institution, so are men by this universal lack of Woman's freedom. Give Women the right to herself, the right to her children, and the right to property to support herself and them, and she will by degrees free herself from the myriad of shackles that bind her; and being freed, she will ably share in freeing the race from the curses under which it at present groans.—Mrs. E. P. Miller, M. D.

GOD IN THE CONSTITUTION.

THE PROGRESS OF THE MOVEMENT FOR THE AMENDMENT.

NUMBER FOUR.

Just God!—and these are they
 Who minister at thine altar, God of Right!
 Men who their hands with prayer and blessings lay
 On Israel's Ark of light!
 Pilate and Herod, friends,
 Chief Priests and rulers, as of old, combine!
 Just God and holy! is that church which lends
 Strength to the spoiler thine?
 How long, O Lord! how long
 Shall such a priesthood barter truth away,
 And in Thy name for robbery and wrong
 At Thine own Altar pray?—[JOHN G. WHITTIER.]

In 1864, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (O. S.), in answer to an overture from the Synod of the Pacific, adopted a preamble and resolutions offered by Dr. Musgrave, whereby the Synod committed itself to the movement. The first annual meeting of the Association of Philadelphia was held in the Eighth Street M. E. church, on the 7th and 8th of July, 1864. The next convention was held in the West Arch Street Presbyterian church, Philadelphia, on the 29th of November, 1864, Ex-governor Pollock presiding. Speeches in favor of it were made by Judge Strong, of the U. S. Supreme Court, Revs. Edwards, McIlvaine, Junken, Swartz and Goddard.

November 19th, 1864, B. Gratz Brown (who was looking out for the future, like all politicians), wrote a letter to one of the officers of the New Church Alliance, saying the movement is "God's work in the purifying and exalting this nation;" and this was to be effected "by inscribing His word as its Supreme Law in any and all ways, and in any and all places." He believed, too, that the time is coming "when men will again seize upon, and live or die by religious convictions, as in days of old." And that man was nominated for the Vice-Presidency of the United States! After this letter had been published in the papers all over the United States, in response to numerous inquiries he emphatically denied being in favor of an amendment of the kind. Governors of States and other high officers have acted in a similar manner. They were willing to stand by the movement in the prospect of fat offices.

During 1864, numerous petitions on the subject were actively circulated for signatures, and then forwarded to Congress. Before the adjournment, Lyman Trumbull, Chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, made the following report:

"The Committee deem it unnecessary to make the asked-for amendment, as the Supreme Being is already recognized in the Constitution, in the requirement of oaths and the prohibition of interference with the full exercise of religious opinions."

Rev. John Crozier was the leader in assembling a convention of Christians in Indianapolis, on the 15th of February, 1865. As some amendments to the Indiana constitution were being debated in the Legislature, the Christians conceived it to be the proper time to secure also their religious amendment; but, although favorably reported on by the committee, the minority report defeated it. The next meeting of the Christian Alliance was held in New York City, May 16th and 17th, 1866, in which they appointed Dr. McIlvaine to lay the resolutions before the approaching Constitutional Convention of the State of New York, and urge a similar expression in the constitution of that State. About half a dozen resolutions were adopted, but I will quote only a part of the third, which reads:

"Such amendment implies no more than the exercise of the inalienable right of a Christian people to acknowledge their God and Preserver, and would do no injustice to those few individuals among us who are the enemies of the Christian religion, and who claim the right to prohibit the nation, as such, from all religious worship."

According to this resolution there are only a few (?) individuals who don't profess to be Christians. Comment on this is unnecessary.

In the next article I shall show, from the speeches and letters of the leading friends of the cause, what they are determined to do to carry their end.

A FRIEND OF RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.

[For Common Sense.]

THE NEWSPAPER AS A BIBLE.

In your last issue I have perused an article on the above subject. If the writer refers to the newspaper as it ought to be I coincide with him; but if he refers to the newspaper as it is I must dissent. There is nothing more, it is true, in the newspaper of the period than can easily be found in the Hebrew bible. But to supersede the bible the editor of the period ought to be in advance of the biblical editors in moral worth. Many of them are superior, but it must, I think, be conceded that the average editor of to-day is a mere caterer to a vitiated public taste, and often a hired blackmailer and black-guard. What benefit can the coming man receive by the abuse heaped on public men with scarcely ever a word of commendation for those who acquit themselves well? Or what benefit from publishing the tragedies of real life? What good having dished up every morning the shortcomings, real or imaginary, of humanity? They do not subserve any useful purpose. On the contrary they act as mental irritants, and are suggestive of a morbid train of thought. Bodily health depends very much on mental equilibrium and absence of moral perturbation. How can the epithets indulged in by editors toward one another conserve any useful purpose? The editor of the period does not seem to think he can succeed in journalism without abusing something or somebody. But if the newspaper should become a teacher of science, literature and art, in addition to proper treatment of political issues and current events, I think many will agree with your Eastern correspondent,

E. STEVENSON, M. D.

Virginia City, Nev., September 10, 1874.

"Either the ultimate object should be to place the wife on an independent footing and enable her to maintain herself against the world, or else, providing honorably, faithfully and generously against all possible misfortune, to teach her still to lean upon the stronger arm of her husband and so to look to man for guidance."

The latter method is doubtless more in accordance with the theories of the past, and harmonizes with much of the sentiment of our own day; but, unfortunately for its success it is not practicable nor has ever been. If every man were strong and pure and true, there might be some little hope that every woman would be honorably, faithfully and generously provided for against all possible misfortune, but not otherwise. So, here again the necessity of an independent status for Woman is plainly indicated.—

Jane M. Slocum.

THEODORE TILTON.

This man has had a terrible ordeal to pass through during the last four years. Stung to the heart by the alienation of the affections of a devoted wife, by the seductive arts of the man he had admired from his boyhood days, touched to the quick by the perfidy of the pastor of the church to which he was allied—wounded in the most sensitive part by the man he had revered as one noble and true, for the peace and honor of his four innocent children he ardently tried for years to quench the fires that smouldered in his breast and to forgive the man who had wronged him so deeply. For the love he had borne the wife of his bosom, he fervently tried to forgive her the great mistake she had made, and by which the fair prospects of his life were blasted. In this he was manly. He has been abused and criticised most severely for condoning the wrongs he smarted under, but we honor him for it. * * * * Mr. Tilton would doubtless have suffered the secret of his injuries to accompany him to the grave, had he not been goaded and taunted beyond endurance by the friends of the man who wronged him, and the refusal of the man himself to do him simple justice. He has been compelled in order to vindicate his own honor, to take the course he has pursued. Few can realize what this man has suffered and what agonies his sensitive nature has endured. His wife has been persuaded to desert him—his home destroyed—his children scattered; forsaken by friends and most cruelly misrepresented and slandered by the press. But he has stood like a lighthouse, mid the dashing of the waves and the fury of the storm, and when the calm sunshine succeeds it, the world will honor him for the stand he has taken. The combined influence of the church has tried to crush him that the man who had so deeply wronged him might be held blameless and still be honored and admired. It has almost come to this, in the unhappy Brooklyn contest—Beecher is somehow regarded as the champion and representative of Christianity and the Church, and Tilton of the Skeptics and Unbelievers, and we of the latter category, have not cause to be ashamed of our representative. Apart from sectarian prejudices and credal predilections there is a sense of justice implanted in the human heart, and we have confidence that the countrymen of Theodore Tilton will yet in reference to all the unhappy conditions in which he has been placed, accord him due justice and honor.—Truth Seeker (N. Y.)

LETTER FROM MR. YORK.

EDITOR COMMON SENSE:—I arrived in safety Thursday evening, found friends with hearts in the right place, and commenced a course of lectures on Saturday evening, followed by two on Sunday. The audience was small at first, but increased greatly in numbers and interest. I shall speak again on Tuesday and Friday evenings, but owing to the absence of Brother Sweasey and other friends in San Francisco, I shall defer further labor here until after visiting Rhonerville and Ferndale. I expect to be in Quincy, Plumas county, the second Sunday in October. I hope our people in Eureka under this present impulse of Free-thought, will organize and build a hall for themselves, for certainly there is a large Liberal element here, and much good feeling prevails. Eureka is a beautiful town, and apparently prospering in business as well as religious matters. Judging from the great lumber mills in operation here, and from the large and finely built churches, with chimes of bells, and the large number in attendance on Sunday, I conclude the grace of God abounds in this place. EUREKA, September 7th.

EXTRACTS FROM A LETTER.

RE-INCARNATION—MATERIALIZATION OF SPIRITS—MORE PROOF WANTED.

The following is an extract from a letter to Mr. J. W. Mackie, who has written many excellent articles for this paper. The writer is an old worker in the reform ranks, and is well known to many of our readers, but we do not feel at liberty to give the name, as the letter was not written for publication:

I have just been reading your article in COMMON SENSE of July 25th, which expresses my sentiments exactly, and I repeat with you: "Give us to drink." I have not yet written anything for this paper, but may when the spirit moves. Another article in the same number on Re-incarnation, explains the principles of the eternal entities of life, clearly proving that if life is only an effect of organization, man cannot be immortal or eternally individualized. Spirit and matter, or life and form, must be co-eternal, never more nor less in power or substance, but forever changing in motion and form; the conscious side of nature being the positive or outgoing into objective existence, running through untold cycles of eternal ages, back to the unconscious or negative side, from whence, when it re-awakens, will be again called a beginning. Our present life of waking and sleeping, with its alternate day and night, is an index of the longer circles of more extended time. But really to be able to feel and know that we live on in conscious individual life after the dissolution of the mortal form, we must have tangible proof, and facts such as are reported by Prof. Crookes of the materialization of "Katie King" and others. I hope this may be true, and ere long such demonstrated facts may prove beyond a doubt that "we live and love beyond the tomb." If hope in a future life has served to buoy up the mind in the fiery trials of the past, how much more when, lost to sight, we can know of what we before only believed.

I think, with you, that there are, or should be, ways by which our loved ones may come to us and give us proof if they still live after death, without going to mediums who often shock one's feelings by their remarks or their greed of gain. I think if Judge ——— still lives, and is cognizant of my desire to hear from him, that he will sometime, if possible, give me the facts and proof of a future state that I have so long and anxiously desired. All thinking minds are no longer satisfied with believing, but are demanding to know of the life beyond; as also of its origin, since what is not eternal in the past must at length cease to be. Never was there more need of right thinking than now; for never in the history of the world did so many momentous questions press forward at once for solution and adjustment.

The latest reported act of bravery occurred recently on the West Wisconsin Railroad, about fifty miles from St. Paul, Minn. The train from Chicago to St. Paul was running at about 20 miles an hour, when on turning a sharp a child, not more than three years old, was seen a short distance ahead on the track, and gazing at the coming train with the innocent fearlessness of childhood. At the moment the child was seen, James Bassford, the fireman, ran out to the cow-catcher, intending to seize the child. He was hardly quick enough, but fortunately struck the child in such a way as to throw it down between the ties, while he himself was thrown down an embankment. The train stopped with the fire-box of the locomotive just over the child, which was rescued completely unharmed and restored to its mother, who had come shrieking toward the train, expecting to find her little one killed. Mr Bassford escaped with a few bruises.

WHAT IS PROSTITUTION?

Moses Hull in the Crucible, tells the following story of a woman who came to him for sympathy and advice concerning the cruelty of a brutal husband. Moses says:

She had bothered us for three days with doleful stories of the treatment she was constantly receiving from her husband. He got drunk. he beat her, kicked her, never allowed her any privileges, not so much as that of asking a friend to tea, or even of going to meeting. He was a slave to his own passions and made a slave of her.

After our patience was exhausted with her doleful stories we said to her:

"Why do you live with such a man? I would not remain under his roof one hour."

"Why," said the lady, "I live with him for a home; he supports me."

We responded, "That is the lowest kind of prostitution. If you must sell yourself for bread and butter, why not sell yourself a night at a time, to the highest bidder? That would be better than a continued slavery, especially when one is enslaved by one they hate."

In a moment, as we anticipated, she was in a rage. "What! demand of her, a respectable woman, to let herself out for money! Tell her that she was no better than a street-walker! it was an insult not to be tolerated."

Yet such was the fact. She was nightly gratifying the lusts of the man she hated. She did it for her daily bread, and the law told her she did right. Poor fool. She believes the law, and enslaves herself and hates prostitutes. Common prostitutes have the power to say no; a power she dare not exercise. Again we say the worst of all prostitution is that covered by law.

Thousand of young men are being educated at this moment by the various churches. What for? In order that they may be prepared to investigate the phenomena by which we are surrounded? No! The object, and the only object, is that they may be prepared to defend a creed. That they may learn the arguments of their respective churches and repeat them in the dull ears of a thoughtless congregation. If one after being thus trained at the expense of the Methodists turns Presbyterian or Baptist, he is denounced as an ungrateful wretch. Honest investigation is utterly impossible within the pale of any church, for the reason that if you think the church is right you will not investigate, and if you think it wrong, the church will investigate you. The consequence of this is, that most of the theological literature is the result of suppression, of fear, of tyranny, and hypocrisy.—R. G. Ingersoll.

There is no saying more degrading than this: "It is better to be the tail of a lion than the head of a dog." It is a responsibility to think and act for yourself. Most people hate responsibility; therefore they join something and become the tail of some lion. They say, "My party can act for me—my church can do my thinking. It is enough for me to pay taxes and obey the lion to which I belong, without troubling myself about the right, the wrong, or the why or the wherefore of anything whatever." These people are respectable. They hate reformers, and dislike exceedingly to have their mind disturbed. They regard convictions as very disagreeable things to have. They love forms, and enjoy, beyond every thing else, telling what a splendid tail their lion has, and what a troublesome dog their neighbor is.—R. G. Ingersoll.

Americans have an inborn liking to "show off." We are not satisfied to do our best quietly and unpretendingly, but love to challenge attention to our deed.

BRIEF EXTRACTS.

Living much in the eye of the public has a bad effect on character. Few men or women can do it, and come off unspoiled.

Has the government a right to refuse a married woman individual protection, and leave her no redress except through her husband?

One luxury is within the reach of every man who is not afraid of poverty—the luxury of speaking his own thought instead of echoing another's.

Is there any right, necessity or sound policy in treating a woman as other than an individual? Clearly, no end which society demands of peace, permanency or purity is gained by such a course.

The indulgence of ambition and the experience of popularity breed conceit and vanity, and an aggravation of self-conscious personality, in all but the very greatest natures. The more applause we have the more we want.

It is an impertinent and unwholesome curiosity which would seek to unearth and publish and discuss secrets that had better never be revealed, or to meddle with concerns of private life that have no necessary connection with public good.

It is none of our business how our neighbor lives,—what he eats or drinks or wears, or thinks or says or does,—so long as he is just and kind to us; nor is it any more the business of the public how the individual lives in private, so long as all his relations and responsibilities to society are properly discharged.

We have an abundance of lecturers, but very few lecturers that are worth hearing. Many lecturers and platform speakers continue to talk, and many authors continue to write, long after they have ceased to have anything worth saying, simply because they have become so infatuated with a public life that they cannot be content with a private one; they continue to live on a reputation, since they are not satisfied to live on character.

A universally becoming gored dress may be worn six or seven inches from the ground with trousers for walking and working suits. If twenty women, of good figure and good taste, in this or any other large city, would agree to make and to wear short skirts and trousers, all people, men and women, would be so won by the neatness, elegance and comfort of the mode, that we should have a dress reform as thorough and speedy as the most earnest of us could wish.

What a fuss is made about the maternal functions? It never seems to occur to masculine minds that most women are past child-bearing at forty; and women of culture do their best work after that age. Women from fifty to seventy stand on an equal footing with men, as to sex, and suffer no disadvantages from "periodicity," or child-bearing. Nature has unsexed them, in these respects, and during those twenty years they are as vigorous as men of that age.

Every human being should take a road of his own. Every mind should be true to itself; should think, investigate, and conclude for itself. This is a duty alike incumbent upon pauper and prince. Every soul should repel dictation and tyranny, no matter from what source they come—from earth or heaven, from men or gods. Besides every traveler upon this vast plain should give to every other traveler his best idea as to the road that should be taken. Each is entitled to the honest opinion of all. And there is but one way to get an honest opinion upon any subject whatever. The person giving the opinion must be free from fear. The merchant must not fear to lose his custom, the doctor his practice, nor the preacher his pulpit. There can be no advance without liberty.

THE HINDOO SCEPTIC.

I think till I'm weary with thinking,
Said the sad-eyed Hindoo king,
And I see but shadows around me—
Illusion in everything.

How knowest thou aught of God,
Of his favor or his wrath?
Can the little fish tell what the lion thinks,
Or map out the eagle's path?

Can the finite the Infinite search?
Did the blind discover the stars?
Is the thought I think a thought
Or a throb of the brain in its bars?

For aught that my eye can discern,
Your God is what you think good,
Yourself flashed back from the glass
When the light pours on it in flood.

You preach to me to be just;
And this is his realm, you say,
And the good are dying of hunger,
And the bad gorge every day,

You say that he loveth mercy,
And the famine is not yet gone;
That he hateth the shedder of blood,
And He slayeth us every one.

You say that my soul shall live,
That the spirit can never die;
If He were content when I was not,
Why not when I have passed by?

You say I must have a meaning;
So must dung, and its meaning is flowers.
What if our souls are but nurture
For lives that are greater than ours?

When the fish swims out of the water,
When the bird soars out of the blue,
Man's thought may transcend man's knowledge,
And your God be no reflex to you. —[ENGLISH SPECTATOR.

"THOU KNOWEST."

EPIGRAPH OF ADAM ISAACS MENKENS.

Thou knowest! If a star that shone fair as the rest
Falls out of the sky;
Lord, Thou knowest the madness that burnt in its breast.
If a singing bird die
Of the poison it drank from the strange, wild flowers,
Thou knowest how fair
Were the leaves that allured; and Thou knowest the hours
That tempt—Thou canst spare.
If these beautiful eyes that are closed now have been Over blind in tears—
When the world could not see if the Spirit within
Was shaken with fears;
When the silences barren of music came down—
And the hours void of light—
Thou knowest, Oh Lord! And Thou if the soul that is gone
Hath dipped all its white
In the dye of the world!—Thou alone canst remember
Her soul as the leaf
Of the lily. Thou too canst remember
The sins and the grief!
But thou hast pity, men have none; and the flower,
Shunned and trampled on here,
Soiled and blighted—Ah love of thine own mystic power,
May be purified there!
Close rare white lids on the wonderful eyes,
Dark fringes shade the face
With its terrible gifts! Oh radiant guise
Of beauty and grace—
Rest, rest with thy song half sung, and thy Spell
Sweet where it began
Sleep softly, Oh passion rocked heart, sleep softly and well;
God judges—not man.
Yes, He knows that man will pass where thou liest and sneer,
Perhaps, and condemn,
Saints with unsullied garments thou needest not fear;
Child, sleep! spite of them,
In thy grave. Oh world! pausing here but to deride!
Peace bigoted horde!
An angel may watch here as one watched beside
The grave of our Lord.

Galveston, Texas.

MOLLIE E. MOORE.

"Blame not thyself too much, I said, nor blame
Too much the sons of men and barbarous laws;
These were the rough ways of the world till now.
Henceforth thou hast a helper, me, that know
That woman's cause is man's; they rise or sink
Together, dwarfed or godlike, bond or free."

THE INDUSTRIAL BROTHERHOOD.

We give below the objects sought to be attained by this organization, which is to become to mechanics and other working men what the Patrons of Husbandry is to farmers—a means of self protection. It has our best wishes for its success. The Order is under the Presidency of Robert Schilling, of Cleveland, Ohio. The Deputy President for the State of California is William Dunn, of Sacramento. The Order is now established in thirty-two States of the Union, and is in a flourishing condition. The purposes of the organization are as follows:

I. To bring within the folds of organization every department of productive industry, making knowledge a standpoint for action, and industrial, moral and social worth—not wealth—the true standard of individual and national greatness.

II. To secure to the toilers a proper share of the wealth that they create; more of the leisure that properly belongs to them; more society advantages; more of the benefits, privileges, and emoluments of the world; in a word all those rights and privileges necessary to make them capable of enjoying, appreciating, defending and perpetuating the blessings of republican institutions.

III. To arrive at the true condition of the producing masses in their educational, moral and financial condition, we demand from the several States, and from the national government the establishment of bureaus of labor statistics.

IV. The establishment of co-operative institutions, productive and distributive.

V. The reserving of public lands, the heritage of the people, for the actual settler—not another acre for railroads or speculators.

VI. The abrogation of all laws that do not bear equally upon capital and labor, the removal of unjust technicalities, delays and discriminations in the administration of justice, and the adoption of measures providing for the health and safety of those engaged in mining, manufacturing and building pursuits.

VII. The enactment of a law to compel chartered corporations to pay their employees at least once in every month, in full, for labor performed during the preceding month, in the lawful money of the country.

VIII. The enactment of a law giving mechanics and other laborers a first lien on their work.

IX. The abolishment of the contract system on national, state and municipal work.

X. To inaugurate a system of public markets, to facilitate the exchange of the productions of farmers and mechanics, tending to do away with middlemen and speculators.

XI. To inaugurate systems of cheap transportation to facilitate the exchange of commodities.

XII. The substitution of arbitration for strikes, whenever and wherever employers are willing to meet on equitable grounds.

XIII. The prohibition of the importation of all servile races, the discontinuance of all subsidies granted to national vessels bringing them to our shores, and the abrogation of the Burlingame treaty.

XIV. To advance the standard of American mechanics by the enactment and enforcement of equitable apprentice laws.

XV. To abolish the system of contracting the labor of convicts in our prisons and reformatory institutions.

XVI. To secure for both sexes equal pay for equal work.

XVII. The reduction of the hours of labor to eight per day, so that laborers may have more time for social enjoyment and intellectual improvement, and be enabled to reap the advantages conferred by labor-saving machinery, which their brains have created.

XVIII. To prevail upon the Government to establish a just standard of distribution between capital and labor by providing a pure national circulating medium based upon the faith and resources of the nation, issued directly to the people, without the intervention of any system of banking corporations.

Special Notices.

Dr. E. E. Dodge has removed to 123 Ellis street.

DR. BANCROFT'S treatment for Dyspepsia and General Debility has benefitted me more than all the medicine I have used for many years.

C. A. BROWN, 519 Sycamore street, Milwaukee.

Dr. Bancroft's office is 204 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

For the very best Photographs go to Bradley & Rulofson's Gallery, with an elevator, 429 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Those suffering from that most annoying of the minor miseries of human life—a cold in the head—or from catarrh in any form, should try Dr. Evory's Diamond Catarrh Remedy. Just try it—that's all. Sold at this office, and by all druggists.

Send Austin Kent one dollar for his pamphlets on Free Love and Marriage, etc. He has been seventeen years physically helpless, confined to his bed and chair, is poor and needs the money. He sends four or five well-written essays for one dollar. His address is AUSTIN KENT, Stockholm, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., Box 44.

Farmers, do you know that the Babcock Fire Extinguisher is a sure exterminator of gophers, squirrels, etc., and that it will effectually kill insects on fruit trees, with little trouble and scarcely any expense. One charge of the machine will exterminate all the squirrels in a hundred-acre field. A new machine can be purchased at this office at a reduced price, in perfect order, and with six charges. Address "COMMON SENSE," 236 Montgomery street.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, NO. 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

COMMON SENSE can be purchased at the following places in this city: Patten's, 773 Market; Snow's, 319 Kearny; Sharp's, 234 Montgomery, and at this office, 236 Montgomery street, up stairs. Price of single copies, ten cents.

COMMON SENSE.

A Journal of Live Ideas.

OL. 1.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1874.

No. 20.

Signs of the Times.

To abuse Tilton is not a good way to defend Beecher.

An early eruption of Mount Etna is predicted by scientists who have watched the indications for years.

The Scotch people have shown symptoms of degeneration in cases where they have abandoned the old fashioned oat-meal for butchers' meat and tea.

A potatoe dealer in London has written a book of poems almost equal to the literary curiosity published by Bancroft last year, Songs of the Sandhills.

Jas. Freeman Clarke says the old Syrian shepherd used to go before, and call his sheep after him, but the modern teacher of religion follows his sheep with a whip.

The Kingdom of Heaven, a monthly journal printed in Boston, was, it is claimed, established by the angels to prove that Spiritualism has prepared the way for the second coming of Christ.

Spiritualism is making very rapid progress in England. The latest phase of manifestation is the painting of pictures, in colors, the white paper being placed in a drawer without brush or paint.

The North American Turner Bund, which includes all the Turners in the country, have resolved to take an active part in politics. Their platform repudiates both of the old political parties.

Samuel J. Tilden, the Democratic candidate for Governor of New York, is a distinguished lawyer and an old Tammany Hall politician. He is very wealthy. Governor Dix will probably be his opponent.

The Secretary of the Treasury has instructed the Director of the Mint to take the necessary steps in his department to procure statistical information regarding the product of the country in gold, silver and quicksilver.

Queen Victoria has concluded to pay the Prince of Wales' debts, amounting to 600,000*lbs.* Her son claims that these debts were incurred by his taking upon himself the court receptions during the Queen's retirement.

Bishop Merrill and wife of the M. E. Church, a late importation in California, the Evening Post says, treated Mrs. Van Cott discourteously, refusing to take her by the hand. Mrs. Merrill "turned up her nose" at the female Wesley.

Walter Ness, who went from England to superintend the working of collieries in Central India, says there are millions of tons of magnetic iron ore on the surface, in the Warorar District, yielding over 70 per cent. of metallic iron. He has also found coal in quantity there.

Josh Billings is worth $250,000. The reward of bad spelling.

Paper which will not burn in any ordinary fire has been invented in England.

A machine for separating slate from coal has been set up at a Pennsylvania coal mine, and does its work admirably.

The church in Bridgeport, Conn., over which the Rev. Olympia Brown presides, is divided, nearly one-half of the members having withdrawn.

The best enamelled cloth in the world is now made in the United States. It possesses in a remarkable degree the appearance of real leather.

Justice Field, of the U. S. Supreme Court, has decided that Chinese women (complained of as prostitutes) cannot be forced to return to China against their will.

M. Godin's establishment at Guise accommodates nine hundred workmen and their families, cost $400,000, and pays six per cent. interest on the money invested.

A Methodist Conference has been held in Rome. Twenty preachers were present, representing as many centres of religious labor, and reporting 1,007 communicants.

The N. Y. Herald and the Post are discussing the question whether women are most in danger from the wickedness of ministers, or ministers from the wickedness of women.

Miss Isadore Pratt, of Massachusetts, has succeeded in gaining admittance to the Royal Art Academy, at Berlin, but, being "only a woman," her name does not appear on the roll of students.

Silicium, which was once regarded as an impurity in cast iron, has taken rank at last as an indispensable element in that metal when destined for conversion into steel by the Bessemer process.

Thomas K. Beecher, in a letter to the Christian Union, says of his brother, Henry Ward: "Of his personal truth, purity, honor and piety I have never had for a moment a doubt that was based upon trustworthy information."

Henry S. Olecott, one of the editors of the New York Sun, visited the Eddy family in Chittenden, Vt., and wrote four columns descriptive of the spirit materializations he saw there. He was fully convinced of the genuineness of the manifestations.

A reporter of the New York Herald, in a recent interview with Foster, the medium, was told by an intelligence purporting to be the spirit of Shakespeare, that most of the world renowned plays were written by Lord Bacon. It is a well known fact that when a liar goes to a medium, he generally receives lies in reply, therefore the value of this communication depends much upon the character of the interviewer.

[For Common Sense.]

THE USE OF SPIRITUALISM.

The Corn Hill Magazine, in Thackeray's time, favored Spiritualism; for Thackeray was a Spiritualist. But it was not found to pay, and when he died the Corn Hill became strongly anti-spiritual. A sapient writer in its columns, lately commenting upon Prof. Wallace's able articles in the Fortnightly, says, in words which several California papers have thought worth reprinting, and which the editor Overland Monthly once more re-echoes, that on Wallace's own showing it is not worth while to examine into the claims of Spiritualism, because such examination must either end in the exposure of a delusion, or else in the loss to us of all that the world has hitherto hoped for in the future state. By which the writer can mean nothing other than the orthodox heaven or hell, although he goes on to explain that it will be a great disappointment to him and millions of his fellows to learn that they cannot hope to see or to live in the presence of God and Christ, and that they will not necessarily be any less foolish and frivolous when they awake on the further shore than they are here now. This is not true: let the writer speak for himself. The world at large, nay even the Christian world, does not feel with him in this matter.

Scientists—beginning first in Germany—have been now for so many years engaged in destroying the foundations of all belief in the spiritual, in uprooting all trust in revelation, that Christians themselves have no longer any firm hold of their professed beliefs, whilst a very large proportion of the masses all over the Christian world, both in Catholic and Protestant countries, seems to have gravitated into utter Materialism or undisguised and unthinking Heathenism.

Francis W. Newman, under the heading "Prospects of Christianity," in his beautiful book "The Soul," published in 1860, thus speaks: "As for England and Scotland it is notorious that a horrid Heathenism has taken firm root in our town population also, and that millions have cast off all reverence for any claims of authoritative religion." This is far more true in 1874 than it was in 1860, and America may be included in the statement. What men need above all things to be now persuaded of, what millions long and yearn to be assured of, is the simple fact that they will live after death. If the writers are ignorant of this fact, they know little of the present and past history of the human mind, and are quite unfitted to write upon the subject.

The objection raised and re-echoed by these writers to an enquiry into the claims of Spiritualism, is most frivolous and absurd. Even if Spiritualism be a delusion, if it be the symptoms of some unheard of and fearful mania which is spreading at such a terrible rate over the whole civilized earth, attacking chiefly our most intelligent and our most sensitive, it is surely worthy of examination as portentous of a general epidemic of insanity. But if its commonest and simplest facts are true, it is worth while to know, even through the veriest twaddle, that our friends assuredly live again. Millions of our fellow creatures would regard the evenings of whole years well spent in interviewing twaddling spirits, just to be assured of that one fact.

It is just as unreasonable to suppose that a man by merely passing through the insensibility of death, should be cleansed of all his folly and impurity as that he should wake up a new man after a night's repose. Neither can I understand the nature of a man who holds it a loss that the righteous dead do not live with God and Christ. Many more perfect and more amiable characters than Christ have lived, and do live amongst us now. And if

God is to be an object of awe and reverence, surely comfort and freedom will not be enhanced by living continually in his actual personal presence, if such a thing can be imagined possible.

That mediums and spirits tell us nothing consistent and reliable is not true. All spirits of all shades of creed who have been in a position to know, communicating through mediums of all varieties of religious opinion, have, without any exception always agreed in describing the future state—as far as they have gone—in precisely the same terms as the Buddhists described it hundreds of years before Christ, and since these descriptions have almost all been made independently, this is itself strong presumptive evidence of their truthfulness. As far as they go they agree with the Buddhists, but none of them profess to have any personal knowledge of any sphere or heaven above the seventh, yet they all say that they are aware such do exist. The Buddhist teachers enumerate two more sets of heavens above the first series of six, one of sixteen and another set of four, above which is Nirwana. Now the Christian seer, Swedenborg, in two of his visions, states that he met with Buddhist spirits in the other world, and found them in a heaven far more exalted than any of those reached by the Christians. Moreover it is natural that it should be more easy for spirits in the lower spheres to communicate with denizens of this world than for those more exalted, further removed, and in a more etherial condition. I should expect to find that only the spirits in the lowest spheres can produce any physical manifestations, and I believe this to be invariably the fact. Hence the preponderance of twaddle, lies, foolery and nonsense at most seances. When such crowds of fools, liars and rogues leave our great cities daily for the other side, is it wonderful if many are found there when we go in search of them? Truly I think the wonder would be if it were not so. The editors and writers referred to as endorsing the opinions of the foolish writer in the Corn Hill, will not even meet with the sympathy of their readers, although they have, no doubt, been partly influenced by a contrary hope. The following passages cut from the pages of an excellent and popular novel by Rhoda Broughton, are far more in accord with the general feeling of both the Christian and Heathen world of to-day in all civilized countries, and everyone who reads them will feel that I speak truth. The heroine is bending over the death bed of her favorite sister, and says:

"As the man lives so shall he die." As Barbara has lived so does she die—meekly—unselfishly—with a great patience, and absolute peace. Oh wise men! oh philosophers! who would take from us—who have all but taken from us—our blessed land, the land over whose borders our Barbara at that smile seems setting her feet—you may be right—I for one know not! I am weary of your prose and counsel. But when you take it away, for God's sake give us something better instead. Who, while they kneel, with the faint hand of their life's life in theirs, can be satisfied with the PROBABILITY of meeting again? God, God, give us certainty. Nay, friends, our Barbara is not at all afraid. But which of us, I pray you, could go with such valiant cheer to meet the one prime terror of the nations, as she is doing? Our Barbara is asleep! to awake—when? where? we know not, only we altogether hope that when next she opens her blue eyes it will be in the sunshine of God's august smile—God, through life and death, her friend."

Again, Christianity teaches that a belief in creeds, and a simple acceptance of propositions, wipes out all past crime and its consequences—which is clearly false—substitutes a whipping-boy to bear the punishment of the believer's transgressions, and ensures for him an eternal futurity of infinite happiness, intelligence and virtue, without any reference to his present qualifications for such a state of perfection. I do not know that whipping-boys have ever been found to be necessarily promotive of virtue in those for whose benefit they have been provided; certainly they have not in this case. Spiritualism and Buddhism teach that from the natural consequences of ignorance, crime and folly there is no escape; that every transgression of natural law necessarily brings its appropriate punishment, and that there is no royal road to happiness but by the assiduous cultivation of virtue, whether in this state or the state to come. Since Christianity has clearly been so great a failure, perhaps it may be worth while to try upon the world the effect of a diametrically opposite system of teaching. Yours faithfully,

MEDICUS.

[For Common Sense.]
ABOUT THE TRINITY

The multitude cannot be aware of the freedom of conversation between educated and thinking men in their confidential moments, on religious subjects. The dogmas of the day are ridiculed by those who outwardly give in an adhesion to popular theology, while in their hearts, and private conferences they are regarded as absolute nonsense. Many a popular belief is thoroughly absurd when reason is brought to bear upon it. Perhaps no doctrine is more prominent in the religious world than that of the Trinity. Let us see what sort of a test it will bear.

It is asserted that the Godhead consists of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost—three in one—and that the three rule the Universe. The son is the Savior, and, according to some, equal to the Father; sent to suffer and be sacrificed for the salvation of men &c. Why such a sacrifice should be made, of the best man of all, is not clear to any rational mind, and when we come to think upon the subject we find insuperable objections to the truth of the dogma of the Trinity. Thus, most educated and thoughtful men can come to no other conclusion than that the myriads of orbs that nightly are seen in the heavens are inhabited by intelligent beings like those of earth. The telescope tells us that some of the planets are strikingly like the earth in climate, and the revelations of Spectrum Analysis have rendered it probable that all the spheres are composed of like materials. If this earth needed a Savior, can any one assume reasonably that the inhabitants of another globe ought not to need one as well? And if one is granted to us, is it not consistent to suppose a like boon has been given to them? Further, if one is given to them, the Trinity becomes no longer a Trinity, but the Godhead is enlarged to infinity as the orbs of the heavens are infinite in number. We will suppose that the wise men on some great central orb were possessed of full knowledge of our theology, and suppose in their lectures to crowded houses they should point to our little planet, a mere speck dimly seen away off in space, and tell the assembled multitudes "the people on that insignificant star are so foolish or self important as to believe that they have produced a being who is one third of the Godhead that makes the destinies of all these millions of worlds, most of which are thousand of years older as well as a thousand times larger." Does it require a great effort of the imagination to hear the guffaw such an announcement would produce?

This doctrine of the Trinity arose among a people that believed in the geocentric idea—that the earth was the centre of the universe, and the largest and most important member of it—and the doctrine ought to have gone by the board when the heliocentric truths of Galileo were promulgated. The dogma of the Trinity, and that of the earth having every other world dancing around and making obeisance to it, originated in the same era. One is as devoid of reason as the other, and both should be allowed to go together with the trumpery of the past. They are so consigned by all untrammelled thinkers.

TRUANT.

PHYSICAL MANIFESTATIONS.

A letter from a reliable gentleman in Santa Cruz gives an account of a seance held there last week by Dr. Crawford, of 704 Howard street, San Francisco. Dr. Crawford, who has recently been used by the spirits as a medium for the ring test and other physical manifestations, accepted an invitation to visit Santa Cruz, and give a seance. The meeting being open to the public, was attended by a number of boisterous young men, whose noise, commenced at the very opening of the seance, must seriously interfere with the manifestations; consequently the money paid was returned at the door, and the meeting dismissed. On the next evening perfect quiet prevailed, and the manifestations were entirely satisfactory, even to the skeptics, who admitted that the medium could not himself have performed what was done. He was securely fastened, and in this condition, the ropes remaining intact, the rings were placed on his limbs and around his body, inside the ropes. His coat was also taken off while his hands were tied. The coat was thrown on the feet of a lady who had mentally asked the spirits to manifest their powers in some way to her. When the coat was removed one of the committee was stooping behind the chair, and had hold of it, and says Dr. C. did not raise up or stir in his seat. Our correspondent continues as follows:

After this Dr. C., standing near a table, upon which there was a small silver bell, a gentleman placed one hand upon Dr. C's. head, and the other upon his left shoulder, and Dr. C. clasped both of his hands around the gentleman's arm. While standing thus, in the dark, the bell first tinkled a moment over the table, and was then placed in Dr. C's. mouth. The man says that he knows the Doctor did not stir, and could not have placed the bell in his own mouth, and the whole committee agreed that he was so tied that he could not get his hands out of the rope and replace them. The whole exhibition was eminently satisfactory, and we know that no human aid was given. Now if Dr. C. was not aided by spirits, as he claims, will some one inform us how the thing was done?

Dr. Crawford has returned to the city, and may be found at his room, 704 Howard.

ORDER OF EULIS.—A few weeks since it was stated in this paper that Dr. P. B. Randolph had authorized the organization in this city of a branch of this secret Order, of which he is the founder. We have since been informed by a letter from the Doctor, which has been mislaid, that the Order is not new, it being a branch of the Rosicrucians, a very ancient organization. He further says that it is contrary to the policy of the Order to make any public announcement concerning it; nevertheless, having made one statement which was in some respects incorrect, we venture to try again, try being one of the mottoes of the Order.

Rev. James Lynne was struck by lightning and killed, while standing on the bank of Skunk river, Iowa, reproving wicked boys for bathing on the holy Sabbath day. The Sunday school teacher explained the matter by saying God so loved the holy man that he took him up to heaven in a flash of fire.

GOD IN THE CONSTITUTION.—NUMBER FIVE.

OBJECT OF THE AMENDMENT.

In the address to President Lincoln the delegation said:
 "We ask for no union of Church and State—that is a thing we utterly repudiate."

Let us take a glance at their speeches and publications. At the Convention at Oskaloosa, in November, 1869, Rev. G. S. Adams, after reading the amendment to the preamble, continued:

"And we further ask that such changes be introduced into the body of the Constitution as may be necessary to give effect to these amendments in the preamble."

The desire to honor God is merely a pretext. It is the power they want, as the pamphlet they largely circulated at that convention proves, and it would be well for every lover of liberty to read it. The author of the amendment, Rev. James Wallace, in his speech, says:

This amendment gives supremacy to Bible laws; we are to obey God rather than man. No permanent reformation can be effected until the rulers of the nation acknowledge God and obey the only law of moral reform contained in his word. Entire subjection to Jesus Christ as Lord of all, is the great principle of national reform.

Prof. J. McIlvaine, among other things, said:

When you take the ground that this nation shall not acknowledge God because you as individuals do not believe in him, you are unreasonable. You cannot be gratified. You may set your hearts at rest upon this point; for we will defend this right of our nation with our property, our lives, and our sacred honor. Necessity is laid upon us to do it.

The Christian Statesman says:

Christian morality is to be enforced over all the inhabitants of its (America's) soil. And again the same paper, Dec. 15, 1871, says: How long will it be before the Christian masses of this country can be roused to enact a law compelling their public servants to respect the Sabbath?

Rev. A. D. Mayo talks as follows:

The majority of the people who best understand are determined that the Bible shall not be expelled from the public schools. This Republic is not a atheistic nor socialistic Utopia, but is a practical government, made by practical men, who believe in Almighty God, (?) who have the wisdom to maintain, and if need be the strong arm to defend it. We sent 500,000 soldiers to heaven, and sunk uncounted millions of dollars in the sea, to defend American civilization from an aristocracy proclaiming the divine right of human slavery. And, if need be, we have a million more young men and the rest of our property to protect our civilization against that anarchy which begins with rebellion against Almighty God.

These extracts show conclusively what spirit animates the whole religious body, ready for bloodshed as soon as they have power in their hands through the amendment to the Constitution, which they want to baptize in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, in the blood of all Liberalists of whatever name. They want to inaugurate another war fiercer than that we have just gone through, or another St. Bartholomew's night. They would like to revive the fagot and the stake, and hang and drown the "witches." Orthodoxy has not lost the harsh metal since Calvin. The simple reason why they don't hang, burn and torture the Infidels is because they can not. They are fully aware that they are fast losing their ground, and Liberalism is spreading rapidly all over the land; yes, all over the world; therefore they are trying shrewd maneuvering to retrieve their lost prestige, and with Jesuitical cunning coerce the unthinking masses, and with their oily tongues make them their tools in the name of religion. And for this they are setting all the clerical machinery to work, enlisting wily, scheming politicians, through whom they intend to get the influence of Congress and legislative assemblies, as well as governors of States and judges all over the country, to carry their intention to a successful end. In proof of this I will quote from a letter of Rev. J. P. Newman, pastor of the Methodist Church at Washington, D. C., to another Rev. in Iowa, copied from the Dubuque Herald, in regard to the re-election of Senator Harlan:

As a mutual friend I drop you a few earnest words in behalf of Senator Harlan's re-election to the U. S. Senate. You know the importance of early and earnest action. The members elected to the next legislature elect the senator. It is, therefore, necessary that the right men be nominated, and hence attention must be given to the primary meetings. I am glad to say to you that Senator H. is regular in his attendance at church, and his influence is in the right direction. I know personally that he stands high with the Administration, and has influence with the President, and is held in high esteem by his fellow senators. * * Hoping that you will in all suitable ways interest yourself for Mr. Harlan, I am truly yours,

J. P. NEWMAN.

This may serve as a specimen of the wire-pulling which is steadily going on. The omens in the politico-religious heavens foretell the gathering storm. Therefore, Liberalists, do not be found sleeping at your guns, but prepare, for the plotting bigots are using every means, honest and dishonest, to promote the glory of the church militant. How long would it be before they would prohibit all public religious worship that was not measured by their creed? Does anyone think it improbable or impossible? I have heard myself the remark "they wished it was so that none but a Christian could hold an office." God forbid! We have had enough of Christian office-holders in the Indian and Freedman's Bureau, the Credit-Mobilier, Railroad and Land Monopolists. Let us rather try honest men, non-professors of religion, but at heart religious, whose acts accord with their words.

A FRIEND OF RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.

The reduction of each strong hold of formal theology is now seen to be, like the result of a skillful siege, mainly a question of time. The teaching of history now is that wherever science and theology join issue, the latter must sooner or later abandon its disputed field. A hundred points of doctrine, each one deemed essential once, have each in turn been abandoned to victorious Science. Yet each time, after science has won its victory, theology is hasty in proclaiming peace.

[For Common Sense.]

THE DIVINITY OF CHRIST.

Has it ever occurred to you who believe that Christ was the only son of God, and equal with the Father, that his apostles never gave him this exclusive divine character? They gave many evidences of great goodness, magnetic power equally great, and clairvoyant perception; but as the apostles aver, they were likewise gifted with the same power, only in a less degree. They could not have taken them as evidences of divinity, and yet we have no other evidence sufficient to justify such a very singular supposition.

In no instance has the apostles afforded us any evidence that Christ possessed any knowledge of the laws governing matter, much less of creation, and at the same time it would appear that Christ was in nowise remiss in inculcating the faith within him. He never so much as attempted to correct or disabuse their minds of the many absurdities contained in the old scriptures; but on the contrary he endeavored in his teachings to sustain the old prophets by claiming to fulfill their prophecies, even to the small observance of riding on a virgin ass! Does it not appear evident that if he had made any pretension to an exclusively divine origin, and co-equal with the Father, he would have endeavored to give them some evidence of it? No! he was content to fulfill the measure of prophecy. The Messiah, or anointed one, was to come out of the house of David, and as Joseph was of that family it was claimed in his favor. The over zealous apostle, however, set the claim aside by asserting that Joseph was not his father, but that he was the illegitimate son of God! Has it not occurred to you that this is the most abhorrent to common sense in our conception of the creator of anything that could be conceived?

In these latter days man has attained to a conception of some of the laws governing matter. He finds them uniform and unvarying. He finds that a certain combination of elementary matter will as certainly resolve themselves into a certain definite body; that a certain germ or seed will, with the same precision, germinate into its parent growth. He finds this law as unvarying in animate nature. In all they reproduce their kind, and in all the role of reproduction is performed in the time allotted to its kind. He finds the same laws governing our solar and planetary system. They are accurately poised in space, performing their respective evolutions with such precision that the transit of any of these bodies can be determined with mathematical certainty. And yet, further, he is taught by celestial and superior intelligences that our solar system is but one of many similar systems, and yet, still beyond, a great parent center, and this great univervulum of worlds filling the immensity of space are all moving in obedience of one uniform and harmonious law. And it is but reasonable to suppose that the law of motion and vitality are inseparable, and if that law was abrogated or suspended all nature would perish!! When we find all in obedience of a superintending intelligence, we can but recognise and bow in adoration to the omnipotent one whose vitalisation pervadeth all matter! We can but proclaim,

"All are but parts of one stupendous whole Whose body nature is, and God the soul."

Can we recognize any other God? can there be other Gods to whom devotion is due? Yet the biblical religionists would have us believe the unvarying law of creation was abrogated in the creation of our little globe and its inhabitants. Not only in the limited time of its creation, but in the singular manner of its completion in making man, but yet more singular manner of making woman, which would appear to have been but an unsatisfactory experiment; for it appears that in obeying the erratic law of their being they violated some other law, which caused their creator to be angry, and he cursed them. Rather hard on the woman to be cursed for violating a law, having herself been created in violation of all law. But we are told that God finally relented! and, repenting of his anger, determined to remove the curse in quite as novel a way as their creation, viz., by begetting a son out of the accursed race who should take their sins on himself; and if they failed to burden him with their many sins they surely should be damned!! We are required to believe all this or suffer the same penalty; and are charitably told that by faith all this is possible; yet are not instructed how to acquire this singular saving faith.

If you can think Jesus of Nazareth capable of propagating such doctrine, you do injustice to him, as well as to our Father in heaven, and if you adhere to your faith in this divinity you must throw aside the God of creation. They cannot co-exist. We have no evidence that Christ ever made such a preposterous claim. He claimed to be the son of man. He was not insane, having taught one of the best codes of morals given to man, and illustrated them in his life. He was said to be a learned man in his age and generation; was wont to dispute and confute the learned Rabis in the scriptures, and was undoubtedly better qualified to make a record of his teachings than any of the apostles; yet we have no such record, and are obliged to take the writings of others, written many years after his death, and are required to believe in their incongruities—one of which is that he did not claim to be the only son of God when he taught them to pray to our Father.

But if the apostles had any doubts of his special divinity, or failed to make it clear, the reverend council of bishops assembled at Nice settled the question by declaring and making it obligatory that the son in essence is equal to the Father, and that the cross and images are proper objects of devotion. If any of Christ's epistles were in existence, those reverend church men rejected them!! How can you accept these puerile epistles and dogmas of men, when you have the luminous pages, spread over myriads of worlds, traced by the unerring hand of divine wisdom? It admits of no arguments; the one shows the fallibility of man, the other the infallibility of God.

LIGHT.

Pierre Blot had a theory that there was a large, unnecessary waste in the kitchen, and that if people only knew how to economize the articles used in preparing meats the cost of living would be reduced a half, while the pleasure of eating would be enhanced. He started an economical kitchen in Brooklyn, and offered to furnish meals at a small cost to families, sending them out at the proper hours, and thus saving the families the trouble and expense of that branch of housekeeping. But the scheme fell through after a month's trial. Then he opened a large restaurant, and began by giving a large banquet to the press. It was a luxurious feast, and lasted three hours, and the dishes and wines kept coming on long after the appetite for both was sated. The professor of cookery was in his glory then. He sat at the head of the table and chattered like a magpie upon his hobby of economical cookery, while he was spending a thousand dollars in serving up the most extravagant viands to editors, reporters, and Bohemians. His restaurant failed, and he spent the last three years of his life in New Jersey, mainly in writing articles on cookery for Harper's Bazar.—Golden Age.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

COMMON SENSE is furnished to subscribers for Three Dollars per annum, in advance. Letters intended for the Business Department should be addressed:

AMANDA M. SLOOUM, BUSINESS MANAGER, 236 Montgomery st.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

The Use of Spiritualism.....	232
About the Trinity—Truant.....	233
Physical Manifestations.....	233
God in the Constitution.....	234
The Divinity of Christ—Light.....	235
Liberal Journals.....	236
Lectures of Jennie Leys.....	237
Lycœum for Self Culture.....	237
Letter from a Man of Understanding.....	238
Ah Hea Lee.....	239
Women and the Churches—Sara A. Underwood.....	240
An Extract—Windle.....	240
Spiritualism—Golden Age.....	241
Brief Extracts.....	241
Poetry and Special Notices.....	242

COMMON SENSE.

WILLIAM N. SLOOUM, EDITOR.

AMANDA M. SLOOUM, ASSISTANT.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, SEPT. 26, 1874.

The most efficient aid the readers of this paper can render COMMON SENSE is to pay their subscriptions, and induce others to subscribe. Send the paper to your friends.

Tilton's last statement makes four full pages of the Chicago Tribune. It contains a vast array of facts, closing with a scathing denunciation of Beecher.

A grand camp meeting of Spiritualists will be held at the Gervais camp ground near Salem, Oregon, for three days, commencing on Friday morning, October 9th. All are invited; half-fares secured.

Brittain's Journal, Vol. 2, No. 3, is full of good things, and is illustrated with a beautiful steel engraving of S. B. Brittan jr., who was killed on board the gunboat Essex, at the capture of Fort Henry.

"MME. SARAH MARTELLE," a medium, writes from San Diego, to the Banner of Light, saying she has made many converts to the spiritual philosophy in Nevada and California. We are glad to hear of it.

REV. D. A. DRYDEN, a liberal clergyman of the M. E. Church, has been invited by the Annual Conference to disavow his connection with the church, because he preaches sentiments not approved by the Conference. He declines to do so without a trial, and has been reappointed to preach in the little village of Hollistin.

REV. DR. CARPENTER continues to hold meetings at Maguire's New Theatre, on Bush street, on the forenoons of Sunday. In his sermon on Sunday last he alluded to the materialistic tendencies of scientific men, referring to the late address of Tyndall, the works of Darwin and others. Modern science, he said, has gone back to a belief in the eternity of matter. If man is evolved from gross matter, Mr Carpenter said, then this life is the highest we shall have. If spirit depends upon matter for its existence, then this life is all. He had faith in the promise of Jesus that we shall inherit eternal life. Dr. Carpenter's discourse, contained many thoughts not here referred to, yet it was to the writer a disappointment.

LIBERAL JOURNALS.

The following, from the Truth Seeker, of New York, is applicable not only to that excellent journal, but also to COMMON SENSE.

It is an auspicious time. The enquiring mind of the country is reaching out for new light and new truths. A spirit of investigation and examination is spreading over the land. Confidence in old creeds and old dogmas is giving away. The light of science and truth is dispelling the darkness of the middle ages, and overthrowing the Pagan mythologies we call Christianity. The contest between truth and error is waxing warmer and warmer and must be fought out. We want to "take a hand" in this momentous contest and if possible "be in at the death." We would joyfully see the Liberals of the country feel a greater interest in this struggle—to be willing to make an effort—some sacrifice to aid others in getting the scales of superstition off their eyes, so as to be able to clearly see the truth when presented. We would rejoice to see them willing to spend a little money for this purpose. Had we half the zeal, the energy and the disposition to "do something," our opponents exhibit, great results might be accomplished. Mental liberty is a boon we prize for ourselves—we feel it a happy escape we have made from the evils and snares of priestcraft, and let us not feel indifferent to the welfare of others. All humanity are our brothers and sisters, and let us be willing to make some exertion to bring them to the truth as it is in nature, science and reason. Let us sustain Liberal papers and books—let us encourage enquirers to read them—let us second all laudable efforts made to raise the standard of free thought, free speech and free religion. Our cause is really a glorious one—we are the apostles of liberty and truth—we are the light of the earth—we have a mission to perform and a work to accomplish. Let us not timidly grope our way through life—let us "hold up our heads among men;" let us honor ourselves and our cause—let us do all we can to benefit our fellow-men—let us help roll forward the car of progress, and let us add our mite to support The Truth Seeker, and make it a permanent success.

The Truth Seeker deserves all the support it may receive. We do not look upon any Liberal journal as a rival; but all as co-workers in a good cause. There are free-thinkers enough in the country to give them all adequate support. In California we have thousands of Spiritualists, and thousands of others who are in favor of rationalistic religion. COMMON SENSE presents for its patrons something more than a mere negation, something besides opposition to what is called Christianity. It is an advocate of morality, and an incentive to noble endeavor in all the walks of life. It seeks to make men wiser and better. Some good people have called the paper iconoclastic, and have expressed the fear that no good purpose is served by removing the faith of any soul, and giving nothing in its stead. We do give something in its stead, and something far more hopeful and encouraging than the gloomy faith of the Christian. Spiritualism is the hope of the world to-day. But, even if we offered nothing; if we merely took away the crutches on which these deluded people hobble through life, when they might walk erect, self reliant and self sustaining, we should be doing a good work; such a work as the Boston Investigator has done for many years, teaching men to live well this life, and the next, if there is one, will take care of itself. Dependence upon Christ, or upon any help outside of ourselves is unphilosophical, contrary to all the known laws of nature, and repugnant even to the moral sense of people not warped by years of false teaching. We feel that we are doing a good work, and we confidently ask our friends so sustain us in it. We need a larger subscription list, prompt payment of dues, and more than all, we need to dispose of the stock of the Company in order to enable us to purchase a job office, and place our business on a firm basis. Who will assist?

LECTURES OF JENNIE LEYS.

The best and most eloquent discourses of this lady yet given in this city were those of Sunday last. In the afternoon she arraigned Christianity on charges of upholding crime, causing bloodshed and blocking the wheels of progress. It was a thrilling discourse. In the evening she explained the origin of Christian symbols, fast days, etc., showing that much that is called Christianity is "revamped" Paganism. She briefly traced the history of Christu, the Indian prototype of Christ, showing the similarity in the two stories of their lives. Christ appears in other and older religions. That the man Jesus of Nazareth actually lived, was true, but much that is said of him is false. There never will be any Savior outside of ourselves. The soul is its own redeemer, and fidelity in life the only means of salvation. The New Testament teaches many valuable lessons, and some may also be culled from the Old, but the books of the Hebrew Bible should be remanded to their place among the allegories and histories of antiquity. They are not worthy to be called the Word of God. A "word of God" that can be revised by man, whenever men please, is too much the work of man to receive the reverence of rational beings. The lecture was most highly appreciated by those who had attended the lectures of Professor Chaney on Astrology, and had thus been prepared to receive understandingly all the speaker said. Their were many gaps in the discourse that only those familiar with the subject could properly fill.

Allusion was made to the price of admission, 25 cents, the speaker saying that she would be glad to have the price lowered, so that all might attend. Her own expenses are very heavy. Her health is such that she has to have daily magnetic treatment, and she was obliged to pay the expenses of herself and nurse to the State, support both while here, and incur other expenses on account of ill health. If she had the means she would gladly speak to the people without price.

To-morrow the subject for afternoon and evening will be: "The logic of history as to Social Freedom." It is a subject which should call out a large audience.

THE OVERLAND for October contains its usual variety of well written articles, prose and poetry. Among the contributors are Joaquin Miller, Livingstone Stone, J. P. Widney, A. G. Bierce, Stephen Powers, T. A. Harcourt, and Walter M. Fisher. This magazine, the pride of intelligent Californians, should be liberally supported.

LYCEUM FOR SELF CULTURE.

Last Sunday afternoon this institution was removed from the Dashaway Hall to the Social Hall, No. 39 Fourth street. The attendance was good, and many strange faces were seen there. After music, and other exercises, the meeting was opened by the Rev. Mr. Wythe on "The Scientific Evidences of the Christian Religion." The Rev. gentleman spoke for about thirty minutes with a calm and kind attention to the wants of his auditors, and a very clear enunciation of his views of Christian evidences. He relies mostly upon the intuitive or internal conviction of religious truth. He makes a distinction between scientific facts and philosophical theories. The theories change, the facts never do; also between religion and theology. Religion is love, kindness, charity and toleration, while theology is bigotry and ill-will and persecution. He advocates the former, but has little care or respect for the latter. He thinks the Bible a message of God to man; that it describes human nature exactly, and gives the best directions for its guidance and well being.

He was listened to with attention and respect, and after music was followed by Mr. H. L. Knight, who spoke in the same kind spirit on the other side. He thanked the Rev. gentleman for laying his views before the Lyceum for consideration. He thought it the safest and best to let the clergy set out their own case. The free-thinkers could then see it in all its strength, and if not satisfactory might lay it aside. He did not think it satisfactory. He agreed with much that the gentleman had said about science and theory, and religion and theology; but said he cannot rely upon these intuitive or internal convictions, because they point in so many different ways. All religious sects and persuasions have them, and each feels his own religion to be true. No one can convince another in this way. But scientific knowledge is of a different character. It proves itself by its results. We may never be able to prove to the Chinaman that Christ is better than Confucius, but one experiment is enough to convince him that an iron-clad steamer is far ahead of an old junk. As to the Bible, it is an open question whether it is a message from God, or only a cunningly devised fable from the hands of man. He had no objection to hear from God. On the contrary he would willingly, nay eagerly, listen and obey if God indeed should speak, but he did not want to be deceived. He did not think the Bible describes human nature accurately, or is the guide the Rev. gentleman represented it to be. It seems to say, and theologians are agreed that it does say, that men and women can believe what they please, can be good Christians if they have a mind to be so, and that if they will not, God will damn and burn them forever. He thought this not true. In fact science has shown that man is made up from his organization at birth, and his education and other subsequent conditions. Wise and good men have ceased to hate and persecute people on account of differences of religion, and it is absurd to suppose that God is not as wise and good as they are. Here science and religion point different ways, and science is right. Several other speakers came forward and kept up quite a lively debate. Miss Woodthorpe gave a recitation in her usual happy style. Mrs. Melville gave a feu de joie of music, and the meeting adjourned till next Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

LETTER FROM A "MAN OF UNDERSTANDING,"

An unknown correspondent sends us a letter full of questions concerning Spiritualism, etc., which have been answered over and over again. Some of his questions are too absurd for reply, and he probably knew them to be so when he wrote them, but the following has a gleam of good sense:

If, after death, there is a progressive state, and intelligence advances as ages pass, may not there be a first intelligence, oldest of spirits, God, who knows all things?

Certainly there may, and we know of no Spiritualist who denies it—but this intelligence is the result, not the cause, of what are called the laws of Nature. Spiritualists are of all beliefs concerning deity. Some even believe in a personal God. Our correspondent goes on to say:

As I do not believe in inspiration, miracles or a future state, so I do not believe in your Spiritualistic idea, that after the candle of life is puffed out it is relighted with intelligence after death.

What our correspondent may believe is probably a matter of indifference to those of our readers who do not have to depend upon faith for a guide—who know that death is not the end but rather the beginning of real life. Our correspondent asks:

Has there ever been a well authenticated communication from the spirit world that might not have been communicated in a natural way?

All things are natural, whether physical or spiritual. Nature includes everything. But the writer evidently means to ask if the communication might not have come through the agency of living human beings. There are thousands of instances where such could not have been the case, and our correspondent must have investigated the subject very little indeed if he has not read of such cases. He supposes a case as follows:

The steamer Central America sinks in mid ocean and four hundred lives are translated to the spirit world. Why did not some one communicate to his friend in San Francisco, "our ship sunk and we died," with particulars of time and place. The first information we received of this casualty was from survivors, rescued, taken to New York, and from thence sending particulars by mail to San Francisco. If Spiritualism be true, every hour offers the proof beyond possibility of doubt in accounts of accidents at sea, casualties in distant places, wars and epidemics. If spirits can send us messages they can advise of events, especially of their own death, as soon as it occurs.

This is well, and the time will come when such information will be given daily and hourly; but our correspondent overlooks the fact that spirits are not superior to law. They are just as much under the control of law as we are, and all their manifestations must be in accordance therewith. They have frequently given information of the kind here indicated, but as yet the laws governing spirit manifestation are not sufficiently understood to enable us to receive daily proofs of this kind. The very case he mentions, that of the Central America, if our memory is not at fault, furnished indisputable proof of spirit communication. The facts are not at present at command, but we believe they were published in the Banner of Progress, a Spiritualistic journal published in this city at the time, or soon after the occurrence. The only file of the paper we have is in San Jose. The loss of the Arctic was also announced by spirit power to Judge Edmonds and others in New York before news was received by the ordinary channels. Our correspondent concludes his letter as follows:

"If you would not write uncommon nonsense confine yourselves to those facts that are within the compass of our seven [!] senses. Those things which are so utterly speculative that we can neither see, hear, smell, feel, taste nor logically comprehend them, are not within the compass of my common sense."

Perhaps the "seven senses" referred to include clairvoy- and clairaudience; but these are not as yet recognized by any but advanced thinkers; therefore we are surprised that our correspondent admits their existence even by implication. We will only add that it is too late in the day to assert that spirits are not seen, felt and heard, daily by people who are quite as intelligent as our correspondent.

THIS LIFE OR THE NEXT.

MR. EDITOR:—That only is good which results in happiness to the individual where the laws of life are not violated by the thing sought. Hence to me all preaching and theorizing about a hereafter and its conditions is totally useless. Whether life after the death of the individual is a fact or a myth is not in the least material, so far as this condition of life or being is concerned. The true philosophy of life is to enjoy it, and to enjoy life a knowledge of its laws is important. To do good to others is doing good to ourselves, and for humanity's sake let us raise the fallen by a little financial help, and not by telling them about the beauties of another world, and its glorious scenery of which they know nothing; and even if they did that knowledge would be far less valuable to the hungry man, wife and children, than a sack of flour or some half worn clothing to protect them from the storm. Less preaching and more practice; less selfishness and more charity; less working for a mythical God, and more for humanity is my religious belief.

ANOTHER OLD MAN.

[Our correspondent's suggestions are good, with slight modification. First, our ideas of another life do have great influence upon our enjoyment of this. Second, enjoyment is but one of the objects of life. It is good, but it is not all. Life is a school, and it is our duty to improve the time while we are here. If every school boy enjoyed himself in his own way, he would learn few useful lessons; and finally, charity, which is good when used with discrimination, may become an evil, an encouragement of idleness, improvidence and general uselessness. What we want is not charity so much as justice. The inequalities of life must necessarily be great, but they are made still greater by unjust laws and absurd customs. Enormous wealth and deep poverty always accompany each other, but our laws should be so formed as to prevent rather to encourage these extremes.—Ed.]

A man who has no soul except for his business is a "poor stick," a mere machine. A taste for reading is worth more than a hundred thousand dollars to him who has it.

AH HEA LEA SPEAKS.

EDITOR COMMON SENSE:—My attention was called to your paper the other day by an article headed "The People are not True to Themselves." After reading it I supposed your journal had changed hands. I thought I recognized in said article the "earmarks" of my old friend General Amwynn, of the Shop and Senate, and I turned over a page or two thinking I might find the continuation of that classic serial the "China Boy," but was agreeably surprised to find the rest of your paper in accordance with its name. Now, I wish to know why you should lug in my countrymen as a direct or indirect cause of your so-called misery? It surely ought to be no sin for my countrywomen to bear the "future workers of America," as you assert. I see by reports of your physicians (Dr. Allen Lowell) that your native American women are falling behind in their contributions to the population of the country, and the Irish and German are so fast becoming Americanized in that respect, there is no telling where to draw the line.

There might be some excuse for your article if land monopolies were not common in other States, and if railroad magnates did not boast that they carried numerous State Legislatures in their pockets, and if the working population of Massachusetts were not actually more helpless than slaves, (see Massachusetts Bureau of Labor Statistics, 1871-72,) and if crime and poverty were not increasing in exact ratio with your boasted civilization. That the sons of your working men are becoming hoodlums I do not deny; and no wonder, when the first sentence that falls on their ears is an imprecation on the heads of their fellow beings for the reason that said "beings" persist in working for their living at the highest wages that they can get from "your own flesh and blood."

That your "daughters are brought to lives of shame" I cannot deny, but what can I do about it? "A life of shame" seems to be a necessity in your civilization, and our merchants, seeing this, have, from time to time, encouraged our unmarried females to come to your country to aid your white prostitutes in keeping society pure, and your mothers and sisters safe from sexual assault in the streets of your maritime cities, (see Lecky and Buckle,) but when our young women come here for the purpose of taking the place of your white prostitutes—and thus elevating them to the plane of marriage—they are taken before your courts on frivolous charges, and are compelled to lay in a jail (that is not fit for hogs) to await the decision of your immaculate courts, and perhaps die there, as others have done before them.

Now you will please pardon the crudity of this note. If I were of your "own flesh and blood" I might be able to better conceal my thoughts under a cloud of ambiguous terms; and, by the way, what authority have you for the inference that your "flesh and blood" is different in quality from that of the meanest prostitute of my country? and if not, and if all that is is "matter," as Prof. Tyndall tells you, why prate so much about "flesh and blood?" Now, please try again, and tell why your "people are not true to themselves?" Yours fraternally,

Ah Hea Lee,
Slipper-maker.

We fully agree with our celestial brother that any man, no matter where born, has the natural right to go to any portion of "God's footstool," and contend with his brother man for the means of livelihood; and in America this is not only natural, but an absolute right—one that is fully recognized by our laws and in harmony with the spirit of our free institutions. But while it may be a good thing for the Chinaman to come to America, it may not be the best thing for Americans to encourage his coming. Being here he should be well treated, yet it is not only natural, but perfectly right for us to look first to our own households, and next to those who belong to the same race. If human sympathy alone is to decide our course, surely the sympathy for those of "our own flesh and blood" being stronger by nature than that we feel for the Mongolian, will determine us to give employment to "our own" in preference. There is no room for argument here. It is a fact which does not require demonstration.

As a mere matter of policy, there are two sides to the question. The labor of the Chinese is a benefit to the State, as the labor of so many horses or cattle is a benefit, with this difference, that some of the wages earned by the Chinese are sent to a foreign country, while the entire product of the brute industry is retained among us. Still, their labor is in some aspects of the case a benefit, as it enables manufacturers to carry on business here which could not be successfully prosecuted without cheap labor; and besides the profits derived from such industries the labor of Chinamen so employed makes necessary also that of various white assistants, who otherwise would not have such an avenue opened to them.

It is also quite probable that the employment of Chinese may have a tendency to force our own workers into a higher grade of labor—that of employers, owners and managers. True, it is difficult for poor men, with families to support, to get possession of a home or business of their own, but this is less in consequence of Chinese competition than it is of our land monopoly and of the power of capital—property, under our social and governmental system, being seemingly of more importance than humanity itself.

The improvidence of our white workingmen is a great bar to their independence. There is money enough spent in this State for whisky and tobacco to furnish homes for thousands of people, and time enough squandered in saloons to enable those who frequent them to earn in a few years the means necessary to pay for 160 acres of land. John Chinaman does not spend this money nor squander this time. He is frugal and industrious, and has other good qualities which furnish to employers inducement for giving him work, aside from the low price of his labor.

On the other hand, it is undeniable that the introduction of Chinese in certain industrial pursuits has crowded out white workingmen, and perhaps has made it more difficult for them to support their families. There are undoubtedly such cases of hardship; and, as a mere matter of policy, it remains an open question whether it would not be better for our own people to discourage the importation and employment of Chinese. Our columns are open to all honest, earnest expression of opinion on this subject, on either side.

[From the Index.]

WOMAN AND THE CHURCHES.

It is often urged by some liberals, as a strong objection to woman suffrage, that the granting of that will be in effect a step backward in reform, inasmuch as women are the principal mainstay and support of the churches; and that, in case of the ballot being given them, their influence will undoubtedly be used to uphold and strengthen bigotry and superstition, and so perhaps swing us back a century or two, or at the least bring us for a while to a dead halt in our hurried onward march. So they say, "Let us withhold from her so potent a power, which she may possibly use to our disadvantage."

It is full time that the attention and efforts of radicals be directed to some proper modes of weaning women from their absorbing devotion to their churches and to their pastors. Those who would deny woman the ballot on this ground seem to think that it is enough to neutralize an evil without any attempt at eradicating it. What is needed is not only protection against an evil itself. The ballot, I contend, will be the most effectual antidote to the poison of feminine devoteeism.

That woman's nature is more religious, reverential, and devotional than man's is no longer a question; nor in referring to her past history and education could any candid thinker expect her to be otherwise. Always in the past her position and duties have fostered and developed feeling at the expense of knowledge. Woman's sympathy, her love, her fear even, have been cultivated by ages of dependence into morbid activity; her desire for love and sympathy has increased beyond man's power to satisfy.

Men, with a larger, wider sphere of action, and more varied ambitions and interests, can live, if need be, a loveless life without conscious loss, while their energies are engrossed by intellectual cravings and achievements. Lacking these cravings and achievements of the brain, woman has only the cravings of her heart to satisfy; and, if she fail to find objects of love and sympathy, she is unhappy beyond all words.

The churches have always ministered to this feminine demand for sympathy and love. In the ideal Christ women find all that they miss so in the real man. Every ceremony and sermon of the churches is based on feeling, to the exclusion and bewilderment of the intellect; and only in religion can woman, as she is now constituted, find entire solace and satisfaction.

What then is the obvious remedy of this state of things?

It is to check the already too strong tendency to emotion in woman's nature. Every effort should be directed to the strengthening and enlargement of her intellectual powers, and the subjection and control of her feelings. For the sake of her own peace, happiness, and advancement, let her teach herself to bring her loves and sympathies into accord with her reason and subjection to her will.

The ballot, in giving her a wider range of interests, will be a most effectual aid in this respect. Without this larger field of thought and action, a field which will make her feel a responsibility towards all her fellow-beings, instead of a merely narrow personal interest in those of her own faith and household, there can never be any hope of reason taking the place of religion in the feminine nature.

In the coming struggle of womanhood for development in intellect and equality of men, it has been feared and deplored that she must lose somewhat of that tender submissiveness and clinging, dependent grace which has hitherto been claimed as her highest, sweetest charm in the eyes of men.

That there will be a change in woman's character, resulting from the enlargement of her mind and consequent wider range of thoughts and pursuits, there can be no doubt. We confess so much; but we do not confess or think that this enlargement and widening of character is going to deteriorate her, or render her less loving or lovable. The cultivated and intellectual man is not found to lose, because of his culture and intellectualism, anything of the sweetness and strength of his emotional nature. No more will the cultivated and intellectual woman. Because feeling is under the control and guidance of intellect, it is not any the less feeling; nay, the emotional nature is then likely to accomplish more than when it was its own guide and master. Intellect makes the better general, feeling the better soldier; both perform an equal part in the winning battles. What we demand for woman is that no more obstacles be placed in her path to enlarged knowledge than are placed in that of man. It is little enough to ask that the weaker shall have as few hindrances as the stronger.

Chicopee, Mass.

SARA A. UNDERWOOD.

AN EXTRACT.

"I believe that society is about merging into some new form of civil policy altogether. What this is to be does not as yet appear. But it looks to me as if the 'Granges' and the different 'Associations' will, after a while, become organized into separate communities, renouncing a general government, and each establishing a little governmental system within itself such as a common intellect shall dictate; hence needing to be very simple, and, for the same reason likely to be effective. These can then severally trade with all the others for the commodities of life—the whole fabric of the national government being shaken off as burdens, impositions, and drains upon the people, and taxation will be got rid of—that villainous plunder of the individual to pay the cost of the fetters which enchain him, besides making him enjoy the full boon of his life only at a discount. This will be a great step towards the ultimate great 'federation of the world' of Tennyson's prediction. Nor will woman be excluded from a voice, since females are allowed to be members of the Granges."

Marr's Bluff, S. C.

C. F. WINDLE.

CHURCH REFORM.—Rev. Dr. Schwarz, in an article on "The Protestant Pulpit in Germany," hopefully says; "That there is an immense field for the Protestant pulpit no one will deny. But it must accommodate itself to the new order of things, which, so far from tending towards its decline, as is alleged, gives it a scope which it never had in ages gone by. Let it place itself under the influence of real life and not of the theological dogma or of the philosophical school. Let its tone be human, let its basis be a sound psychology, founded on a true ethical method. Let it bring Christianity into contact with life and with all the intellectual, political and social forces of our age. Let its text be a divine morality, shedding its light over all that is human. Let it bring Christian principles to bear upon the problems and topics of the day; let it stand, as it were, on a vantage ground to be the centre of a spiritual life-giving and preserving force. In one word, let the Protestant pulpit be human, in order that it may be divine."

SPIRITUALISM.

I cannot believe that God has surrounded us with every earthly comfort and beauty, and withheld the greatest boon of all—knowledge and proof of our immortality. The argument that it is for our best earthly and spiritual interests to be kept in sad uncertainty of a hereafter is contradicted by the experience of every human soul. Can fear and doubt produce more beautiful results than courage and trust? And herein consist the desirableness and restfulness of spiritualism; by it we can reconcile death with God's love—our infinite aspirations with our finite realization of them. Instead of having our actions governed by the terrors or doubts of an unknown future, we are bathed in an unchanging sea of love and ever-present inspiration:

"From that far-off shore
Floats some sweet song the waters o'er,
Our faith confirms, our fears dispel,
With the old voice we loved so well!"

We are no longer living alone; the mother who has gone before us still is sad or happy as we do wrong or right. The husband who has passed on to higher life still receives and returns our love. The little child is not hopelessly lost, but with its merry loving messages chides our repining tears. We have only to be faithful and true, and we too shall be promoted in proportion as we have performed our duties here. Hereafter we shall have a wider field for our energies, more certain sympathy, and richer rewards. How this sensible and restful belief lifts the dense fog that has so long settled down upon the thoughts and actions of humanity. All kindreds, tongues, and people can accept such a simple beautiful belief. Creeds and superstitions fade before it, and the world becomes a happy united family in this millenium whose dawn is already here.—Correspondence of the Golden Age.

LAW FOR WOMEN.

In this country the "Married Women's Acts" form a part of legislation. They are divided into two opposing classes; one, following the current of progress, has for its object the establishment of Woman on a more independent footing; the other, the result of a false application of a true principle of chivalry, seeks to make comfortable and attractive, a condition of dependence. Such are the "Homestead Acts" and provisions which enable debtors to avoid the payment of their debts by making over their property to their wives. All honor to motives which have led to their enactment, but it may be doubted whether the good resulting from them will compensate for the weakening of Woman's honesty, which is the natural effect of the acceptance of such bounty. There is also real danger here of weakening family ties and of impairing the interests of society by destroying the jealousy of the wife for the honor of her husband, and of rendering uncertain the public credit. Certainly some scheme, at least akin to the partnership system, should be devised whereby the present inconsistencies would be done away with, Woman recognized as an individual as man is recognized, both held responsible for debts contracted which pertain to the family, and neither called to account for the personal liabilities of the other.—Jane M. Slocum.

A large portion of the noblest and most valuable moral teaching has been the work, not only of men who did not know, but of men who knew and rejected the Christian faith.—John Stuart Mill.

Those who lead wicked lives have so positive an impress of guilt upon their features that it is a marvel that the most ignorant and innocent are ever imposed upon by them.

BRIEF EXTRACTS.

"Beckie, my dear, you have been a good little girl to-day." "Yes'm, I couldn't help bein' good. I got a tiff neck."

Mental pleasures never cloy; they are increased by repetition, approved of by reflection, and strengthened by enjoyment.

Another negro butcher has jumped straight from a Chicago gallows into the arms of Jesus. He said his Savior was anxious for him, and he was glad to go to Him.

Every young man entering life ought to give some portion of his time regularly—I don't care if it is only half an hour a day—to the development of his mind, to the gaining of useful information, to the cultivation of some innocent and ennobling taste.

Better were it for society, better for Christianity, better for Plymouth Church and all its families, better for Beecher himself, that, being guilty, he be cast down into shame and silence, than that, being guilty, he be permitted by any connivance or forbearance on the part of friends to retain his high position.

Give a man the necessities of life, and he wants the conveniences. Give him the conveniences, and he craves for the luxuries. Grant him the luxuries, and he sighs for the elegancies. Let him have the elegancies, and he yearns for the follies. Give him all together, and he complains that he has been cheated both in the price and quality of the articles.

Mrs. Stanton well says that when marriage results from a true union of intellect and spirit—when mothers and fathers give to their holy offices even the preparation of soul and body that the artist gives to the conception of his poem, statue or landscape, then will marriage, maternity and paternity acquire a new sacredness and dignity, and a nobler type of manhood and womanhood will glorify the race.

One of the evidences that Christianity possesses more of earthly than spiritual proclivities, is that its owner or advocate inherits it from his progenitors the same as he does a house and lot. I wonder if the Christian ever reflects that if his parents had been Mohammedans or Jews he himself would have been to-day a reviler of Christianity? Being a Christian is simply an accident of education or birth.

To live in harmony with Nature, and with knowledge and appreciation of her laws,—that is the religion of Nature, the religion of the future. It, in its turn, may pass and be no more; but those that live by it will be harmonious, healthful beings, strong and cheerful, and, if not rapturously happy, patient and content. With this religion one may be sick or sorry from the thousand ills to which mortality is heir; but his wounds, like those of Milton's archangels, will soon heal, and for the same reason—because he is of the divine essence. Such a religion is often accused of being a purely selfish one. No one can accept it, people say, save those who have a natural love of beauty, an instinctive comprehension of Nature, and something, at least, of the old Greek temperament. These go on their way rejoicing, with no thought for the millions shut out by circumstances, by privation, and misery, and disease, from the benefits they enjoy. But I do not believe that it is any more selfish than any other form of belief. No individual can help trying to perfect himself before he undertakes to perfect others; and he who strives to make his own life a harmonious note in the great symphony of Nature must inevitably do his utmost to ameliorate the conditions of others, and to bring all existence into tune.

[From the Religio-Philosophical Journal.]

FAME.

Dictated by the spirit of ADA ISAACS MENKEN, through MISS JULIANA SCHOUPE.

What is it? The foam of a treacherous wave,
That swiftly is hurled to its untimely grave;
An inebriation of want and of guile,
That goodeth the heart with its fiendish smile.

At times it is bought—and at times it is sold—
For virtue, or honor, or usury gold;
And its glory indeed may be found everywhere,
As a head-stone denotes that a hero sleeps there.

Deeds black and unholy have borrowed her name,
Aye, baseness and crime, and a life full of shame;
While unholy thoughts by her bonfires were lit,
That as ghosts, through the aisle of her grand dome now fit.

'Tis a passionate will and a certain unrest,
Like the flowers that are born in a volcano's breast;
Whose ravishing glows, all their feelings consume,
Not the flame that should brightest the spirit illumine.

'Tis the dangerous rush of the lava's swift hurl,
Whose eruptions, in anger, their glories unfurl;
'Tis a banqueting love of, so hellish a bliss,
We eagerly grasp it that none we may miss.

And we put all at stake in this desperate play,
And we plod in our madness this perilous way,
Till conscience reproaches us, (righteous and just,)
And backward we gaze with shame and disgust.

Ah! the forebodings were sweet—is reflection the same?
No; bitter its sting and far greater the stain,
And well I remember the hours of remorse,
When a vision would rise in the shape of a corpse.

And onward it swept o'er life's glittering sheen,
With its fair, dazzling light and its shadows between,
When it struck in its volley full many a year
Of pain and of pleasure, of hope and of fear.

Or in soul I would walk in that bright land of love,
When the dim gleams I caught of those regions above,
And frantic, in anguish half-muttered a prayer
For a balm to my heart with its passions severe.

Thou knowest, oh God! that my soul, as I weep,
Is as pure as the waters that roll o'er the deep;
Thou knowest, and here at Thy bar I now lay
The crime of my soul, and her innocent sway.

I have come to the Father, with my wrong and my ill,
On thy peace-giving bosom my passions to still;
And here let me dream as in days gone before—
Let me linger, oh Father! and a child be once more.

Oh! I know that for gold and a worthless renown,
I have crushed with my feet a most glorious crown—
Such crowns as are worn by the angels of light,
That sparkle in Jude's proud temple so bright.

Let me rest from the tumults that blighted the past,
O'er whose very joys a bleak halo is cast;
Let repentance, oh Father, and tears that now flow,
Wash the purple stain white as the white driven snow.

Oh, listen dear Father! ere hope doth forsake,
And enveloped in darkness my soul doth awake,
If indeed Thou art love, as 'tis said, do impart
One spark of Thy bliss to my still bleeding heart.

Hark! what's borne on the breeze along?
'Tis a lovely refrain from a balm-breathing song,
And it dries all my tears as enraptured I list—
It has fanned my pale cheek and my brow it has kissed.

And a spirit's breath sweeps o'er a love-lighted plain,
And I feel as in childhood His presence again,
Whose brow never darkened, whose love never slept,
And who vigilant watch o'er His lost child has kept.

And again those low-swellings and gentle accords
Sound afar, as a message of heavenly words,
Come all ye that are laden with sorrow and care,
To the home of your Father, His blessing to share.

Oh, this light-flooded plane! but my lips are too weak
To describe this fair morn with a blush on her cheek,
And to praise Him the King of all kings, who gave rest
To my long-erring soul—in the land of the blest.

Galveston, Texas, Aug. 30, 1869.

TO IRENE.

O! sibyl and saint!
Wistful I watch
On a lonely shore
For a token. Forevermore?
Or will it come,
Uplifting the gloom,
Ere my race is run,
Now at my noon?
The waves of time
Cast up at my feet
Uncared for treasures,
With music sadly sweet;

While o'er the warring waste
My outward vision goes
Seeking the only presence
That can bring repose.
I may not longer tarry—
Yet cannot go away.
Unseal thy lips,
And say the word, I pray.
That word, thy fate,
Like mine, decrees!
That word I wait
On bended knees.

J. H. S.

THE INDUSTRIAL BROTHERHOOD.

We give below the objects sought to be attained by this organization, which is to become to mechanics and other working men what the Patrons of Husbandry is to farmers—a means of self protection. It has our best wishes for its success. The Order is under the Presidency of Robert Schilling, of Cleveland, Ohio. The Deputy President for the State of California is William Dunn, of Sacramento. The Order is now established in thirty-two States of the Union, and is in a flourishing condition. The purposes of the organization are as follows:

I. To bring within the folds of organization every department of productive industry, making knowledge a standpoint for action, and industrial, moral and social worth—not wealth—the true standard of individual and national greatness.

II. To secure to the toilers a proper share of the wealth that they create; more of the leisure that properly belongs to them; more society advantages; more of the benefits, privileges, and emoluments of the world; in a word all those rights and privileges necessary to make them capable of enjoying, appreciating, defending and perpetuating the blessings of republican institutions.

III. To arrive at the true condition of the producing masses in their educational, moral and financial condition, we demand from the several States, and from the national government the establishment of bureaus of labor statistics.

IV. The establishment of co-operative institutions, productive and distributive.

V. The reserving of public lands, the heritage of the people, for the actual settler—not another acre for railroads or speculators.

VI. The abrogation of all laws that do not bear equally upon capital and labor, the removal of unjust technicalities, delays and discriminations in the administration of justice, and the adoption of measures providing for the health and safety of those engaged in mining, manufacturing and building pursuits.

VII. The enactment of a law to compel chartered corporations to pay their employees at least once in every month, in full, for labor performed during the preceding month, in the lawful money of the country.

VIII. The enactment of a law giving mechanics and other laborers a first lien on their work.

IX. The abolishment of the contract system on national, state and municipal work.

X. To inaugurate a system of public markets, to facilitate the exchange of the productions of farmers and mechanics, tending to do away with middlemen and speculators.

XI. To inaugurate systems of cheap transportation to facilitate the exchange of commodities.

XII. The substitution of arbitration for strikes, whenever and wherever employers are willing to meet on equitable grounds.

XIII. The prohibition of the importation of all servile races, the discontinuance of all subsidies granted to national vessels bringing them to our shores, and the abrogation of the Burlingame treaty.

XIV. To advance the standard of American mechanics by the enactment and enforcement of equitable apprentice laws.

XV. To abolish the system of contracting the labor of convicts in our prisons and reformatory institutions.

XVI. To secure for both sexes equal pay for equal work.

XVII. The reduction of the hours of labor to eight per day, so that laborers may have more time for social enjoyment and intellectual improvement, and be enabled to reap the advantages conferred by labor-saving machinery, which their brains have created.

XVIII. To prevail upon the Government to establish a just standard of distribution between capital and labor by providing a pure national circulating medium based upon the faith and resources of the nation, issued directly to the people, without the intervention of any system of banking corporations.

Special Notices.

Dr. E. E. Dodge has removed to 123 Ellis street.

Dr. Bancroft's treatment for Dyspepsia and General Debility has benefited me more than all the medicine I have used for many years.
C. A. BRONSON, 519 Sycamore street, Milwaukee.

Dr. Bancroft's office is 204 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

For the very best Photographs go to Bradley & Bulofson's Gallery, with an elevator, 439 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Those suffering from that most annoying of the minor miseries of human life—a cold in the head—or from catarrh in any form, should try Dr. Ivory's Diamond Catarrh Remedy. Just try it—that's all. Sold at this office, and by all druggists.

Send Austin Kent one dollar for his pamphlets on Free Love and Marriage, etc. He has been seventeen years physically helpless, confined to his bed and chair, is poor and needs the money. He sends four or five well-written essays for one dollar. His address is AUSTIN KENT, Stockholm, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., Box 44.

Farmers, do you know that the Babcock Fire Extinguisher is a sure exterminator of gophers, squirrels, etc., and that it will effectually kill insects on fruit trees, with little trouble and scarcely any expense. One charge of the machine will exterminate all the squirrels in a hundred-acre field. A new machine can be purchased at this office at a reduced price, in perfect order, and with six charges. Address "COMMON SENSE," 236 Montgomery street.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, NO. 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

COMMON SENSE can be purchased at the following places in this city: Patten's, 773 Market; Snow's, 319 Kearny; Sharp's, 236 Montgomery, and at this office, 236 Montgomery street, up stairs. Price of single copies, ten cents.

COMMON SENSE.

A Journal of Live Ideas.

VOL. 1.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1874.

No. 21.

Signs of the Times.

It costs $270 cash, per soul, to convert the heathen, and $67,50 per soul, to save home sinners.

The disposition exhibited by Plymouth Church to stand by Beecher, right or wrong, is one of the saddest pictures of modern times.

The Index says: "The unutterable shallowness of the Spencerian philosophy of 'the unknowable,' now so fashionable, is the intellectual disgrace of the century."

The vote of Catholics in Ohio was cast unitedly against the proposed Constitution because it provided for equal taxation for the support of the public schools.

Alceste Lamna, a distinguished priest at Rome, has caused a great commotion in Roman Catholic circles by acknowledging his conversion to Protestantism.

Labor has always been regarded as disreputable by the white people of the South, and now they are too poor to hire laborers, and too proud to be seen at work themselves.

A saloon keeper in Jeffersonville, Ind., has sued Mrs. M. A. Johnson, editor of the Agitator, a temperance paper, for calling his saloon a "murder mill." Damages are laid at $2,000.

There is only one pond in the country which produces pink pond lilies. It is at Cape Cod. The color is probably caused by some peculiarity of the water or soil, as the lilies when transplanted to other ponds become white.

The California code provides that parties of legal age may contract marriage by filing with the County Recorder a written agreement to that effect, so when there is opposition of friends, the thing may be accomplished quietly, before the parents or others know what is going on.

The London Times says that in the only hospital in London where women can be attended by female physicians the influx of patients is so great that to prevent the work from becoming overwhelming to the resources of the hospital, it has been necessary to enlarge the buildings.

The Golden Age says of the action of the Congregational Council in the Beecher case: "That venerable body seems to have cared more for respectability than for righteousness, and gave Jesus Christ the go-by in order to please Mrs. Grundy."

The Supreme Court of California have declared the Local Option Law unconstitutional on the ground that it did not become a law when it left the hands of the Legislature, but was to take effect only when it should be approved by a majority of the people of a township, and then only in the township where thus approved.

On two points Beecher and Tilton exactly agree. First, that Mrs. Tilton is a pure-minded, Christian woman, and second, that she will lie.

Tyndall recognizes a realm of emotion and aspiration outside that of physical science, and in that realm is found the entire region of religion.

The Unitarian Association is trying to raise $20,000 to place a copy of Channing's works in the hands of every settled minister in the United States.

Prof. Seelye, of Amherst College, one of the foremost advocates of the Christian Amendment to the Constitution is presented as a candidate for Congress.

The School Board of Philadelphia have ordered that children must not be permitted to take home their school books for study; that the time spent in school is enough for study and recitation.

Chancellor Winchell of the Syracuse University says he has no knowledge of the ruin of female constitutions by study, while young women are generally more punctual to their scholastic duties than young men.

An English chemist, officially employed to detect adulterations, has reported 40 faulty samples out of 170. Arrowroot was mixed with starch, coffee with chicory, milk with water, mustard with flour and tumeric, vinegar with sulphuric acid, etc.

The second Congress of Women is to be held in Chicago this month. The subjects for essays and discussions are grouped under five heads: finance, crime, the true standards and use of beauty, education and miscellaneous, the whole covering about twenty special subjects.

The most prominent feature of Beecher's preaching has always been on the will and power of God to forgive sin, and forgiveness with him meant the removal of the consequences of sin. Viewed in the light of recent revelations this sort of preaching is highly significant.

Prof. Tyndall concluded his address before the British Association for the advancement of science as follows: "Here, however, I must quit a theme too great for me to handle, but which will be handled by the loftiest minds ages after you and I, like streaks of morning cloud, shall have melted into the infinite azure of the past."

The Osage Mission (Kansas) Journal says a human skull was recently found near that place imbedded in a solid rock, which was broken open by blasting. Dr. Weirley, of Osage Mission, compared it with a modern skull which he had in his office, and found that, though it resembled the latter in general shape, it was an inch and a quarter larger in greatest diameter, and much better developed in some other particulars.

[For Common Sense.]

INDIAN JUGGLERY.

In conversation with our old friend "Medicus" not long since, we were much interested by an account of some singular occurrences witnessed by him in India, and at our request he wrote them out in brief for COMMON SENSE, as follows:

Talking of India reminds me of some curious tricks I once saw performed by wizzards or jugglers there, of so extraordinary a nature that I have never cared to relate them, knowing that I should be thought to be exaggerating. Whether the explanation of these phenomena may be facilitated by the experiences of modern frequenters of seances, I know not; but the world is now so accustomed to marvels that another or so cannot make much difference to it. At all events I pledge myself to relate just what I saw, for my memory is perfectly clear about the matter, although it is a good while ago.

In December, 1854, I was at Madras, surgeon of an East Indiaman. One evening half a dozen of the officers of the ship were on shore at the Clarendon Hotel, to witness the performances of some of the witches or jugglers, who had been engaged by a native known to one of us, to come and perform for us. As we sat sipping champagne and smoking cheroots, on the broad flat asphalted roof of the hotel, in the cool of the afternoon, enjoying the fresh sea breeze, two withered old hags, a fine handsome young man, and a girl of about sixteen, made their appearance. A crowd of natives, chiefly servants of the hotel, followed them. The two old ladies first stepped forward bearing a basket of earth, and a chatty of water, and after salaaming, proposed to grow us a mango tree right there on the asphalt. They set down their baskets and chatty, and then allowed us to examine their very scanty clothing. We formed a circle round them, and the natives closed up behind us. The old ladies first of all poured out the earth in a little heap upon the asphalt. They then stuck three sticks, about three feet high, in the earth to make the framework of a small tent. Then one of them took a dry mango stone and handed it around for inspection; it was as dry as a bone. This stone she inserted in the centre of the pile of earth before our eyes and watered it with the water, over which she had made some passes, and muttered some incantations which we, of course, understood to be mere hocus pocus. She then took off her outside cloth of muslin and threw it over the sticks to make a dark chamber. Both old women then walked round the little tent gesticulating and making passes with their hands, but not touching it. We were allowed to come as close as we chose, and I, for my part, when one of the old ladies approached to raise the tent, squatted down close to her, and watched her every motion most suspiciously. The cloth was raised, and there might be seen the two thick primary leaves of the future plant bursting through and raising the earth above them. Again the plant was watered and covered up. The incantations went on as before. When next the cloth was raised, two secondary leaves in all the freshness and brightness of new birth, had shot up between the primary ones; which had now expanded and lay flat upon the soil. Some incredulity now being expressed by some of our number, the old lady carefully dug out the stone and handed it round to each of us, showing that the shell had split, and that the new shoot did really come up out of it, while a bunch of fine roots sprung from it below. The plant was then carefully replaced in the soil, and the operation repeated, until there resulted a small tree as high as the tent would hold, beautifully grown, with a number of side branches from the main stem, all of which were well clothed with fresh green leaves, and some of them bore flowers and immature fruit. The old ladies now said they could do no more, and pulling out the mango plant handed it round for inspection. As we all fully believed that it was a trick of legerdemain, we carefully examined the plant to see if we could detect any evidence of its having been built up, or of its having been crumpled by carriage beneath the dress. The plant was just as smooth and fresh and bright, free from crumples or bruises of its tender shoots, as it would have been had it been grown before our eyes in the half hour during which we had been looking on. Notwithstanding this, rejecting altogether the supernatural, we could see no other solution of the mystery than that a number of plants in different stages of growth had been concealed beneath the dress, and these substituted from time to time; but how could this be done without my seeing something of it, since I was watching her hands closely the whole time? Our suspicions were confirmed at the time by this circumstance. After paying the old woman the small sum they demanded, we collected rupees from all hands till one of us held a sum ten times greater than had been paid. He then held this sum out to the women and said: "This shall be yours if you will make your tree grow a foot higher, and ripen the fruit." "We cannot, Sahib." "Why not?" "Because, Sahib, we cannot make the fruit riper or bigger than it now is upon the other mango trees." This answer seemed to us, at the time, to be a sort of proof that the bribe had only been refused because having brought no more samples of mango trees with them they could not produce a larger tree.

The old women now retired and the young man came into the circle carrying a large basket, a net and a long sword; the girl following him. The man was a handsome, tall, well built young fellow; the girl a pensive, interesting looking woman of sixteen. The basket was one of a shape very common at Madras, oblong, swelling into a belly below, narrow at the top and closed by a tight-fitting lid. The man took from the basket a net made of hair rope, in shape like a cabbage net, but large enough to hold the girl. He spread it on the floor. The girl lay down upon the net and was tied hand and foot, doubled up together like a dressed fowl. The net was then drawn tightly around her, tied at its mouth and the cord wound several times tightly round her body and securely tied, making her up into a compact parcel. The man then took her, and before our eyes dropped her into the open basket. He replaced the lid, shut it down, and knotted a rope several times securely around it. The girl spoke to him from the basket. He then, with three sticks and a cloth, made a tent over the basket, and for some minutes ran around it frantically calling upon the God Rahm. Suddenly he whipt off the cloth, removed the sticks and left the basket standing bound in the midst. He now motioned us to form a wider circle, and taking his enormous sword ran awfully round it brandishing his weapon, and calling on the gods. The sword was the great Indian broadsword, five feet long in the blade, and held by a cross bar which transects the iron gauntlet forming its hilt. Suddenly he dashed at the basket, and passed the broadsword repeatedly through it from side to side, and from end to end, piercing it in every direction, through and through. A shudder of horror ran through the spectators. There were, however, no shrieks or blood, as many reliable witnesses of this trick testify to. He then again erected his tent over the basket and we, forming a close circle around, did not detect any further tampering with the tent, or its contents. In a few moments he snatched off the cloth, and there was the basket open, the cords and net lying around loose; but no woman. The girl afterwards, as we were wondering what had become of her, made her appearance on the outside of the circle, laughing and unhurt. I can offer no explanation of these tricks at all. It is quite difficult even in India to get to see them. I have often since then sent for jugglers said to be able to perform them, but have never since seen any that were not the most miserable and palpable shams—mere imitations by sleight of hand, which were invariably failures.

"There was an account published in the English papers last March of some phenomena of a similar but far more wonderful kind, said to have been witnessed in a Siamese temple on the occasion of the coronation of the king, by an English surgeon; who was allowed to be present as an unheard of favor at the celebration of their most mysterious rites, in return for having saved the life of a princess by his skill. If this account, which may be read at length in Dr. Randolph's "Eulis," be at all true, it throws the above narrative utterly into the shade.

Yours faithfully, MEDIOUS.

GOD IN THE CONSTITUTION.

NUMBER SIX.

In an address before the National Christian Alliance, held in Cincinnati January 31st, 1872, for securing the amendment, Rev. T. P. Stevenson said: "Give us the amendment we ask, and an appeal will lie directly from any unchristian legislation by any State on the grounds of unconstitutionality." This is really the object they are laboring for, to so amend the Constitution that every State in the Union shall have to bow its head and pay tribute to the national religion. Read their official organ, the Christian Statesman, of July 1st, 1871. J. W. R. Sloan, D. D., speaking of their prospect of success, says:

"A movement, which although at present is a cloud like a man's hand, is destined to increase until a final settlement of all politico-religious questions which now agitate the country is reached. * * * The conception is not new. The movement has already secured the co-operation of a vast number of the intelligent and learned. It numbers among its adherents and advocates college presidents, professors, judges of the courts, and others as thoroughly versed in political philosophy as any men of this age or nation."

In a letter written by A. Gratz Brown (aspirant with H. Greely to the Vice Presidency of the United States) occurs the following strong language:

"We are coming upon periods of active faith, when men will again seize upon, and live or die by religious convictions as in days of old. Let us then, by all means, help forward that expression, which shall inscribe as the banner of our people the banner of the Lord."

This shows unmistakably that had he succeeded and become Vice President he would have used this high office for the destruction of our free republican institutions. Wm. Strong, Judge of the United States Supreme Court, President of the National Christian Association, in his call for the convention in 1873, makes the following remarkable statements. A few only I can quote, so that the reader may be able to judge for himself whether there is need for alarm or not:

"The question of the Bible in the public schools, of Sabbath laws, and many similar questions, are now demanding attention and decisive settlement. Shall the nation preserve the Christian features of its life? This is rapidly becoming the issue of our day. What should be done? This is the momentous question now forcing itself upon the American people. It will not down. It must soon be answered in one of two ways. Which shall it be? Shall we obliterate every Christian feature from existing institutions? Or shall we make the Constitution explicitly Christian? Shall we thrust out the Bible from our schools to make them conform to the Constitution? Patriotism and true statesmanship answer, No! But let the acknowledgment of God and the Bible be inserted in the Constitution to make it conform to the common schools. They assail the Bible in the schools, Sabbath laws, laws against Polygamy, and every similar element of our Christian civilisation, on the ground of their inconsistency with the Constitution of the United States, which acknowledges neither God nor the Bible, and with which everything in the actual administration of the government should harmonize."

Now, friends of liberty of all sects and shades, of all sections of this beautiful and only free country in the world, whose banner represents the blue starry vault of heaven, and which so proudly waves in the breeze over the heads of people from nearly every nation of this habitable globe—this asylum of the oppressed and downtrodden of all nations and climes—if this is not sufficient to convince you of the great danger towards which we are rapidly hastening; if this does not awaken you from your lethargy and arouse in your hearts the love for your country, your patriotism, the love for your home and family, whom you are sacredly and in duty bound to protect from foes within and without, then you don't deserve to be called by that proud name AMERICAN CITIZEN.

A FRIEND OF RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.

EDUCATION.

Dr. Nathan Allen has excellent ideas about education. He makes a criticism on our present method that is of real importance. He says that instead of educating, drawing out and training all the mental faculties in their natural order and in harmony, each in proportion to its nature or importance, the memory is almost the only faculty appealed to in every stage of education; and this is so crammed and so stuffed that frequently but little of the knowledge obtained can be used advantageously. Instead of developing the observing faculties by "object teaching," appealing to the senses of sight and hearing, those two great avenues of knowledge, or giving much instruction orally, we require the scholar to spend most of his time in studying and poring over books, mere books. The mind is treated as a kind of general receptacle, into which knowledge almost indiscriminately must be poured, yes, forced, without making that knowledge one's own, or creating that self-reliance which is indispensable to its proper use. In this way the brain does not work so naturally or healthily as it ought, and a vast amount of time, labor and expense is wasted—nay, worse than wasted. From this forced and unnatural process there often results not only a want of harmony and complete development of all parts of the brain, but an excessive development of the nervous temperament, and not unfrequently an irritability and morbidness which are hard to bear and difficult to overcome. And not unfrequently it ends in a permanent disease of the brain, or confinement in a lunatic asylum.

SQUELCH THE DEADHEADS.

Perverted Tendency—Political, Religious, Social—Professional Aristocracy—Whisky-selling Aristocracy.

BY A. GAYLORD SPALDING.

A perfect, harmonious and happy family represents society as it should be on a larger scale—a state—a nation—a government. In such a family all is just, equal, brotherly, sisterly—no shirking, no monopoly, no oppression; no favored ones, no deadheads. The world at present, however, is quite different. Privileged classes revel on the sweets of productive toil. The genteel professions are a vampire most exhaustive on the diminutive treasury of the workmen. But a system of love and philanthropy is destined to revolutionize this state of things by enlightening and uniting the working masses. God speed the day!

Who are deadheads? To be one of that popular class is to get your cream and sugar, your milk and honey, your bread and fine clothes, free of cost. You have a complimentary ticket to the World's Big Exposition, on the great Continental Railroad, and to all the comforts, conveniences, beauties and pleasures of life. Isn't it charming and glorious thus to become a favored specimen of humanity? You are then recognized as fashionable and respectable, and belong to the upper ten. True, somebody has to dig the dirt and turn the grindstone, use the hoe and spade, and raise the corn and wheat. But then wasn't the clothopper class throughout the earth made on purpose for that? So it has been since the days of Cain. I make no allusion now to pilfering, cheating, stealing, burglarizing, robbing, swindling, salary-grabbing, embezzling, defaulting, confiscating or extortion on a private small scale or on a government large scale, for these things are slightly vulgar and criminal, and would alone pay all the costs of a decent government. But I mean the legitimate rights of the pure and innocent deadheads. That class have a divine sanction.

David was a man after God's own heart, and therefore had an undisputed right to monopolize any number of fair wives and gentle concubines and his cattle on a thousand hills. Solomon was the wisest man that ever lived, and of course his claim was undoubtedly good for seven hundred wives and three hundred concubines, with all the gold and silver needed for his big temple. But those poor workmen who picked the stones for that famous edifice, had no rights—neither had their wives—that he was bound in the least to respect. David and Solomon were distinguished favorites of old bible times, and most worthy examples for modern deadheads. So in our day we have the system perfected on a grand and extensive scale of democratic-republican, and catholic-protestant-orthodox-evangelical deadheadism—leaving out the extra wives—with schools to train and qualify all nice young ladies and gentleman aspiring for high positions. Professional life is the universal attraction, which must be delicate and refined, and most expensively accomplished. Nobody requires much education to grow potatoes, or push the plane or plow, or do any other productive labor. But if a young man have comely features and a pert mind, with some tongue and little wit, it is quite clear that he was not made for any common or useful purpose, but for an ornament in polished society. He must be a deadhead. Society is adorned with many kinds of that genus homo. One can take his choice according to his peculiar fitness. If he possess a fair degree of grace and solemn sanctimony, he is all right for the pulpit; if noisy, blustering eloquence, a first-rate politician; if a straight, bold figure, with a proud military gait, a fit candidate for West Point and epaulets; and so on. Society is sadly defective without these privileged classes for trimmings—they being quite as important to the public welfare as the Colorado potato bug, Minnesota grasshoppers or Egyptian locusts—to eat up things. For illustration: The clerical profession, ancient and sacred, is a consuming horde. A minister should be a teacher of the people—but few of them are. Most of them teach a dead theology which is worse than useless. To minister sometimes means to serve. Then it is useful. But the pious church minister is served by all the world. Having a high or holy mission, or exemption, workmen must bow in reverence, feed him and his horse, build him a church and parsonage, and pass round the hat for all to throw in their loose money. Sixty thousand such in this blessed and favored land! O, who wouldn't be a minister? Such soft, pretty hands; not allowed to work, or produce his own bread, and yet have everything! He wears deadhead broadcloth, eats deadhead sweetcake and reads deadhead newspapers. The prevailing church doctrine is deadheadism all through. Personally the minister is free from all common rough responsibilities and duties. He preaches a deadhead theology, and saves the people on the shoulders of Jesus, in a deadhead heaven of eternal rest and idleness. Then church property is deadheaded from taxation—nearly four hundred millions valuation—which is made up by extra taxation on the horny hand of labor—a millstone on the nation's neck.

Another class of non-producing deadhead aristocrats belongs properly to this high and respectable category. That is, the whisky sellers. Why does any man follow that kind of business? Simply because it is easier than hard work. And who shall say this is not the real excuse for the clerical profession? Then, with what show of grace can any minister rebuke or condemn the saloon keepers? He cannot. They are both alike deadheads on society, or exempts from the toil of production, and both alike live by begging, or picking the pockets of honest toil. Now, right here, for politeness and to avoid offense, I want it distinctly understood that I mean none of my clever and amiable minister friends "just right round here." They are not included. Our church and our minister are always right you know, of course (!) I am never personal or discourteous, you know. But again to the question: In Europe deadheadism is more oppressive than here, only because that country has less land and elbow room. But with us its growth is mighty and rapid; being a controlling element both in politics and religion, fostered by all our popular education in high schools and colleges, which tends to aristocratic social exclusiveness.

Among the Chinese and Hindoos the distinction of ladies of high caste is to wear silks, jewels and fine clothes, and be helpless and useless. That is the theory of deadheadism prevailing in all countries called civilized. It is the doctrine of capital and monopoly, and the burden of the working classes. The higher one class is in titles, toggery and show, the lower another must be to balance it. The great high Pope is king of church deadheads, and it takes thousands of smaller men to support him in his place. Then his cardinals, bishops and priests everywhere are so many more little popes. Such a crushing aggregate of non-producing professional aristocracy! Catholic and Protestant priests and popes—all in the rich white clover of happy but stupid deadheadism! The whole world is canvassed and pre-occupied by these grabmen. Salary grab and extortion are no new inventions of Benjamin Butler & Co., but are as old as Julius Cæsar, and workmen are just finding it out. Our vast western country is hunted over and over for its choicest chances, and many thousand of acres of its best lands are held by lazy and idle speculators.

Office holding, from king or president down to constable, is very much a lordly system of hollow sinecurism. True, some people must fill the offices, but in America there are far too many officers, and office-seekers. Office-seeking has become a profession. Men are crazy to secure the high places, because they get so much for nothing. The burden—the cruel cheat and robbery—is on workingmen. Now, is not this old and popular method of things grossly repugnant to all reason, conscience and humanity? What workingman or woman is satisfied? Is not equal rights and co-operation the grand and true remedy? Then why not strike at once, and demand a radical reconstruction? Productive labor is healthful for body and mind, and pleasant and desirable when duties and chances are equal. But when one class, under pretext of governing the country, protecting the people or saving their souls, become themselves exempts and scapegoats, the other class may very justly conclude that they need no such government, protection or salvation. The sky would not fall were it instantly, wholly and forever abolished. It is oppressive and hypocritical deadheadism, or monopoly, that should immediately be squelched and superseded by a method of self-government, equal industry and responsibility. All hail to the Patrons of Husbandry and the Industrial Congress!

Champlin, Minn., September, 1874.

Wouldn't our friend Spalding willingly accept one of the offices he talks about? Are "workingmen" as a class fitted to become the governing class? Are not things just about as Nature has decided that they should be, and if so, are they not right? Let us educate the workingman, and in time he will gravitate upwards, as individuals of that class now frequently do.—Ed.

SECRET ORDERS.

Although not approving of the following communication, we give place to it for several reasons: First, it is brief, which is a rare merit; second, it is lively and witty, and although satirical and not altogether just, yet its very extravagances are amusing, and we do not know but that a dollar's worth of fun is as good as a dollar in money, even when the fun is at our own expense. Some will be pleased with it, and that is compensation for its faults:

EDITOR COMMON SENSE:—It has been reported that the Secret Order of Eulis is soon to be established in our midst. I earnestly pray God that he may not inflict on us, his people, any such punishment; better an earthquake or small pox, Shop and Senate; anything rather than another Secret Order. What have we done that we should be overrun with these Secret Order bummers? Men whose character is so far above suspicion that nobody pretends to trust them in ordinary business transactions, are generally the instigators and controllers of these new Secret Orders, who, by playing on the credulity of weak human nature, and pretending to have some sublime secret to reveal to their dupes, generally manage to fleece their victims out of a handsome initiation fee and the necessary degree fees—for, of course, the curiosity is excited merely by the first instalment of flummery—and the poor wheedled neophyte passes through one degree of stupidity after another, until he arrives at the secret chamber of sublime ridiculousness, there to find his ear filled with the ultimate arcana of concrete nothingness, which instils its subtle inanition into the very sanctuary of his inner innateness, until his very features beam with that transcendental idiocy that is so invariably seen on the countenance of those who, for the first time, receive the eternal password. The originators and organizers of these frauds generally escape being exposed, from the well known repugnance people have to admit that they have been fooled, hoodwinked, bamboozled. No one likes to own that his neighbor is smarter than himself; no one wants to warn the people at the expense of exposing his greenness. The writer has surmounted all such unworthy motives, and is willing to give the benefit of his costly experience to others, caring not for their opinion as to his cuteness.

Your notice itself is of an exciting nature, and will help these secret mongers. The statement that it is contrary to the policy of the Order to make any public announcement concerning it, is just the advertisement they want, as it excites the public curiosity—their main stock in trade—together with marvellous impudence and utter unscrupulousness. As I have been connected with nearly all these mushroom Secret Orders that have been introduced in our midst, I know whereof I speak. There is nothing in them but expense and humbuggery, with a little forced sociability that soon turns to vancorous hate, when the jugglery of the system is denounced. Of course this warning will not have much effect, for as Dr. Gibbons re-asserts the "American People want to be humbugged." The name of the "Order" itself is deceptively suggestive, "Eulis,"—phonetically u—that is, you less or you minus ten dollars more or less, as the sublimity of the secret descends into the nothingness of absurdity. I remain yours truly, a victim to many such reformers.

PAT. J. HEALY.

We beg leave to refer friend Haley to the necessity of secrecy in the movements of Liberals, in order to enable them to compete with the secret movements of the enemy. We neither know nor care anything about the "Order of Eulis," but we do know something of the "Friends of Progress," and we believe there is at this time a necessity for such an organization. Read the address of Mrs. Mathews, the President of Liberty Circle on page 251. Read also the articles on "God in the Constitution," page 245, and the extract from the Index headed "Necessity for Liberal Leagues," page 252.

A little girl was in the habit of killing flies in a very cruel manner, which fact was a source of great concern to her mother, who was a religious, tender hearted woman, and had a great desire that her only child should be everything that was noble and grand. Punishment was of no avail, and in a fit varying on desperation she took the little one aside and told her she wanted her to be good that she might go to heaven when she died; that God made the flies and loved them, and she must be good to them. A few hours afterwards, while feeling happy at the apparent good behavior of the child, and thinking she had struck the right cord in her heart, she suddenly caught the sound of the child's voice, and peeping in at the door of the bedroom beheld her with a fly between thumb and finger, holding it up and talking in this wise: "Poor little fly"—compassionately—"did oo know oo'r Dod loves oo? Well he does. Don't oo want to see oo'r Dod? Well oo sall." And suiting the action to the word mashed the fly between her fingers and sent it to heaven, where she expected to go when she died. The mother thought she might as well give that girl up.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

COMMON SENSE is furnished to subscribers for Three Dollars per annum, in advance. Letters intended for the Business Department should be addressed:

AMANDA M. SLOCUM, BUSINESS MANAGER, 236 Montgomery st.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

Indian Jugglery—Medicus .....	244
God in the Constitution .....	245
Squelch the Deadheads—A. G. Spalding .....	246
Secret Societies—Pat. J. Healy .....	247
Beecher—Religion .....	249
Translation of Faust by Spirit Agency .....	250
Friends of Progress—Address by Mrs. Mathews .....	251
Good and Evil—Austin Kent .....	252
Necessity for Liberal Leagues—Index .....	253
Lycæum for Self Culture .....	253
Our Age .....	253
Poetry and Special Notices .....	254

COMMON SENSE.

WILLIAM N. SLOCUM, EDITOR.

AMANDA M. SLOCUM, ASSISTANT.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, OCT. 5, 1874.

A correspondent imagines that many "insignificant people" who condemn Beecher do so because they are glad to get a chance to hit a big man who is down. Mr. Beecher has not acknowledged that he is "down"; on the contrary, he committed quite as much wrong in his wicked defence as he did in his original sin.

TEMPERANCE.—The decision of the Supreme Court against the Local Option Law serves but to incite the friends of Temperance to renewed exertions. They are learning by experience, and will eventually have a law of some kind that will do good service. A political temperance party is to be organized, which will doubtless hold the balance of power, and none but friends of the cause, no matter on what ticket, can be elected to make our laws. We must have some protection against this overshadowing evil of intemperance.

THE FABBRI HIGH ART CONCERTS at Platt's Hall are growing in favor. The large audience on Thursday evening last was composed of the most intelligent of our music loving people. Mme. Fabbri and M'le Elzer are the favorites, but several others, including the fine baritone, Mr. Makin, and the young vocalist Miss Lilly Post, add very much to the enjoyableness of the entertainments. Miss Ivy Wandesforde is to appear at the next concert, October 8th, when a variety of fine selections will be given in addition to a Mendelssohn recitativo.

C. FANNIE ALLYN lectured at Modesto recently on subjects sent to the stand in writing by members of the audience. Among them was this: "Ante-natal conditions and their consequences." A correspondent says she proceeded regardless of the many glances and blushes of the male and female virgins present. She told many truths regarding the causes of insanity, intemperance, crime, etc. No one could deny the truth of her statements, but "the idea of her talking on such a subject to a promiscuous audience. It was perfectly shameful." If there are many such nincompoops in Modesto we suggest that the name of the town be changed to Prudesto.

MISS LEYS' LECTURES on the social question, last Sunday, were given to large audiences, every seat in the evening being occupied. They were the best and most thoroughly satisfactory discourses yet given. No report, such as we have room for, could do them justice, but we took notes which will be written out for next week's paper. The lectures were full of facts so presented as to carry conviction to the minds of the listeners. Miss Leys is doing an admirable work here, and all Spiritualists and Friends of Progress should take pride in sustaining the society which employs her.

CHARTER OAK HALL.—The mediums' seances at this place are held every Sunday evening at 7½ o'clock. As the hall is always crowded, only those who go early can get good seats. The tests are generally satisfactory, and the interest of the public does not in the least abate. The vocal and instrumental music by Mrs. Hammond adds much to the attractiveness of the seances, and Mrs. Foye's ballot test, given at the close of each evening, continues to attract new visitors. They have been instrumental in awakening thousands to an interest in Spiritualism.

DEVELOPING CIRCLE.—At the solicitation of friends, Dr. W. H. Bancroft, Magnetic Healer, 204 Montgomery street, has consented to superintend at his rooms a circle for "development," and as the Doctor has had much experience as a developing medium, is thoroughly acquainted with the management of persons "under influence," and possesses much magnetic power, the opportunity presented is one seldom met with. There is room in the circle for a few additional sitters. Seances are held on Tuesday and Saturday evenings. The terms are very low, the object being not to make money, but to secure a regular attendance. None need apply excepting those who can come with promptness and regularity.

BANNER OF LIGHT.—The oldest and best spiritual publication in the world is the Banner of Light, Boston. Although called conservative by some Spiritualists, it keeps in the van of spiritualistic journals, giving later "spiritual intelligence," and more of it than any similar publication. The proprietors are prosperous—as they deserve to be—and do not need your money; but you need the Banner. You can't be a good Spiritualist and get along without it. Amanda M. Slocum, at the office of COMMON SENSE, will forward your subscription, and guarantee you the receipt of the paper, and the full worth of your money. With the Banner, from the "Hub of the Universe," and "COMMON SENSE," at the western jumping-off place, you can manage to keep well posted in all the events and ideas pertaining to the spiritual philosophy.

Common Sense of Paris, Texas, says: "The pulpit has been aptly denominated the coward's castle. Behind that the preacher can call names, browbeat, dogmatize, spout the rankest sophistry, misrepresent history, and perpetrate every species of pious fraud, and no one dare molest. Common Sense scorns such contemptible triumphs."

BEECHER—RELIGION.

MR. EDITOR:—There are many things in COMMON SENSE from week to week that I like, but then there are some things I don't like. For instance, I see COMMON SENSE has believed all along in Mr. Beecher's guilt of the crime charged by Tilton—expressing the belief soon after the charge was made. Without any affinity with Beecher, but certainly with distinct antagonisms in belief, I schooled my mind to await in equilibrium the production of proofs. With the experience of over thirty years training on the bench and at the bar, with a determination to do exact justice to all concerned, I am compelled to say that the case against Beecher has not only wholly failed, but has resulted in unmistakably fixing upon both Tilton and Moulton a stigma from which they will find it impossible to escape. It is enough to know, that for years after their pretended knowledge of the crime, they permitted their wives and children to attend upon the ministrations of Mr. Beecher, and to remain members of his church. This is enough to satisfy every fair-minded man that the charge is wholly false, or these men are utterly debased, and deserve the contempt which will surely overtake them. As for testimony—I mean legal testimony—there is none worthy of consideration. Mr. Beecher is entitled to the common law presumption of innocence, until he is proved to be guilty. This will never be done; for neither Tilton nor Moulton will prosecute their cases to trial. So much for that.

Now let me ask a question: Is it policy to attack the church organizations of the day? Would it not be better to gradually introduce spiritual beliefs into them through the enlightenment of their members, and thus in good time reform and control their ministrations? Spiritualists are not Infidels, not scoffers at religion, not debauchees, nor are they free-lovers. True Spiritualism teaches the purest morality; and while demonstrating the fact of immortality, it inculcates the momentous truth that man is the arbiter of his own future. If a lover of evil here, he will continue its practice hereafter, and dwell among those of similar affections. If a lover and doer of good, then he will dwell with the good. So, precisely as the delights of good are enduring, harmonious and satisfactory, the delights of evil are evanescent, antagonistic and unsatisfactory. The former may be called heaven; the latter, hell. There can be no heaven unless there is a hell—no good unless there is evil. The progress is rapid enough. Let us not carry unnecessary burdens nor arouse unbidden antagonisms. L. H. C.

San Francisco, September 23, 1874.

It is quite probable that the opinion of our correspondent is based not on the testimony, letters and statements of the parties, but on the garbled, one-sided reports received by telegraph. If our friend will spend the time required to read the full statements given in the Graphic, and in the Chicago Tribune, he will see that the evidence has much more weight than he seems now to think. The fact that Mrs. Tilton and Mrs. Moulton continued to attend Beecher's church, instead of being proof of the unworthiness of Tilton and Moulton merely shows a willingness on their part to condone the offence of a man who had professed deep contrition; and who in other respects was in every way a worthy teacher of that Christianity which Mrs. Tilton, a religious devotee, was so much engrossed in. Tilton himself did not countenance Beecher by his presence, and Moulton is not a believer in the Christian religion, and did not pretend to practice any but the old heathen virtues, truth, justice and mercy. Moulton is our model of a high minded, honorable gentleman, and Tilton is certainly one of the most magnanimous, unselfish and charitable of men. To say that either will be permanently injured in the estimation of "fair-minded men" is not to impeach them, but is a reflection on the good sense of the entire people. Beecher is the guilty man. His own letters and prevaricating statements prove him to be so. We do not say this from prejudice. Heretofore few have rejoiced more heartily in his long life of usefulness, and few more deeply regretted his great fall, than the editor of this paper, who for five years listened to his grand discourses. Beecher has had ample opportunity during the last two years to do justice to all parties without a tithe of the injury to himself that has already accrued, but he was too cowardly to do what he knew to be right. The lesson is a sad one for him and for the world, but if it teaches people to put faith in principles instead of in persons, it will have accomplished much good. Hero worship, and especially the worship of Christian ministers, has become a great evil in America. Let us revere the truth, wherever we can find it, but remember that those who utter it are human, like ourselves, subject to the same temptations, the same infirmities. The truth only remains without change, and that alone is worthy of an absorbing love. So much for that; now one word as to the churches.

We have no war to make on the "churches," though we believe the cause of morality would be served if they ~~could be changed into~~ lecture rooms and school houses. It is possible that the Christian religion may have a restraining influence on some people, but we believe that its general influence is bad. Its main doctrine is that of the forgiveness of sin, a doctrine we believe to be as pernicious as it is false. There is no forgiveness in nature, and to preach that there is, is to hold out encouragement for wrong doing, giving hope that the offender may escape punishment. It is the religion of humanity, not that of Christianity, to which so-called Christian nations are indebted for their advance in civilization and morality.

To be virtuous is to be self-controlled in all respects and in all directions. It is to obey the law of right reason in all things. To be virtuous is to be self-poised and equable,—free and spontaneous, yet steady and firm. Virtue resides not in any one part or function of the body, but in personal character; in the whole animus of the man or woman. It is to be determined, not so much by what one thinks or says or does at a given time, but by the general tone, tendency, atmosphere, and influence of one's personality.

Hugh Byron Brown, in an article in the Truth Seeker, says: "The hostility of some Materialists to Spiritualism is a matter of regret, as being not only uncalled for and unwarrantable, but impolitic and unwise. As we have seen it is doing the very work that secularism desires to do but is unable only in a limited degree to accomplish. It is folly to fight against those who are fighting our battles, and doing our work merely because they use some weapons and methods different from ours."

FRIENDS OF PROGRESS.

Mrs. Laverna Mathews, the President of Liberty Circle, U. O. F. P., is now serving her second term in that position. The following, omitting some matter not of interest to the public, is an address made by her after the late installation of officers. After returning "thanks for the honor," etc., she said:

I trust that all the lady members of this Order rejoice with me that there is at least one spot upon our fair earth where woman can stand on an equal footing with her brother man. This is the only Order, so far as I know, where woman has this recognition. The Masonic Order and Odd Fellows have a side degree to which the wives of their members may be initiated. I have never had a desire to be thus united with them. It has seemed degrading to my womanhood, and until I could stand on an equality I desired to stand entirely aloof. The Sons of Temperance and Good Templars and Granges claim equality for woman, but it is only nominal, not so in reality. Woman is not admitted to the highest office in their grand councils. I can see no reason, however, why, if a secret society is really a benefit to men, that it should not be equally so to women, since from a law in nature the sexes must necessarily associate together. Let us rejoice then that in the progress of the world's history the time has come when men and women may stand side by side in the grand reforms that are in the light of the nineteenth century thrilling the whole world.

It seems to me, if we can judge by the signs of the times, that we are not too soon in establishing a headquarters for the liberal element in our country. If we would not be bound with bonds worse than the chattel slave, we must be up and doing. The Christians who are trying to turn this into a Christian nation by the hocus pocus method of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States are at work, and busily too.

[Here follows a statement concerning the recent issue of a secret circular addressed to the "Christian Alliance on the Pacific coast."]

This shows that the Christians are organized for work, and a kind of work too which they intend to conceal from the general public, and it bodes no good to the liberties and personal safety of the liberal element, whose lethargy is in strong contrast to the activity and thorough discipline of their foes. It is well to look out for such breakers and be warned in time.

The Irish Nationalist calls upon the people to combine their forces and elect only such men as they approve, to the offices in the gift of the people. Where then will be our boasted land of freedom? We shall be fettered with bonds more to be dreaded than those which bound the chattel slave. A Baptist clergyman in Sacramento stated also that the Catholics are all in favor of the amendment to the Constitution—recognizing God as the national law-giver. And when asked if the Protestants would affiliate politically with the Catholics to that end, replied, "most assuredly, with any party under heaven; we are bound that this country shall be a Christian country." These are facts which can be proved. Now are you willing to be thus enslaved? Suppose they accomplish this work. It will denationalize every Jew, Infidel and Spiritualist in the country. Our nation will at least go backward 200 years, to the time when our Puritan fathers enacted the celebrated code of Blue laws, some of them reading as follows: "No one shall be a free man, or give a vote, unless he be converted and a member of one of the churches allowed in the Dominion," and "Each freeman shall swear by the blessed God to bear true allegiance to this Dominion, and that Jesus is the only King." This is just what the advocates for "God in the Constitution" are trying to effect at this time. When this is accomplished the work of conversion can be conducted on the wholesale plan, as in ages past, when the rack, the dungeon and the burning at the stake were the instruments used to convert people to a belief in religious notions. We know our cities are full of men who are diligent at prayers and confessions, who keep the fasts but who hate their heretic neighbors, who stone Chinamen and negroes, and who wouldn't think it any crime at all to plunder the public treasury.

Are we ready to bow our necks and submit to this union of church and State? Have we carefully counted the cost? We have only to look at other countries where this has been done to inform ourselves of its legitimate effects, and I believe that no true Friend of Progress will ever submit to wear the yoke which bigotry and monied power are endeavoring to place upon our necks. Let us then not sleep and allow our enemies to marshal their forces right in our midst. Let us gather together all the liberal element in the country, and prepare ourselves for the coming contest. If there is a battle to be fought between tyranny and freedom, let us be ready for it, and let us ever bear in mind that in "union there is strength." Let us, Friends of Progress, have faith in ourselves. If we plant our feet firmly and say "I can," and "I will," it is the greatest possible security of success and happiness. We owe it to ourselves as a brotherhood, we owe it to the children who will shortly take our places, we owe it to the country in which we live, that we stand firmly and unitedly, resisting to the last every effort which ignorance, bigotry and superstition may make to hedge up the path of progress or bind fetters upon the soul more to be dreaded than those which bound the African slave. Let us keep our lamps burning, pointing the world to this way of wisdom whose ways are ways of pleasantness and whose paths are peace, and while working for our neighbor, for our country, for the future, for the human race, we shall build up our own souls to the stature of noble manhood and womanhood; then with this grand political revolution that is going on in the world there will go side by side with it a great moral revolution. The time will come when chains and fetters shall fall, and the soul shall rejoice in the freedom from all that doth enslave. So that when political, physical and social freedom shall be attained, there shall be secured also that spiritual liberty which is the birthright of the soul. Let us be glad and rejoice then, dear Friends, that we belong to a Brotherhood whose sympathies are enlisted in the welfare of our race; whose hand is extended to raise the downfallen, and to encourage and uphold them. Here is the home, the ark of refuge, in times of trial. Let us keep this home in order, this ark of refuge strong. Let no one fancy that they have not individually a work to do. We must put our shoulders to the wheel, until our glorious Order extends through every land, and Liberty, Culture, Progress and Love shall wave on every banner and animate every bosom.

When the great and good Social Reformer, Robert Owen, carried on his village of New Lanark for nearly twenty years, he had no poor people within its borders. Yet at first he had a rough population of several thousands to manage, but by surrounding them with the necessities and comforts of life, with books, amusements, a moderate system of labor and paying them good wages—in short, by providing them with those things which their nature required, Mr. Owen tells us that in his experimental village there were no cases of poverty, vice, or crime.

A TRANSLATION OF FAUST BY SPIRIT AGENCY.

A friend of COMMON SENSE offers to furnish for publication in weekly instalments a translation of Faust, which was made under circumstances so peculiar that we asked him to give them in writing, which he has done as follows:

Five years ago I was staying for a month in San Francisco. Never having seen a translation of Goethe's Faust, of which I was a great admirer, I examined those in the Mercantile Library. I found them all most defective and incorrect. Either they were prose renderings, which whilst they retained the literal sense of the original, sacrificed its poetical force and beauty to accuracy of translation; or they were translations in verse, making no attempt to retain the rhythms and rhymes of the author, and yet abounding in license and inaccuracies. Disgusted with them all I determined to attempt a translation myself which should not only preserve all the literal sense of the original, but also reproduce the rhymes and rhythms of the German original. Shortly afterwards I went to reside at San Jose. I am only a moderately good German scholar. One day, having leisure, I set to work, expecting of course that it would take me six months or so at least to complete the translation, and would form an agreeable occupation during the long hours of what bid fair to be for me a very dull and aimless winter. To my astonishment and surprise I found that I wrote my translation right off, with scarcely an effort. The task never fatigued me in the least. I worked at it sometimes almost all day, sometimes only for a few hours, and I think there were one or two days on which I hardly touched it. At all events at the end of eighteen days from the time I first put pencil to paper, I had completed the first part of Faust, which is all that the general public ever think of reading of that work.

Friends of mine, now here, know that the above is a truthful history of this translation of one of the most celebrated poems ever penned. Mr. Owen, of the San Jose Mercury, noticed it at the time in his paper, and his notice was copied into the Call, which said amongst its "brief mentions:" "A linguist at San Jose has translated Goethe's Faust in eighteen days." I made a fair copy of my first pencil scrawl, which was written with extreme rapidity, and to my surprise found that I could hardly make any corrections which seemed to be improvements. I showed this to literary friends, some of whom were much pleased with it, and Mr. Bierce published a good many extracts from it in the News Letter at the time. I was thinking of taking it to a publisher, when Bayard Taylor's translation was announced. As Taylor had translated Faust on the same principles as those laid down by myself, I threw mine on one side, and thought no more of it. A month or two ago I saw Taylor's translation for the first time, and on looking over it was struck by the fact that whilst there was in passages a good deal of similarity, even of expression, yet there were many instances where he seems to have thought it impossible to preserve both the rhythm and the sense, in which my translation appears to have done both, and I really doubt whether there is any very marked inferiority throughout the whole performance.

Now I have no proof that I did not make this translation myself, but I do not believe I did. I do not think that any man could make a decent translation of such an abstruse poem as Faust into verse in eighteen days, and I am quite sure I could not unaided. Mr. Bayard Taylor states that he was twenty years studying for the work. This, however, includes the second part. Mine was completed without previous study in eighteen days. I have made no alterations in the original in consequence of seeing Mr. Taylor's work, which indeed I only skimmed.

Since Faust is perhaps by far the most spiritualistic poem ever written, although penned long before Spiritualism had a local habitation and a name, the editor thinks that it may interest the readers of COMMON SENSE to read a translation, the origin of which seems to be doubtful, written as it most undoubtedly was, currente calamo, by a man who has no pretensions to the name of either poet or linguist, and that they might like to compare the same with the laborious and thoughtful work of an accomplished author and poet, extended over many years between its inception and its accomplishment. Some of the less interesting passages may be omitted, but with one or two exceptions the whole of the first part of this most singular poem will be published by installments, as space may offer.

My friend Bierce used to tell me that I ought not to have made the evil spirit Mephistopheles to talk slang, but I don't agree with him. Mephistopheles talks slang sometimes in the German, and it seems to me quite natural that he should in English also. It must be remembered that Mephistopheles is by no means Milton's devil, but simply a wicked, mischievous spirit, loving to tempt, lead astray and suggest courses which lead to crime, but quite incapable of doing injury to those who resist him. Such spirits, whether in or out of the flesh, belong to the undeveloped or "hoodlum" class, and are given to irreverence of speech and demeanor, and to the use of slang. The first part of the tragedy of Faust, from the yearnings towards the spirits of departed friends so touchingly expressed in the dedication, to the last word of the last scene, is eminently spiritualistic throughout, both in sentiment and expression; could have been written by none but a Spiritualist, and should therefore find a Spiritualist for its translator, in order that the tone and sentiment of the poem may be sympathetically preserved and expressed. It is this consideration alone which makes me think it worth while to publish the translation in the columns of COMMON SENSE, when so excellent a translation as Mr. Bayard Taylor's has already been given to the world.

DON FULANO.

The dedication to this fine poem will be found on page 254. The preliminary scene in the theatre will probably be omitted, and perhaps portions of the tragedy, but we will print, from week to week, as much as we can make room for.—ED.

NEW INSPIRATIONAL SPEAKER.—A correspondent sends us the following: "Instances of psychological control are often mistaken for magnetic control. The psychologic subject is coerced by the positive will of another, whereas the magnetic control is sympathetic with the subject, acting in accordance with the will of the subject. Mrs. A. M. Hyde, a well known medium, is soon to commence labor in the field of speakers. She is a powerful psychological subject; is magnetically controlled for hearing, and also gives tests through visions. Her 'control,' who is of Scotch origin; sometimes improvises Scotch rhyme and poetry."

If the money now lavished on churches and priests, and the time and talent wasted on theology were all given to the relief of the poor and to the promotion of social science by which poverty might be prevented, there would not be many poor nor vicious nor criminal. Human nature is not inherently depraved,—but only made so by bad surroundings.

The most efficient aid the readers of this paper can render COMMON SENSE is to pay their subscriptions, and induce others to subscribe. Send the paper to your friends.

[For Common Sense.]

GOOD AND EVIL.

Friend "Don Fulano:"—My method has been like the scientist. I left the past—Christianity and Buddhism. I felt pain and I felt pleasure. Each pain and each pleasure was transient to me. If the pain was the most transient it was the most intense. Both were mere sensations; but real and positive. If a difference, the pain was the most positive. In this discussion I do not care what cold and heat are, or are not. Pain is neither nothing nor a "shadow." It is for you to prove that it is. Call good and evil, pain and pleasure, entities or not as you choose. I only write them opposites. Push and pull are opposites. I insist that happiness and misery are real. I have seen and felt both. I have suffered deeply in realizing the last in others. If there was ever a time in the past when suffering did not exist anywhere the universe has been growing worse, unless at the same time there was no pleasure—no happiness. Seriously, do you think there was ever a time when either happiness or misery did not exist somewhere in the universe? If so, which, and which came first? If neither had a beginning can they have an end? If either had a beginning, the same may—I think must—have an end. In any and every sense in which I had a beginning I must have an end. To me this is self evident. If it is not true, of how much value is human reason, or common sense? I only know, through Spiritualism, that I am to live in another sphere or condition. Mark,—I only said say and it is no more absurd to call good "less evil," than to call evil "less good." I do neither. I said good and evil were the effect of motion. Too rapid growth or too rapid decay in man gives pain more or less intense. It is for you to show wherein the "sensation" or "perception" of pain is not as truthful and as reliable as the sensation and perception of pleasure. I do not assert that it is more so. If over all our "imperfections" you are, or can be, sure you find moral good, I may be as sure I find moral evil; I will define neither. You can give us no evidence of the reality, actuality or entity of good that I cannot bring as good evidence of the reality, actuality or entity of evil. This is all I assert or claim. If you should say neither good or evil has a positive "existence," I should hold no controversy with you. In what sense can the "universal instincts of mankind point to the existence of perfection somewhere," when most all men believe in eternal misery? Do you find room in the universe for infinite perfection and eternal misery? The things I have "feared" have not been "illusions." I have suffered more than I feared—millions do. If you choose to call that a perfect power that cannot prevent or overcome misery, I will not contend on words. I am "exceedingly sorry" that evil is—hence must be. I thank you from my soul for the spirit and manner of your reply to my note. Fraternally,

AUSTIN KENT.

East Stockholm, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., Sep. 12, 1874.

Cherish faith in one another,

NECESSITY FOR LIBERAL LEAGUES.

The public mind needs to be stirred up to reflection on the immediate bearing of the United States Constitution on the New Testament. Show how flatly the former contradicts the latter; show how the fundamental law of the Republic is not only Extra-Christian but Anti-Christian; show that Christendom is the victim of a dream, when it fancies it believes in the Sermon on the Mount, and that Jesus had no more comprehension of a democratic republic than he had of spectrum analysis; show that the Rights of Man, not Faith in Christ, pitch the key of all modern civilization. Today, a bitter religious contest is liable to be precipitated at any moment because the allegiance of the people is divided between battling principles, and no one can foresee what unlooked-for event may precipitate it. This is the true function of the Liberal League—to be the lightning-rod by which the deadly bolt hidden in the bosom of the cloud shall be silently discharged into the earth, instead of tearing with premature ruin through the magnificent political structure now slowly rising. Where agitation is open, no worse danger is to be feared than a little bad taste now and then; but beware of the silent conspiracy.

The dread lest the Liberal League shall excite dangerous commotion is groundless; that was the old, foolish cry against the Anti-Slavery Society. But the secret plotting of ecclesiastics, the stealthy steps by which they get themselves intrenched in laws and customs through the apathy of liberals, the sly tapping of the public treasury for sectarian purposes, and all the other devices by which Christianity, Romish and Protestant, is seeking to retain its present place and power and get more, are always perilous and active causes of evil. Organization avowedly to carry out and develop the ground-principles of the Republic is a greatly needed influence here and now; it is a positive, constructive force; and we appeal straight to the consciences of radicals throughout the land to take a large view of the situation and multiply Liberal Leagues. Their objects are few and intelligible; their plan is simple; their work is all-important. There is precisely as much justification, precisely as much demand in reason, justice, and philanthropy, for the Liberal League to-day as there ever was for the Anti-Slavery Society. The slave principle is active and powerful in society and government; the evil it works, though not appealing so openly to superficial observation and inflammable sympathies, is just as subtle and deadly as ever, and is preparing the way for some great convulsion in the future. Now is the hour for prevention.—Index.

It having been settled that Jesus Christ was "nothing but a medium," it is now claimed that Shakespeare could not have written all his plays, requiring such vast diversity of knowledge and experience, without spirit aid. He too was a medium. Does he not say:

May I be bold to think these spirits—
Spirits which mine art
I have from their confines called to enact
My present fancies?

The Hindoos, the Egyptians, the Phoenicians, the Assyrians, the Chaldeans, the Persians, the Grecians and the Romans all, had Saviours; all had Gods. Some of these Gods arose independently. Others were born of goddesses, and others of the virgin daughters of men. All these nations had Holy Trinities. Some had prophets, and their Saviors appeared as a fulfillment of prophecies. All these Saviors had apostles. All these Saviors performed miracles as a proof of their divine mission. All had heavens for the faithful and some had hells for the infidel.

LYCEUM FOR SELF CULTURE.

The meeting last Sunday at Social Hall, No. 39 Fourth street, was quite a success. Mr. Klein opened the meeting by a discourse in which, although he is a professed Christian, he endeavored to show that our modern churches, both Catholic and Protestant, are far from either preaching or practising the doctrines of Christ. Rome built up a persecuting tyranny more odious than that of kings and emperors, and our dissenters have retained most of the relics of Roman bigotry, intolerance and superstition. They have abandoned Christ for luxury, fashion, fine churches and aristocratic preachers. Other speakers followed Mr. Klein, most of them agreeing with him in opinion that our modern churches and church goers are a burlesque on the Christian name.

They care what they shall eat and what they shall drink, and particularly delight in fine clothes, contrary to his command.

They pile up riches for themselves, and by no means sell what they have and give to the poor.

They do not forgive their debtors though he command them to do so.

Even their preachers are clothed in purple and fine linen, and like the pharisees of old lay heavy burdens on men's shoulders which they would not touch with their little finger.

They prefer to buy jewels and perfumes for themselves rather than to give to the poor, or provide for the children of the poor.

There was a fine recitation from Miss Woodthorpe, and pleasant music from Mrs. Melville. Next Sunday afternoon the discussion will be opened by Mr. Knight on the Scientific Evidences of the Christian Religion, when he will review the arguments of Messrs. Hemphill, Carpenter and Wythe, recently presented by those Rev. gentlemen for the consideration of the Lyceum. All are invited, and may participate in the discussion.

One man does not drink intoxicating liquors, and he calls that being temperate. But no person, except he be a "temperance" fanatic, is satisfied with this definition of temperance. The "temperance" of some men is more intemperate than the "intemperance" of some other men. To be truly temperate means a great deal more than to be either moderate or abstinent as to spirituous liquors. The glutton, or the coarse feeder, is not temperate, even though he uses neither wine nor beer nor cider. Cicero, the pagan, had a better notion of temperance than prevails among some of our Christian, and even radical, temperance men. "Temperance," says Cicero, "is that which, either in things to be desired or to be shunned, teaches that reason should be followed." And Plato says: "Temperance consists in not being carried away by the passions, but in holding them in contempt, and keeping them in subjection."

Legal marriage alone does not confer purity and chastity upon the sexual relation. For these we must look deeper than law. We must look into those chivalrous instincts of manly character that make a man bow before the shrine of womanhood wedded or unwedded, and hold him back from the least headstrong thought or wish or gesture which might impair woman's self-respect, or trench upon her sacred prerogative.

OUR AGE.

Lois Waisbroker's paper, Our Age, heretofore published at Battle Creek, Michigan, has been suspended for lack of pecuniary support. It was a bold, outspoken, earnest and honest paper, not just what we approved in tone, nor altogether in harmony with the opinions of COMMON SENSE, but it had a character of its own, and was capable of doing a good work among a class of people who need "strong meat" to sustain them in the battle of reform. Our old friends Benjamin and Marion Todd edited a department of the paper, but we are not informed whether they met with pecuniary loss by its suspension. Mrs. L. E. Bailey edited the Children's Department, and made it a most interesting and attractive feature of the paper. Whatever may be the future of Our Age, we trust that Mrs. B. will soon return to a field of labor for which she has proved herself so well fitted. It is not one writer in a thousand who has the faculty to interest children. It was with regret that we learned of the suspension of Our Age; may it soon revive. S. A. F. Swain, of Minnesota, makes an appeal to Spiritualists to aid in the resuscitation of the paper. He says:

Lois Waisbroker, who has labored with indefatigable zeal in the cause of freedom for the oppressed of every grade for many years, needs your immediate assistance in maintaining that fearless sheet. With the greatest energy and ambition she has succeeded during the past year far beyond the expectations of her warmest friends. Her intense feeling, and anxiety for means to continue her work endanger her life. One of the best physicians in the country says she is liable to go at any time. As humanitarians we cannot afford to let her and Our Age die. All the liberal papers are needed, and more beside, to agitate thought and meet the wants of progressive minds, and it devolves upon the most advanced, who see and feel the wants of humanity, to supply them, since the most needed and oppressed lack the power, and sometimes even the desire, to liberate themselves. We know there can be no essential improvement effected in society without enlightening men and women upon the laws of life. Our liberal papers are our batteries by which we defend our advanced position. Stand, then, by your guns, and let not one be silenced. A little ammunition in the shape of money from your well-stored arsenals will keep Our Age firing away into the strongholds of the enemy, and the light of its fire flashing upon the darkness. Let every soldier who loves freedom rally and sustain Our Age.

Some "sinners" are more agreeable than some "saints." "Mother," said the daughter of a distinguished Methodist layman in this State,—"Mother, somehow I like the unconverted young men better than I do those who have experienced religion!" The poor girl could not help it. And why should she? We love what is lovable; and if virtue is austere and cast-iron, or warped and fanatical, or conceited and supercilious, we shall not love it even though we feel we ought to. The thoroughly virtuous person possesses a certain dignity, gentleness, grace, and suavity of character which puts us in love with him or her as irresistibly as with stars and flowers and beautiful youth and winsome children.

Dr. Holland, in an article on prayer meetings, feelingly alludes to "the patches of silence, interspersed with dreary platitudes of prayer and speech."

TRANSLATION OF FAUST.

DEDICATION.

Again, ye hover o'er me fluttering phantoms,
 Revealed before once, to my tearful sight;
 Stretched my vain hand where no warm meeting hand comes;
 Can that old phrensy still my heart delight?
 Ye throng around me; reign in my heart's mansions,
 As scattered vapors into forms unite;
 My bosom pants with throbs of boyish feeling
 Raised by the magic breath around you stealing.

Pictures ye bear with you of days of gladness,
 And many a well loved shadow comes and goes;
 Now rise like half forgotten songs sweet sadness
 First love and friendship from their long repose;
 Borrow awakes, and life's fantastic madness—
 Repeats its cry of wandering helpless woes,
 And names those dear ones, who, of hours of pleasure
 Cheated by Fate, have crossed the Stygian river.

To songs I now may sing no more shall listen
 Those loving souls, who praised my songs of yore,
 Youth's friendly troop hath vanished from my vision,
 Died out the echo that I heard before;
 My harp trills to the unknown crowds' decision,
 Whose best applause makes my old heart wounds sore,
 And all the rest whom erst my muse delighted
 If still they live err far from me benighted.

And a wild longing, long to me a stranger
 Seizes me now of yon still, pensive shore;
 In tones uncertain, like some wind-harp's strains, her
 Half wordless songs my lisping muse chants o'er;
 Tears follow tears—my sad soul scarce restrains her,
 My once stern heart is softened to the core,
 What I possess I see as at a distance,
 While what hath gone seems actual in existence.

CAN TWO MAKE ONE ?

CERTAINLY !

THESE TWO ADVERTISEMENTS MAKE ONE JOKE.

THE	THE
THE	THE
THE	THE
THE	THE
SAN FRANCISCO	SAN FRANCISCO
SAN FRANCISCO	SAN FRANCISCO
SAN FRANCISCO	SAN FRANCISCO
SAN FRANCISCO	SAN FRANCISCO
SAN FRANCISCO	SAN FRANCISCO
CHRONICLE	EVENING POST
CHRONICLE	EVENING POST
CHRONICLE	EVENING POST
CHRONICLE	EVENING POST
HAS THE	HAS THE
HAS THE	HAS THE
HAS THE	HAS THE
HAS THE	HAS THE
HAS THE	HAS THE
LARGEST CIRCULATION	LARGEST CIRCULATION
LARGEST CIRCULATION	LARGEST CIRCULATION
LARGEST CIRCULATION	LARGEST CIRCULATION
LARGEST CIRCULATION	LARGEST CIRCULATION
LARGEST CIRCULATION	LARGEST CIRCULATION

The joke is that both these statements are true — one referring to morning the other to evening circulation.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, NO. 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

COMMON SENSE can be purchased at the following places in this city: Patten's, 773 Market; Snow's, 319 Kearny; Sharp's, 236 Montgomery, and at this office, 236 Montgomery street, up stairs. Price of single copies, ten cents.

SPIRITUAL ASPIRATIONS.

BY J. W. MACKIE.

A lad went out to fly a kite,
 And strove with all his skill and might
 To make it rise till out of sight—
 O what a joy!

Up, up it flew o'er all the trees,
 On th' inspiration of the breeze,
 As if it knew just how to please
 The laughing boy.

But, as it gaily upward flew,
 It more and more ambitious grew,
 And strove to pierce the bonny blue
 Where heaven is.

It tugged and pulled and strove to go
 Away from grosser things below,
 Only the string which held it so
 Prevented this.

Was e'er a kite in such a plight?
 Though ne'er before was known a kite
 To rise to such a dizzy height—
 So near the sun!

And so it tugged and pulled in vain,
 Discouraged grew; then tried again,
 And snapped the brittle thread in twain,
 And freedom won.

Away, away it proudly flew,
 Rapt in aspirations new,
 And, in its fancy wiser grew,
 Till—in the mud.

Useless for either earth or sky,
 It lay. Laughing boys passed it by,
 But nevermore that kite could fly
 O'er field and flood.

Ye, who this kite may dare to blame,
 Take care. Your fate may be the same
 As falls to kites of human name.

Despising strings,
 Who think, but for the earthly ties
 Which bind them here beneath the skies,
 They might be Gods and quickly rise
 'Bove earthly things.

Let angels worship in the skies;
 From sphere to sphere let spirits rise;
 But we of earth should not despise
 Nor treat with scorn.

The means by which we live and grow—
 The only things which we can know.
 For, see the kite which acted so,
 Fell, sad and torn.

Special Notices.

Dr. E. E. Dodge has removed to 123 Ellis street.

Dr. BANCROFT's treatment for Dyspepsia and General Debility has benefitted me more than all the medicine I have used for many years.

C. A. BRANSON, 519 Sycamore street, Milwaukee.

Dr. Bancroft's office is 204 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

For the very best Photographs go to Bradley & Bulofson's Gallery, with an elevator, 429 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Those suffering from that most annoying of the minor miseries of human life—a cold in the head—or from catarrh in any form, should try Dr. Ivory's Diamond Catarrh Remedy. Just try it—that's all. Sold at this office, and by all druggists.

Send Austin Kent one dollar for his pamphlets on Free Love and Marriage, etc. He has been seventeen years physically helpless, confined to his bed and chair, is poor and needs the money. He sends four or five well-written essays for one dollar. His address is AUSTIN KENT, Stockholm, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., Box 44.

Farmers, do you know that the Babcock Fire Extinguisher is a sure exterminator of gophers, squirrels, etc., and that it will effectually kill insects on fruit trees, with little trouble and scarcely any expense. One charge of the machine will exterminate all the squirrels in a hundred-acre field. A new machine can be purchased at this office at a reduced price, in perfect order, and with six charges. Address "COMMON SENSE," 236 Montgomery street.

COMMON SENSE.

A Journal of Live Ideas.

VOL. 1.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, OCTOBER 10, 1874.

No. 22.

Signs of the Times.

Somebody says the chief doctrine of orthodox churches is the doctrine of the loaves and fishes.

The receipts of the Mechanics Fair in San Francisco during September amounted to $83,782.76.

Rev. T. G. Thurston, pastor of the Congregational Church at Haywards, charged with stealing $800 from the safe of a Lodge of Odd Fellows of which he was a member, has been honorably acquitted.

Experiments recently made in England indicate that wagons are most easily drawn, on all kinds of roads, when the fore and hind wheels are of the same size, and when the pole lies lower than the axle.

The Berlin Academy of Sciences offers a prize of $200 for the best essay recording experiments, satisfactorily proving whether the changes in the hardness and friability of steel are due to physical or chemical causes, or to both.

Mrs. C. M. Morrison, clairvoyant and healing medium of Oswego, N. Y., has moved to Boston, Mass., in consequence of an act passed by the New York Legislature forbidding the practice of medicine by any other than the regular faculty.

Macmillan & Co. announce a work by Francis Galton, under the title of "English Men of Science," giving very complete statistics of the nature and nurture, race and birthplace, occupation of parents, and hereditary pedigrees of English scientific men. It will develop in a special department, in greater variety of detail, a branch of inquiry instituted by its author in his book on "Hereditary Genius."

A bill is likely to pass the Legislature of Oregon which submits the question of license or no license to the people at each general election. It also provides for the recovery of damages from liquor dealers resulting from the use of liquors sold, and it provides that where licenses are allowed the dealer must first get a petition in writing signed by a majority of the legal voters in the election precinct where he desires to carry on business.

Formerly there existed in Northern Africa an inland sea nearly 500 miles long and 60 miles wide, connecting with the Mediterranean; but an isthmus of sand gradually forming at Gabes, cut of the inland waters, which, drying under the hot African sun, left a low marshy country, which it is now proposed to fill with water again by cutting a canal through the isthmus. The cost will be over $2,000,000, but it is believed the country around the sea will be made fertile by it, so it would be a profitable government enterprise. The French control that portion of the country.

The newspapers now give frequent accounts of crime discovered by means of clairvoyance.

A factory at Ansonia, Conn., has produced a specimen of fine German silver wire that runs about seven miles to the pound.

Edith Fuller, of Cambridge, has been chosen professor of languages at the Greenfield Seminary. She is a niece of Margaret Fuller.

Mrs. Cynthia Leonard, of Chicago, has organized a "Society of Good Samaritans," the design of which is to aid struggling women and prevent their fall into vice.

Eighteen ministers of the gospel in Allentown, Pa., publish a protest against a Sunday paper in that city, but it is a poor Sunday paper that doesn't do more good than eighteen ministers.

The late strike at Belfast was ended by an agreement that employers might reduce the wages of the men and boys one half as much as they wished, but that the wages of the women might be lessened as much as their masters desired.

Mr. Conway is writing a complete series of articles on Decorative Art and Architecture in England, for Harper's Monthly. He does not agree with Ruskin in the total depravity of English artists and architects, but thinks that even their failings lean to virtue's side.

General J. F. Miller, during his visit to Europe, secured from the Russian Government, for the Alaska Company, the privilege of catching seal on the Siberian Southwestern Coast. Under the Company's contract with the United States, their catch in Alaska is limited to a certain number of animals each year. Their contract with Russia, however, places no limit to the number they may kill.

The San Francisco Chronicle gives a sign of the times as follows: "The tendency of modern thought is to reverence the truth, to follow it fearlessly wherever it may lead; to believe that it is better and more beneficial than any thing else in the world, and to accept it frankly and honestly when clearly manifested, whatever pleasing illusions it may destroy and whatever venerated idols it may dethrone."

The Prisoners' Friend says there are now nearly 1500 persons shut up in the Boston prisons alone, without reckoning the 800 boys and girls in Deer Island reformatory, which is a truants' prison, or the five or six hundred from Boston now in the state prisons at Charlestown and Bridgewater. Probably the Bostonians, old and young, who are now locked up, under sentence or awaiting trial, amount to nearly 2500, which, in a population of less than 350,000, is something fearful,—being one in every 140 persons.

SILENT INFLUENCE.
[For Common Sense.]

BY B. SHRAFFLE.

There is an incalculable amount of silent and secret influence going out from our characters, by far greater than that which we exert knowingly through our actions. It is by this silent influence that we impress other minds, mould their sentiments, and help at least to shape the actions of others. It is therefore in reality much more what we are than what we do, although our actions should always correspond with our words and sentiments. A striking illustration we have of it all around us in the effective forces of nature's divine laws that work so silently and smoothly. The Infinite Creator plainly demonstrates this in all his works, proclaims it without noise, through unspoken and unseen agencies. We also see it in the influence which the teacher exerts over his pupils, the study of which has been with me for the last eighteen years of very great interest. The young mind is easily influenced, and for this reason how careful parents should be with what kind of children their own associate, in school as well as out of it; and, above all, what the moral, social, intellectual and spiritual standard of the teacher is, who, as a natural consequence, has to be positive to them in order to hold them under his will-power, and therefore exerts a strong yet silent influence over the pupil's mind, which is as plastic as the clay in the potter's hand. Look at the mother's influence over her child when even but a month or two old, when her infant does not understand language yet, how it feels and knows what feeling the mother wishes to express. Look at social life, and see what power this silent, unconscious influence exerts; how the lives of others are affected more or less by our own. Whatever we are as individuals and families, that we are in our business relations, in communities, in municipal governments, yes, even as a nation. We see it also demonstrated frequently in listening to a speaker. It is often not so much what he says, but the expression with which he emphasizes his speech; not so much even the sound of his voice, as the fire of his eyes and the flush of his countenance; it is that indefinable impression it makes on the soul within, which tells of the actual influence. Look at an enthusiast. See what silent influence he exerts when he comes in contact with people whose nature is generally calm and quiet. How he rouses all their latent feelings and carries them to a pitch of excitement and enthusiasm which they were not aware they were capable of. I can now understand better than in 1848-9 when I often listened to the eloquent speeches of Louis Kossuth on the subject of liberty for his country; he addressed audiences of from 5,000 to 8,000 with such fire and enthusiasm that he carried them almost to a frenzy. I have witnessed scenes that beggar description, when old, gray-headed men and boys of fourteen embraced each other and cried like little children, and swore by all that was sacred to them that they would fight for their liberty and rather die on the battle field than enjoy the comforts of home under the rule of despotism. How true they kept their vows, history has amply proved. Although overpowered then by the combined minions of Austria and Russia and the treachery of the flower of the army of 60,000 by Goergey, yet Kossuth's eloquent pleadings are not lost to his country. The powerful influence his burning words and flaming eyes produced on the thousands of human beings whom he addressed in Europe and America is acknowledged by every one. He was not only thoroughly in earnest, but was perfectly honest, sincere and unselfish. He is, and has been since 1830, a Spiritualist, (although not by name) and is himself a medium.

It is the Soul and not the Voice that speaks. By words we are at times deceived, but in such a case the face honestly refuses to sustain the words. The face gives the real expression from the very depths of the nature. To produce perfect harmony between the soul and the features, cultivate the everliving principle of Truth and Honesty. It is the spiritual part which exerts the real influence, and which exerts the power with which our characters, words and deeds are to be credited.

LETTER FROM MR. YORK.

The following letter has been delayed in transit, but the friends of Mr. York will be glad to hear from him, even two weeks behind time.

EDITOR COMMON SENSE:—Ferndale, the place where I write, is a small village with beautiful surroundings, 20 miles down the coast from Eureka, and 5 miles inland. It is a perfect garden of Eden, and I am quite sure that some of the people here will compare favorably with the early occupants of that Eden so famous in story. I am stopping with Dr. O. Payne, a live man and a reader of COMMON SENSE. Mrs. Payne, an estimable lady, is a good medium, and the Doctor, a man of culture and ability, is a good speaker, so our cause has not suffered here for able exponents. There is quite a large liberal element in this county. I spent last Sunday at Rhonerville, where I gave three lectures to large audiences. My labors here are quite opportune, as there is much excitement growing out of a camp meeting held by the United Brethren. Fanaticism is at white heat about the name of Jesus as the only name given among men whereby we can be saved. Of course I did the best I could to make it clear that "common sense" is a better name for the universal salvation of the human family than that of Jesus. I went to camp meeting last Sunday morning to see the show, but like the holy land in the eyes of Mark Twain, it was divested of all sacredness. Those engaged in the meeting said they were happy. I only have their word for it, as the appearances were all against them. It made me sad to contemplate the scene before me. A crowd of people with blood-shot eyes and contorted features were singing in solemn measure, "Broad is the Road that Leads to Death," accompanied with cries and groans and tears—it made them so happy to think they were to be saved and everybody else damned.

I commence a course of lectures at Ferndale this evening, to conclude with three lectures on Sunday, when the Friends of Free Thought from Rhonerville are to join us in holding a Free Thinkers' camp meeting, after which I go to Eureka to speak Saturday evening and Sunday, and then to turn my face homeward.

Yours for Reform, J. L. YORK.

Ferndale, September 17th, 1874.

Since the foregoing was put in type we have received a letter from W. J. Sweasey, of Eureka, in which he says:

"Mr. York has done wonders here. He has delivered ten lectures in this place, and three each at Rhonerville and Hydesville with increasing audiences. He is engaged to lecture here every Sunday in October. As I suspected, free enquiry was but sleeping, and now seems fully aroused. We have rented the best hall in the place for six months. Now we want a good test medium and some one to take the lead in conducting a Children's Lyceum."

[For Common Sense.]

ARMAGEDDON.

Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision: for the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision.—Joel iii. iv.

We fought and won our battle even in the middle ages, why should we doubt the issue of a conflict now?—Tyndall's Address.

In the very able address by Prof Tyndall which has just fallen like manna into the camp of free-thinkers, and a bombshell into the fortresses of theology, we learn anew the lesson taught by history, that piety is the enemy of freedom, unless it be pious freedom; that science has little respect for piety, and cares more for the liberty to let the light shine into the recesses of dogmatic ignorance though all the bats of theology should be disturbed thereby. Science, or the liberty to investigate, experiment and reason by the light of tested facts, has little reverence for faith. Before science can be received into the communion of the church in full fellowship, the church must throw her dogmas to the moles and to the bats, and her creeds to the winds, and permit the emotional and the religious sentiments in man full freedom to grow and manifest themselves in their own way. Then science and religion may live in conjugal bliss, in harmonious agreement. But that will not be the religion of theology. It will be, and is, the religion of science. Theology is of necessity conservative and intolerant. Its existence is the final decision of the Supreme Judge, from whom there is no appeal, not even to science, hence any investigation into any of its ipse dixits is a direct insult to its pretensions, and to its God. Hence the enmity of theology to science and scientists. There can therefore never be peace in the world while there is a religion in it based on a direct revelation from God, and minds brave enough and thoughtful enough to oppose its pretensions.

There are four grand classes battling at present in the great struggle for life: Catholicism, Protestantism, Materialism and Spiritualism; or perhaps only two classes, Rationalists and theologians. Protestantism is insensibly resolving itself into Catholicism or Liberalism. Its existence is a logical paradox; and therefore as a system must cease to be. A protest in theology is suicidal as conservation in science is. Of the war between Materialism and Spiritualism, the danger is less apprehensive. While both recognize the freedom expressed by Milton: "Give me the liberty to know, to utter and to argue freely above all liberties," there can never be any serious quarrel; with Spiritualism, Materialism can have no quarrel only as Spiritualism becomes theological and priest-ridden in its media. Those to whom freedom is the most dear and essential, care very little for power in government. Loving liberty themselves they do not wish to govern others. Having nothing to fear and nothing to lose by the thoughts and ideas of others, they care not to legislate over matters of mere opinion expressed or written. This begets supine indifference in Liberalists. This culpable apathy is the hope of theology. It is endeavoring by ways that are dark and tricks that are vain, to obtain power in the government. Both wings of Christianity are working for this, each in its own peculiar way. The Y. M. C. A., and the Jesuits, are at work in the interests of theology to convert our government into a theocracy. And while free-thinkers slumber and sleep their purpose may be consummated. Then good-by Protestantism, Rationalism, thought and freedom, and all hail (!) the Pope, and all the mummery, nonsense and cruelty of an intolerant theology.

The Y. M. C. A. may not know it, but it may know when it has destroyed freedom for the Infidels, that its own freedom is bound up in Infidel freedom, that the Infidel was the real bulwark of Protestant liberty. I hardly think this will ever come to pass. For however indifferent those in the enjoyment of liberty may be, they only require to be thoroughly aroused to danger, present or prospective, to utterly foil and frustrate every effort to cripple liberty. And this danger is not remote; it is at our very doors, and should now be guarded against by counter co-operation. How long will Infidelity be content to be the butt of ridicule by the small wits of the daily press? How long will Materialists and Spiritualists be content to be misrepresented and treated as the outlaws of common decency everywhere! How long will notices of your meetings continue to be the tail end of theological respectability in your Sunday morning or Saturday evening papers, or come in "too late for classification?" As long as ye neglect your own press, and suffer your only defenders to waste away into dissolution. While meetings for free discussion drag along a miserable existence for lack of adequate support, while the Common Sense is allowed to pass through tribulation till it be successful, while Liberals are fools, there are sanguine hopes entertained by the priesthood that the liberties of our country will be prostituted in the interests of freedom-hating theology. Rather than this shall be, let us say with Tyndall: "What we should oppose, to the death if necessary, is every attempt to found upon this elemental bias of man's nature (the emotional) a system which should exercise despotic sway over his intellect."

SATAN, JR.

SINGULAR OCCURRENCE AT A SEANCE.—T. P. Barkas, F. G. S., of Newcastle, England, has published a little work entitled "Ten Years' Investigation into the Phenomena of Modern Spiritualism," in which this incident among many others is given:

Mr. Coleman and I arose to depart. When we were about to leave the room, and were at a considerable distance from the moving table, he said, "I'll make a suggestion to the spirits to put one of these candles out." There were two candles burning on the large table. I said, "Do so, but do not express yourself so that any one in the room can know what you want done." This was agreed. Mr. Coleman and I then went to the party round the table, and he said, "Spirits, will you please to do what I have suggested to this gentleman I would ask you to do!" Three affirmative raps immediately followed. Mr. Coleman said, "Do it, then." The table immediately began to dance across the room; the people touching it appeared surprised at its actions, and it gradually came nearer the larger table. When it reached the table, I, unsuccessfully, endeavored to anticipate the means by which the candle would be put out. After the table had moved uneasily for about half a minute, it rose into the air, glided over the edge of the table, where the candle was burning, and coming suddenly down on the wick of the candle, knocked the wick into the grease, and then gently glided down to the floor. Thus ended the second seance, and I walked to my lodgings with abundant food for reflection.

When the flood at Chester was the highest, and the water was three feet deep about the house, Master Robert Cluett, five years old, fell upon his knees and uttered the following prayer:—"O! Lord, I don't like this; take it away. You said when you put your bow in the skies, you would have no more floods. Now, how is this? Amen."

To love the unlovely, to sympathise with the contrary minded, to give to the uncharitable, to forgive such as never pity, to be just to men who make iniquity a law, to pay their ceaseless hate with never-ceasing love, is one of the noblest attainments of man, and in this he becomes most like God.—Theodore Parker.

[For Common Sense.]

PURIFYING BY RESOLUTIONS.

BY J. O. BARRETT.

Despite the popular claims for social purity, the conviction forces itself upon us that faces show what the heart is; that the haggard condition of many would-be-respectables indicates that the wet rot of hypocrisy is what's the matter. The hurry to resolve—as if they want the world to see how pure they are—exhibits a moral perturbation, that there must be a magnetic influence drawing them secretly away from pretentious virtue. Purifying by resolutions is so cheap! And it is nice to be in fashion, to conform, to be fellowshipped by the church! Keeping in the ruts is safe! Thus, one can teach "pure Spiritualism" and avoid all "side issues" of reform, can portray the glories of the summer land after death, and let the affairs of our wicked world alone. What has "pure Spiritualism" to do with woman's franchise or improved system of ante-natal and post-natal educations? Why drag in side issues? Why incur this needless ire of the church? Why not stick to the text—table-tipping and the beauties of the spirit world? Such in fact is the plea. As if the republic that the angels intend to establish can come with a compromise, and "daubing with untempered mortar."

Judging from what we know of moral ratios and human nature, our opinion is, that wisely honest folks are never in a hurry to proclaim their goodness; that they never proclaim it at all, but let their manner of life be the test. Those who lack always make the most pretence. Ever must the price of liberty be paid for. Ever must the heralds of new truth be persecuted in paving the way, and only the future will do them justice. Such will live in the hearts of their countrymen, while their maligners will be soon forgotten. Let us be patient; and be wise in our patience. When revolutions are brewing, cool deliberation is a rare and saving virtue. Extremes must be; offences must come; destruction first and then construction. Human nature will right itself, like water that finds its level. There is the soul of integrity in all reforms. Rally here and trust the results.

Glen Beulah, Wis., September, 1874.

Truth is a good dog, but beware of barking too close to the heels of an error, lest you get your brains kicked out.

Married people should study each other's weak points, as skaters look out for the weak parts of ice, in order to keep off them.

A little copy of Eden can be found now down almost any country road, where the boughs of the orchard trees are bending under the weight of fruit.

Stimulants do not create nervous power; they merely enable you, as it were, to use up that which is left, and then they leave you more in need of rest than before.

In the library of the world, men have been hitherto arranged according to the form, the size, and the binding. The time is coming when they will take rank and order according to their contents and intrinsic merits.

[For Common Sense.]

CHINATOWN.

Passing along the Chinese quarter the other day I saw an open door, at which people were coming in and going out with careless curiosity. On looking in I saw a coffin on the floor. By its side sat a woman with her head veiled in a white cloth. The corpse was so thickly covered with scraps of paper (messages of the living to departed friends of which the deceased was supposed to be the bearer) as to be almost invisible. Outside a white awning was spread, under which tables were placed. Blue silk streamers, ornamented with gold, with Chinese inscriptions in gold, were suspended from this awning. A Chinaman was placing on the tables savory dishes prepared after the Chinese fashion; so that the soul of the departed on emerging from the body might partake at least of the aroma of the viands to strengthen it for the mystical journey. Will you be welcomed in the Chinese heaven in true orthodox fashion by your small-footed, almond-eyed houris seated in their gardens on their light cane chairs? Will you have any news to give there John? you that have gone there from this, our great city of the West? Will you tell the great mandarins of long ago that there is something worth looking into down here—goodly, patient and industrious toiler, representative of the myriad-handed Asiatic race, whose rapid advance at the beck of our great money lords can only be met on our side by co-operative intelligent industry?

We were on our way to the Rev. Mr. Gibson's Chinese Mission. We were much pleased with the mein and port of the young Mongolian who opened the door. There was a manliness and dignity about him not often seen in Chinatown, and he spoke excellent English. The Mission building is large, cheerful and airy. It was at first established as a school for boys. But one night from one of the wharves of our city a gaily dressed Chinese slave girl leaped into the dark, deep water to seek there for the rest she never knew on earth. She was rescued and taken to the Mission, and that was the beginning of the girls school. There are now seventeen girls there. They are almost all refugees from a system of slavery compared to which negro bondage was freedom. Merciless cruelty is one of the characteristics of the Mongolian and Malayan race. If a true womanhood can be in any measure developed in these girls, what home missionaries they will make. Mrs. Gibson told me that they could all be married immediately if it were judged best, but that it was necessary for the institution to know the manner of men to whom they would be entrusted in that relation, as some of the Johns with a keen eye to business would sell them in a week or two after the ceremony. Thank God for this solitary beacon of hope for the poor China woman! Dr. Gibson has openly advocated the emancipation of American women. He stretches out his helping hand to the Mongolian woman saying to her also, come up higher.

E. HUGHES.

"The utopian idea of one age becomes often the common place idea of a succeeding age."

Get rid of alcohol and tobacco, and you will reduce the number of criminals at least fifty per cent in ten years.

To men who have inherited the main features of their belief, and who must perforce make their intuitions square with it, it is of no use to point out facts which tend another way.

"If we would not consent to tax ourselves for the prevention of crime, we must be taxed still more heavily for the punishment of it. The expense of one convict for one year would educate more than one hundred children."

For Common Sense.

MODERN SPIRITUALISM.

From the beginning of human thought till now, two great currents have run independently of each other, side by side, each claiming to be the true teacher of humanity, and condemning the other as visionary or absurd. The students of nature have always affected to despise the devotees of religion, while the propounders of faith have cordially returned the compliment, seasoned with cursing and persecution. The churches of the world have rested their pretensions on visions, miracles, prophecies and other wonders, which the philosophers have generally rejected as utterly unproved and altogether preposterous. Up to about thirty years ago the philosophers seemed to be getting the best of it. Miracles, wonders and ghosts were disappearing, and it was boldly asserted that they never had been. Even Christians were constrained to confess that they had ceased, and refused to believe in any but the ancient orthodox cases as reported in the scriptures, and the world was settling down into a very comfortable and well defined material philosophy. Then came Modern Spiritualism. It began with little raps, it moved tables, it answered questions, read unsealed letters, divulged private secrets and brought tidings of events even in advance of the electric telegraph; at least it pretended to do so. It challenged investigation. The most profound thinkers could not trace the raps to their true cause. Testimony on testimony was adduced to show that wonderful manifestations had been made, and admitting the testimony to be true there seems no other explanation but the spiritual theory. Emboldened by their success and the public credulity, the mediums have continued to pile miracle on miracle. The more we have seemed inclined to swallow, the more there is yet to gulp down, until at last all our notions of what is probable, or even possible, are violently outraged by an open declaration that a spirit, evoked by a human medium, can extemporize a real material body—a woman that you can see and feel and talk with, and dissolve her into thin air the next moment. Human testimony is not wanting to support this last assertion as completely as the raps, the table movements and the unsealed letter reading. If this testimony is sufficient in the one case it is sufficient in the other.

But in real truth, human testimony is fallible at the best. It has always been so regarded. The greatest thinkers of the past have often said, speaking of the miracles of the Bible, "I would rather believe that all mankind were deluded or lying, than that God would make the sun stand still to light the murder of poor human beings." And there are some things so utterly contrary to our daily experience, to our understanding of nature, to our conception of what is possible, that poor fallible human testimony cannot establish them, unless that testimony be so common and widespread among those best able to judge, that our minds are overwhelmed, and the current of experience turned back upon itself by the superabundant weight of evidence. The scriptures have long since been rejected on this very ground, by thousands of the most rational among mankind. They say that such things cannot be believed on fallible human testimony; it is deceptive, and not entitled to credence—and this is sufficient reason for an entire rejection.

Now it cannot be denied that some of the spiritual phenomena (this Katie King story for instance) are in direct conflict with our common sense and our highest philosophy. They should come to us, if at all, backed by all the evidence that is possible, and excluding every possibility of fraud. Spiritualists have statements enough before the public to convince any man of ordinary judgment of the truth of their system if only the statements be proven first. And this is the work to which they should now address themselves. To multiply unproved wonders is useless and ridiculous. Journalists, and particularly spiritualistic journalists, should give no countenance to any manifestation that does not come to them supported by the highest class of witnesses, and with such particularity that the facts adduced leave no doubt of the genuineness of the performance.

This Katie King story, if true, is one of the most important facts of modern science, if false, a mendacious humbug, which deserves exposure, if not punishment. If it be indisputably true, let us have it attested as it should be! Let those who saw it tell us who they are, every one of them, where they live, their profession, business or standing, that we may judge of the quality of the mind engaged in observing. Let them make known to us first what they saw, and what care they took to avoid fraud and deception; for if they leave open the least crevice by which a doubt may crowd in, we are bound to reject the whole story.

It is not denied by Spiritualists themselves that both fraud and falsehood have been at work to magnify manifestations, and to deceive the unwary; and the time has come when the chaff should be sifted from the wheat. Every false pretense is a damage to the cause. Every weak invention serves to impress the shrewd outsider with contempt for the whole theory. Let the Spiritualists become philosophers, who state their facts with scientific accuracy, and they may reasonably hope that well attested facts will soon make Spiritualists of the philosophers.

LAKE.

In reply to this somewhat wordy article, we have just two things to say: First, the facts have been given in the Katy King case, with all the care and particularity here asked for, together with the names, etc., of witnesses, and similar facts have also been repeatedly proven in other cases. Second, Spiritualists know that the truth will in the end prevail, and they are not at all anxious to make proselytes. The world is becoming converted as fast as desirable. The majority of people are not yet fit to live up to principles so high and holy as those set forth by Spiritualism, and it is well that they cannot accept that which permits of freedom they do not know how to use.

Spiritualism I hold to be the alone science or philosophy that is adequate to the reconciliation of all such speculative opinions [referring to the cited views of Haeckel and Rueckert and Huse] in naturalism, theology or religion; nay, more, adequate to the adjustment of the Demon of Socrates, the Idea of Plato, the Nous of Aristotle, the Arche of Paracelsus, the Anima of Stahl, the Cogito ergo sum of Descartes, and, to come nearer home, the vital principle of Pritchard, the primordial germ of Darwin, the polar molecules of Tyndall, the protoplasm of Huxley, and the Dionian carnivorous plant of Hooker! Just that trustworthy sense-knowledge does Modern Spiritualism now demonstrate to each faithful disciple, that the philosophers of Germany have hitherto lacked, to re-assure their hearts and minds of the everlasting spirituality of the soul of man. Without demonstrate objective spirit-forms, philosophy has no science of soul. Spiritualism, therefore, however unjustly regarded by some, as furnishing to the world only a wilderness of weeds, needs but the diligent application of scientific culture, in principle and practice, shortly to realize not only a garden of flowers for the present generation, but to blossom in the coming ages of peace, purity and perfection as the Paradise of Humanity.—Dr. William Hitchman (of England).

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

COMMON SENSE is furnished to subscribers for Three Dollars per annum, in advance. Letters intended for the Business Department should be addressed:

AMANDA M. SLOCUM, BUSINESS MANAGER, 236 Montgomery st.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

Silent Influences—B. Shrad.	255
Armageddon—Satan Jr.	257
Purifying by Revolution—J. O. Barr.	258
Chinatown—Mrs. E. Hughes	258
Modern Spiritualism—Lake	259
Going Back to Paganism	260
Social Freedom	261
Seance at Charter Oak Hall	261
Theodore Tilton's Statement	262
Beechnuts	265
Lycum for Self Culture	265
Original Translation of Faust—Don Fulano	266

COMMON SENSE.

WILLIAM N. SLOCUM, EDITOR.

AMANDA M. SLOCUM, ASSISTANT.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, OCT. 5, 1874.

THE PRISONER'S FRIEND.—A weekly paper devoted to the amelioration of the condition of prisoners, has been commenced under this title by John T. Augustus, 147 Tremont Street, a recently discharged convict from the Massachusetts States Prison? It is not a paper likely to be pecuniarily successful, but that is less the fault of the publisher than of the people. The paper is full of facts and good suggestions; it is conducted with ability, and is worthy of support. The price is two dollars per year. The editor says: "We shall aim to advance the cause of humanity in its broadest sense; to awaken a more active spirit to prevent crime, and more pity for the erring and guilty, without ever losing sight of the best interests of the whole community."

THE SPIRITUALIST AT WORK will hereafter be published in Chicago, by E. V. Wilson. It will be issued semi-monthly until January next, after which it is to be published weekly, at the rate of $2 for fifty-two numbers. It is a handsome, eight-page paper, containing nearly as much reading matter as the sixteen pages of COMMON SENSE. The enterprise failed in New York, because the western friends of Mr. Wilson desired to have the paper printed in Chicago. It is now hoped that it will prove a success, but of course the first year's struggle will be a hard one, and unless its friends pay promptly, it cannot succeed. D. M. Bennett, Mr. Wilson's associate, will continue to publish the Truth Seeker, an anti-sectarian paper, in New York city, which paper he says is sufficient to occupy all his time and ability, and use up all the money he can become possessed of. It is strange that Liberal publications, as a rule, are so inadequately sustained, while church papers are nearly all profitable. Both of these papers were eminently worthy of support, yet in a great city, like New York, after months of effort, the enterprise had to be abandoned, and the Truth Seeker resumes its old struggle alone.

Emerson says: "A true man never frets about his place in the world, but slides into it by the gravitation of his nature, and swings there as easily as a star." There are, however, exceptions to all rules.

GOING BACK TO PAGANISM.

Some of our clergy, in their zeal to find some fault with the advocates of science, as opposed to the traditions of scripture, are prone to catch at little evasions and insinuations that distract the attention of their auditors from the main question at issue, which perhaps they feel themselves unable to meet openly and fairly. It is a favorite strategem with most of them, when confronted by a new array of facts in conflict with their pet dogmas, to quote from some old pagan, who has said something of the same kind, and they charge the modern philosophers with going going back to the dark ages, to escape the light of christian civilization. This is a mere evasion of the direct argument, and utterly unworthy a gentleman of culture and learning. It cannot be denied that in their exuberance of fancy, and excellence of judgment, many of the sages of antiquity foresaw in a shadowy form, much of what is now realized as absolute fact. But the modern who sets out the same idea, illustrated and demonstrated by absolute facts of science, cannot, by any honest and logical mind, be regarded as going back to the pagan philosopher for his instruction. The christian who speaks of Tyndall and Huxley, and such as they, as going back to paganism, because some old heathen once uttered a similar sentiment, is simply misleading his hearers, and demonstrating that he is at a loss for any direct method of reply. Modern philosophy is not going backward to the past for nutriment and support. On the contrary, all its hopes are settled on the future, on the amazing sunshine of knowledge yet to come. In physics, in morals, aye and in religion, it will not pore over the musty pages of a dark age for its most advanced thought, but rather look to the living saven, and to those who are still to live, for its brightest light. We are wiser than the past, and the future will yet surpass us in every branch of knowledge. Would we have a pure and elevated theology, we should rather ask what men will believe a hundred years hence, than what they accepted a hundred years ago.

Yet here in San Francisco, only last Sunday, a learned clergyman, discoursing on an address by one of the first scientists of the age, indulges in this drivel about going back to paganism. He should know better. We believe he does know better. It is not creditable to human nature that any mature man should live in the light of our San Francisco literature, and not rise above such stolidity. It is equally humiliating to reflect that a public instructor had no more respect for his congregation than to suppose they could listen with patience to such a paltering with truth.

Vice President Wilson, being called on for a speech, at Universalist Convention in New York, recently, said: "You must excuse me from making any remarks. I have nothing to say. I came here to see a few friends and not to speak. I am not of your faith, but I am in sympathy with you as with any association of men who are striving to do good and advance the world." Mr. Wilson is a spiritualist.

SOCIAL FREEDOM.

BRIEF SKETCH OF A LECTURE BY JENNIE LEYS.

It is not creditable to the daily press of San Francisco that a reformatory teacher like Miss Leys is ignored, as if by pre-concert, while many columns are devoted to the details of dirty acts brought to light in the police court. The papers are filled with records of criminality, and the grand words of a public teacher, who shows us the way to lessen crime and reform mankind are passed by as the idle wind. Miss Leys has in several of her admirable discourses spoken of the causes of human degradation, misery and crime, and given advice worthy the attention of all humanitarians. The only lecture given by her which does not meet the approval of all her listeners, is the one of which the following is an imperfect sketch. Some of her objections to the present system are here given, but the remedies proposed, if any, were not set forth in this discourse. She believes in the marriage of one man to one woman, but opposes our present marriage laws and customs, believing them to be immoral and evil in their effects on the race.

Miss Leys precluded her lecture on the Social Question with some personal remarks, saying that she had accepted a path marked out for her by her angel guides. She had no desire for social freedom for herself. She stands alone, having pledged herself two years ago to do the work assigned to her to do, and to know neither father nor mother, sister nor brother, husband nor home in this life forever. She said: "While I walk the earth I will have neither touch, nor look nor word of love from living man, not because I do not respect and honor true men, but because I must stand apart, and do my work without let or hindrance."

She said it is only necessary to know the social order of any epoch to determine the condition of that period; she then traced the position of woman in her relations to man from the earliest times. In polygamy women were held in fee, and kept in absolute subjection. Monogamy, as it has been practised, marks the era between barbarism and civilization. The dawn of a new era is at hand, in which the true monogamic relation shall prevail. It will be a higher, grander epoch than the world has ever known. Reform in society must begin in the family relation. Monogamy, as to day understood, must give way to a purer and better condition. As it has been practised, it is but polygamy in disguise; it has done its work, and must assume a higher form. Polygamy was the despotism of one man over many women; monogamy has been the supremacy of one man over one woman. Until woman rises to a knowledge of her own powers, the race is defrauded of its divinest heritage. She only is fit to become a mother, and she only can become the mother of healthy children, whose love relations are free. She must not be forced to the office of motherhood by any man claiming to own her. She must own herself. The only true marriage is that union cemented by pure affection, and marriage ceases when love ceases. This is a law of nature, over which man can have no control; he can only comply, or, failing to comply, suffer the evils that result from infringement of nature's laws. She spoke of the early deaths of children, and said the idiotic and insane, the depraved and criminal classes are the natural fruits of marriage as it now exists—the enforced power of the husband over the wife. Feticide, infanticide and other heinous crimes are directly traceable to monogamic marriage as now understood and practised. The present laws and regulations do not secure the exclusiveness which is sought to be attained. Many marriages by law are so empty of love that love overleaps the law and seeks gratification in defiance of it. It is not monogamy when people look beyond. That only is a true marriage when the minds and souls of the parties so blend that no external form by priest or judge can improve the union.

CHARTER OAK HALL.—Another crowded audience last Sunday evening, including many new comers. Mrs. Hammond sang and played as usual, when Mrs. Foye, the President of the Society, expressed the hope that all present came for candid investigation. Spiritualism, she said, is either a great truth or a tremendous error, and whichever it be, it is a serious subject, and demands earnest inquiry. On asking for the nomination of a committee, some gentlemen expressed a desire to have two appointed, and that they be both skeptics. He nominated as one of them, a Mr. Daniels. Mrs. Foye said the committee had nothing to do but sit at the table, open the ballots and read the names. One man was as good as two. She asked if Mr. Daniels was well known, and Mr. Pearsall said he was a friend of his. Mrs. Foye said it did not matter about personal friends; the demonstrations were not given to gratify individuals, but the audience. Individuals can get tests by going to mediums. The nomination was not put to vote by the President, but several other names being presented, some of whom declined, J. B. Hardenburgh was chosen, contrary to his wish, and he refused to serve. Mrs. Foye preferred a skeptic, and finally, after a protest on the part of some who thought the President had no right to ignore the man first nominated, a gentleman unknown to most of the audience was chosen. The names of various spirits were given as usual, with correct answers to test questions as to date of death, business, residence, etc. There was not a single mistake. The persons who wrote the names were mostly strangers to the medium. At the close of the seance the committee man said he went to the stand a skeptic, and had been almost converted. He thought the manifestations very remarkable, especially the writing by the medium upside down and from right to left. Spirits were then described and messages given through Mrs. Hendee, Mrs. Cummings and other mediums. One of these meetings is very like another, and yet the public interest in them seems unabated.

Carlyle says the end of man is action not thought, even though it were the noblest. But a little thought at the beginning and a continuous thinking by the way do help the end amazingly.

TILTON'S STATEMENT.

This remarkable document, which the press generally have ignored or quoted from very sparingly, is by far too lengthy for our columns. It is a complete vindication of his course throughout his entire troubles. He gives numerous proofs of the falsity of the charge that he treated Mrs. Tilton with cruelty; publishes a remarkable letter from Susan B. Anthony to Mrs. Hooker, referring to Beecher's guilt, and full of pity for Mrs. Tilton, and demolishes the statement of Beecher that "Elizabeth" thrust her love on him. He refers with calmness to the outrageous conduct of his wife's mother, and gives extracts from letters which prove that Mrs. Morse knew of the intimacy of her daughter with Beecher. He says he destroyed all letters of his wife alluding to her guilt, fearing they might be lost, and become tell tales of her secret; but one letter only is preserved it being a copy which Mrs. Tilton sent to her mother. In this letter she begs that her past be buried, left with her and her God, and says: "Do not say any more that my ill health is on account of my sin and its discovery. My sin and my life's record I have carried to my Savior.

* * I rest in him; I trust in him; * * my prostration is owing to the suffering I have caused you, and will cause those those I love in the future, if the spirit of forgiveness does not exorcise the spirit of hate." She begs him to avoid stimulating drinks. [he drank to drown his troubles]. In the letter to her mother accompanying this copy, she says: "I should mourn greatly if my life were to be made known to father; his head would be bowed indeed to the grave. * * You will see that by reading or showing this letter to any one you reveal my secret. It is because I trust you dear mother that I send you this, that you may know my spirit completely toward you both. I have been told 'Confide not in your mother,' but I reply, 'To whom on earth can I confide?' I think it wise to destroy our letters respecting this subject, lest Florry or some one should pick them up." This remarkable letter was written, it must be remembered, during her absence from her husband, and of course was not influenced by him. Indeed she begs her mother not to let him know that she had divulged its contents. It must be remembered also that the date, Nov. 1870, was prior to the time when Beecher ascertained that she had revealed the secret.

M. Tilton then proceeds to show that at the time Beecher says he, Tilton, had "fallen" from the editorial chair of the Independent, and was in pecuniary distress, he was in the receipt of $14,000 a year, as editor of the Brooklyn Union and contributor to the Independent, and that the change was greatly to his advantage. He details Bowen's connection with the affair, and proves over and over again that Beecher has falsified. He refers to the persecutions which, for years, he has received from members of Plymouth Church, culminating in the published statement of Dr. Bacon, moderator of the Brooklyn Council, that Tilton has proven a "knave and dog," and that Beecher was the most magnanimous of men. Then follows the efforts Tilton made to have Beecher correct Dr. Bacon's misrepresentations, failing in which he wrote his public letter to Dr. Bacon, which was so worded as to shield Mrs. Tilton as much as possible, introducing in the letter a eulogistic reference to her. Mr. Tilton continues on this point:

Mr. Beecher saw by this tribute (and by others which I habitually paid to my wife) that, however willing I might be to cope with him, I was never willing to endanger her. He had seen, by long observation of my sympathy for her, that his safest protection against any possible resentment of mine was always in my unwillingness to compromise this tender and wounded woman.

Mr. Beecher, however, having no such regard for the good name of Mrs. Tilton, appointed his Committee of investigation, induced Mrs. Tilton to desert her home and, publicly challenged Mr. Tilton to divulge his story. Mr. Tilton continues:

Had Mrs. Tilton remained with me my Sworn Statement would never have been made; nor did the thought of making such a statement enter my mind until after her desertion; but at last, when Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Tilton publicly turned upon me and demanded that I should expose them, I had no course open to me but to state the plain truth and to let all the parties abide by the consequences. * * * I made this exposure, not of my free will, but from compulsion; I made it because Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Tilton compelled me to make it. I did not volunteer it. I would gladly have continued to shield both parties for the sake of one. But when Mr. Beecher and Mrs. Tilton made a public league against me, and in the face of the whole community defied me to tell the facts, I was either forced to accept their joint challenge, or, by declining it, to deserve the contempt of mankind. That is my answer, and just and candid men and women will acknowledge it to be just.

Concerning the charge that Tilton garbled Beecher's letters, Mr. Tilton says the letters in full which have since been published, are far more condemnatory of Beecher than the extracts, and adds:

It is the part of a brave man when he speaks to abide by his words. Mr Beecher's behavior toward his own letters proves him to be that most pitiable of all cowards—a man who dares not face his own handwriting. His defense is that these letters were written to express his remorse for having given Mrs. Tilton bad advice. I have already proven that Mr. Beecher never gave any such advice to Elizabeth, but gave just the opposite. But even had he given such advice—namely, that Mrs. Tilton should separate from her husband—I hold that such advice, given on the theory that her husband had deprived her of food, fuel and personal liberty, would not have been bad, but good; and the giver of such advice would never need to have repented of giving it. But I will go further and say that, granting such advice to have been given and to have been bad, yet since Mrs. Tilton did not accept this advice, but rejected it, it is a mockery of human reason to say that he spent four years of remorse in contemplating the giving of bad advice which was never taken and which produced no effect of harm or ill!

Mr. Beecher's adroit effort to persuade the public to accept a false interpretation of these letters is vain. They have a plain meaning which no counter-explanation can ever blot out. They are all based on one central fact, a criminal intimacy between himself and Mrs. Tilton, which had been confessed by both parties to her husband and to Mr. Moulton. This simple fact is the key which unlocks all the mysteries of these letters, if mysteries they contain. All the letters, notes and memoranda refer to the crime of adultery, to the fear of disclosure, and to the consequent "devices" for the safety of the participants. When Mrs. Tilton made to me her confession of July 3, 1870, it was a confession of adultery. When in her note of December 30, following, she said: "I give a letter implicating my friend, Henry Ward Beecher," it was an implication of adultery. When in her second note of the same evening she said that Mr. Beecher had visited her bedside and reproached her for having "struck him dead," it was because she had disclosed his adultery. When Mr. Beecher cast himself upon Mr. Moulton's strong and faithful protection, it was because the wretched man had been detected in his adultery. When, during the four years that followed the 1st of January, 1871, hardly a month or week passed which did not witness Mr. Beecher in some consultation with Mr. Moulton, either by letter or in person, it was to concoct measures for concealing this adultery. When Mr. Beecher, conscious of his guilt and fearing detection, fell often into hopeless gloom at the prospect of disclosure, it was because the crime to be disclosed was adultery. When, from the beginning to the end of Mr. Moulton's relationship with Mr. Beecher, those two men pursued a common plan—in which I, too, participated—this plan was to guard two families of children from the consequences of this adultery. When Mr. Beecher wrote to me his letter of contrition, it was because he sought to placate me into forgiveness of his adultery. When he asked me to remember "all the other hearts that would ache," it was because of the misery which two households and their wide connections would suffer by the discovery of his adultery. When he wrote to Mrs. Tilton that Mr. Moulton had "tied up the storm which was ready to burst upon their heads," it was because Mr. Moulton had skillfully held back Mr. Bowen's meditated proceedings against Mr. Beecher for adultery. When Mr. Beecher wrote that it would "kill him if Mr. Moulton were not a friend of Mrs. Tilton's honor," he meant that this lady's "honor," like every other "lady's honor," was her reputation for chastity, and he relied on Mr. Moulton to keep the world from knowing that this lady's pastor had soiled her "honor" by adultery. When Mr. Beecher requested Mrs. Morse to call him her "son," which she did, and when she begged him to come and see her, pledging herself not to allude to her "daughter's secret," it was because this mother knew that this "son" and daughter had committed adultery. When this mother gave this "son" the troublesome information that "twelve persons" had been put in possession of this secret, it was the guilty and perilous secret of adultery. When Mr. Beecher shuddered at the likelihood that Mr. Bowen had communicated to Mr. Claffin "the bottom facts," it was because the chief fact lying at the bottom of all was adultery. When Mr. Beecher said to Mr. Moulton: "Can't we hit upon some plan to break the force of my letter to Tilton?" it was because the letter whose force he wished to break was his letter of contrition for his adultery. When in despair he wrote, "Would to God, Theodore, Elizabeth and I could be friends again—Theodore would have the hardest task in such a case," it was because this "hardest task" would consist of forgiving a wife and her paramour for their adultery. When Mrs. Tilton wrote imploringly both to Mr. Moulton and to Mr. Beecher that "the papers should be destroyed," it was because those papers were records of adultery. When in brokenness of spirit Mrs. Tilton wrote to ask her seducer's forgiveness, it was because of her womanly distress at having betrayed him for his adultery. When in one of her clandestine notes to him she referred to her "nest-hiding," it was a means of more pleasantly reminding him of his own poetic expression for their adultery.

When her destroyer wrote to Mr. Moulton, February 5, 1872, saying: "I would not believe that any one could have passed through my experience and be alive or sane," he confessed the agony of living on the verge of public punishment for adultery. When he said to Mr. Moulton, "You are literally all my stay and comfort," it was because this brave and tender friend was the barrier between the public and the knowledge of a clergyman's adultery. When Mr. Beecher, who was never tired of sending to this friend such love-letters as a man seldom writes to a man, said to him: "I would have fallen on the way but for the courage with which you inspired me," it was his ever grateful acknowledgment to one who was saving him from the fate which punishes clergymen for adultery. When he bewailed the "keen suspicions with which he was pressed," these were the dangerous suspicions of a congregation to whom public rumor had carried a horrible hint of their pastor's adultery. When he feared an "appeal to the church, and then a council," and prognosticated thereby a "conflagration," it was because he foresaw how the public mind would be influenced by the knowledge of his adultery. When he portrayed himself as standing in daily dread of those personal friends, who were making a "ruinous defense" of him, it was because he feared that their clamorous statements of his innocence would blunderingly lead to the detection of his adultery. When he cried out that he was "suffering the torments of the damned," he was pouring out his heart's anguish to the only man to whom he had liberty to unburden his remorse for his adultery. When he said that he could not carry this burden to his wife and children, it was because he was ashamed to acknowledge to them his adultery. When he wrote to Moulton, saying; "Sacrifice me without hesitation if you can clearly see your way to his (Mr. Tilton's) safety and happiness thereby," he alluded to the sacrifice of his good name in expiation of his adultery. When he said of himself: "I should be destroyed but he (Mr. Tilton) would not be saved," it was because all that was needed for his destruction was simply that the world should be told of his adultery. When he said "Elizabeth and her children would have their future clouded," he saw hanging over this ruined mother and her brood the black and awful cloud which hangs over every matron guilty of adultery. When he wrote "Life would be pleasant if I could see that rebuilt which is shattered," he referred to the moral impossibility of reconstructing a home once broken by adultery. When he compared himself to "Esau who sold his birthright and found no place for repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears," it was because the unpardonable crime which this minister had committed was adultery. When he spoke in eulogy of Mr. Moulton's wife as reviving "his waning faith in womanhood," it was because his thoughts were then of another and weaker woman, whose moral nature he had overcome, and who afterwards had betrayed him for his adultery. When the strong woman who had thus restored "his waning faith in womanhood" counseled him to make "a frank and manly confession of his sin, asking man's forgiveness for it, as he expected God's," and when he afterward wrote that "her clear truthfulness laid him flat"—all this shows how he quailed before a virtuous woman's rebuke for his adultery. When he said to me that I "would have been a better man than he in such circumstances," he meant that I would have disdained to stoop to the crime of seducing the wife of an intimate friend, or of using the power of a clergyman to corrupt a trusting parishioner into adultery. When he said to me that I had "condoned my wife's fault," pointing me to this condonation as constituting on my part a pledge of forgiveness toward him, he wrote in that word "condone" the plainest possible confession of his adultery. In like manner all Mr. Beecher's letters, when read in view of the one sad and guilty fact which is the key-note to their tragic meaning, constitute a four years' history of a mind afflicted with "anxiety, remorse, fear and despair"—all in consequence of a discovered adultery.

If I have been thus explicit in reiterating Mr. Beecher's crime, it is not for the sake of proving it from his letters, for I have sufficiently proved it without help from these, but only to show that I did not garble these letters when I pointed to them as proofs of adultery; and I repeat that, if Beecher's letters have been (as he says) "wickedly garbled," it is he who garbled them. It is I who have restored them to their true meaning.

We have space only for the closing paragraphs, as follows:

Before God I hold that I did right, and not wrong, in forgiving an erring woman who went astray through a powerful temptation. No regret beclouds my mind for this forgiveness of my wife—which, I am sure, I shall look back to from my dying bed with pleasure, not with pain. I forgave this gentle woman because I loved her; I forgave her for her children's sake; I forgave her because I despise the public sentiment which condones such faults in men, and then compels men to punish them in women; I forgave her because, even after her grievous error, she still remained a woman loving the right rather than the wrong, and seeking good rather than evil; I forgave her because I tenderly remembered that Christ himself forgave a similar fault in a more wicked woman—and who was I to scorn the law of his great example? No criticism of my forgiveness of Mrs. Tilton can prick me with any pang. If all the acts of my life had been as righteous as this good deed of charity albeit toward a woman who has since but poorly requited me for it—I would now be a better man than I am.

I have only to add that I know no words of measured moderation in which to characterize fitly Mr. Beecher's recent treatment of this broken-hearted lady, whom he has flung against the wall of Plymouth Church and dashed to pieces. First, he instituted a public committee to inquire into her adultery with him, whereas he ought to have protected her against this exposure; then he beckoned her away from her husband's house, making her very flight bear witness to her guilt; then he suborned her to give false testimony against her husband, with a view to destroy him before the world; then, with unparalleled baseness, he turned upon the companion of his crime and accused her of having been the tempter rather than the tempted, declaring that she had "thrust her affections upon him unsought;" then he variously indicted her for what he called "her needless treachery to her friend and pastor," expressing his doubts whether to call her (as he says) "a saint or the chief of sinners," arguing (as he says again) that she must be either "corrupted to deceit or so broken in mind as to be irresponsible;" debating with himself (as he says still further) whether he should not "pour out his indignation upon her and hold her up to contempt;" and then, after making all these contemptuous references to her in his published statement, he prompted his committee to render a verdict against her, in which they declare her conduct toward Mr. Beecher, even on their own theory of her innocence, to be "utterly indefensible;" and, last of all, he permitted his own journal, the Christian Union, to stigmatize her as a "poor, weak woman," whose testimony was of no value either for or against the man who had tempted her to utter her falsehoods in his own behalf!

All this base and brutal conduct by Mr. Beecher toward Mrs. Tilton prompts me to speak of him in fierce and burning words. But I forbear. "Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord." I have become so used to sorrows in my own life that I cannot wish for their infliction upon another man, not even on my worst enemy. I will not ask the public to visit upon Mr. Beecher any greater condemnation for the desolation which he has brought upon those who loved, trusted and served him, than I have in past times seen him suffer from his own self-inflicted tortures in contemplation of the very crime for which he has now been exposed to the scorn and pity of the world. I know well enough how his own thoughts have bowed him in agony to the dust, and this is enough. Wherefore, in contemplating my empty house, my scattered children, and my broken home, I thank heaven that my heart is spared the pang of this man's remorse for having wrought a ruin which not even Almighty God can repair.

THEODORE TILTON.

BROOKLYN, September 16, 1874.

Since the publication of the foregoing statement, Theodore Tilton has been indicted for libel, on complaint of District Attorney Winslow, a member of the Plymouth Investigating Committee. He has given bail in the sum of $3,000, and in a letter to the press, he solemnly affirms the literal and absolute truth of his charges against Beecher, and demands an immediate trial.

Rev. Mr. Dryden, in his address before the California Conference, explanatory of his change of views uses the following language:

Death and resurrection are closely connected, so that death is but a change in the mode and place of man's personal life and being—a transition from the material to the spiritual world—a dissolving and leaving behind of the material body, and a clothing upon and rising in a spiritual body; the real spirit-man, entering soon after death the spirit-world, not as a formless, disorganized, bodiless ghost, but a real person, clothed with a spiritual body just suited to his personal life there.

This is what all spiritualists believe, and if Mr. Dryden continues to progress, he may be admitted to the true church yet. He will have to rid himself, however, of some of his notions about God, Christ and the atonement, which as he defines them are only a trifle less absurd than the orthodox ideas.

Rev. A. C. McDougal, a "Divine" of small calibre well known in California, is now in Oregon, and has recently been declaiming against spiritualism as the work of the Devil.

J. P. Newbert, of Honcut, last week killed a four-year-old steer. On opening the stomach he discovered one $20 piece of coin, one $5 piece, and two one-half dollar pieces of silver.

Rev. S. R. Calthrop says we must consider the whole Egyptian, Jewish, Persian, Greek, and Roman inspiration as one vast stream of religious influence, of which our complex Christianity is the continuation.

A man in the almshouse of Delaware county, New York, has been employed several years in making wooden skewers which he sold to the neighboring butchers. From means derived from this source, he has purchased a burial lot in a church yard, and a tombstone, with his name and other lettering complete, except the date of his death, which he stipulated to be filled in at the proper time.

A FEW MORE BEECHNUTS.

It is reported that Brigham Young's wives are about to send for Beecher to take his place.

Mr. Beecher says he never made Mrs. Tilton presents of any account. Mr. Tilton has discovered scores of presents, many of them carefully concealed from his sight in trunks and closets he never opened.

Mark the contrast between Mr. Tilton's treatment of an erring wife and the treatment she has received from the man who caused her ruin. The wilted rose no longer fit for ornament or use is flung aside with disdain and trodden under foot.

Beecher's committee make a strong point of the fact that a criminal charge was not preferred in the first place. Mr. Tilton refers them to their own church records where the accusation of criminal conduct was spread out in full two years, or more ago.

Beecher received an ovation from his church members and friends on his return. The first thing he did was to pray for his enemies, yet he thanked God that something had occurred to awaken renewed interest in the cause of Christ—the infernal hypocrite.

On Sunday morning Oct. 4, when Beecher preached for the first time since his trial, Plymouth Church was crammed to its utmost capacity, and there were as many on the streets outside, unable to gain admittance. His sermon was from the words, "Thy will be done."

One of Mr. Beecher's strong points was that Mr. Tilton preferred his charge of criminal conduct immediately after he had lost his editorial position and salary. Mr. Tilton proves that at this very time he had not been removed, and was in receipt of an income of $14,000 a year.

Mr. Tilton shows by documentary proofs that he had the highest regard for Mr. Beecher, and was on the friendliest terms with him till the discovery of his crime, and that his home was exceptionally happy till its peace was destroyed and its charmed circle broken by a perfidious invader.

Mr. Beecher explains the remorseful language of his letters on the ground that he had advised Mrs. Tilton to separate from her husband on the strength of her representations as to his conduct. Mr. Tilton proves by the letters of Mrs. Tilton's mother, that Mr Beecher did not advise the separation.

The German Universal Gazette of Leipsic says "Beecher stands self-convicted before the whole world. No virtuous man or woman will care to read a Life of Christ emanating from so foul a source." This is well enough as an expression of opinion of Beecher, but it is a weak judgment which cannot discriminate between a man and his writings.

The Dahman publishing house in Leipsic, which issued a German translation of the first volume of Beecher's Life of Christ, has issued a card announcing their discontinuance of the work, and offering the first volume at cost. The publishers in their card say: "Due respect for the character of our house renders this determination inevitable."

The World, of Princeton, Mass., says: Moulton's statement, followed by Mr. Tilton's masterly review of the whole case, has annihilated what there was left of Beecher after his own and his "Committee's" damaging defence. The stupefying influence of the religion there taught may induce Plymouth Church people to look up to him, as a moral teacher, awhile longer; but awakened good sense will ultimately turn from him with loathing and horror.

LYCEUM FOR SELF CULTURE.

Last Sunday afternoon the Lyceum had another very interesting session. Mr. Knight opened with a good speech of about 30 minutes. He was followed by others on both sides of the question, and a very lively discussion was the result. A lady from the audience kindly volunteered some pleasant music, and Mr. Carr read a humorous poem with good effect. Social Hall is becoming a place of great attraction. In the evening Mrs. Hughes gave a lecture to a select audience, on Spiritualism and the Bible. She recommended Spiritualists to accept the manifestations set out in the good book; and christians to embrace the modern phenomena. Others spoke on the same subject. Mr. Knight said: "This is a triangular controversy. On the one side, we have the christians, who accept the miracles of the Bible, but reject the Spiritual manifestations of to-day, or ascribe them to the devil and his imps. Then there are the Spiritualists who are disposed to credit anything to-day, but utterly reject the wonders of the past.* This lady lecturer appears to stand between them, asking each to be reconciled and accept the teachings of each other. But there is a third party in the field, the christian philosophers, the scientists, who, while they believe in a great first cause, a spirit of the universe, which they call God, and in the immortality of the human soul, believe also, that God operates by fixed and immutable laws, that He has uniformly permitted them to have their course in the past, and will continue to do so in the future. They do not pretend to say that He could not change them, but only aver that there is no evidence that He ever has; that the miracles of the past, and the so-called manifestations of the present, are unproved, not having been observed and recorded, and certified, with that close scrutiny, attention to detail, and authentication, which scientific, or even legal testimony would require. The scientist therefore rejects them all alike, and seeks only to find out God and His works, by studying the legitimate and orderly operations of nature. We must continue to do so, till miracle workers and Spiritualist mediums present their phenomena supported by logical and conclusive evidence."

Next Sunday afternoon Mr. Farrell will open the discussion on the formation of human character, and in the evening Mr. Knight will lecture, and invite questions and objections.

* [It is not true that intelligent Spiritualists deny the occurrence of phenomena referred to in the Bible and other ancient records. They simply deny some of the deductions made by Christians from such manifestations.]

An apparatus for raising submerged vessels has recently been invented in France by M. Seme. To the sunken wreck at the bottom of the sea is fixed an enormous sack made of strong oil-cloth, water and air-tight, of large capacity, which, being empty, is easily submerged. The inventor calculates that, to raise a vessel of eight hundred tons, a sack measuring one hundred and thirty-five yards in length, and two and three-quarters yards in diameter, would be requisite.

This hour that you spend in fretting and ennui will never return; but it does not go away empty. It carries away with it the seed you planted in it—a seed which will help to make up your immortality.

COMMON SENSE.

FAUST—A TRAGEDY.

FROM A MANUSCRIPT TRANSLATION BY DON FULANO

PROLOGUE IN HEAVEN.

Present—the Lord, the Heavenly hosts, and afterwards, Mephistopheles.

[The three archangels step forward.]

RAPHAEL—The sun in pristine fashion sings
A challenge song to other spheres,
And, as its course prescribed it wings,
It melts the thundercloud to tears.
Its aspect gives the angels vigor,
Tho' none may pierce its blinding ray;
Thy works, so fathomless and big, are
Glorious as on that primal day.

GABRIEL—And fast, and wondrous faster still,
Whirls round and round the Earth's delight,
The hues of Paradise now fill
Its groves, and now the gloom of night;
Ocean's broad waves, in bright cascades,
Rush from the deep, where rocks uprear,
And rocks and deeps, thro' lights and shades,
Spin circling with the whirling sphere.

MICHAEL—Tornados roar in emulation;
From land to sea, from wave to strand,
And weave, with every fresh gyration,
A chain of sequence round the land.
The scathing lightning cleaves a road
To give the booming thunder space.
Yet all thy ministers, oh God!
Hail the soft changes of thy grace.

THE THREE—Thine aspect gives thine angels courage,
Tho' none their meaning deep can say,
And all thy bright creations flourish
As perfect as on that first day.

MEPHISTOPHELES—Since you, oh Lord! a visit make to ask
How all things go amongst us since your last,
And since you erst received me always kindly,
So now too, 'midst your menials, you find me.
Your pardon, if at high flown speech I stinkie—
Whilst the whole circle sneers at me, I know—
My passions certainly your ribs would tickle
Had you not given up laughing long ago.
Of suns and worlds I can't descant myself,
I only note how mankind plagues itself;
The little earth-god keeps his pristine shape,
As on that first day, a most wondrous ape.
A trifle better, he seems, would he get on
If loss of heaven's light glaze his soul you'd let on;
He calls it reason, uses it at least
To grow more beastly than your vilest beast.
He seems to me—saving your Honor's presence—
Like those shrill grasshoppers one hears in dozens,
Who ever fly, and flying spring,
And in the grass their old, old discord sing.
Would he were buried deep in grass and mosses,
In every fifth he buries his proboscis.

THE LORD—And is that all thou find'st to say?
Still growling on in thy old grumbling way!

MEPHISTOPHELES—No Lord, I find things there, as ever, shocking bad;
Why men, poor devils, I do pity so,
I've scarce the heart to plague them in their woe.

THE LORD—Dost thou know Faust?

MEPHISTOPHELES—The Doctor?

THE LORD—Aye, my slave.

MEPHISTOPHELES—By God, he serves you in a curious manner;
Nought earthly is the big fool's drink or dinner.
Soul fermentation drives the wretch to rave, [1]
Half-conscious all the while of his own folly.
Dragged down from heaven the loveliest stars he'd have,
And pluck from earth each joy that makes men jolly;
Yet, near or far, with naught is he content;
In deep disgust his restless days are spent.

THE LORD—Well, if he serves me now in wildered wise,
Soon will I purge from mists his brightened eyes,
Knows not the gardener when the sapling shoots,
That future flowers and fruit shall crown its roots?

MEPHISTOPHELES—What will you bet that you don't lose him yet?
If you will only give me leave
To lead him my way—by the sleeve.

THE LORD—Whilst he's on earth to thee there is no let,
Since man must err so long as he doth strive.

MEPHISTOPHELES—I thank you kindly—like him best alive;
For the cold dead I don't much care, in sooth,
And much I love the full fresh cheek of youth,
But to a corpse's knock I'm not at home;
So cats like living mice, to jump and moan.

THE LORD—Well then, I leave him to thy care;
Draw if thou can'st this spirit from its source,
And lead him—can'st thou get him there—
With thee on thy broad downward course,
Then stand ashamed, when beaten, forced t' acknowledge
That a good man, in his most misty struggle,
Knows the right road e'en thro' the devil's college.

MEPHISTOPHELES—All right; not long will 'dure my trouble;
About my bet, you bet, I do not quake.
And when I've made your saint a God-damned rake,
You'll give me God-speed, doubtless, with whole heart.

[1] Literally, drives him towards the far-away.

Dust shall be eat, and like it—yes, I'm smart—
Like my old aunty, the distinguished snake.
Pray step in freely here when'er thou wilt,
The likes of you I don't dislike, not I,
Of all those fallen spirits who've rebelled,
The knave is least of all my enemy.
Human activity too soon may slumber,
Man loves too well an undisturbed repose.
Therefore I deem it good his steps to encumber
With one who'll stir him up and work him woes,
And must, as devil, tread upon his toes.
But ye true sons of God rejoice your souls
With the rich wealth of ever growing beauty,
And may that essence which while sons roll,
Still lives and works eternally, about ye
Spread the soft shelter of its pinions screening,
And things that hover in fantastic seeming
Fix 'neath your steadfast gaze into a meaning. [3]

[The heaven shuts, the archangels disperse.]

MEPHISTOPHELES—From time to time I drop in here from hell,
To see "I Am," and keep right sides the dish up.
'Tis really kind in such a heavy swell
To chat with Scratch as if he were a Bishop! [3]

[3] Literally, that which hovers in wavering appearance fix with lasting thought.

[3] It seems to me more natural to make the devil speak with great familiarity to the deity. As the unconquered rebel he is sure to be cheeky, witty and unstrained in his language. Therefore I put no thee or thou into his mouth, whilst to the speech of the deity it seems to add a kind of dignity. Elsewhere I only use this form of speech to add solemnity and dignity to high flown and rhapsodical speeches—chiefly those of Faust. This appears to me to be a natural and proper use of it. To employ it constantly in the dialogue would make it stilted and unnatural.

HOW WE MAY KNOW GOD.

I do but say
We have not yet beheld the God on High;
Not knowing that He is, we live and die!
If we know nothing of Him, yet we feel,
We feel love's kisses sweet!
The vine that trips our feet—
The murderous thrust of steel;
Gladness about the heart when the sun breaks,
Or the soft moon is floating up the skies,
Delight in the wild sea, in tranquil lakes,
In every bird that flies,
And hot tears in our eyes,
When Love, the best of earth, its last kiss over, dies!
But He, whom we name God, and grope so far above,
Whose arm we fear is Power, whose heart we hope is Love,
On the worlds below Him,
In the dust before Him,
We may adore Him,
We cannot know Him,
If indeed He be, to bless or curse,
And be not this tremendous Universe.

STANDARD.

Special Notices.

Dr. E. E. Dodge has removed to 123 Ellis street.

Dr. BANCROFT's treatment for Dyspepsia and General Debility has benefited me more than all the medicine I have used for many years.

O. A. BANCROFT, 519 Sycamore street, Milwaukee.

Dr. Bancroft's office is 304 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

For the very best Photographs go to Bradley & Bulofson's Gallery, with an elevator, 429 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Those suffering from that most annoying of the minor miseries of human life—a cold in the head—or from catarrh in any form, should try Dr. Evory's Diamond Catarrh Remedy. Just try it—that's all. Sold at this office, and by all druggists.

Send Austin Kent one dollar for his pamphlets on Free Love and Marriage, etc. He has been seventeen years physically helpless, confined to his bed and chair, is poor and needs the money. He sends four or five well-written essays for one dollar. His address is AUSTIN KENT, Stockholm, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., Box 44.

Farmers, do you know that the Babcock Fire Extinguisher is a sure exterminator of gophers, squirrels, etc., and that it will effectually kill insects on fruit-trees, with little trouble and scarcely any expense. One charge of the machine will exterminate all the squirrels in a hundred-acre field. A new machine can be purchased at this office at a reduced price, in perfect order, and with six charges. Address "COMMON SENSE," 236 Montgomery street.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, NO. 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

COMMON SENSE can be purchased at the following places in this city: Patten's, 773 Market; Snow's, 319 Kearny; Sharp's, 236 Montgomery, and at this office, 236 Montgomery street, up stairs. Price of single copies, ten cents.

COMMON SENSE.

A Journal of Live Ideas.

VOL. 1.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1874.

No. 28.

Signs of the Times.

Dr. McCosh says Tyndall is a novice in philosophy, although "eminently respectable as a scientist." By "philosophy" he probably means theology.

The well on the Kimball oil claim near San Fernando is down 160 feet, and emits a volume of gas so strong that when lighted it sends up a jet of flame twenty feet.

It is less than fifty years since the world began to build itself railways, and now it has 32,000 geographical miles of them, equal to a construction of two miles a day since the beginning.

The Methodist Episcopal Conference in session at Des Moines, adopted among other resolutions the following: "That in the judgment of this Conference, it is right that women should have the privilege of the elective franchise."

Foye & Co., who have been paid $10,000 by the city for the use, in the construction of the new City Hall, of some of the principles involved in the earthquake patent, now demand $12,500 additional. The first suit was probably just, but the last demand looks like extortion.

John P. Jones last week wrote a letter to the Nevada State Central Committee, in reply to an invitation to attend the Republican Ratification meeting, in which he expresses the opinion that whatever of public reform is needed may best be attained within the Republican organization.

Prof. King made a balloon ascension from Erie, Pa., a few days ago, which was notable in that, on reaching a high altitude the balloon struck an easterly current which carried it twenty miles east, where, on descending into a lower strata, it struck a westerly current which brought the balloon back again to the place of departure.

An American can travel over Europe on the great thoroughfares without finding it necessary to speak any language but his own. He finds his countrymen domesticated wherever he goes. He meets his neighbors at every stopping place. When Mr. Jewell was in St. Petersburg, he opened an American reading room, and found it filled with his countrymen in a week.

Gruet Buisley, the aeronaut, made his last ascension from Woodward's Garden on Sunday. His balloon, after a fair voyage, came down on the rocks, and Buisley becoming entangled in the ropes, was unable to let out the gas. The consequence was the balloon rose and fell several times, the basket striking the rocks violently at each descent, until the occupant was rendered insensible.

The people of New York City, having heard Rev. Robert Collyer preach, are now anxious to have him take up his residence in that city.

Five sermons have already been preached in San Francisco on Prof. Tyndall's Belfast address. Most of these discourses are liberal in their views.

Mrs. Dr. Carr is announced to lecture before the Temperance Legion, Sutter street, above Kearny, on Sunday evening, October 17th. Subject, "Somebody versus Nobody."

The Golden Age says "it is always safe to tie to an old school Presbyterian. One generation goeth and another cometh, but he abideth just where his great grandfather stood."

Kossuth declines to visit Hungary while it is part of the Austrian empire, and spends his old age in England in cossetting his dreams and meditating on what might have been.

Brigham Young's nineteenth wife says "Brigham is incapable of managing any business enterprise in a skillful manner, and that his vast wealth was amassed by fraud and robbery." "In this line," she says, "Brigham Young is a distinguished success. In any other he is a great failure."

It is stated that many of the agriculturists of Kansas are disappointed with the prospects in that State, and are seeking homes elsewhere. Perhaps some of them may find their way to the Pacific Coast. There is plenty of room here between Puget Sound and the bay of San Diego, and much of the land is cheap as well as fruitful.

A Manilla paper announces the discovery of pre-historic remains on the little islands of Rota and Tinian, which form part of the Ladrone or Mariana Islands, consisting of two series of eight stone pyramids, standing in two rows, at intervals of 12 feet, the base being 12 feet square, and the height 36 feet. The summit is crowned by a kind of large cup equal in diameter to the diagonal of the base. There is little doubt that they belong to an age anterior to the Spanish conquest.

Theodore Parker was not considered good authority in the Christian Church, yet he believed in Christianity, as he understood it, most devoutly. His religion was what Francis Abbot would call the religion of humanity, but Parker cared much less for names than he did for things. He once said: "The time is coming when men will wonder quite as much at the Christianity of the nineteenth century as we wonder at that of the ninth century. Christianity is progressive, because it is not positive, but natural."

[For Common Sense.]

AN EASTERN STORY.

Now in the days of Aldebaren, who reigned in Ephesus two score and ten years, there lived a prophet of God who taught many wonderful things. His days were before the building of the great temple; yea, while the ancient graves stood around the market place, and a man might cry thereof, even to the uttermost ends of the city.

And he taught in the groves, and the way sides, and sitting by the silent stream; and people went out unto him, and listened to his words, and marveled thereat. And he spoke as one that would do good, and eschew all evil. His raiment was the garb of simplicity; his food the simple bounties of nature, with a little bread, or a bunch of grapes; and the genial sky, or the umbrageous fig tree sheltered his head. He had no mansion, and he sought none. Gorgeous apparel had he not, neither cared he to possess it. Wine and condiments, and costly dainties were strangers to his lips. Yet was he rich, because of the little that he had he freely gave to those who had less. And God blessed his store, inasmuch as when he had but one loaf or a little fish, he would bless it and break it and divide with the poor, and with his friends, and all were content.

And his words, behold they were of a piece with his doings. He spoke words of kindness and love to all, and blessed them, and cursed not. And he spoke on this wise continually, "If ye would follow me, love one another. Forgive your enemies. Feed the hungry; clothe the naked. Lay not up treasure upon earth, but rather in heaven. Whoso giveth to the poor, lendeth to the Lord, and he will repay with interest. If ye have two coats, give one; two loaves of bread, let not the second stay in thine hand, if thy neighbor be hungered. And the little ones, the children, blessed are they, and blessed are they who feed them, and comfort them, and clothe them, and lead them in the path of righteousness, up to the temple of God; yea, if ye forget them, or overlook them, so that they suffer by the way side, and ye give them not meat and drink, it shall be as though ye denied it to God, who is the Creator of all, and in whose sight they are precious forever. All else shall be forgiven, but whoso denieth a bit of bread, or a cup of water to one of these little ones in need, denieth it to me and to God. He shall be cast out, and no wise enter the kingdom of heaven."

And He was gathered to his fathers. And when he was gone, men said he was good, past the goodness of man. He was a God in wisdom and justice, and charity, and love. And they worshipped him, and built temples in his name, and gathered together to hear his words from generation to generation. And nations gathered to his name, and said: "He is our Lord! He will save us forever!" And they called on him everywhere, and put their trust in him, and had no other name by which a man might be saved.

And it came to pass that men grew rich and great, and built mighty cities, even to the ends of the earth; but the tale of the Syrian prophet was in them all; even in San Francisco, as thou goest down to the sea on the western verge of the great republic. And temples arose in his name. Yea, gorgeous structures, that adorned the earth, and pointed in burnished gold to the sky. And people came here to worship, clothed in purple and gold, and with silks and feathers, and diamonds, and sapphires, and in gay carriages. And they returned home to replenish themselves with all the rich things of the earth. The dainties of all lands were gathered upon their festal boards and they ate and drank to overflowing. And he who ministered unto them had ten thousand golden pieces for his hire, and was clad in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day. And the people said, "Behold our pastor, is he not wise and good?" And the pastor said, "Have ye not seen my flock? Behold how they walk in my way," and they did glorify each other abundantly.

And behold a certain lady of the congregation, who had worshipped many years, and sat under the droppings of the sanctuary, read also a certain book, a silky, siren delusion, published by one Demorest, wherein was found all manner of vanity and folly. It sheweth how to multiply labor and cost in all manner of fantastic dress. It speaketh of nothing useful, but of all manner of things that are ridiculous, and engage the time and talent and money of those who read, in the structure of all imaginable uselessness. It teaches how to make worsted covers for flower pots, to clothe things that need no clothing, to the neglect of the little naked feet of the children of the poor.

And the pastor made his visits; he comforted his flock with private consolation and assurance of final rest and blessing. And he visited the lady, and brake bread with her, and saw all her goodly works, in which she served God. He had tea from far Cathay, sugar from the islands of the sea, spices from farther India, and choice wines from Burgundy and France. She beheld all her goodly works, the products of her skill and industry and thought. There were flounces, and ruffles, and puffs, and chignons, and flowers, embroidered slippers, and carpets, and tidies, and the flower pots with fine crochet work in worsted of many colors. And the pastor admired and commended, and blessed the lady in the name of the prophet, and said, "Sister, now we part for a season, but of a truth, we shall meet again in paradise."

And he departed, and lay upon his bed, and a deep sleep fell upon him, and he had a vision, yea, the prophet of Syria appeared to him in a dream. And when he awoke, he was troubled in his soul, yea, grieved in his heart; and hied to the mansion of the lady and said, "Behold what I have seen in a vision. The judgment seat rose up before me. The Great Judge of the universe sat upon his throne in heaven, and thousands came and bowed before. And behold, you came among the rest, and around you a bright halo of all the fine things spoken of in Demorest's, and the worsted covers stripped from the flower pots were there; and beside them thousands of little children with naked feet. And the dainties of your table were spread out, and the children hungered, and cast their eyes upon them, but gnashed their teeth because you gave them not. And your soft velveted pew in the church was there, the fine organ, the sweet choristers, and I, even I, delivered one of my choicest sermons in soft dulcet tones, and many tropes and figures of speech; but the children were far from us. They played in the gutters without instruction. They were naked and without bread. They were thirsty and we heeded them not. We said, 'Verily, this is a comfortable path to heaven. It is decked with jewels. It is strewn with flowers. Its air is redolent of sweet music. Its rills are running with rich wines. Its mountains are cakes and spices. Let us journey therein. Truly, it is the straight path to the gate of paradise.'

But there came a voice from near the throne exclaiming:

'The little ones! The little ones! What have ye done for them? These flower pot covers! why found they not the little one's feet? These costly wines! why not cups of pure water for perishing lips? These piles of cakes! why not broken bread? These rich pews! why not school houses for the little ones? You have denied all these things, and preferred vanity, and ostentation, and luxury for yourselves! Verily you have had your reward. Depart, I know you not! Ye say Lord! Lord! but which of my commandments have you kept?'

And the angel turned on me, even me, and said, 'You have wrought this misery. This woman has sat under your instruction for ten years, and gathered ashes instead of crumbs of bread, and is lost.'

And I awoke, and behold it was a dream. SAADI.

[For Common Sense.]

FREE LOVE DEFINED.

BY AUSTIN KENT.

Free Love is now destined to be discussed more or less in all comparatively free papers. Illogical, random, and so, endless, discussion on any matter is burdensome to most minds. To clearly define is to shorten.

WHAT WE AGREE TO.

We, who believe in this doctrine, agree in some points and differ in others. We agree that the only essential meaning in free love is the sexual emancipation of woman. It is to give woman absolute, entire and continued control over her sexual relations, and protect her in such freedom and control, as well in as out of marriage. We insist that if there be such a thing as individual rights, each woman's right in such matters is undeniable. The right of religious freedom is not more clear or more sacred. Woman should decide whether and when she will bear children. The rake should be on a moral level with the prostitute. Such free love, I think, must give woman more freedom on these matters than she now has, and man less.

We agree further that if men and women were designed, in their highest and best state, for exclusively dual and monogamic relations, such freedom and protection for woman must and should ultimate in that. If they were not so designed or organized, it ought not and will not so result; and it would be insane to attempt to hold the race to that order by law. We agree to let the nature of woman in freedom settle this point.

WHERE WE DIFFER.

Mrs. Woodhull, Miss Leys and many others, believe monogamy will be the final and most perfect order. The writer, and others, believe that a degree of variety will result from such freedom to woman. No person conjugally or socially is absolutely promiscuous, though some persons come much nearer that than others. Some superior minds insist that copulation is necessarily "sensual and lustful," and is not proper, except for the procreation of offspring; and not for all persons even for that. We all hold the order of love relations to be less important than the pure and elevating spirit that should control them. On a low and lustful plane the amative instinct and selfish sentiments control too much the higher man in any and every order of action. On a high and pure love plane the amative will be under the entire control of the top brain—benevolence and charity—as these are enlightened by the intellect.

We differ in our mode of warfare. Of late a few persons insist that all forms of marriage are evil per se, and go for the immediate abolition of the marriage system. I have always favored marriage for the time. I go for easy marriage and easy divorce. I think it will generally cause less suffering to go through marriage to something wiser and better than to go around it. All such changes bring an increase of suffering. The more sudden the greater. Give us easy divorce, and the thing will regulate and cure itself. If anybody shall reply to this article, I beg him or her to state clearly to what part or principle there is objection. Fire no random guns.

P. S.—If any reader of COMMON SENSE would be better posted on these matters let him send me 80 cts. or $1.00 for my book—"Free Love"—and pamphlet—"Mrs. Woodhull and her Social Freedom." No person has ever called these weak. I have been confined to my bed and chair for over seventeen years, and fed twelve years with a teaspoon. I need the money. If you have an extra dollar to spare for the poor, and should send it to me, it will be gratefully received.

AUSTIN KENT.

East Stockholm, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y. Box 44.

[For Common Sense.]

PERSONAL FREEDOM.

What will my church or my society or my friends think? What will Mrs. Grundy think? Those are the questions before which the average human being is appalled. He lives in constant terror of them. But still he thinks he is a free man. This is the bliss of ignorance. Upon what principle does the individual thus surrender his personal independence? Upon the principle of slavery. Upon what principle does the church, or society, or your friends, assume to supervise what is only your own private business? On the principle of divine right!

One of your "Brief Extracts," in a recent number, expounds the true philosophy in this matter: "It is none of our business how our neighbor lives—what he eats or drinks or wears, or thinks or says or does—so long as he is kind to us. Nor is it any more the business of the public how the individual lives in private so long as his relations and responsibilities to society are properly discharged." We are dependent somewhat on one another. We depend on our neighbor being just to us, but not on his opinions. The individual is at present lost in the church or the society. Now, I would have every human being who aims to be a man or a woman, who aims to own themselves, to assert their rights in this matter. And just so soon as your friends, and the church, and society, and Mrs. Grundy, aye and your "spirit friends" too, understand your claims in the premises, they will respect you, and not before. But best of all you can and will respect yourself.

E. STEVENSON, M. D.

Virginia, Nev., October 7, 1874.]

[For Common Sense.]

A PETITION TO THE SPIRITS.

Inhabitants of the celestial spheres, pardon the presumption of a "groveling Materialist" who, desiring the nobler incentives to the good works which characterize the believers in immortality, and distinguish them from those who have no hope beyond the grave, entreats you from your lofty abodes to condescend to listen to his humble prayer.

Whereas he has heard of Katie King; has read Prof. Wallace's articles in the Fortnightly Review; has listened to inspirational speeches; sat in circles, and has himself been "under influence;" has seen apparitions and heard voices; has consulted Mansfield, Foster, Mrs. Breed, and others of lesser note, but has not at present any very definite hope of a future life, nor any very definite reason why he should hope. Whereas, in this age great facilities for for speedy and cheap communications have been invented by embodied humanity, and considering that your intellectual capacity, your range and depth of observation and consequent experience are inconceivably greater than ours, with the advantage of unlimited years, Therefore, your petitioner humbly requests your attention to the very crude, uncertain and inadequate methods of communication between the children of earth and those they love in the terra incognita of science and philosophy. Do you ask in what they might be improved, and how? Far be it from your petitioner to hazard the presumptive audacity of advising those who live where the loving and logical Socrates, the divine Plato and the gentle Jesus dwell, with their milleniums of experience.

Our friend "Medicus" has said, many of our fellow creatures would regard the evenings of whole years well spent in interviewing twaddling spirits, just to be assured of that one fact—immortality—which is very true. But at the same time please consider the shortness of life, especially to the Materialist, who is not assured of a plus ultra life. To him it seems something akin to cruelty to have his fleeting moments occupied in anything but the consideration of how to make life enjoyable and useful, and least of all in having it wasted in futile attempts to communicate with spirits who either will not or cannot make themselves known to him. Further, there are few of us who can sufficiently remunerate the media for the time required for dancing attendance on us and twaddling spirits for a number of years. What your petitioner requests is to have a system inaugurated which will make spiritual communications attainable and reliable by even the poorest and the most skeptical. One of the proofs given of the divinity of Christ's mission was to the poor the gospel is preached.

It is particularly requested that media will not consider this as a fling at their exorbitant charges, or that their charges are exorbitant; for while we are in the flesh there are demands made upon even spirit media, which nothing less than dollars and cents can satisfy. The media will please consider themselves out of consideration in this petition. There are thousands, probably millions, of us who have dear friends "gone before" who, while on earth, with only a few miles between, would let no reasonable opportunity pass by which they could let it be known that they were still living and loving. But they have passed beyond and made no sign. The testimony of the very many who assure us that they have received communications from their spirit friends is humbly recognised, while it also renders our loss the more keenly felt. Could your petitioner be positively assured that this life was the ne plus ultra of existence, he would resignedly accept the inevitable; but the inexplicable phenomena claiming spirits as the actors, taking place here, there and everywhere every day, suggest the possibility of being mistaken on a very vital question. But while they disturb the quiescent philosophy of materialistic faith, they only disturb without satisfying. Please then, ye dwellers in the upper spheres, consider our manifold wants, and in the plenitude of your resources and wisdom, give us a more universal, a more satisfactory, a more direct method of communication with those who still live in our memories, covered with habiliments of love. Your petitioner in sulphurous prospects subscribes himself

SATAN, JR.

LYCEUM FOR SELF CULTURE.

Last Sunday afternoon the Lyceum was opened by Mr. Farrell, who announced the following proposition as the theme of his discourse: "The character and opinions of mankind are formed for, and not by the individual." The subject was discussed at large, and well represented on both sides. The Scriptures were read, wherein they say that "we are clay, and God our father, and we are the work of his hand." There were those who contended that man was the maker of his own character, fortune and opinions, to a great extent; free to be good or bad, to believe in the true religion or not, at his pleasure. Others contended that man was depraved and naturally wicked, and could not will to do right without the help of heavenly grace. Others contended that without God we can do nothing; that we accomplish neither good nor evil unless God gives the impulse, and pushes us forward into action. Among these conflicting views a middle ground was taken, that man in his early infancy was wholly formed and controlled by forces outside of himself; but that as manhood came on, and the character acquired strength, the man himself became one of the factors of his own future, and often a powerful one; but yet was never so potent, so independent of the conditions around him, that it could be said he had a free will, or could in anywise be held responsible to his creator for being what he is. God, or the forces of nature, after all, is the potter, and we are but the clay in his moulding hand, fashioned into vessels of beauty and honor, or coarser ware for use, and perhaps abuse. There was good music by Mrs. Melville, and a very numerous and attentive audience. The same subject will be continued next Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Social Hall, 39 Fourth street.

THE CUI BONO OF CHURCHES.

For Common Sense.

BY J. W. MACKIE.

The Rev. Mr. Platt lately delivered an address to young men on their relation to the church. In it the shifting opinions of Science were compared with "the sure word of God;" as if the steadfastness of a conservative lie well stuck to were better than a progressive perception of truth through a long series of mistakes based on ignorance. The one is the cradle of superstition and the grave of natural science; the other the nursery of science and the death of theology. The address reminded me of a letter received from my old friend Wilson, who, under Providence, was the means of my acquaintance with Spiritualism. In this letter he takes me to task for appearing to shut my eyes to the fundamental truths underlying the superstructure of superstition called Christianity. I cannot find out what I have said from which such an inference could be drawn; for I believe that no system, however absurd or pernicious, could exist if it did not represent a truth, or in a measure satisfy a human want. This is not only true of Churches but also of every human habit, virtuous or vicious. Drunkenness could not exist but for an underlying want which demands satisfaction. When means have been discovered to satisfy this apparently insatiable craving, drunkenness will cease, but not till then. So too with this priestly theological system, which stands like Apollyon in the pathway of scientific progress. It serves to palliate an obstinate want, to divert the religious sense of humanity. When this religious want is thoroughly analyzed, and the means of gratifying it thoroughly understood, then it will be no longer considered necessary to morality to believe in the nursery tales of Eden, the wonders of Egypt and the wilderness, Samson, Elijah, Jack-the-giant-killer and the devil; it will be no longer necessary to the highest sense of religion to believe in the materialization of the Almighty, and his subsequent career as the son of the Holy Ghost and the immaculate Mary, his death, resurrection and ascension. Heaven then will not be needed as an incentive to do what is for our best interests, nor hell to deter us from destroying ourselves.

Yet the church has been useful in the babyhood and boyhood of our race in diverting mankind from vicious practices by its fireside fairy tales and sacred Mother Goose melodies; and it will continue to be useful if it will only let those alone who have outgrown childish things, and whose wants are deeply rooted in the realm of realities. Play is subservient to the muscular development of children, though play is the only thing thought of; so has religious excitement subserved a purpose in intellectual development not dreamt of by devotees.

The present objective is certain to become the future subjective to nobler ends. It would be folly not to recognise the utility of the scaffolding to a building; but when the edifice is finished it would be equally foolish to insist upon its standing there. Or, as brother Paul very sensibly puts it:

For every one that useth milk is unskilful in the word of righteousness: for he is a babe. But strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, even by those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil. Therefore, leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection; not laying again the foundations of repentance from dead works, and faith toward God.—Heb. v:13,14:vi. 1.

[For Common Sense.]

DISCIPLINARY PROCESSES OF REFORMING.

BY J. O. BARRETT.

Let us read a lesson from nature. The winds, laden with freezing fury, must come, beating the seed of flower and tree, driving them deeper into the soil for safety, hardening the shells, toughening the waxy juices, weeping so, and crying for protection. The snow must mantle them to keep them from the fiercer blasts. The Spring must dawn, breaking up the ice, and look with loving eyes underneath the snow, and kiss them with lips of sunshine, and lo, a resurrection—a bursting out for joy into the blooms of summer.

The immortal soul experiences a like fate and destiny in its unfoldings. There is no profit without expenditure. Ever will there be antagonisms to overcome, coarseness to refine, impoverishment to enrich, ignorance to enlighten. Such victories constitute the good of living. Apprenticeship is the order in all industries. Temptations are our armory, if we do not wound ourselves thereby. Trials, losses, sufferings, battles make us veterans. Defeats are often our greatest victories. Bless the ragged fern that freshens the sterile spot. Bless the cactus that beautifies the land. Bless the human who is content in humbler walks to show how rare a virtue can develop in adversity.

The tempted are the tenderest souls in all the world. The fallen, so called, possess sweet attractions, generous feelings, and are near the heart life of the angels.

The chemistry of life—how strange! How sure to reveal what we are by birthright. There is a Latent Prophecy in us all.

Is sensuous pleasure in thee hid,
As mummied musk 'neath pyramid?
'Twill scent thee out on every gale,
As Honoree her amorous male.
Lusteth the wine of passion's dew,
That reddens on thy blush anew?
Her pain shall come much swifter now,
And sorrow on thy forehead plow.
Doth key to lock and fond embrace,
As if 'twill open to health and grace?
The stars have writ in magic art,
That souls which lust shall feel the smart;
And "Blue Beards" with their wives shall rot,
And palace change to den of sot.
Is virtue's love thy dowered weal
With deed of trust by honor's seal?
Thy purity is mirrored high
As sweet oases in the sky—
Mirage of soul uplifts to heaven,
As mantle of Elijah given.
Tho' all thy hopes seem lost and spent
Among the sands of Discontent;
They'll spring again in eddied rest
Among the islands of the blest.

Glen Beulah, Wis., Sept. 1874.

Butler must be re-elected. Congress, without him, would be as stupid as Orthodoxy without Satan.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

COMMON SENSE is furnished to subscribers for Three Dollars per annum, in advance. Letters intended for the Business Department should be addressed:

AMANDA M. SLOOUM, BUSINESS MANAGER, 236 Montgomery st.

TRAVELING AGENTS.—Prof. W. H. Chadey, Mrs. Flora Wellman Chadey, and J. L. York are authorized to receive subscriptions for COMMON SENSE, and receipt for money due this office. LOCAL AGENT—Miss Abbie W. Baker, San Francisco.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

An Eastern Story—Saadi	268
Free Love Defined—Austin Kent	269
Personal Freedom—Dr. Stevenson	269
A Petition to The Spirits—J. W. Mackie	270
Lyceum for Self Culture	270
The "Qui Bono" of Spiritualism—Satan, Jr.	271
Disciplinary Processes of Reforming—J. O. Barrett	271
Jennie Leys' Lectures	272
The Philosophy of Life—Mrs. Hutchinson and Mr. Mackie	274
Church and State—J. M. Mathews	277
Original Translation of Faust—Don Fulano	278

COMMON SENSE.

WILLIAM N. SLOOUM, EDITOR.

AMANDA M. SLOOUM, ASSISTANT.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, OCT. 17, 1874.

Specimen copies of COMMON SENSE will be sent free to any address. Friends of the paper, who are willing to circulate it among their acquaintances, will be furnished with extra copies for that purpose. With a little effort on the part of our present subscribers, the circulation of the paper could be doubled within three months. Will you not do something to aid the cause? It is true there are larger and possibly better papers published East, but this is the only Spiritual and Free Thought journal on this coast. It is needed here, and it should be sustained.

Among the tests given at Charter Oak Hall last Sunday, was the following: Among the ballots selected by the spirits was one bearing the name of a lady who died some fifty years ago in South America. The lady who had written the ballot asked several questions of the spirit in a dialect spoken on the northern coast of South America, and supposed to be known to only four persons in the State. The answers were quickly, loudly and correctly rapped out.

CHILDREN'S LYCEUM.—The "Progressive Lyceum" is in a flourishing condition, but some children are not in their seats early as is desired. All should be in attendance at half past ten precisely, at which time the exercises commence. Parents and others will find this school an interesting place to visit.

UNITED STATES OFFICIAL POSTAL GUIDE.—This kind of publication is new in this country, and it just meets the wants of business men. It contains an Alphabetical List of Post Offices, with County and State, and the salary of Postmasters; also a list of Money Order Offices, Domestic and International; the Chief Regulations of the Post Office Department; Instructions to the Public; Foreign and Domeseic Postage Tables. We recommend it to all business and professional men. Mrs. Lucille Thompson is the authorized agent for the Guide, and will be pleased to show it to all desirous of examining its merits. Office, 236 Montgomery street, third floor.

TWO PRACTICAL DISCOURSES.

Miss Jennie Leys, on Sunday last, although physically weak, gave two of the best lectures yet delivered by her in this city. She spoke in the morning on the duty of Spiritualists to carry their religion into practice, to live it out in every day life. As Spiritualism teaches that the hereafter depends on our individual conduct here, we taking with us the character here formed, it therefore becomes us to make every effort for self improvement, and for the improvement and benefit of the race. Spiritualism has done much during the last quarter of a century to free the minds of men from old trammels, has given hope of eternal life to millions, and has regenerated many souls deep sunk in sin and misery, but its work has only commenced; the further it advances the wider is the field, and now that we stand upon the threshold of great events, of momentous changes, the question for Spiritualists to decide is, what will they do to aid in the grand work that opens before us? Some, who call themselves Spiritualists, desire to keep free from what they deem side issues, among which they include the most vital questions that ever came before the human race for decision. Some of these questions lie at the very base of human improvement and human elevation. They are inseparable from the progress and welfare of humanity, yet they are called petty side issues. The relations of the sexes, the generation of children, the sacred laws underlying life, are among these issues. If these be petty, what can be great? They say these relations and conditions are right now, yet how many idiotic, insane, debased and deformed creatures are born into the world, a curse to themselves and mankind. Men and women are responsible for the continuance of this state of affairs. You, who call yourselves, reformers, if you could but see the beings that inhabit some of the higher planets, not spirits, but men and women like yourselves, only vastly superior in knowledge, in morals and in physical health, you would, perhaps, make an effort to bring the race forward in the order of development to a condition approaching that of other worlds. Saturn, for instance, a tiny speck, and far from being the most advanced, is peopled with beings who are never sick, morally or physically; they never speak or think evil of each other; there is no injustice, no oppression there, yet they are material beings who came up from such as yourselves to the condition in which they now are; compared with inhabitants of earth, they are as Gods. What now more than any other thing retards the human race is the gross ignorance in relation to the laws of generation. Not only is this life made wretched by it, but exalted position in spirit life is retarded. The world is peopled with beings puny in mind, diseased in body, dwarfed in spirit, and as they are so they go into the spirit life to struggle there, or perchance to be turned back to re-inhabit other bodies until such time as they become purified. You are the parents of the spirit form which you must inhabit after death, whether you will it or not. Any passion or taste in the flesh not conquered holds in bond the spirit. Reforms should commence here, and Spiritualists, of all others, should be the reformers. They should teach the world the way to a higher life. There is a division among Spiritualists which should not exist, and the division has come in an hour when portents of evil overshadow the entire planet, an hour when union should give strength to all lovers of mankind. Let all of us try to awaken to renewed life, and renewed effort for the regeneration of man.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The evening discourse of Miss Leys, on Woman Suffrage, differed very much from ordinary lectures on that subject. It was the "Voice of the Spirit," and the words were worthy of the "voice." We despair giving even an approximate idea of the eloquence, the logic and weight of argument which held the audience in silence and deep attention for nearly an hour and a half. We will give but a few of the points in our own language, not attempting to reproduce the words of the speaker. The superiority of woman over man was assumed at the outset.

Woman is superior by virtue of her surpassing functions. She is organically higher in the scale of creation, endowed with a finer nature, large powers, and is fitted for higher uses. Man, by virtue of physical strength, determined will, and greater selfishness, forced her into slavery during the barbarous period of human history, but she is now growing into her proper place, and the coming age is to be pre-eminently the era of woman. The office of maternity is the highest and holiest which humanity can fill. To be the mother of a human being is to be the creator of an immortal soul, and she who thus moulds the coming generations holds the destinies of mankind within her grasp. Woman will yet reveal to the world the "sublime potentialities" now dormant in her nature; and such a being must be accorded her place. She must take part with man in all that concerns the welfare of humanity. To shut out the mother of the race from all participation in the government of man is to shut out the source of the highest good; it is to close the avenue that leads to mighty reforms. There are to-day, in this nation, twenty millions of women who are political nonentities. And why? Is she deficient in any of the three faculties, intellect, affection, volition? Has she not integrity, ability, and love of justice? Is not history full of woman's triumphs, achieved in spite of all the impediments placed in her path by man's assumption? Does she not hold in her nature the true balance of power—the love principle—the life of the social system? Is she not everywhere the incentive to man's highest, purest and best endeavor? and shall such a being be excluded from participation in the work of devising and framing the laws by which she and her children are to be governed? By what right is it that in a government, the basis of which is claimed to be the consent of the governed, one-half of the adult population is thus ignored? Answer these questions as you will, but remember that no nation can long exist which thus debars its noblest and best from equal rights of citizenship; and this nation shall reap its reward. The fires of revolution are beginning to gleam, and disaster and defeat lie in wait for a nation which persistently refuses to readjust the basic principles of its life. The exclusion of women from participation in the government by those who formed our Constitution was a wrong against humanity; and such wrongs not forever go unavenge. Peace reigns not even now within our borders; but never will Columbia's banner float over a people less turbulent than those of to-day, until woman is admitted to equality with man in the government, and this day of justice cannot with safety be long postponed. The same cause for rebellion exists to-day that united the colonies against the mother country—taxation without representation. For nearly a century the nation has attempted to stand upon the same injustice which inaugurated the war of 1776; and it has not yet learned that when the cup is full, no hand can stay its overflow. Not for woman suffrage will the rebellion be, but because woman suffrage is not. Without her aid anarchy reigns, injustice triumphs, and corruption debases the people; discontent already runs rampant through the land, and ere long, without this savior, the government will go down in the flames of revolution, and a truer and better will take its place.

It is sometimes said that woman should not vote because she does not perform military duty. Of all the postulates against woman suffrage this is the most pusillanimous. On the same ground we might demand the disfranchisement of the thousands of men who in the late war were exempt on account of physical disability. But it is to prevent fighting that women should vote. Were women dominant in the world, the love principle would prevail, and there would be no more war forever.

Some one says women are not what they ought to be. Why? Let the record of man's injustice answer! But the best way to make them better is to take off the bonds, and give the opportunity. Twenty years ago all the education deemed essential for women was the ability to read, write and cipher. Now, wherever she is allowed equal privileges, she is proving herself man's equal in intellect, as she is his superior in intuition. She is beginning to understand her own nature, and not much longer can she be oppressed. In the field of Legislation it is man, not woman, who is incompetent. He is not fit to make laws for women, because he cannot comprehend woman's nature. Not possessing her functions, not enlightened by her experiences, not refined by her delicate perceptions, he is incapable of understanding her needs, and consequently incompetent to make laws for her. Only woman can comprehend woman's nature, as deity only can comprehend God.

Another objection is that it would be indelicate for women to frame laws concerning certain criminal acts, and and still more improper for her to sit on juries in the trial of cases where such laws are to be enforced. The reply is that virtue knows nothing of sex. What is wrong for women to do, is equally wrong for men; what is right for men to do is also right for women; and wherever there is sin or sorrow which women must bear, there especially, are women competent to administer justice, or mete out mercy: In cases of seduction or rape, who so fit to judge as they? And if there be any here who are startled by the use of such words, let them cleanse their own lives, and their vocabularies will be cleaner. Are not women most needed where women most suffer? If the proceedings of courts are too impure for the ears of women, they are so for those of men. If the law gives Counsel the right to ask a female witness questions concerning acts which only God, herself, and perhaps one other, have the right to know, it should also allow her to question Counsel and Judges concerning their own private acts. There can be no "fallen" woman without a fallen man, and in the coming time, when women are a power, the Magdalen will be considered no worse than her partner in sin. If women are now more unforgiving to their own sex, it is not because of her own volition, but in answer to the demands of men, who to-day are dominant, and rule socially as well as politically.

The lecture closed with some earnest words concerning Re-incarnation, in order more strongly to impress upon the minds of the listeners the necessity of acting with justice and wisdom in all the departments of life. Those who do not make good use of present opportunities must come back from the other life, and take up again the burdens of this. No power, says the spirit, can save you from the law, dark and repugnant as it is. Cleanse then, your lives; perfect your natures; study and obey the laws of life and generation, if you would save yourselves, your children, and your children's children from the fate that surely awaits those who fail to get out of this life what this life is for. The advanced planets know not this law. Their people have progressed beyond it, and in time, so will you, but that time may be hastened or retarded by your own efforts. Make your individual lives pure and good, reform yourselves, and remodel your government, then you will "inherit eternal life," and America will become, as it should, the morning star of all the nations of the earth.

These meetings are well attended, and the interest in the discourses is evidently intense. The lectures are preceded by vocal and instrumental music of a high order by Mrs. Whitney. This lady's voice is admirable in quality and volume, possessing that rare virtue, soul. The selections are excellent, and the execution shows culture as well as capacity.

To-morrow (Sunday) Miss Leys' subject in the morning is "The Angel Law for the Redemption of the Human Race." In the evening, she is to give her own experience, religious and domestic. This subject is not one she would select; as a woman she would prefer to be unknown; but some lessons can be given in no other way, and if any good can be accomplished by it, if any can be helped by it, any aspiring soul be encouraged to noble effort, any one in any way benefitted, she is willing for other's good to unveil her life. The subject will undoubtedly attract a large audience.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF LIFE.

PROPOSED CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN L. HUTCHINSON AND J. W. MACKIE.

Our valued correspondent, J. W. Mackie, writes a note to COMMON SENSE, inclosing a letter received by him from Mrs. L. Hutchinson. In his note Mr. Mackie says:

"The writer of the following letter, having an inflated idea of my philosophic acumen, desired the continuation of a philosophical correspondence which took place between us a few years ago, to, I believe, our mutual benefit. I proposed that COMMON SENSE be the medium, and the proposal has met with a hearty approval.

The letter referred to is as follows:

MY ESTEEMED FRIEND:—Your letter suggesting that our correspondence be through the medium of COMMON SENSE meets with my approval. If I can find time I will be pleased to reply to the best of my ability to any view of philosophy you may choose to advocate. My present employments are housekeeping, teaching school, attending on the sick and lecturing every Sunday. I believe in putting as many irons in the fire as possible, and then see to it that none of them are burnt. If intelligence is developed from sensation, then the more we get into hot water the better. May not the lashes on the backs and the burning of the bodies of heretics be the causes of the flashes of wit and poetic fires of modern genius? Perhaps this dull clay, like iron ore, needs the fiery furnace of affliction and persecution to bring out the pure metal of thought. Every upward and advanced step of progress has been in spite of opposition and persecution. Christianity has been foremost with fire and faggot in destroying the advocates of free thought and free expression of opinion. The same spirit is rife to-day, and it may yet teach by persecution the worth of mental liberty to stolid minds that fail to see its true value. Liberty, like everything else, is prized according to what it costs. Like health, its full value is seldom appreciated till it is lost.

Judge B. died as the ripened fruit falls from the bough, or the sear leaf in autumn. Bidding good-night to the family, as usual, in apparently good health and spirits, he retired, and not coming down to breakfast, they went to wake him, and found that he had gone to a brighter world, without a struggle or a groan. Such a death was fitting a life like his, lived out in obedience to Nature's laws. Death truly came to him like an angel leading him to repose. To such as die thus fully ripe it is but as they who "Sustained and soothed

By an unfaltering trust, approach the grave
Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch
Above him, and lies down to pleasant dreams."

October 3, 1874.

L. HUTCHINSON.

Mr. Mackie concluded his note to the editor as follows:

As my correspondent leaves me to choose the subject for correspondence, I am at a loss to know what to suggest as the best, keeping in view the readers of your paper. The great Trinity of subjects, the Past, Present and Future, three-in-one, embrace all there is of philosophy. The past, God, Causation, Life; the present, Man and his relations, social, political and religious; the future, Spiritualism and immortality or annihilation. I trust my friend will be able from this hint to find a text on which to base her thoughts penned for COMMON SENSE. I am certain that your readers will bear with patience my straggling ideas, if they have the effect of drawing for their benefit upon the rich resources of a mind long trained in thinking, we agreeing to state frankly our knowledge, doubts and belief on the subject treated.

Yours, etc., J. W. MACKIE.

SOME OF THE "SIDE ISSUES."—The eleventh national convention of Spiritualists was held in Boston a few weeks ago, and the principal subject discussed was Social Freedom. A series of resolutions were reported to the Convention by a committee, for consideration, but by a vote of 134 to 20 it was decided not to vote on them. The reason was the Convention did not desire to fasten a creed on Spiritualists. The first resolution of the series, and the most comprehensive, reads as follows:

Resolved, That it should be the primary effort of Spiritualism to inaugurate conditions whereby a knowledge and application of the laws of science in all departments of life and action shall ultimate in a just distribution of the rewards of labor and in equal opportunities for culture; in a freedom which forever proves that self-ownership necessitates self-mastery; and in a code of morals that is in harmony with natural laws, and which profoundly recognizes the needs, possibilities and divine potentialities of human nature.

CHURCH AND STATE.

The "Friends of Progress" hold weekly meetings in this city, some of which are quite interesting, and as most of the proceedings are of a nature to be made public, COMMON SENSE will, from time to time, publish extracts from the essays and speeches, and brief reports of debates in the Circle. At the last meeting Mr. J. M. Mathews presented a paper as follows:

My friends there's a story I wish to relate concerning the courtship of Madame Church and State. The madame you know is wicked and vain, and she's now fixing up to marry again. The madame is gay and full of deceit; she's rich and she's proud, and won't bear defeat; she's coquetish and sly, and has laid well her plan to propose for the hand of our dear Uncle Sam. The old lady has often been married before, and husbands she numbers some twenty or more. Her children are scattered—in all lands they dwell, and frighten their dupes with a devil and hell. Now we don't believe in any such stuff; the old lady's been married quite often enough; she's no fit company for our Uncle Sam, and we don't believe for "any other man." Should she become mistress of this beautiful land, we swear to resist her every command; we'll fight to the death for the home of the free—for freedom and justice our motto shall be. Let her return to the days that are past, and let her proposal to Sam be her last. The nations in future will need her no more, for truth is advancing as never before.

[At this point the machine broke, and the remainder had to be written in prose.]

This Madame Church is supposed to be 1874 years old, and her birth-place Judea. She was principally nursed by Peter and Paul, and they being crusty old bachelors failed to provide her with much of the milk of human kindness, in consequence of which her system became disordered, and she did not grow into the gentle, loving being her parents intended. When a small child old Paul took her to Rome, where she grew up, and in course of time not only became mistress of that proud city, but extended her sway over many nations, and compelled even kings to bow in subjection, and prostrate themselves, even to kissing the toes of their chosen vicegerents.

This old Madame Church is a regular polygamist. There was never a nation since her advent upon earth that she has not endeavored to become wedded to, or that has not received seductive proposals from her; and whenever she has become mistress she has ruled with despotic sway. The Madame is old and wrinkled now, and worse than all has become diseased throughout. But then she is rich. She dresses in the most costly fabrics, and dwells in the most splendid temples, and this magnificence is one of the reasons why so many worship at her shrine. As her deformities become apparent she seeks to conceal them by the splendor of her attire; but notwithstanding her endeavors to appear grand and pure, many are beginning to perceive her miserable hypocrisy. Some of the nations in which she has heretofore reigned supreme are now making herculean efforts to free themselves from her grasp. Old Spain, for instance, has instituted a divorce suit, and Italy has to some extent curtailed her powers; still she rules most of the nations of Europe. Only a few are bold enough, and free enough from her influence, to disobey her commands. Notwithstanding all this the old Madame has several bitter enemies; not the least of them being fair Science and young Miss Spiritualism. Science and the old lady have fought many a fierce battle, and Science has ever maintained her position, while Madame Church was compelled to retreat and fortify anew, surrendering stronghold after stronghold as the army of Science came marching along. Young Spiritualism has also given the old Mother some terribly severe blows; in fact her wounds and bruises are such that she can never really recover, but she has so much wealth at her command that her physicians (the clergy) succeed in patching her up, so as to make her look passably fair outside. Old Madame Grundy, also, does much to keep Madame Church in good repute, because what Madame Grundy says is law and gospel with most people; and these two old dames have long been warm friends. Knowing that they are disliked by independent people, they console and sustain each other.

Madame Church has a large family, some four or five hundred children, (sects) of all ages and complexions. They all inherit the chief qualities of their mother—bigotry and intolerance—and prohibit their followers from stepping outside of their several creeds under penalty of eternal punishment. Just think, my friends, of the thousands of martyrs who have fallen victims to her power! and she is even now splitting her kindling wood, and getting her faggots ready for the burning of heretics, and her instruments of assassination for another eve of St. Bartholomew, while we, the Liberalists, are sleeping over a volcano. She failed to marry Uncle Sam when he attained his majority, but she has never given up the hope, and is now marshaling all her forces to carry her designs into effect. Her plans are being laid cautiously, secretly and well; and it is believed by many that he already regards her with favor, and has more than half made up his mind to accept her proposal. Friends of Progress, shall we permit these nuptials to take place? Shall we permit this old hag to marry our boy Samuel without earnest protest? No, a thousand times no. Let us entreat, let us petition, and if that avails nothing, let us arm ourselves and prepare for revolution; for at that time there will be thousands ready to assist us; and with justice and liberty on our side we can forever destroy this arch enemy of mankind. Then, when bigotry and superstition are known no more, Love, Liberty, Culture and Progress will not only be the mottoes of our Order, but of universal humanity.

COMMENTS—FACETIOUS AND TRUTHFUL.

When the reading was concluded a Friend arose, and addressed himself to the President and members about as follows:

I protest; I am indignant. Were it in order I would move that the paper just now read be utterly rejected and repudiated, that it lie on the table, or under the table, or be thrown into the waste basket as scandalous, slanderous and altogether unworthy of our Order. It speaks disrespectfully of a lady, a female, and even our worthy President, a lady herself, was betrayed into a frown, as she read the ungracious epithets "old hag," etc. I say that according to the principles of our Order, founded on an idea of the most profound respect for the sex, and of commiseration for the frailties of poor human nature, it is outrageous so to berate a woman because she happens to be two or three thousand years old, or to denounce her in such terrible terms on account of the defects of early training and association.

Besides there is an entire mistake. It is true the pure and gentle daughter of Jesus Christ, the kind and loving Church, was put out to nurse to those two hoary headed sinners Peter and Paul, and subsequently educated by the council of Nice, and the Roman ecclesiastics. But the innocent babe was changed in its infancy, and a child of the devil put in its place. The child of Jesus was all love and gentleness, and good will, and self denial, unostentatious and long suffering, and continually commanding men that they bless and curse not. But this of Paul and Peter and the Roman church, showed its satanic origin in the beginning, and down till now. It has built up power and wealth, and allied itself with kings, and uttered the most malignant curses on record. If your objections are raised only to this false counterfeit, I have no word of censure, only that you should so say. But if they are made against the true child of Jesus Christ, I tell you now that they are undeserved. That sweet babe has been an outcast from the gorgeous cathedrals of Catholicism, as well as from the palaces of kings. It has had to hide in holes and corners and dark caves, and beg its bread among the cottages of the poor, while the base counterfeit has consorted with kings and dwelt in the fashionable churches of the great republic. If our Uncle Sam could indeed marry the true daughter of Jesus, the real church of Christ, all good men might welcome the event. But an alliance with this false harlot, whose smiles are forever with the oppressor and the usurer, and for those who glitter in jewels and gold, would be the crowning misfortune of the age. But do not name her as the daughter of Jesus, She is of her father, the devil, and like unto him.

Another Friend suggested that the old lady, Madame Church, is not entitled to veneration on account of her age; worth depends upon character rather than age, and the older in iniquity one is, the less respect is due.

The first speaker rejoined with some facetious remarks, when another member suggested that the spirit of the deceased Artemus Ward must have taken possession of him, and on motion a committee was appointed to exorcise the spirit, but on pleading ignorance of the modus operandi they were excused.

A writer in the London Magazine says that men like Tyndall and Huxley, Spencer and Darwin, with the terrible weapons of their materialism, do but break down an old and much battered idol which has long been the cause of dreadful doubts, even to its devotees, and has set religion and science at bitter variance. But in breaking down the idol they are doing us the greatest service. They are letting in the light, they are leaving us face to face with a conception of God before hidden from us by our idol, but which presents him to us not only in a form which science will allow, before which, indeed, science and religion become one, but in a form which is immeasurably grander, more beautiful, and every way worthier of God than that which has been broken down. Let us clearly recognize that when Tyndall claims for matter that it is sufficient for everything, he is not thinking of matter as that dead brute thing which the mass of men suppose it. To him, as to Herbert Spencer, matter is but the manifestation of a Great Entity, in itself unknown and unknowable. It is but the garment of what Tyndall calls the great cosmical life—the great life of the cosmos—the universe. What is this Great Entity, what is this Great Cosmical Life but the Eternal God Himself?

THE ANCIENT BAND.—“The Pacific Art Union” have published a pamphlet of forty pages, being a Descriptive Catalogue of “the Ancient Band” composing the Spirit Art Gallery, twenty-eight pencil pictures executed by Wella and Pet Anderson. A brief sketch of the lives of the mediums is given, together with an account of the origin of the pictures, the history of the various personages represented, etc. This pamphlet, price 25 cents, and photographs of the pictures are for sale by J. Winchester, P. O. box 454, San Francisco. See advertisement.

INDIVIDUALS AND SOCIETY.

We cannot live together in peace except we observe certain general rules and regulations, which no one in particular makes, but which all make, and which each and all agree to live by and maintain. There is a true science of society; and this is a general knowledge of, and consent to, certain laws and principles which must govern social living. But society must be wise in prescribing a rule of conduct to its members. It must not go too far in taking responsibility from the individual. It is individual virtue that is the great desideratum; for, unless we have virtuous individuals, we cannot have a virtuous society. Personal character is, after all, the finest fruit which can be grown in a true society. We demur to the notion that the species is of more consequence than the individual. The species is nowhere without the individual, who is at once its root and its branches. Society, therefore, must encourage the individual to find out for himself what virtue is; and, having found out, to practice it in his own way so far as he can without interfering with any body else. More or less of experimentation is required even to find out what it is to be virtuous. Let the individual experiment as well as society. The risk is largely his; the responsibility should be, also. Society shall stand by while the individual thus learns from experience; and interference on its part shall be only for self-protection. Public sentiment should be a means of education rather than of coercion,—a warning, an illustration, an encouragement, a counsel, a help; for this public sentiment is really only general wisdom accumulated by individual experience. It is sometimes right, and sometimes wrong. It is never wholly right; and, probably, it is never wholly wrong. But history abounds with clear cases where the individual has known, not only what was best for himself, but what was best for society, much better than society itself has. “One with God is a majority.”—as to wisdom, this has been proven true again and again. Both the individual and society, at the best, learn slowly. There is plenty of conceit and vanity, and foolishness and perversity, and ignorance and stubbornness on both sides. While we are learning what virtue is, in all its broadness and thoroughness, we in the meanwhile are contenting ourselves with being virtuous in spots.—A. W. S. in the Index.

STIRPICULTURE.—Among the resolutions prepared by the platform committee of the National Spiritual Convention held in Boston was the following:

Resolved, That communal life, according to congenial groupings, furnishes the only proper conditions for the practice of stirpiculture; that it is the next step in social progress and ought to be thoroughly discussed by this convention.

Mrs. Dr. Cutter, in a speech made at this convention, said: “I am a wife of twenty-seven years, a mother twenty-five years, a physician twenty-four, and this question—I judge from experience—is the foundation of all reforms. We must have freedom before we can have love and love-children. Those spiritualists who say they will not discuss these questions are just as bigoted as the church people ever have been. It is our business to seek out the best way to improve the race, and the proper way is to begin with the children.”

Senator Jones says: “In this struggle with the great railroad corporations I am committed alike by my inclination, judgment and public pledge to the cause of the people. Only through and by the Republican party can this cause be made triumphant.”

WORDS FOR THE GRANGERS.

The following are extracts from an address given by Alfred Taylor, of Gardner, Kansas, before a Grange meeting in Hesper:

This unnatural antagonism between capital and labor has been going on for years; it has become world-wide. Go where you will, whether it be to the Monarchies of Europe, the Republics of America, or the Islands of the sea, the same conflict goes on between capital and labor, the employer and the employed. The strife will never cease so long as the present relations continue. * * * Expedients and not principle have controlled. Policy rather than duty have been our study. Justice, truth and party purity have been even unpopular. Will this be overcome? I believe it can be through the influence of the Grange and the enfranchisement of woman. There you have God's foundation for moral purity and public peace. The great questions of humanity will take the place of selfishness and groveling expedients. The moment you bring into public affairs woman's influence, that moment politics partakes of a finer cast. Her strong moral sentiment, her love of disinterested kindness, her courage and faith in all that is good, will ever be a guarantee of good government. There is no civilized nation upon earth, nor ever will be, until female influence is brought to bear in the councils of men. It requires all parts to make a whole. The positive and negative must dwell together as all nature proves. * * *

When we understand the causes that extort from the farmer and mechanic the profits of labor, the battle is half won. Among the subjects that await our action, may be mentioned unjust taxation, a false commercial system, railroad extortions, land monopoly, finance and labor reform. And to my mind the two latter are paramount to all the others. They are destined to be the coming questions of the day, and the main plank in the formation of the Workingmen's party. * * * The middle drones have the entire business of the country in their control. Food, clothing and all the necessities and luxuries of life, can no longer be had at a reasonable profit. In fact, it appears as if the devil rules the nation.

It is not the mission of the Grange to be a political organization. Its duties are more social than political. Education, refinement and discipline are among its primary objects. But who among us have a greater interest in a good government than the farming community? Let the science of good government be the study of every man and woman who feels the responsibility of a citizen. Let every voter in the Grange attend the primary meetings, that no political corruptionist ride into office upon the wave of party passion. Hero worship has nearly ruined the nation. The old political parties, that have heretofore ruled the country, are rapidly passing away. They cannot thrive upon dead issues, nor sustain themselves by bragging of the grand achievements of the past. Political parties, like nations and individuals, have their birth, manhood and old age. When they have filled their destiny they become corrupt and lose the confidence of the people, and enter upon their decline, and can never again reinstate themselves and go into power. Let us stand by the cause. No man can serve two masters. Then be united and faithful, and success will crown your efforts. God permits those to be slaves who have lost the spirit of freedom.

Mr. Taylor, who is an ardent reformer, has determined to take up his residence in California, and is now looking for a home in the interior of this State.

BRIEF EXTRACTS.

Home has little meaning and less beauty when there are no children, living jewels, to shine like diamonds in its setting of love and care.

Keep well employed, and the hours will move fast enough. What you hate in others, correct in yourself. Rule your tongue, or your tongue will rule you.

Be not stingy of kind words and pleasing acts, for such are fragrant gifts, whose perfume will gladden the heart and sweeten the life of all who hear or receive them.

The joy and pride of parents in children well-trained and nurtured more than repay a hundred times all the trials and self-denial incident to infancy. The satisfaction they bring to parents in middle life is unspeakable.

When the feet falter, and the limbs grow weak, and the eye loses its lustre, there is no staff on earth so supporting and full of comfort as the sustaining love and care of a child reared in an atmosphere of love and trained to veneration.

The average "well-dressed" lady carries ten pounds of clothing. The length of the skirt impedes locomotion, and is of itself a cause of disease. Impure blood and digestion, resulting from improper dressing, dulls the intellect and clouds our spiritual vision.

While Kossuth, the orator, went abroad and talked, Deak, a practical man, staid at home and worked, and through his patient, plodding, self-sacrificing efforts Hungary has half the freedom she asked for, and about all her people are prepared to enjoy and utilize.

Many a man who goes out into the "world" into the church, becomes a walking hypocrite. As D. W. Hull says, he goes about with the bible in his hand, a lie in his mouth and piety even in his gait, yet he is not half the man he was before the church got his clutches on him.

Mrs. Jane Swisshelm says, in reference to the proposed dress reform, that all her clothes rest just where men have theirs supported, i.e., on the shoulders above the joint, having this free. With skirts that never come below the instep, and are not unnecessarily wide or heavy, this dress is as nearly healthful as the customs of society will permit.

Col. Higginson remarks, how little conception has a virtuous woman as to what a dissipated young man really is! But let that same woman be a Portia, in the judgment seat, or even a legislator or a voter, and let her have the unmistakable and actual offender before her, and I do not believe that she will excuse him for a paltry fine, and give the less guilty woman a penalty more than quadruple.

When this government was organized, it was a farmer's government. The signers of the Declaration of Independence were farmers; our Senators and Representatives were farmers; our generals and private soldiers came from the farm. Consequently economy and honesty characterized the earlier administrations of our government, and while we enjoy the fruit of their labor in being free from kingcraft and priestcraft, we are bound hand and foot by lawyer craft and a trading craft."

Rev. Edmund B. Fairfield, D. D., L. L. D., pastor of the First Congregational church in Mansfield, Ohio, has written a review of the Beecher case, in which he says: "For years his portrait was hung in the most prominent place in my house; only Washington's and Lincoln's besides; Henry Ward Beecher's in the most honored place of the three. And when a few weeks since I took it down and hid it away from sight, it was with such throes of soul as I hope never to experience again."

FAUST—A TRAGEDY.

FROM A MANUSCRIPT TRANSLATION BY DON JULIANO.

[Night.—In an arched, narrow, gothic room, Faust sitting restlessly on his chair, at his desk.]

FAUST—Well, here have I Philosophy,
Physic, and Jurisprudence too,
And—worse luck—dry Theology
Quite studied out with much ado.
Here now I sit, poor wretched fool,
As wise as when I went to school.
Master of Arts, and Doctor grace my name;
These ten years past I've led my pupils tame
By their weak noses, up and down,
Across the middle and around;
And now I see that we can't know one thing;
That burns my soul, aye, there's the poisoned sting.
'Tis true I am wiser than all those sad boobies,
Your scholars, and doctors, and parsonic boobies;
Scruples and doubts never enter my head,
Hell and the Devil don't threaten me dead;
But in compensation my joys are clipped slightly,
I never imagine I know a thing rightly;
I never imagine that aught I could do in
Their ears would aid mankind, or turn them from sinning.
And I have neither goods nor gold,
Nor Mammon's glories manifold.
No dog would lead a life so tragic,
So I have given my mind to magic,
To see if spirit voice and power
May not some light upon me shower;
That I no more in bitter sweat
Need state the thing I know not yet;
That I may recognize reality
In this world's wonderful duality;
Behold its germs and secret forces,
And bury empty words' dead corpses.
Oh, lovely moon! who many a night
Bathedest my pale face in thy light,
When o'er this desk thy beams have passed—
Would that this night were now my last!
Then melancholy friend thy gaze
O'er dusty books and paper strays.
Oh! might I but on mountain heights
Stroll in thy lovely light o' nights;
Round mountain caves with spirits ride,
Or through thy gleams o'er meadows glide,
From every grief of knowledge freed,
Bathe in thy dew, till sound indeed.
Ah! what? still locked within this cell,
This cursed, dull, damp, walled-in hell.
Where even the sweet light of heaven
Scarcely through the painted panes is driven.
Hemmed in by yon dull pile of tomes,
Dust covered, where worms gnaw their homes,
Wulst a coarse paper, smoked and peeling,
Drapes everything from floor to ceiling.
With drawers and bottles fitted round,
Old instruments each corner filling,
Helicorns of for-bears here abound—
Call't that a world thou'dst choose to dwell in?
And dost thou ask why thy faint heart
Shrinks gaspingly within thy breast,
Why some deep, unacknowledged smart
Thy life's bright sources hath oppressed?
In place of nature's loving tones,
Wherein God fitted man to dwell,
Beasts' skeletons, and dead men's bones,
Besmoked and mildewed, deck thy cell.
Up, ace, away to yon wide world,
And this most wondrous mystic book
From Nostradamus' hand, unfurled,
When on its sacred page you look,
Shall teach the stars bright course in heaven,
And then, if nature helps you through,
The soul power also shall be given
To speak as sprites to spirits do.
In vain you trust dry thought alone,
These holy signs may soon explain.
Spirits who flit 'neath this arched gloom—
Ye hear me? Shall I call in vain?

[He opens the book and sees the sign of Macrocosmus.]

Oh! what delight soothes now my tortured mind,
As mine eye falls this glorious sign upon;
The sweet, soft life's delight of youth I find
New glowing through each vein and nerve to run;
Was it some God who traced these strange signs here,
Which thus all inward raging softly still,
My poor torn heart with peace and joy so fill,
And with a secret thrill akin to fear
Unfold all nature's forces to my will?
Am I a God? on me such light is poured;
I see in these pure features traced,
Bared to my soul, all nature's secret hoard,
And now I read the sage's speech at last:
"The spirit world was never closed,
Thy mind is shut, thy soul is dead;
Up scholar! wake! thou hast but dozed,
Bathe thy glad soul in dawn's fair red."

How all things weave into one whole,
One in another finds its soul;
The powers of heaven swoop down, and skywards hover
Handing the golden urns to one another.
With blessing scattering pinions,
From heaven they crowd this earth's dominions,
And all harmoniously thrill through the universal lover.

Grand spectacle! alas, 'tis nothing more!
Infinite nature, who can reach thy core?
Who clasp thy form?—those breasts for which I anguish,
Sources of all this life, which Earth and Heaven
Sustain; towards which my withering heart hath striven,
Ye flow, ye feed—and must I vainly languish?

[He turns over the leaves impatiently and sees the sign of the Earth Spirit.]

How differently this acts upon my soul!
Thou spirit of this Earth, I feel thee nigher,
Already do I feel my powers reach higher,
Already glow my veins as from the bowl.
Courage I feel into the world to venture,
To probe Earth's woes, Earth's joys to their deep centre,
To seek the trust where gathering storms assemble,
And 'midst the shipwreck's crashes, not to tremble.

Clouds arch their forms above me;
Yon soft moon hides her light;
My lamp grows dim;
Vapors arise; red flashes play
About my head. There comes
A horror quivering from the arch above,
And clasps me round.
I feel thou hoverest o'er me, spirit now invoked
Unveiled thyself!—
Ah! now my heart beats joyously
To new sensations;
All my roused senses join in thy tyrannies;
I feel my whole soul given up to thee;
Thou must! thou must! e'en if my life's the fee.

[For Common Sense.]

THE COMING DAY.

BY F. MARTIN.

The day is coming, surely coming,
Eastern sky, soon give it birth,
Hail! all Hail! the coming future,—
Hasten it, all men of worth.
The time and nation need its presence
To dispel the misty gloom,
As the night doth backward hasten
From the rays of rising sun.

Science opens her massive gateway,
Peals in anthems of reform,
Brings response from every bosom
That for progress still is warm.
Meet her midway, noble-hearted,
Bid her welcome to your home;
For she'll scatter all our darkness,
From the cottage to the throne.

The day is coming, almost dawning,
Bringing justice, rights and peace;
Binding all the hearts of nations,
Causing wars and strife to cease.
Hostile foe shall ne'er invade us,
Joining hands in purest love,
Resting tranquil on conditions
Meted out from heaven above.

The day is coming, now 'tis coming,
Creeping onward ever still,
As the beams of welcome sunlight
Softly creep o'er yonder hill.
Mark you, brother, what I've stated,
That a change is surely near—
Glorious truths are ever dawning;
Welcome truth, and nothing fear.

Special Notices.

DR. BANCROFT'S treatment for Dyspepsia and General Debility has benefited me more than all the medicine I have used for many years.

C. A. BRADY, 519 Sycamore street, Milwaukee.

Dr. Bancroft's office is 204 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

For the very best Photographs go to Bradley & Bulofson's Gallery, with an elevator, 439 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Those suffering from that most annoying of the minor miseries of human life—a cold in the head—or from catarrh in any form, should try Dr. Ivory's Diamond Catarrh Remedy. Just try it—that's all. Sold at this office, and by all druggists.

Send Austin Kent one dollar for his pamphlets on Free Love and Marriage, etc. He has been seventeen years physically helpless, confined to his bed and chair, is poor and needs the money. He sends four or five well-written essays for one dollar. His address is AUSTIN KENT, Stockholm, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., Box 44.

Farmers, do you know that the Babcock Fire Extinguisher is a sure exterminator of gophers, squirrels, etc., and that it will effectually kill insects on fruit-trees, with little trouble and scarcely any expense. One charge of the machine will exterminate all the squirrels in a hundred-acre field. A new machine can be purchased at this office at a reduced price, in perfect order, and with six charges. Address 'COMMON SENSE,' 236 Montgomery street.

"THE WORK" is a Monthly Journal of Reform—Regarding the subjection of Labor, of Woman, and the Prevalence of War as unnatural evils, induced by false claims to obedience and service; favors the Abolition of the State, of Property in Land and its kindred resources, of speculative income and all other means whereby Intrusion acquires wealth and power at the expense of Useful People. Since labor is the source of wealth, and creates all values equitably vendible, the WORK (not by restrictive methods, but through Liberation and Reciprocity) seeks the extinction of interest, rent, dividends and profit, except as they represent work done; the abolition of railway, telegraphic, banking, trades union and other corporations charging more than actual cost for values furnished, and the repudiation of all so-called debts, the principal whereof has been paid in the form of interest.

Terms—75c. annually in advance.

Address THE WORK, Princetown, Mass.

E. H. HERWOOD, Editor.

COMMON SENSE.

A Journal of Live Ideas.

VOL. 1.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1874.

No. 24.

Signs of the Times.

The Valcour community has broken up. It would not work.

Wendell Phillips has been invited to visit England next year by the United Co-operative Board, on the occasion of the annual Co-operative Congress.

John Anderson, the founder of the Agassiz School of Natural History on Penikese Island, has sent Garibaldi a draft for $1,000 with the promise of annually repeating the gift while he lives.

The Holmes family, mediums, have returned to Philadelphia. Their visit to Blissfield was not satisfactory, because, as they assert, the people, being ignorant of the laws of spirit control, constantly disturbed the "conditions."

The English Church is losing its attractiveness in the same way as the English Court. So often as it tries to make itself pleasing to the masses and the young, it runs into a dramatic and gayly costumed ritualistic spectacle, which offends the evangelical, repels the puritanical, and reacts in favor of the ritualists.

Harry Larkyns, formerly employed on the S. F. Evening Post as dramatic critic, a man of fine natural abilities and extensive acquirements, was shot and instantly killed, on Saturday night last, by E. J. Maybridge, a photographic artist, whose wife Larkyns had been intimate with. The manner in which the deed was done was most cowardly.

The Catholic Church is getting up romantic pilgrimages and drawing crowds by the lustre of its cathedrals and the eloquence of its preachers; it is getting itself talked about; it is a novelty. The English Church is in the dismal state of the serpent which lies motionless between the casting of the rusty old skin and the putting on of the new.

Prof. Hein, delegated to attend experiments on the cremation of bodies at Dresden, has reported favorably on the apparatus of Herr Siemens, which reduced a pig weighing one hundred and sixty-four pounds to cinders in two hours—the heat being between six hundred and eight hundred degrees, and the ashes of the pig weighing four pounds.

Mrs. L. M. F. Wawzer and Miss McDonald are to enter the Medical Department of the University of California in January, and they wish to be joined by other young women. Both of these ladies have been teachers, Mrs. Wawzer in the public schools of San Francisco, and Miss McDonald in kindergarten schools. Recently the latter has studied medicine with Dr. Corbett. She is an accomplished linguist, and versed in the natural sciences.

Charles Bradlaugh is soon coming to America again to lecture.

The conversion of Lord Rippen to the Roman Catholic church has created a great sensation in England. The papers say very hard and harsh things.

The Index says the numbers wealth and influence of the Y. M. C. A. are rapidly increasing, while Liberals travel their separate ways, like James' solitary horseman.

In 186 cities of the United States the municipal debts amount to over four hundred and ninety millions of dollars. The state, county, and town debts combined cannot fall short of one billion four hundred millions of dollars.

The papers speak of Muybridge as having been "dishonored" by Larkyns. How can an innocent man be dishonored? Dishonor attaches only to those who are guilty. He dishonored himself when he committed murder. Previous to that his skirts were clear.

Dr. Edmunds, an English physician says English women are in the habit of giving alcoholic beverages to their infants. The doctor adds that "the babies of London are never sober until they are weaned." Who wonders that England is becoming a nation of sots?

The Irish World advises the South to stop its "blather-skiting," and go to honest work, then northern men of enterprise will go there and help them. The political adventurers who went South at the close of the war are a worse curse than the lazy, shiftless, labor-despising whites they found there.

Miss Jane Alexander, aged 20, committed suicide at Thompsonville, Conn., recently because she thought herself so vile in the sight of God as to be beyond mercy. Of course she was deranged, but only one degree more so than others of the orthodox faith. If the latter were really believers they would go crazy also.

Col. Furlong went to India as an earnest churchman and aggressive Christian. He was highly educated, and especially well read in theology. So often as was consistent with his official duties he sought the society of learned pundits, and ardently aspired to convert them to Christianity. But they converted him. The Colonel at once set himself to study not only the Hindoo religions, but all the religions of the East; and, after years of absorption in those studies, he has returned to England on furlough, bringing with him a comprehensive and very heretical treatise, in two large volumes, which will soon be printed. The work is entitled, "The Rivers of Life; or, the Sources and Streams of the Faiths of Man in All Lands."

THE SOCIAL REVOLUTION.

EDITOR COMMON SENSE:—Considering that in the present money-worshipping era, those who do not possess fortune are as completely debarred from social position as if poverty were in itself a degradation and crime, can we wonder at the aberrations of the so-called demi-monde? With the tendencies of the age, is it surprising that so many delicate and refined young women, realizing that impecuniosity has already virtually prescribed them as completely as if it is possible for them to be, and that in point of fact they have nought of worldly standing or honor to lose, should little heed being cast beyond the pale, only more formally? Indeed, as for the disrepute of it, as a necessary consequence of the existing frequency of this mode of life among ladylike females in the large cities elsewhere, so long as it is practiced under a thin pretense of secrecy, I have observed it is hardly frowned upon any more, save by the "old fogies," and a few others, perhaps, of the "unco gude," or rigidly righteous.

Do not understand me to say that all this is right. I am only stating what I recognize to be the existing state of affairs—a condition differing widely from things in my own youth. It is one of the consequences that has arisen from the repression of the educated middle classes, by the monopolies of a monied minority, as is the case just now all over the civilized world, and it is also but one among many other indications of a gradual upheaval of old institutions, and of a revolution shortly to take place, doubtless, in the whole social fabric. While, therefore, in view of this tendency of the time, I am not so much shocked as I might once have been at the tendencies of what is technically termed "fastness" among our sex, I yet feel none the less that such a position is—as is likewise marriage however without love—a desecration of womanhood, whose only true position should be one not alone open to no shadow of reproach, but exalted to reverence and honor. It should be one, moreover, where her lofty mission of motherhood should not be abolished, but earnestly accepted under conditions of her own selection and framing. But absolutely, at this moment, there is no standard of what is fitting. It is very certain that the hitherto existing laws, as to the perpetuity of the marriage relation and the notion of the honorableness of the wedding bond, are in process of modification or abolition; at any rate until the organization in some far-off day, of an entirely new state of things between the sexes—that millennial period which Mrs. Farnham, by prophetic vision, styled "Woman's Era." With this inspired teacher, whose wondrous intuition it seems to me grasped so far in advance the ultimate truth of humanity in all its phases and bearings, I believe that it is our sex which should reserve to itself the privilege of choice and selection, and that the "proposal" for a union should proceed from the woman of right. For is it not she who has all to bestow? And should she not be the one to invite whom she will to become the recipient of her sacred favors? But alas! how many generations must elapse before woman shall be enlightened or great enough to realize this—to attain to the exalted consciousness of the power of her sex, and all it implies for the renovation of man and the regeneration of human kind! What a "strike" woman might any day make against compulsory marriage, prostitution, and every sort of social subjection or injustice she is now heir to, were she only wise and grand enough to feel and assert her own supremacy! At the present day, in the growing disfavor of the marriage tie as still existing, from its intrinsic evils, the circumstance that has arisen of the myriads of educated and refined young girls thrown penniless upon the world to earn their own livelihood, affords just the condition of society to inaugurate so much more widely than ever before, as to constitute it really a social feature of the day, those temporary connections between the sexes which were formerly exceptional cases, and veiled as it were behind the scenes. In short, we are living in "an evil and perverse generation;" and so satisfied am I myself of the tremendous revolution now in actual progress in the world, that were I at the topmost round of the social ladder, I should look upon my position as wholly insecure, believing that any moment might see me hurled to the bottom. I consider nothing certain just now—not even the tenure of any sort of property, including real estate. It really looks, from present indications, as if society is going to be shaken up, and everybody will have to give up all they have, and begin anew—at least it will virtually amount to this, if not literally. All things point to a near social revolution.

C. F. WINDLE.

Marr's Bluff, S. C.

The trouble with most people is they bow to what is called authority; they have a certain reverence for the old because it is old. They think a man is better for being dead, especially if he has been dead a long time, and that the forefathers of their nation were the greatest and best of all mankind. All these things they implicitly believe because it is popular and patriotic, and because they were told so when very small, and remember, distinctly of hearing mother read it out of a book, and they are all willing to swear that mother was a good woman. It is hard to overestimate the influence of early training in the direction of superstition. You first teach children that a certain book is true—that it was written by God himself—that to question its truth is a sin, that to deny it is a crime, and that should they die without believing that book they will be forever damned without benefit of clergy; the consequence is that long before they read that book they believe it to be true. When they do read their minds are wholly unfitted to investigate its claims. They accept it as a matter of course. In this way the reason is overcome, the sweet instincts of humanity are blotted from the heart, and while reading its infamous pages even justice throws aside her scales, shrieking for revenge, and charity, with bloody hands, applauds a deed of murder.—Col. R. G. Ingersoll.

Mr. Beecher's latest misfortune comes from his own family, in the shape of a letter from his sister Catherine. An elderly lady of strong mind and kind heart, addicted to writing, and the author of a number of books, she rushed to the rescue of her imperiled brother through the press. The agitation she betrays, the despairful efforts she makes, the hysterical logic she uses, shows only too plainly that his case is desperate. Her argument is based on the assumption that he is a good man, and therefore it is impossible that he can be guilty, as good men never commit crimes, forgetting that the very question at issue is whether he is good or bad. Miss Beecher is not only sure that he is good, but that all his opponents are bad, and Mr. Bowen, in particular, is totally depraved. The whole story is a device of Satan, and Tilton and Moulton are his imps. But the special point of her letter is the almost frantic demand that her brother shall not be tried in the courts; for the courts are desperately wicked, and the judges are infamous.—Golden Age.

"FREE LOVE."

A REPLY TO AUSTIN KENT BY GEO. W. LEWIS.

"We, who believe in this doctrine, agree in some points and differ in others. We agree that the only essential meaning in free love, is the sexual emancipation of woman. It is to give woman absolute, entire, and continued control over her sexual relations, and protect her in such freedom and control, as well in as out of marriage."—Austin Kent, in COMMON SENSE, Oct. 17th.

In other words, the meaning is simply this, that woman shall have entire and absolute freedom in her sexual relations. It is in absolute conflict with marriage, and with the family relations.

Promiscuity is the main ingredient in this unsavory dish. And where this exists the marriage vow must not be given, or it must be desecrated. The family, with its holy associations, must cease to have a name or a being. For, depend upon it, "free sexuality" and monogamic marriage cannot subsist together. The adoption of the one, is, in the nature of things, the subversion and rejection of the other. Free love is but a synonym for Free Sexuality, and Free Sexuality is simply promiscuity.

The adherents of Free Love from Mrs. Woodhull and Jennie Leys, down, through the rank and file, advocate "Free Sexuality and nothing else. The fact is, woman is already too free in her sexuality. This looseness in the sexual relations, on the part of both man and woman, is the most signal curse of the present day. Instead of advocating more laxity, and more freedom in this direction, every good man and woman should advocate a more faithful and sacred observance of the marriage vows. They should not only advocate it, but they should make it a living reality in their lives, and in their daily conduct. Then there would be more happiness at the family altar; there would be fewer broken hearts; fewer tears would be shed over the broken vows, and fewer homes would be made desolate by the act of those who gave full promises and assurances of love and fidelity.

Brother Kent says: "I go for easy marriage and easy divorce." The fact is marriage should be made more binding, and divorce less easily obtained. Divorce is the supplement of marriage, and an easy divorce is virtually an abolition of marriage.

It is a common thing for this class of reformers (?) to say they believe in monogamic marriage. But this is always supplemented by their peculiar definition of marriage, or by a demand for a free and easy divorce.

So Jennie Leys, in her Free Love speeches in San Francisco, says: "I believe in monogamic marriage, but either party to the marriage contract should have the privilege at will, of getting a divorce by paying two dollars and a half." Under this system a man may marry, and in fifteen minutes thereafter, he may sever the marriage bond by paying two dollars and a half. In this way he may marry one or a dozen wives in a day; and with all of this he is a nice young man, monogamically married.

In another lecture she says: "Woman should have more freedom in her love relations," meaning in her sexual relations. No language can more practically teach promiscu-ity than this. "Free Love," by whomsoever taught,—be it Woodhull, Jennie Leys, Mr. Kent, or others, means promiscuity and nothing else. It means the abnegation of marriage, and the dissolution of family and home. It is at variance with the highest interests of mankind, and should be discountenanced by all Spiritualists, and by all true reformers.

[For Common Sense.]

CHARACTER DEVELOPED BY EXPERIENCE.

BY MRS. M. J. HENDEE.

Many gems lie buried, beneath the rubbish of ignorance and sloth, which when the outer covering shall be removed, will add their lustre to the world. We little know how good or how bad a person may be, by seeing their outward condition. They may not know themselves. Different positions in life bring out different elements and powers, and in time develop an entire new being. We know but little of ourselves, and much less of others. What a diversity of thought and action moves the world to-day! There seems to be a general awakening from the old forms and opinions of the past. What was looked upon as sacred truths, years ago, are now perceived to be but fables to frighten children, instead of food for men. So all things change, and we must necessarily change, as the elements that surround us and the chemical properties of our bodies change, bringing us into new conditions. Old creeds and forms are crumbling like old cities and fortifications, to be replaced by new, or none, for as harmony prevails, there will be no need of walls of defense, every one being a law unto himself. The love principle will yet prevail on earth, and Love attracts that which is in harmony with itself. Force cannot blend the true elements of life. Coercion means death to the beautiful attraction of souls.

Sometimes those who were brought into this world surrounded by love and everything to make them happy look upon those whose fate is otherwise as belonging to another sphere, holding no equality with them. As time rolls on changes come, friends are torn from them by death, or perhaps by degradation. Fortune, friends, all gone, none to cheer, few to pity, and many to scorn—what a world then opens to their view! They feel lost, bewildered, crushed. Then, for the first time they think for themselves. Having no one to lean upon, and forced to stand alone in the cruel blast, they try to plan out the problem of life—that life that was once so joyous. It is now they begin to tax brain and soul, to create a new world, to frame a new mind, a new condition. Passive life is gone, but an earnest, anxious soul-working life begins, and with it a new discovery is made, that they are becoming another being, the old life is laid aside as useless in this trying condition. After throwing out the tendrils they find they are being supported by those who need their services. They feel self-reliant and begin to realize the new condition as something more beautiful, more earnest, than the old. They feel that they are of some use in the world. Thus through this regenerative process they discover the pearl of great price—the soul's relation to the grand laws of the universe.

[For Common Sense.]

THOUGHTS ON THEOLOGY.

BY LIGHT.

Man is a devotional being; he must worship something in obedience of the voice of God within him. If his conception fails to reach a spiritual father, his materialistic mind will induce him to look to visible gods. Having been repeatedly forbidden to worship idols, men reluctantly abandon their graven images only to set up one like themselves of flesh and blood, one who was powerless to save himself, yet had the power to save all mankind; one who was powerless to avoid an agonizing death, yet could impart life to all. It is possible, after due cultivation by long devotion, they may have attained to a faith in this divinity—may have attained to that monomanical stage when they believe that the laws of nature can be changed at pleasure, and that a mortal man, with but finite power, could be the immortal, omnipotent creator of all that is. This monomania can only be kept up by constant cultivation.

Spiritualism would undoubtedly have been the prevailing religion of the age, had the apostles transmitted Christianity as they received it, and the Council of Nice had never been in existence. By priestcraft, man has been made a slave to the most despotic power ever on earth. The only check against this fearful power, as well as the surest means of securing happiness here and hereafter, is Rational Religion!! Common sense teaches us there is but one God, and Jesus Christ but one of his apostles!!

It is charitably conceded by some that the heathen, the infant, and the idiot, may escape the pain of hell. Then why not let the heathen remain in blissful ignorance? Why send missionaries among them to insure their damnation? Why attempt to cram on the infantile mind that which cannot be comprehended by advanced intelligences? The idiot alone is blessed in his idiocy; he is neither tormented here with these mysteries, nor hereafter for failing to comprehend them.

Ceremonial worship has ever been the enemy of mankind. It called forth Christ's most earnest energies for its overthrow. In the old dispensation the Jew had clothed their faith with so many forms and ceremonies, that the spiritual was lost in the materialistic. Christ's mission was to do away with all this paraphernalia, and reveal the spirit world. As simple and plain as were his teachings and proofs of this spiritual existence, they were beyond the comprehension of many; those more especially who were so wedded to forms and ceremonies that they obscure all else. And even his professed followers up to the present time, are groping in the mists of vague doctrines, and are as incredulous of spiritual existence and communion now, as were the Jews then, although it is being demonstrated to them now as it was then. There are none so blind as those who will not see. But the most inexplicable is the course pursued by the ministers of the gospel, the professed teachers of Christ's doctrine, men of sufficient intelligence to know that all the so-called miracles were not in violation of, but in accordance with, natural law. They deceive their hearers when they preach that these events were miraculous. And although the apostles averred that in all things they were directed and controlled by spirit influence, yet in the present day, when there are innumerable manifestations of the same power, such as psychologizing water into wine, healing the sick by laying on of hands, restoring animation, the physical body suspended in mid air, and the spiritual body revealed to us, yet will they turn a deaf ear, and close their eyes to all these evidences, and maintain that it is all humbug, or if any such things occur, it is the spirit of evil, and not of good—the devil and not Christ! They but crucify him again in their denying these evidences of his teachings; and in denying these modern manifestation of spirit visitors, they but discredit the teachings of the Old, as well as the New Testament, for both are replete with evidences of the same. But, moreover, they are heedless of Christ's promise to his disciples, when he told them, "and I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another comforter, that he may abide with you forever, even the spirit of Truth, whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him! but ye know him, for he dwelleth in you; and shall be in you! According to this plain statement, the ministers of this age are of the world, knowing nothing of the spirit of Truth! Verily the blind leading the blind.

The multifarious modes of worship are but so many devices of man to influence his fellow man in his special way of worshipping the Supreme Being, and in all instances, where any one form predominated and gained sufficient power, it was exercised to persecute and destroy all who did not conform to it, actuated more by vindictiveness towards their fellow man than love to God; having caused more dissension, strife, misery and bloodshed than all else on earth. And now that we have hosts of witnesses of the spirit of truth, coming to us and abiding in us, as promised by Christ, yet these teachers of multitudinous doctrines, who know not the spirit of truth, are loud and bitter in their denunciation of its manifestations. So bitter are they at this disturbance of the dry bones, that had they but the power as of old, there would be no end to inquisitorial torture, burning and general destruction. This faith, important to us, taught and illustrated by Christ, and now being demonstrated by clouds of celestial messengers, is a sure guarantee against the devices of man, if we but receive these messengers and heed their council. The multitudinous, discordant, conflicting and antagonistic forms of worship will be displaced by this simple faith—the spirit of truth. Then will be unity of faith and unity of worship by the entire family of man. Discord and strife will cease, and peace, love and good will shall prevail, and the millennial period will then have been inaugurated. We can conceive of nothing more in accordance with the beneficence of Divine wisdom displayed by celestial intelligences in their communion with denizens of earth, than their warm fraternal affection in guiding our footsteps, teaching us lessons of wisdom, conducting us in the paths of pleasantness and peace on this sphere, and then leading us through celestial realms. Truly the comforter abideth with us forever.

LOUIS KOSSUTH.

A DEFENSE BY B. SHERAFI.

ED COMMON SENSE: Among the "Brief Extracts" in your last issue, are two paragraphs concerning Louis Kossuth, the Hungarian patriot, to which I beg to reply: The first states that Kossuth declines visiting Hungary while it is part of the Austrian Empire, and spends his old age in England in cossetting his dreams. It is true Austria has given amnesty to all political refugees, but what pleasure can any patriot have when on his return every step he makes is watched by half a dozen secret detectives, and every word he utters even in private, is falsely construed, or even worse, a secret enemy may swear against him, one often hired to do so, in order to get him out of the way, and he is seized in the night and thrown into a dark prison without any one knowing what has become of him, and that is the last of him. The House of Hapsburg is known the world over, for its treachery, even to its most solemn promises. Kossuth is not in England, nor has he been for the last twelve or fifteen years; he has lived all these years in Turin, Italy.

The second paragraph reads as follows:

"While Kossuth, the orator, went abroad and talked, Deak, a practical man, staid at home and worked, and through his patient, plodding, self-sacrificing efforts Hungary has half the freedom she asked for, and about all her people are prepared to enjoy and utilize."

This must have been written by one who is not well acquainted with the history and the life-long, self-sacrificing and humanitarian efforts of Louis Kossuth for his beloved country. As I have known him personally since Feb. 14 1848, as well as also his mother and sisters and their families, I can speak from personal observation of his character and labors, and I will give a brief sketch of his life.

Kossuth was born at Monak, comitat of Zemplen, in Hungary, the 27th of April 1802. He studied law, and was admitted to the bar in 1825 or 6, from which time he commenced preaching his ideas against Austrian despotism, and wrote a book on that subject, for which, with three other fearless spirits like himself, he was thrown into a dark, wet prison in 1830, and they were kept there until 1834 without trial; two of the prisoners died in that prison, the third, a count, became blind, and his health destroyed, so that soon after his release he died, and only Kossuth survived. From that time on, he worked so much more zealously for the liberation of his down-trodden people, which was a hard task to accomplish, considering there was no free press in Hungary, nor in Austria before 1848; there is more liberty of the press now, yet there is nothing to be compared with the press of the United States. At last all Kossuth's plans were perfected, and the time appointed, and the ever memorable Monday morning, February 13th, 1848, ushered in the Revolution of the Austrian Kingdom at Vienna, its capital, when, at six o'clock A. M., several hundred students marched in a body from Polytechnic Institute unarmed to the Burghthor, which was instantly closed against them, and the cannon's mouth pointed at them. Having been a member of that body, I know whereof I speak, but as I must be short, I must pass over what followed, and the struggles we went through, until the surrender of the city by the Liberalists to the Imperial forces on the 30th of October 1848, after which an army of one hundred and thirty thousand men left Vienna to fight the Hungarians, who fought with an enthusiasm which can hardly be equalled. They were outnumbered by the Austrians in nearly all battles, like one to five, and even to ten, yet they almost invariably won the victory. They fought against an army of nearly two hundred thousand, and had not Russia sent an army of seventy-five thousand men on their rear, and more than all, had not General Georgey sold out the flower of the Hungarian army, sixty thousand men for Austrian money, Hungary would have gained its independence.

The work of planning this revolution in Austria and Hungary was Kossuth's: to create an army of eighty thousand men, provide for them financially, supply them with ammunition, arms, food and clothing, with horses, and other necessities, was mainly his work. The credit for the purchase of these things had to be created abroad, and supplies were not as easily brought into the country as was the case with the South during the late civil war in the United States. The Hungarians were surrounded by the hirelings of Austria. To contend against such difficulties required a leader like Kossuth, a man with a giant mind, a good judge of human character, and very impressional. Without these high qualities Kossuth could not have carried the struggle to so great a success as he did; whilst many men, like Count Deak, although they embraced his cause, stood "on the fence," ready at any moment to betray him and his plans, and many times did do so, in order to gratify their own selfish purposes. As soon as Count Deak saw the cause was losing ground, he, with others became the tools of Austria, and accepted favors and offices from their hands. Kossuth and hundreds of others had to flee for life, and a price was set on their heads, whilst Count Deak and his companions feasted on their poor, overtaxed, down-trodden country. Kossuth's liberal ideas had taken strong root in the hearts of the people, so that the Government was obliged to grant liberties to them, which, but for Kossuth, it would have never granted; and Count Deak, by the position he occupied after the downfall of Hungary, could not but swim with the tide. It was therefore not because he staid at home and made self-sacrificing efforts, that Hungary gained what little of liberty it enjoys. It is Kossuth, and not Deak, who deserves this credit, and the Hungarian people know it too, and appreciate and bless him; and future generations in Hungary will bow in reverence when the name of Kossuth is spoken as their deliverer from Austrian tyranny.

B. SHERAFI, Teacher of Music.

P. S. I am glad to see refuted the rumor that Kossuth is in want for the necessities of life, and is obliged to give lessons to keep from starving. This story is contradicted also in a private letter received by me a few weeks ago, from Kossuth's nephew, Louis Rattkay.

In our governmental system, the Senate represents the rights, the interests, the autonomy of the separate states; and it is proper that its members should be chosen by the state legislatures. The House represents local interests and constituencies, and its members are properly chosen by districts. But the President represents the whole body of the people, of all sections and all states. He represents the national autonomy. And he should be elected directly by the people, without any of the breaks or embarrassing circumlocution of district or electoral colleges.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

COMMON SENSE is furnished to subscribers for Three Dollars per annum, in advance. Letters intended for the Business Department should be addressed:

AMANDA M. SLOOUM, BUSINESS MANAGER, 236 Montgomery st.

TRAVELING AGENTS.—Prof. W. H. Chaney, Mrs. Flora Wellman Chaney, and J. L. York are authorized to receive subscriptions for COMMON SENSE, and receipt for money due this office. LOCAL AGENT—Miss Abbie W. Baker, San Francisco.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

The Social Revolution—C. F. Windle.....	280
Free Love—Reply to Austin Kent by Geo. W. Lewis.....	281
Character Developed by Experience—Mrs. M. J. Hendee.....	281
Thoughts on Theology—Light.....	282
Louis Kossuth—B. Shraff.....	283
Instructive Reading—Ed.....	284
The Beginning of the End.....	285
Jennie Leys' Experience.....	286
Begin at the Root.....	287
Harry Larkyns—H. Edwards.....	288
Intelligent Ants.....	289
Original Translation of Faust—Don Fulano.....	290

COMMON SENSE.

WILLIAM N. SLOOUM, EDITOR.

AMANDA M. SLOOUM, ASSISTANT.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, OCT. 24, 1874.

Spiritualists and Free Thinkers must not neglect to read the advertisement addressed to them on the last page; also the one headed "Books, Books, Books."

Prof. S. B. Brittan, having sunk his entire fortune in endeavors to establish his Quarterly Journal of Spiritual Science on a paying basis, it is now proposed to raise money by contribution for his aid. Money may be sent to Mary F. Davis, 24 East Fourth street, New York.

We trust our genial and learned friend, Prof. Chaney, will not take offence because of our irreverent allusion to astrology and astrologers in the article "The Beginning and the End." It is possibly unjust, but it answers our present purpose, and if it serves to stir up our friend to the defence of his own, so much the better.

CHILDREN'S LYCEUM.—We hope no Spiritualist who listened to the religious experience of Miss Jennie Leys last Sunday, will be willing hereafter to have their children taught in the orthodox Sunday Schools, allowing them to imbibe errors and superstition which will take them a lifetime to eradicate. The Children's Progressive Lyceum meets every Sunday at Huddy's Hall, 911 Market street, at 10½ o'clock, A. M. The Lyceum is in a flourishing condition. It is the duty of Spiritualists to give it their sympathy and support, and see that their children attend regularly.

A LITERARY AND MUSICAL ENTERTAINMENT for the benefit of Mrs. R. T. Olmstead, is to take place at Social Hall, 39 Fourth St., near Market, to-morrow (Sunday) evening at 7½ o'clock. Mrs. Olmstead, who is a good reader, will herself take part in the exercises. There will be vocal and instrumental music, and other attractive features; but the best thing about the entertainment is that it is given to aid a widow who is endeavoring to support her family by honest work. Being in ill health she has an unusually difficult task to perform, and those who have plenty should esteem it a privilege to aid her. The tickets are only twenty-five cents.

INSTRUCTIVE READING.

The long winter evenings are coming, and our young folks (and old folks too) should endeavor to utilize them by reading useful works. Some books may be skimmed hastily; an adept can get the cream out of one in a few hours, but a really valuable work must be studied, and the best way to do it is to take notes as you read, and then compare views with a friend, or a number of friends, pursuing the same course of study.

Two weeks ago we received from Santa Cruz an order for five copies of "Buckle's History of Civilization." Good for Santa Cruz! We would now be pleased to fill orders from other towns for five copies of Motley's "Rise of the Dutch Republic," Gibbon's "Roman Empire," Guizot's "History of Civilization," Draper's "Intellectual Development of Europe," or "Prescott's Conquest of Mexico." Reading clubs are of little use, because so little can be accomplished at each sitting; but where each member owns the work to be studied, and the weekly meetings are for the purpose of comparing notes and for discussion, a vast deal can be gained. Americans are great readers of newspapers, and much information can be acquired in this way; but without other and deeper study, the habit of desultory reading leaves the mind undisciplined and poorly furnished. There should be first a basis of solid information, as a foundation on which to build. Miscellaneous reading is much more satisfactory to one who has acquired the information and the mental discipline which alone enables us to sift the grain from the chaff.

As Spiritualists we are too much inclined to rest comfortably in our knowledge of the future life. What if the orthodox hell is a fiction of the savage mind, and as Emerson puts it, "The universe exists to beneficent ends." That is no reason why we should neglect the cultivation of the intellect—the higher mental faculties; and Spiritualists, above all others, should appreciate the value of culture, knowing as we do that it is not for this life alone. Death does not destroy the mind; it but transfers us to a new field of labor. That woman was not a Spiritualist who, when a young man of culture died, said to his elder sister, who had cared for him, "What a pity you spent so much money on his education!" She evidently thought he would be no better off "loafing round the throne," than he would had he never read a book, never studied Nature's laws. She was orthodox, and could not see that the soul is what we make it. But even for this life, it "pays" to make the most we can of ourselves. We get more out of life, and have sources of enjoyment unknown to those who are content to live a merely vegetable existence. Our power to aid others is also vastly increased by the cultivation of our own minds. It is culture, sustained by enthusiasm and sympathy, that enables us to lead the way for others. To be a power in society the intellect must be disciplined by application, and enriched by a knowledge of the past as well as of the discoveries of to-day. The means to secure this are within the ability of every young man and woman who has the ambition to seek it.

THE BEGINNING OF THE END.

Prophets, and pretended prophets, may rave about the visions of Daniel, and of John in the Book of Revelations. They may tell us of the overthrow of kingdoms, and the coming of the fifth or final monarchy, under the Messiah, which is to be a great Christian millennium; but all their visions are vain, idle and without definite meaning. It is not by the setting up or overthrowing of kings, that the great history of human progress is either governed or indicated. The mutations of kingdoms are only the incidents of the drama, and not the drama itself.

Man comes into the world in entire ignorance of his surroundings. He knows comparatively nothing of the earth, the heavens, the beautiful herbage, the qualities of animated nature, or of his duties and obligations to his own species. Whatever may be said to the contrary, however much some men may boast of the teachings of pretended revelation, it is certain to the most casual observer that the great creating power of the universe has left man to perfect himself in knowledge by the diligent exercise of the perceptive and intellectual faculties bestowed upon him. We have no real knowledge to-day, but what has come to us from this source. Men in all ages have professed to teach us from inspiration, but their teachings have been corrected, or entirely swept away, by the more perfect results of human observation. In the infancy of science, visions and dreams and romance took the place of real information. The rude and overbearing became chiefs and kings, and called their government justice. The cunning and intolerant became priests, and claimed that their mere surmises were of God, and to be revered forever. Charmers and empirics called themselves physicians, and claimed a monopoly of the healing art. Travelers were romancists, and their stories read more like the tales of Sinbad the Sailor than any sober statement of facts. The heavens were studied only by astrologists with a view to purposes with which the stars have no connection whatever. All was dark and shadowy. The king exerted all his influence against a knowledge of political justice, because it would terminate his power; the priest would have no improvement in religious thought, for it would abolish his office; and the common mind knelt down, bowed before the king, worshiped the priest, hired the charlatan doctor, believed the silly astrologer, and swallowed every monstrous falsehood of the traveled romancist.

Can we wonder—knowing as we do that knowledge is peace and happiness and harmony, while ignorance is discord, war and misery—can we wonder that mankind have been afflicted with every imaginable calamity? They have been misled, and are therefor miserable. Lead them aright and happiness is the sure result. The millennium will come whenever knowledge shall have displaced all this ignorance, and not before. You who would perpetuate these ancient errors, and turn the attention of mankind from solid wholesome truth, are deferring that happy time. The science of political justice will dethrone the king. A knowledge of true religion, that God is the kind father of all, and no respecter of persons, will unrobe the priest. A clear insight into nature and her laws, will banish the quack and empirist, and raise all men and women into competent judges of their own nature, and the requirements of their own being. In the transition state, kings have divided mankind into nations, and taught them war and hatred of each other. Priests have divided them into religious sects, with still more diabolical animosity. But science now comes to the rescue, and teaches the real law of love and charity and forbearance. It tells us that all men and women are formed to be what they are by the natural influences surrounding their birth and education. It teaches, as a consequence, the duty and the reasonableness of charity and forbearance. It opens the way to an endless progress in knowledge, by announcing the right of every mind to think freely for itself. It stimulates self culture in all, as the broadest path to human improvement; and it looks with confidence to the end, the millennium, as the legitimate fruit of universal knowledge. Its means are quiet instruction, discussion, reflection. It contemplates no war, no destruction of life or property. It will vote kings out of their thrones, or laugh their pretensions into insignificance. It will quietly enlighten the priest, and change the church into the temple of science.

Its millennium will be a republic of equal citizens with just laws, a wise distribution of wealth and industry, and the largest liberty consistent with order and progress. It will not be a monarchy, it will not be established by war, it will crush none, but elevate all into the position of free and enlightened men and women. It will not be Israel restored, as our second adventists imagine. It will have nothing in common with Israel, either past or present. It will neither understand nor recognize that the great God of the universe selected such a rude and barbarous people as his peculiar care. It will have no privileged hereditary priests, no supremacy of man over woman, no bloody sacrifices, and no cruel wars. It will not pretend that knowledge is sent to the Jew first and then to the Gentile. On the contrary, its great principle will be that all men should be brothers, the children alike of one great Father.

An indignant subscriber stops his paper because we report the lectures of Miss Jennie Leys on the Social Question. We report them as a matter of news, and generally do so without comment, not because we fear to express our opinion, but because the question is many-sided, and to treat it fully would require a great deal of space. It is, moreover, one which people must think out for themselves. We publish a Free Thought journal, and readers must expect to find in it views which they do not approve. Those who refuse to read any but the sentiments they already accept are not in a way to advance. We print much that we do not believe in, and Liberalists should be willing to allow this freedom.

Truth is a Greatheart who may well be trusted to lead us right, and the less we give way to fear the more we are likely to come to truth.

MISS JENNIE LEYS' EXPERIENCE.

Miss Jennie Leys, on Sunday evening, told her own story, quite an interesting one, though aside from her physical suffering, not as full of bitter experiences as those of many of the women who listened to her. Even her married life, unsatisfactory as it was, cannot compare in its brief misery, with the years of anguish endured by many a wife and mother who has no story to tell. She commenced by describing the manner in which Sunday was kept by her family, who were Scotch Presbyterians of the strictest order. She learned to dread the return of the Sabbath day, and said to herself when a mere child, that she would never be a Christian. Later in life, however, she did become a Christian, and joined the Baptist church. Her early education was somewhat deficient, but she had a taste for music, and at sixteen years of age, being obliged to leave the harsh climate of Massachusetts, on account of ill health, she accepted a situation as teacher of music and drawing in an Episcopal Seminary. Here it is probable, though she did not say so, she became acquainted with the man she afterward married. In hopes of restoring her shattered health, she went West, supporting herself by giving lessons in music. Here [where? the "West" is wide] she first saw a table move by spirit power, and was herself "influenced," much to her surprise and indignation. She then declared she would never "sit" at a table again. She returned to Boston, and entered the service of the Home Missionary Society, as a visitor of the sick and destitute, an employment always congenial to her feelings. Here she first alluded to the "young man" whom she met once a month, and who by persuasion induced her to consent to marry him. He was a professor of religion, a member of the Episcopal Church, and she loved him; but a "voice" told her "It must not be." She broke the engagement in obedience to her intuitions, but was over-persuaded. This occurred several times, and at last, through fear that he would, as he said, be ruined if she did not marry him, she finally did so. She was again warned by her inward monitor, but did not heed. She married him, and the result was that in three months he deserted her for another with whom he had been intimate prior to his marriage. He returned and again deserted. The third time, after two years and one month of married life, she obtained a divorce. Her only child lived but a few months, inheriting disease (consumption) from her. She, herself, soon after went home to die. She had many physicians, but could obtain no help, and was about to go to Minnesota in hopes of relief, when she was advised to try another doctor. She declined to do so, but as she was packing her clothing for the journey, she heard distinctly pronounced the words, "If you go west without seeing that doctor, you shall always be haunted." This was the first clearly spiritual experience she had ever had, though she has since learned that her habit of sleep-walking, when a child, was under direction of her spirit guide, who has always been with her. During sleep, her own spirit visited the home where it lived when in a former state of existence, and her body was taken possession of by spirits for the purpose of giving it vitality, and preparing her for the work she was destined to perform.

Being repeatedly warned by the voice, threatening to haunt her, she finally visited the physician. He was a clairvoyant, and magnetic healer. He helped her, and while under treatment she became "developed" as a speaking medium. She stated that she has never received instruction in elocution, and made no preparation for her first appearance before the public. Her guides, however, have, for years, been fitting her for the work in which she is now engaged. This was the most interesting portion of her experience, but we cannot give it in detail. She became controlled to speak before she knew anything about Spiritualists or Spiritualism. She resisted the influence long, but finally became reconciled, and commenced speaking in Chelsea, Mass., in obedience to the "voice," which kept saying to her, "You must speak." This was about two years ago. Sometime after this she took another step, also in obedience to the command of the spirit. She gave up all hopes of ever having a home, and devoted herself to the service of the spirit in a path she saw marked out for her to walk. She spoke for social freedom, thereby still further alienating herself from family and friends. She continued to do so in obedience to her ideas of duty. She has one more step to take, when her spirit guide will, through her aid, be enabled to materialize, and will himself speak directly to the people.

FRIENDS OF PROGRESS.

Last week's paper contained extracts from essays and remarks made in Liberty Circle, No. 1, U. O. F. P., during which a member made some facetious reflections on the President of the Circle, a lady. At the last meeting she returned the compliment, and added:

It should, however, be a warning to others similarly situated with himself, for as surely as darkness follows night, (Knight,) so surely is the declaration of the Bible true, which reads, "And the Lord God said it is not good that the man should be alone." This law, which applies to him individually, also applies to nations. I believe if this young man Samuel, spoken of in our last meeting, could be induced to look with favor upon the women of his own country, if he would allow them to do a little of the national housekeeping, the hostile relations that now exist would subside, and affairs would soon assume a more friendly aspect. Who has ever known an old bachelor to keep his house neat and tidy without the help of woman? It can't be done! It is not in his nature to do it. "Uncle Sam" is out of his "sphere." He is trying to keep house and at the same time attend to the outdoor work. He permits those of his own sex to come into the nation's sanctuaries and revel, steal, destroy and carry off her treasures; and keeps his door shut against the noble and true women of his own country. He needs the regenerating influence of such as Mrs. Stanton, and hosts of others, to cleanse and purify his domestic relations, while he attends to the work which properly belongs to him. When will he learn this all important lesson?

Rev. Mr. Platt, of Grace church, says "the carnal heart is as much as ever the enemy of God."

BEGIN AT THE ROOT.

On Sunday afternoon, October 18th, Miss Jennie Leys, inspirational medium, gave one of her best lectures on "The Angel Law for the redemption of the Human Race," or "The way to regain the Lost Paradise." She said: Freedom for woman in and out of marriage; having none to make her afraid in her own special realm—the divine one of motherhood—is an imperative necessity. From the prostitution of marriage to lust, has come forth natures which, lustful from birth, could never reach a higher position till these inhuman tendencies are remanded to their true place by suffering and trial, through which alone the soul can become conqueror of the lower nature. The dark shapes of crime and lust which we meet on every hand are the fruit of the present marriage. Men and women come together discordant in their nature, diseased in spirit and body, and then say, "What God has joined together let not man put asunder." It is a libel upon Deity! It is thought by very many that prostitution is a necessity for the protection of wives and daughters. If true, what a terrible blot upon humanity and its present civilization. Woman should have the right and power to refuse the creative act, when undesired, and to repeat it only under such conditions as would produce angels and not demons. Chastity in Freedom is the law.

The speaker desired it to be understood that the same law that would deprive a woman of her name, should restore it. A few dollars only are required to unite in bonds, but the sum must be multiplied many times to dissolve them. Divorce should be as easy as marriage. She stated that these doctrines did not favor or inculcate impurity, but, on the contrary, a higher and holier chastity than earth has ever known. Till men and women can be freed in this way, and made co-equals in the varied departments of life, the world cannot be saved from sin, sorrow, disease and death. Souls must be free to rise higher, and by exercise of this right, woman, in the light and glory of the coming time, will lead the world back to the lost Eden—the Eden of love and truth, which existed in the true monogamic relation, but which claims no kinship with law. The lecture closed with a prophetic picture of the coming glories for humanity, when development and experience prepare the human race for their reception.

One of our city editors has discovered that nearly four hundred thousand women in this country are farm laborers, while over three hundred thousand are engaged in factories. This he regards as a fearful state of affairs, and in his innocence he wonders why all born American girls do not become domestic servants in our kitchens. Like other stereotyped preachers of his sex, housework is the panacea he holds out to women for all the ills they suffer. This text has been preached from so often, nothing new can be said on the subject. And the fact that American girls do not throng the intelligence offices, seeking situations as cooks, chambermaids, nurses, and scrub girls, show that they pay little attention to those false prophets who have so much to say about the comforts and desirableness of housework.—Golden Age.

A GIRL WHO SEES WITH HER EYES BANDAGED.

In Kinsman, Trumbull county, Ohio, there is a girl ten years old whose elder sister was attacked with inflammation of the eyes, and became temporarily blind. The little girl was very watchful of her sister during the illness, and washed and bandaged her eyes for her, with an uncommon show of sisterly affection. The little girl seemed to be in the closest sympathy with the older one, and was eyes and everything else to her until she recovered her sight. Then the little girl herself was stricken blind by the same disease. Her eyes were bandaged to exclude the light. She was in total darkness. Her parents observed that she could walk about the house, and avoid coming in collision with people and things as well as ever. She said she seemed to see her sister and parents as clearly as ever, and could point them out while they were sitting silently in the room at a distance from her. She seemed to see the sunshine, and the clouds, and the green fields, and the roses in the garden. She seemed to see the dark when it came, and the moon and the stars. Her people bought her a new book, which she had never seen. She took it in her hands, turned it right side up, pointed to the pictures, described them accurately, and in a little while began to read, with her eyes in total darkness. Many witnessed the strange occurrence with amazement. In three or four weeks the little girl was perfectly restored to her outward sight; at least it is supposed so, for her eyes to all appearance are bright and well. But she retains her faculty of seeing with her eyes bandaged as well as with them free. The Ohio paper, from which these facts are taken, says, the doctors are looking into this case of second sight, but there is no record of anything like it in their books, and they regard it as a new physiological or psychological phenomenon.

MARRIAGES BETWEEN BLACKS AND WHITES have for years been as common as any other matters of course in the East and West Indies. In the northern part of the United States they have always been regarded with abhorrence even when they have not been prohibited by statute. In the South, when slavery existed, it was impossible for such unions to be other than rare. But now the New Orleans Times tells us that "miscegenation is occurring more frequently." The same journal then relates a recent instance: Before the war, a family named Morgan, well-to-do, and living on Bayou Jesse, owned a young negro, an intelligent and trusted and favorite slave. Upon the death of the father, the slave, a large, muscular fellow, and very black, became the factotum of the family, and managed the estate successfully. Morgan also left a daughter, Miss Mary, now twenty-one years old, "not provokingly beautiful nor positively ugly," but "the possessor of a strong will," and "with a supreme indifference for the opinions of all the world outside herself." She is said "to have admired the dash and grace with which the negro transacted business." Won by this practical ability, the maiden with the strong will concluded to marry the black overseer, and has married him, there being nothing in the statute to prohibit the union. Perhaps, after all, the only remarkable thing about this is, that nobody was actuated or led by passionate prejudice into lynching the dark-colored husband. A few years ago they would have cut him into an infinite number of little pieces and flung them into the Grand Lake.

HARRY LARKYNS.

When the body of Harry Larkyns was about to be deposited in the vault, at the cemetery, Harry Edwards, by request, paid a brief tribute to his memory, of which the following is the close:

We who knew him best, knew well the struggle of his life: the torments he endured, the wearying conflict of his one poor heart against a world of selfish, pitiless pride; a pride so pitiless that a single tone of manly friendship or of womanly sympathy came to him like an echo of the voices which he heard in childhood; voices which he longed again, but which he resolved never more to hear until the thorny path which man's nature had placed before him had been cleared by the energy of his own endeavor, and he could stand proudly before those loved ones of an earlier time, and say, "I bring you back the honor you bestowed upon me, unstained as when it left your hands, and claim in common justice to my nature a full oblivion of the past." He was a gentleman in the finest sense of the word. Upon his lips the breath of slander never lisped, and the cruelty of corrupting tongues never found a home; vulgarity of every kind was a perfect stranger to his soul, and in the retrospect of his own sorrows he knew how to find excuses for the follies of his fellow men and cover with the mantle of charity those errors which the world too often blackens with the name of crime. A soldier by profession, distinguished upon the battle field, the grandest and most heroic struggles of his life were the hand-to-hand conflicts which he waged against those who reviled him here, and who were far beneath him in every point of manliness and truth and honor. And let those detractors know, now that he is dead, that no mother's tender hand ever smoothed his head; no father's gentle voice ever offered him counsel. Those natural protectors and advisers were snatched from him at so early an age that his memory of them was but a faded recollection. Deprived of their care and protection, he had to fight the battle of his life alone. How nobly he struggled, now grandly he toiled, we, who knew his sacrificing heroism, can testify; and the number of those who loved and honored him, who are to-day gathered in the depth of sorrow around his poor remains, will be the best evidence of the affection he inspired, and the regrets at his unhappy death which are now breathed above his tomb.

And now, gentle and loving friend and brother, farewell! The benison of an eternal rest has fallen upon your soul! It is too much to hope that in your home of peaceful calm, your spirit now hears the words of the friend who loved you well, and still more the unspoken sorrow of those who stand around your bier, and that their love and regard may testify to you how bitter is their sorrow at their untimely loss, and how deep is the affection with which they will cherish your memory in the years which are yet to come?

The lecturer or preacher who is not independent of congregations and societies is a slave to them. A paper which is dependent upon its subscribers for existence is apt to be cowardly. A lecturer who looks to his hearers for financial support is liable to degenerate to sycophancy. There are a few ministers, editors and lecturers who will at all hazards express their sentiments freely, though threatened with expulsion from their vocations. They usually pay the penalty for their plain speaking—pay it as surely as did Harvey or Socrates. They eke out a bare livelihood while engaged in the promulgation of unpopular "views," whereas the same talent and zeal in a popular field would win distinction and luxury.—W. F. Jamieson.

J. L. YORK.—We learn by means of a private letter from friend W. J. Sweasey, of Eureka, that Mr. York has met with great success in Humboldt county. Mr. Sweasey says: "Each audience is larger than the previous one. He went to Arcata, where no other Liberal speaker, not even Professor Fowler, could get an audience. He lectured there four times, having first sixty hearers; then seventy; then eighty-five, and on the last evening one hundred and forty. Mr. York has waked up the churches here. One of our ministers on Sunday evening took for his subject, "Pantheism—Is God Being or a Being?" On another occasion he spoke on the "Divine Inspiration and authenticity of the Scriptures." He said we, the Spiritualists, are foes to Temperance, to the Marriage institution, and on the wrong side of Woman Suffrage. As a proof he stated that Mr. York had spoken against Temperance in his Sunday morning lecture. Mr. York being present, got up, and said the statement was not true. He lectured on Temperance and differed from Local Optionists, and consequently was misrepresented."

SCIENCE AND THEOLOGY.—The divorce which now exists between Theology and Science will continue so long as theologians forget that their duty is to "prove all things and hold fast that which is true." Hitherto they have been holding fast enough, without troubling themselves about inquiry. They have accepted conclusions and clung to them, and condemned all who did not bow before them. Science sweeps away such antiquated superstitions. It will not tolerate a fetish. It will not submit to any ignorant and iron rule. Open-eyed it goes forth into the Universe to ask questions from Nature, and to bring back answers to the world. Not hampered by superstitions, it is ready to accept whatever can be proved to be true. Theology must be ready to follow this example; ready to give up what is erroneous, ready to proclaim what is true. Only thus can she take her place among the Sciences, and only by pre-eminent fidelity to this can she truly become what the greatness of her theme entitles her to be, the Queen of all Sciences.—Sermon of J. C. Street, Belfast.

The following paragraphs are selected from the writings of Prof. Seely, of Cambridge, England:

All cultivation lies in the humanizing and educating power of great works of genius. This is the chief thing for us to aim at. All mere knowledge seems to me of less value.

We want what will make our youth turn to high and liberal pleasures. That they may have some intellectual dignity and some breadth of view; that they may be able to generalize and philosophize; have some worthy aim in life and an ideal, not merely to be swallowed up in the thought of material prosperity—gains.

Forgetfulness of the past leads to carelessness of the future.

If education does not give the key to literature, if it does not put youth in the possession of the inheritance that of right belongs to them, of the labors of all the philosophers, poets and wits of the centuries, it is a failure.

Men dare not think. They go in flocks, and the bogie of fear drives them. What their fathers have thought that also they take as the ultimatum of truth, and they cover their faces when a second figure is shown them.

INTELLIGENT ANTS.

The American Naturalist for September has an article from the pen of Dr. Gideon Lincecum on the famous agricultural ant (Myrmica molefaciens) of Texas. To this gentleman naturalists mainly owe their information concerning this most wonderful insect. Its name implies that it is a farmer, and its wonderful instincts and operations would appear to be perfectly incredible were they not attested by so careful and intelligent an observer. These ants live in communities, which are often very large. Their organization or mode of government would seem to be quite as systematic as that of the honey bee. They not only build cities, but construct roads, and maintain large military forces. When the females come to maturity they couple with the male ant, which last individual immediately dies. The female then flies off to a new location, where she digs a hole in the ground. By and by her wings are troublesome in entering and coming out of the hole, when she deliberately bites them off. She goes down six or seven inches, where she lays a few eggs, from which she rears twenty or thirty workers. She then ceases from labor, and the workers run the colony while she devotes her energies to producing eggs to an almost incalculable extent. After a year or two, when they have increased sufficiently in numbers, they clear away a space often ten feet across, upon which nothing is suffered to grow except a grain-bearing grass, known to science as Aristida stricta. This grass grows luxuriantly and produces a large crop of small, white, flinty grain, which, under the microscope, has very much the appearance of rice. The ants carefully watch and tend this crop, and when it is ripe they harvest it and carry it into their granaries in the ground—chaff and all. Once deposited down stairs the chaff is cleaned away from the grain and carried off to the lee side of the pavement or field. The grain is deposited in dry cells, though long-continued rains will sometimes saturate and damage it. In case it becomes wet and swollen, it is carried out of doors to dry in the sun. If any of it has sprouted, it is rejected. Their season for planting or sowing the seeds of this grass is November. Their harvest comes in June. They go through all the operations of preparing the ground, sowing, cultivating, and harvesting, as regularly and systematically as any farmer could perform them. They sometimes seem to have prisoners of their own species, but whether they compel these unfortunates to work like slaves is not stated. Small black ants sometimes build their houses within the cleared spaces occupied by their agricultural brethren, but they are not disturbed unless they become so numerous as to get in the way. In that case they go to work to enlarge their mound, during which operation the humbler homes of the black ants are covered up and rendered so untenable that their occupants are compelled to abandon them, and so are got rid of. They also construct hard, smooth roads, frequently 300 feet in length. These roads pass through thickets and other vegetation, but are always hard and smooth. They are from two to two and one-half inches wide.

Nature never forgives.

Poverty is the mother of crime.

All matter tends to conscious life.

All that belongs to a soul that soul has.

When we recognize we claim ownership.

Forever we seek recognitions, realizations.

Whatever others think us, that we are to them.

Bad physical conditions produce bad mental conditions.

Our bodily recognitions are few and slow; the spiritual recognitions swift, vast and mighty.

BRIEF EXTRACTS.

What we have planned and purposed and tried to execute—these are the tests; no matter if in the execution we run against walls and barricades every hour.

Whatever draws attention to self, whatever sets men to thinking about themselves and worrying about themselves, has a tendency to beget a morbid, melancholy spirit—to make men self-seeking.

It used to be thought that in a state of barbarism people lived longer than in a state of civilization, but life is really longer in a state of civilization; for civilization improves the quality of life while it adds to its quantity.

The true guide for entering into marriage, is a sound judgment, not a mere blind passion on the part of the man, nor an equally stupid blind affection on the part of the woman. And the sooner this idea takes the place of the miserable folly that is inculcated in our fiction, the better.

Why should all women keep house? What is the use of so many private establishments? Not every wife has a taste or a knack for cooking or housekeeping. Any more than for music or painting. Why turn every married woman into a drudge, when all the drudgery can just as well be done by a few, who want to do it, and will be happy in the work?

D. W. Hull says "one of the great causes of the present defection in society is our system of freebooting our way to an eternal state of happiness without reference to our moral actions. Until we can have a system of religion that will take men more out of this selfishness, we shall need more jails, state prisons and police officers, as our population increases."

Salvation as used in the New Testament meant the world's emancipation from the darkness and sins of heathenism. It has come, in the technical language of theology, to signify deliverance of the soul after death from the penalties due to sin incurred by inheritance or personal transgression. It is the penalty rather than the sin to which the grace of redemption is applied.

Let the man desiring to marry, who does not know love as Miss Landon or Mrs. Hemans depicts, thank God most devoutly that he has escaped that bias to his judgment. Let him then look round upon the women that are the most powerfully attractive to him, choose the one of these whom his reason most approves, and marry her if he can. If he chooses well, the more desiderated love will come.

All women ought to take a supreme interest in keeping house well if they keep house at all, and in making home beautiful, because home is the central and best institution of the world, the nursery of the race, the Eden which woman is to make a heaven. The better, the pleasanter, the more attractive, the happier they make home, the more will they contribute to the force of goodness in the world.

There is no barrier against evil, no breakwater against vice, no school of virtue, no fountain of pure and holy joy on earth that equals a truly good and happy home. The woman who makes such a home, and fills it with order and beauty, love and peace, demonstrates her fitness for the duties and obligations of citizenship; and only those who are blinded with passion, or blindfolded with prejudice, can fail to see that the genius which sets a house in perfect order is related to that which chisels a shape of immortal beauty in marble, or paints it on canvas, or carves it in the order of a commonwealth.

FAUST—A TRAGEDY.

FROM A MANUSCRIPT TRANSLATION BY DON FULANO

[NIGHT.—In an arched, narrow, gothic room, Faust sitting on his chair, at his desk. He grasps the book and pronounces the name of the spirit mysteriously; red flames shoot up. The spirit appears in the flame.]

SPIRIT—Who calls me?

FAUST—Frightful face!

SPIRIT—Dost dare me?

With force and power thou hast worked upon me!
Drawn vigorously my sphere upon thee!
And now?

FAUST—Avant! I cannot bear thee!

SPIRIT—Nay! breathlessly thou call'st me here—

Would'st hear my voice—would'st see my face,
Thy spirit's prayer hath wrought thee grace;
Here am I! Whence that coward fear
Which now unmans the demi-god? Where's fled
The soul's high call? That breast which bore and fed
A world begotten in itself—which thrilled
With joy, to fill the place we spirits filled?
Where art thou, Faust, whose voice boomed in mine ear—
Who pressed thyself upon me void of fear?
Is this thee, whom the lightning of my breath
Hath blasted to an image of pale death?
Thou trembling, crouching, wriggling, wretched worm!

FAUST—Shall I, flame phantom, yield to thee? Oh, no!

I am the same—am Faust—thine equal too!

SPIRIT—In life's rough waves, in deeds' fierce storm,

Now up, now down I wave,

Now there, now here I whirl;

Birth and the grave's

Eternal billows curl;

A shifting strife;

A glowing life;

Thus pass I my hours at the whistling loom, where

I weave living clothes for the god-head to wear!

FAUST—Thou, who the whole world hoverest round,

Most active sprite, how near I feel to thee!

SPIRIT—Thou'rt like the sprite, whose nature thou can'st sound,

Not me.

[Disappears.]

FAUST [Startled] Not thee! whom then? I, image of the God-head,

Not equal e'en to thee?

[A knock at the door.]

'Death! I know—my secretary's knock!

My sweetest pleasure now is dashed away!

To think that such a fulness of the ray

Of sacred vision this dry prig should blot!

[Enter Wagner in dressing gown and nightcap, a lamp in his hand; Faust turns round impatiently.]

WAGNER—Your pardon, sir, I heard you just declaiming;

You read some old Greek drama I'll engage.

Since I this art, I fear, am somewhat lame in,

I entered, for to-day 'tis all the rage;

I've often heard it said—"tis true of each—

That a comedian might a parson teach."

FAUST—Aye, if your parson plays comedian too,

As in these days we see most parsons do.

WAGNER—Ah! when a man's so caged in his museum,

And sees folk only as we savans see 'em,

Scarce through a spyglass, far off, as I view them,

How can one lead them by mere elocution?

FAUST—Unless you feel't yourself, you'll ne'er effect it.

Unless the power from your own soul outsteams,

And with the glow of genius unexpected

Lights up all hearts that feel it with its beams,

Let you thus ever, glued together,

Hashing ragouts from others' dinner,

Then blow the miserable glimmer

Out of your paltry ash-heap. You may gather

Honors with babies and with baboons brothers,

If you're ambitious such base ways to own,

Yet never will you reach the hearts of others,

Until the power goes straight out from your own.*

WAGNER—Yet 'tis delivery that makes the speaker;

Well do I feel that I am far too weak here.

FAUST—Oh! seek true fame without pretence,

Join not those loud, gong-beating fools.

Good square souled thought and common sense

Require no rhetoric from the schools.

When in good earnest to say aught

D'you find that words have to be sought?

Pah! those fine speeches art from tinsel weaves,

Your grilled kabobs cooked up to tempt mankind,

Are just as sapless as the foggy wind

That whistles drearily through dry autumn leaves.

WAGNER—Oh, God! the art is long,

And short is one's poor life;

Too oft amidst my literary strife

I fear for heart and head, lest both go wrong.

So hard it seems to reach those steps alone,

By which one mounts to the true source of art,

That a poor devil scarce hath half way gone,

When death, cold spectre, calls him to depart.

FAUST—Books! books! are they think you the spring's pure source,

One draught from which this thirst forever slakes?

Regeneration never can be yours

Until from your own soul the fountain breaks!

WAGNER—Yet, pardon me, it is a vast delight

At spirits of past days to take a sight;

To see how once of old some sage hath solved a doubt,

And how much further we have thought it out!

FAUST—Much further! To you stars of course!

My friend, times past to us are worse

Than a book sealed with seven mighty seals:

What you the Spirit of the Time would call,

Is but that very spirit, after all,

Of men in whom the Time itself reveals.
And when all's done, a wretched farce it is!
A single glance would make one run therefrom—
A rubbish bin, a lumber room, I wis;
A puppet play, like Punch, with pipes and drum,
Graced with rare saws, pragmatical tit bits,
Which well besem the squeaking marionettes.

WAGNER—At least the world, and man, his heart and soul,
We all would like to recognise their natures.

FAUST—To recognize! ah! yes, but not the whole;
Nor photograph that ugly bastard's features.
Those very few, who aught thereof have learnt,
Who've foolishly unveiled their bursting breast,
Exposed their aspirations to the rest,
And to the rabble all they saw confessed,
Mankind hath always crucified or burnt.
Your pardon, friend, 'tis now well nigh the morn;
You must excuse me till some other day.

WAGNER—Cheerfully had I gone on until fall dawn,
Chatting thus learnedly till morning grey.
To-morrow perhaps—you know 'tis Easter Sunday—
You'll give up to my queries just this one day?
With eagerness to study I've applied, hence,
Tho' I know much, fain would I sift all science.

[Exit.]

* In this passage I first had written

Whether

Or no your own palled palate smothers

Its nauses—to apes and babes alone

A lion—you'll ne'er reach the hearts of others

Until the power goes straight out from your own.

This I like better than the text, which is, however, a closer translation.

UNSCATHED.

We shall not die until our work be done;
We shall not cease until our course be run;
We shall not fade or fail
Where heart and faith prevail,
Or aught is to be won
Beneath the constant sun.

* * * * *
Fear not to cast the whole of life herein,
Uplifting sadness, and withstanding sin;
For thou immortal art
Till thou hast done thy part;
Beyond the darkness and the din
Then shalt thou entrance win.

Special Notices.

DR. BANCROFT'S treatment for Dyspepsia and General Debility has benefited me more than all the medicine I have used for many years.

C. A. BACON, 519 Sycamore street, Milwaukee.

Dr. Bancroft's office is 204 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

For the very best Photographs go to Bradley & Rulofson's Gallery, with an elevator, 429 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Those suffering from that most annoying of the minor miseries of human life—a cold in the head—or from catarrh in any form, should try Dr. Evers' Diamond Catarrh Remedy. Just try it—that's all. Sold at this office, and by all druggists.

Send Austin Kent one dollar for his pamphlets on Free Love and Marriage, etc. He has been seventeen years physically helpless, confined to his bed and chair, is poor and needs the money. He sends four or five well-written essays for one dollar. His address is AUSTIN KENT, Stockholm, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., Box 44.

Farmers, do you know that the Babcock Fire Extinguisher is a sure exterminator of gophers, squirrels, etc., and that it will effectually kill insects on fruit trees, with little trouble and scarcely any expense. One charge of the machine will exterminate all the squirrels in a hundred-acre field. A new machine, in perfect order, and with six charges, can be purchased at this office. Address COMMON SENSE, 236 Montgomery street.

"THE WORD" is a Monthly Journal of Reform—Regarding the subjection of Labor, of Woman, and the Prevalence of War as unnatural evils, induced by false claims to obedience and service; favors the Abolition of the State, of Property in Land and its kindred resources, of speculative income and all other means whereby Intrusion acquires wealth and power at the expense of Useful People. Since labor is the source of wealth, and creates all values equitably vendible, the Word (not by restrictive methods, but through Liberation and Reciprocity) seeks the extinction of interest, rent, dividends and profit, except as they represent work done; the abolition of railway, telegraphic, banking, trades union and other corporations charging more than actual cost for values furnished, and the repudiation of all so-called debts the principal whereof has been paid in the form of interest.

E. H. HAYWOOD, Editor.

Terms—75c. annually in advance.

Address THE WORD, Princetown, Mass.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, NO. 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

COMMON SENSE can be purchased at the following places in this city: Patton's, 773 Market; Snow's, 319 Kearny; Sharp's, 236 Montgomery, and at this office, 236 Montgomery street, up stairs. Price of single copies, ten cents.

COMMON SENSE.

A Journal of Live Ideas.

Vol. 1.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1874.

No. 25.

Signs of the Times.

It is not denied that illiteracy is on the increase in New England manufacturing towns. It is said that one-fourth of the population of Fall River are unable to read and write. The rapacious greed for wealth on the part of employers is the curse of the age.

Dr Bachmaier, of Munich, who is endeavoring to construct a universal written language, has given numerical equivalents to about five thousand words. All the people who use it must talk in figures. No one except the inventor believes the system to be of any practical value.

Rev. W. H. Murray, of Park street church, Boston, has resigned because the society declined to engage an assistant to do the pastoral work. Mr. Murray believes that his business is to preach, and to enable him to do that properly, he must not have his time frittered away in visits to the church members.

The latest phase of mediumship is the production of pictures of faces by shaving pencil lead on white paper, and putting the paper in a box. In a few moments the dust is used to form well defined faces. A picture thus produced, as claimed, contains fifteen or twenty well defined faces, on a piece of pasteboard a half inch wide by an inch long. The medium is a Mrs. Blanchard of New Ulm, Minnesota.

The trustee of Jay Cooke & Co. has applied to the Courts to vacate a contract made with Bowen, the publisher of the N. Y. Independent, by which that high toned religious journal was to commend the stock and bonds of the road and Bowen was to receive $60,000 in stock and $460,000 in bonds. The contract has been in existence several years, and many confiding widows, trustees of orphans, clergymen, etc., have been induced to invest in an enterprise which, from the first, was a very unsafe one.

Fine and imprisonment is meted out in New York State to all who practice medicine without the authority of a medical school or society, consequently Magnetic Physicians, who give no medicine, and who instruct their patients to obey the laws of health, and thus avoid disease, are condemned, while the orthodox practitioners, who encourage the people to go on disobeying the laws of life, assuring them of speedy relief by the use of drugs, are given the entire control of medical practise! If there is a greater absurdity that can be put in the form of law, we cannot imagine what it is, unless possibly it would be worse to put the education of the people wholly into the hands of the clergy, as is done in priest-ridden and yet infidel France.

India rubber horse shoes for city wear are a great success. Horses with cracked hoofs are soon cured by their use.

There are now about 800 co-operative associations in successful operation in Great Britain. Most of them are stores.

Victoria Woodhull is on a lecturing tour through the New England states. She is a worker. She recently lectured in Portland, Me., to a large audience.

After the first of January no child under nine years of age can be employed in the mines, shops, and factories of Great Britain, while those from ten to fifteen are to work on half time only.

Mr. Proctor, the astronomer, is urging the adoption in England, of our system of the publication daily of predictions of the weather, and says that in his lecturing tour in this country last year he only knew these predictions to be wrong twice in three months.

Mr. Henry Watterson says that every fashionable woman in Paris hangs to her belt an alms-bag, a fan, a cardcase, a pocket-book, an umbrella, a turnip-watch, a pincushion, some ivory tablets and a little mirror. And the sons of women like these are expected to knock the nonsense out of Germany some day.

How it is that a comparatively few men have managed to possess themselves of a large share of the wealth of the world, is a problem that workers are beginning to study. They see that the law is somehow at the bottom of it, but the remedy for the evil is not yet clear. It requires time to do away with any established wrong—time or a revolution.

A prominent Boston clergyman recently said: "The pendulum of toleration has swung to the wall—it is time to look for a rebound!" And, says the Banner of Light, such a rebound toward arbitrary authority in all the concerns of life and government the bigots are seeking to bring to pass, pausing in their labors in any given direction only when it becomes evident to them that it were better to wait for awhile till the chain in other points is fastened more securely upon the people.

One of the best signs of the times is the establishment by law in New York of a Court of Arbitration, consisting of a judge and two associates. The judge holds his position by appointment from the Governor, while the associates are appointed for each case—one by each party to the suit. The decisions of the Court are final, unless there shall appear evidence of collusion between the judges. Its decrees have the full effect of a judgment from the Supreme Court; but its jurisdiction extends only over those who agree to abide by its decisions.

For Common Sense.

RELATIONSHIP OF THE SEXES.

BY MRS. C. F. WINDLE.

"Unassailed
Therefore, she walks through the great city, veiled
In Virtue's adamant eloquence,
'Gainst scorn, and death, and pain, thus trebly mailed,
And blending, in the smiles of that defence,
The serpent and the dove—Wisdom and Innocence.

In squalid huts, and in her palaces,
Sits Lust alone, while o'er the land is borne
Her voice, whose awful sweetness doth repress
All evil; and her foes, relenting, turn,
And cast the vote of love in hope's abandoned urn."—SHELLEY.

My view of the "Woman's Rights" question is altogether different from that of any woman whom I have ever met. I cannot join in the movement, because its claims and demands for woman are founded in an entire misconception of her qualities; but I must nevertheless regard it, though in this sense wrong, as a necessary step in the abstract, to which human advancement has now arrived. The true woman, standing aloof from its folly, may yet catch from it, I believe, glimpses of a great mission to which the time is calling her: as some, indeed, are already beginning to do, in ways which I shall indicate before closing this article. I do not even take a middle ground, but my conception of the whole matter is, it seems to me, far in advance both of the question as it now stands, and of all the notions in regard to the relationship of the sexes—even when this has been considered in its most exalted bearings—that have hitherto been presented. Earnestly do I wish, for the benefit of society, that a book could be written to introduce and illustrate this view, in all the truthfulness and importance with which it has fastened itself upon my own mind; for I feel sure that it must be the scripture of prophecy for humanity. I am myself not equal to the task; I can but suggest it. The theme is immeasurably exalted beyond my poor abilities; neither would I be willing to wear long enough the corrugated brows and abstracted manner which the composition of so abstruse a work must impose—since I hold rigidly to the creed, that it is only the Margaret Fullers, the Elizabeth Brownings, and the George Eliots, who have that high commission of authorship that accords to woman the privilege of permitting the cultivation of letters to take precedence of that of the feminine graces, to be cherished for man's dear sake. Doubtless it is permitted to the rest of us to do a little scribbling—for the purpose, mayhap, of saying an opportune word; or, alas! of earning possibly a little "lucre;" or, perchance, for the pastime of an hour. Those whom the spirit moves may even produce a volume of poems, or a novelette, and if it be but womanly, it will bear a message to some heart; or, supposing that it should possibly be womanish, and a tissue of platitudes, provided it do not deviate from woman's faithful intuitions, the imputation will not, after all, be the most dreadful one. But this is in some sort a digression.

Undoubtedly, the mutual relationship of the sexes is the paramount fact of human life; and therefore a proper recognition of its full importance, and its consequent true adjustment, cannot but constitute the determining conditions on which the aggregate of progress must depend. At this crisis, it seems that nothing should be clearer to the thinking observer, than that the present age, by the law of advancement, has brought woman to combat face to face with the errors in regard to it that have in all past time prevailed—indicating the arrival at length of the moment when it has become incumbent upon her to take up this important problem. By man's social enactments, which have not provided for her support, she is driven at this day, in extremity, to take her place side by side with him in the industrial pursuits; to be a competitor with him as a sower and reaper in the commercial fields; and, finding him on the ground before her, and possessing, in addition, other advantages of superior strength and capacity, she must per force take on the boldness of desperation in her imperative call to emulate him. She consequently asserts her "equality" and her "rights," jostling and being jostled by him in her struggle for her share of the fruits of the earth; for if she permit the difference of her sex to make her a laggard, he will step in at base advantage, staving her off with a fatal compromise, by which her sexual sanctity is desecrated for both, and she is trailed in the dust. This is the position in which the woman of the age finds herself. There are but the three situations presented to her to select from, of want, wantonness, or the attainments of her "rights." I speak, of course, of the masses, and not of the favored few upon whom fate has smiled propitiously. It is needless to refer to the social evils such a state of things must produce; to the ruin and depravity it has wrought; to the blasted hopes, the blighted lives, the tragic histories it has created. I will not launch my thoughts upon this flood-tide of living wretchedness and despair.

Since the Woman's movement has originated under such imperative circumstances, and is favored by some of the profound philanthopists of the day, I cannot but regard it as the initiatory wave of the most powerful social upheaval the world has ever witnessed; the presage, indeed, of the ultimate revolution in the construction of society, destined, in its glorious results, to transform and beautify the whole face of civilization. The indications are that woman will, ere long, obtain the right of suffrage, and take her place with man in the political arenas, as she has already been compelled to do in the industrial pursuits. If this ever takes place, we shall have for a time the most incongruous spectacle the world has ever witnessed, in the mutual estrangement of beings whose only true life is bound up in one another, and it seems to me that, even then, the women of truly feminine intuitions will still stand aloof. It will be a turning of the divine law of sex into a farce, in punishment of the world's long disregard of its worth and sanctity. Such a condition of society, however, cannot be of long duration.

But there is an indication in the woman's movement for those who may look at it, which looms up, like the star of a new hope for mankind, pointing at length towards a solution of the difficult problem of "the social evil." A deep philosophy is included in these efforts, which does not appear on the surface. Strange to say, and inconsistent as it seems, the present attempt of woman to assimilate herself to man has its origin, not perceived by these reformers, in her keen sense of the difference there is between the two sexes. It is more than all else to escape the evils which the abuse of this difference under man's control of society has created—in placing a social discrepancy between her and himself which reserves to him the privilege of violating its sacredness, to the injury of both—that she now makes this unnatural effort to secure a footing with him. Error though it be, it is to be regarded, however, as the essential step in progress which shall lead to investigations of the respective male and female natures, resulting in the discovery of their complete divergence. And thence may the true relative positions of the sexes for the first time in the world's history be adjusted—as, had man and woman ever stood in their proper relationship, the evil alluded to could never have existed. It is to be remarked, that from the Woman's movement, even now, there have arisen, very generally, discussions concerning the different masculine and feminine characteristics. On every side it is causing the peculiar traits of the male and female natures to be investigated, and either compared or contrasted.

Already, moreover, it has initiated a more unreserved handling of the long ignored topics of the law of sex—that mysterious tie rendering man and woman absolutely necessary to one another for the complete fulfilment of their being. And this also, notwithstanding that the prejudices of society may wince from it, is a necessary step in the course of progress. In order that the true relationship of the sexes may be determined, this magical link must no longer be consigned to a needless oblivion of dishonor, but it must be fairly viewed in the light of truth and holiness. Men are wondering at the strange inspiration which is creating some of the late novels from female pens, of which the heretofore forbidden topics in this range are the theme—not perceiving in it, as I do, the response of those individuals to an imperative call of the age to their sex, in which they have thus attempted to take the initiative. Yet, although woman must venture upon this ground, she cannot be too careful that she do not enter upon it with unwashed or incautious feet. Those to whom I have alluded are, I doubt not, earnest women and true. Having heard the call, they have come forth on their mission, and, in the very spirit of martyrdom, as I firmly believe, have sacrificed their delicacy in doing their work mistakenly, and in a wrong direction. It is not by taking man down again to look in the abysses of degradation, nor by sentimentalizing upon the woes of the victims of a wrong social condition, that the evils resulting from the false mutual basis of the two sexes are ever to be effectually remedied. Man himself sickens at the bare idea of such misdirected efforts, for well he knows that if the purity of the female type be sullied with the taint of those regions of despair, his own hope of salvation is utterly at an end. He must, on the contrary, be lifted up into the heights, for he it is, and not woman, who needs to be redeemed.

The subject of the radical relationship of the sexes is indeed a difficult one for woman to approach—"the trail of the serpent" being "over us all." Hence, for my own part, I have been filled with astonishment at the intense coarseness with which the most seemingly delicate-minded women of the "suffrage" party handle and debase it, not alone in their mode of asserting their "equality" with man, but in the stigma this class of reformers are continually bringing upon him with such zest, of being a monster of sensuality. Nevertheless there is, as I have just intimated, a path of duty for woman, even here; and the truest of the sex, when the time calls her, must not shrink from the performance of the task, though she may feel that if she diverge by so much as a single hair's breadth from her faithful course, she must be precipitated into the bemiring slough. Let her advance, and eternal law, which, after the long ages of darkness, has shined for her upon this slippery track, will guide her trembling footsteps that she does not fall. She shall reach one spot, where, thanks to Nature, she may look man tenderly in the face, and holy enthusiasm and the angel of purity will not let her be afraid. Here at last there shall be a tryst where pledges more divine shall be interchanged than were those which hallowed the primeval Paradise. The frail hand of woman will be laid confidently in the firm palm of man, and her clear voice will be heard in authoritative utterance of heaven-commissioned truth, the accents of which will be as seraphic music. The melodious tones will rise upon the air, until the far future generations shall catch the echo, and the reverberating chorus will be the refrain of restored humanity. And these will be her words:

"For thine own sake, hear me. Heretofore we have been enemies. You have covered me with shame, and I have retaliated, and lured you to your manhood's death.

Lo! now, dearest lover and friend, I come bearing the olive branch of peace. Behold, we are two separate natures, but these two are marvellously blended into one, and we may not enjoy our true life to be thus at variance. Beloved, it is a mighty mystery. But even as the mystery enshrouding the universe clothes it with a majesty inspiring piety and awe, so there is in this mystery of our divided yet united being, a dignity and grandeur whereby we should ever be drawn towards one another in religious love and reverence. Let us holily address ourselves to its contemplation, and it will lead us more and more mutually to wonder and adore. No longer casting it from our view as a thing of doubt or fear, let us together praise it as the boon of our lives. But for its existence were a void. In it, sanctified and blessed to us both, will we, hand in hand,

'Self reverent each, and reverencing each,
Distinct in individualities,
But like each other even as those who love,' seek for all of good, or joy, or hope, the world contains."

So will be inaugurated the Utopian era of the poet's prophetic aspiration:

"Then comes the statelier Eden back to man;
Then reign the world's great bridal, chaste calm
Then springs the crowning race of human kind,
May these things be!"

OLD FRIENDS.—There is something very mournful in meeting old friends after the lapse of years. Life has drifted you so far apart, you have so little now in common, you who once made but one existence, in a manner, and to whom every thing that befel the one was the natural property of the other! Now interests, history, affections, associations, hopes, are all apart, and all different. Children have come whom you do not know; and husbands and wives strange to you, and therefore doubtful, have moulded and influenced the nature which once was in entire harmony with your own, like the concluding notes of a chord or the shadow thrown by the substance. You feel exiled, isolated. You know the old voice, the dear old trick of the hand, the face, the manner of speech; but all this is only the husk—the core is no longer the same as before, and it has gone from you. There is nothing so difficult as to take up again the lapsed threads of an old friendship; nothing so hard as to reconcile the memories of the past with the changed conditions of the present. Almost is it better to let these memories lie undisturbed in the golden halo that surrounds them than have them so rudely displaced, so cruelly destroyed. And yet how eager we all are to meet our old friends again! We do not see the changes which time has made in ourselves, and we ignore them as an expectation in our friends. Only when we are brought face to face with them do we realize where we also must stand, and how heavy the hand which use has made apparently so light.—Golden Age.

Mrs. Buist, an English lady, has written a book on the care of canaries. In it she tells the following story: A hen canary belonging to the author died whilst nesting, and was buried. The surviving mate was removed to another cage; the breeding-cage itself was thoroughly purified, cleansed, and put aside till the following spring. Never afterwards, however, could any bird endure to be in that cage. The little creatures fought and struggled to get out, and, if obliged to remain, they huddled close together and moped and were thoroughly unhappy, refusing to be comforted by any amount of sunshine or dainty food. The experiment was tried of introducing foreign birds, who were not even in the house when the canary died, nor could, by any possibility, have heard of her through other canaries. The result was the same; no bird would live in that cage. The cage was haunted, and the author was obliged to desist from further attempts to coax or force a bird to stay in it.

THE SABBATH.

BY J. W. MACKIE.

When the Sabbath in America will have become an obsolete institution, civilization will be a thing of the past. When the Sabbath in America will have become the property of the priest, freedom will be buried in the ruins of the Republic. It is true, that Nature disclaims a Sabbath. Absolute rest is inconceivable. Nature incessantly labors. So must man. But the need on which the Sabbath rests as a blessing and a necessity to man is something different from that observed in natural operations below man. As a thinking intelligent being, man finds no analogy anywhere to guide him. His only guides are reason and experience. In the present state of society the Sabbath is indispensable as a day of rest for all who labor; a day of re-creation of exhausted energies; a day in which thoughts can be diverted from the ruts in which they have moved during the six days of weary and ill requited toil. And even were the Utopian theories of dreamy philosophers realized in a world where there are neither employers nor employees, masters nor servants, rich nor poor, but all living equitably and equally, still then as an auxiliary to order, the Sabbath would be beneficial as a day devoted to the commingling of thought and feeling. But we are more deeply interested in the Sabbath of to-day than the Sabbath in the far, far distant. It is a day to be protected by the government. Not as a religious holy day, but as a legal holiday. It is claimed by some that this is a Christian government, and as such must enforce the sanctity as well as legality of the Christian Sabbath.

Let it be granted that this is a Christian government, though it is hard to discern the grounds on which such a supposition can rest. The question next to be answered is, Is there a Christian Sabbath? There is a day which Christians have observed since the infancy of their faith. It is one day in seven, but it is not the Sabbath of the Decalogue. This day was a day of privilege, not a day of enforced requirements. It was a day on which Christians met to break bread, to mingle in social communion and sacred friendship, in which their souls united in a common cause, breathing a common inspiration. Coercion in such a Sabbath is impossible. Externally the primitive Christians were Sabbath breakers, else what is the meaning of Paul's words to the Colossians, "Let no man therefore judge you in meat or in drink, or respect of a holiday, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath which was a shadow of things to come." Or to the Romans xiii, 5, 6, 7? Or what did Jesus mean in the words, "Man was not made for the Sabbath, but the Sabbath for man?" The Jewish Sabbath was a day of bondage, of imprisonment. But Jesus and his disciples set at defiance the bolts and bars of Judaism, especially in regard to the Sabbath, to the consternation, disgust and anger of the strict Jewish Sabbatarian.

In no place in the New Testament is there a word as to how the Sabbath should be observed, or that it should be observed, and it is plainly stated that it is not a Christian requirement. The Ebionite Christians kept sacred Saturday and Sunday: Saturday as a day of humiliation because the Lord that day lay dead in the tomb, Sunday as a day of rejoicing, because on that day he was victorious o'er the grave. To consistently enforce the religious observance of the day, our government should be Jewish, not Christian. Imagine the United States groaning under the burden of a strictly observed Jewish Sabbath! New England and Scotland tried it, and failed.

[For Common Sense.]

The Protestant laughs at the Catholic for accepting doctrine on the authority of tradition, yet on a tradition borrowed from the Catholic Church rests the Protestant authority for the observance of Sunday. It was not till the year 321 that the day Sunday became an authorized Christian holiday, when Constantine, the founder of Roman Catholic Christianity, passed an edict enforcing Sunday as a universal holiday, during which all business should be suspended. This carried favor with the Christians, and compromised with the worshippers of the Sun, for Constantine does not name the day, the Lord's day, nor the Sabbath, but the Sun's day. The pagans were already accustomed to the observance of that day as sacred to the Sun, the Father of Lights, in whom there is no variable-ness, neither shadow of turning, and likely hailed it as gladly as did the Christians to worship the Sun of righteousness. In fact, Sunday is more pagan than Christian in its origin. Its very name tells a tale. Popular faith is conservative, and to-day pagan names and customs have survived fifteen centuries of suppression.

The names of the days of the week are yet retained. Jupiter is still honored by the observance of fast days on Thursday.

Even the Decalogue is suspected to be of heathen origin. The Cabalists inform us that the Ten Words have reference to the ten Spheroth, the spheres of heaven.

The three highest being the spheres of the gods, so the first three commands have reference to our duty to God; the planetary spheres our duty to one another.

The following table of houses of the planets may be seen in the British Museum, found in the mummy-case of the Archon of Thebes, in ancient Egypt:

Leo.	Sun.	Moon.	Cancer.
Virgo.	Mercury.		Gemini.
Libra.	Venus.		Taurus.
Scorpio.	Mars.		Aries.
Sagittarius.	Jupit.		Pisces.
Capricorn.	Saturn.		Aquarius.

Acting on this Cabalistic hint, we have the following table of

THE TEN WORDS.

1.	(The Spheres of God)	Being.
2.		Personality.
3.		Name.
4.	Saturn.	Reserve or Rest.
5.	Jupit.	Reverence.
6.	Mars.	Force.
7.	Venus.	Love.
8.	Mercury.	Acquisition.
9.	Sun.	Truth.
10.	Moon.	Sensuality.

It will require little learning or penetration to perceive the application of the above table to the ten commands.

Saturn's day, as the sacred day of the Jews, was natural as worshippers of the Ancient of Days, Chronos, or Abraham. Jupiter has always been symbolical of religious and paternal reverence; every one knows of the martial character of Mars; Venus as the goddess of Love and Chastity; Mercury as the thieving god; the Sun as the symbol of Truth, and the Moon of self-gratification and covetousness.

CHINESE LABOR.

EDITOR COMMON SENSE:—My attention has again been called to your paper by your reply to my letter on the subject of Chinese Labor. You admit that we have a natural right to any portion of "God's footstool," and in the next sentence assert that "while it may be a good thing for the Chinaman to come to America, it may not be the best thing for Americans to encourage his coming." I think this is inconsistent with your Declaration of Independence, which declares that "all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness." I accept the spirit of the above paragraph without comment. I don't know whether it means anything to you. I might quote your Bible (the so-called foundation of your system of morals) on the same subject, if it would have any weight with your readers. You say that if "human sympathy alone is to decide your course in the matter of employing others, that there is no room for argument" on this point. I refer you to the words of St. Paul (Acts 17-26) bearing directly on the question of "flesh and blood," and other matters that your legislators and courts seem dissatisfied with. You also aver that the labor of Chinese is a benefit to the State, as the labor of so many horses—with the difference in favor of the brute.

In my travels through your State I have been painfully reminded of a fact somewhat akin to the above, for while your horses and other cattle, as a general rule, have been carefully housed and fed, "your own flesh and blood," the farm laborers of your country, were, as a rule, without a house to cover them, or a bed to lie on. In fact, your "blanket men," as they are called, are the only cattle in this country whose condition your Christian land holders persistently refuse to ameliorate, and wherever I work as cook on your ranches, I am invariably better treated in all respects than your boasted "flesh and blood" in the harvest field. Perhaps it is because I persistently refuse to overwork myself, or obey stupid orders from your women, whom you admit will not bring forth the "future workers of America," and knowing this fact, what respect can I have for them? Not overworking myself, I can work on steadily without getting drunk—as an excuse for rest—which you admit is the bad habit of your working cattle. But this "improvidence" of your working men is another necessity of your system of civilization, for if your people did not drink their earnings, and otherwise squander them for fashionable "store clothes," the ranks of the labor market would be crowded by these saloon keepers, "waiter girls"—your own flesh and blood—and the innumerable host of small dealers in nic-nacks, who only make a living by constantly fleecing their "own flesh and blood," and periodically going through the court of bankruptcy. I say that if the vices and follies of your laboring masses did not necessitate the existence of these parasites on your body politic, they would be compelled to come down to the ranks of the "blanket men," and thus swell the list of competition, for you must admit that your so-called "middle class" in this country is getting to be a mere name. The people are rapidly forming into two classes, the enormously rich and the frightfully poor. You tell your laborers that their squanderings would, in a few years, get them 160 acres of land. Where can a poor man get this land in your State that he will not be at the mercy of some Christian land grabber with a Spanish title to float on him, as the hawk swoops down on its prey? In this manner many a settler has been forced to resume his place in the Blanket brigade, not having the money to contest a title in your courts of justice! And where there is no possibility of floating titles, your big land grabber hires men from out of the ranks of the laborers themselves, as "fighters," to kill, maim or drive off, as the case may be, any poor devil who dare presume to till a piece of land which he, the landlord, wants for speculation, or to lease to your white slaves; and your laws aid and abet this state of affairs by "swamp land bills," and kindred legislation. But, assuming that there is a fair chance for your frugal laborers to get 160 acres of land, "to have and hold forever in fee simple," is the supply unlimited? Surely not; and when it is all settled, where will you find your "blanket men?" and if you do find them, does it not follow that they must always remain mere laborers, thus creating two classes, land lords and serfs? And will not the latter be mere dependents on the "bounty of their masters?" It is no use saying that such a state of affairs cannot exist in a republican country. It does exist right here, to-day, as far as it can exist with the sparse settlement of the territory. And how long, with this state of affairs, looking up in the near future, before your government relapses into monarchy, as so many Republics have done before, through recognizing the false principle of individual ownership of land, one of the necessary elements of existence? You seem to think that the tendency of our employment will force your white wage laborers into a higher grade of labor—"employers, owners and managers," if so, where will the workers come from? Surely not from American mothers, as you admit; and you know Ireland cannot be a breeding pen always, and Germany wants her young men at home to protect the Rhine, and "preserve the balance of power." Russia exempts her Memnonites from military duty to keep them at home. The negroes you will not let live and labor in peace. Who will work for you? That is the question, and I answer—my countrymen. None other are willing to take our place. Your work must be done; then why not give us that respect which your good book teaches, when it says, "the laborer is worthy of his hire?" Yours in the cause of universal brotherhood,

AH HEA LEE, Slipper-maker.

We trust that hereafter, when our learned Chinese friend takes occasion to write to this paper, he will not, even by implication, attribute to the editor views which he does not hold, and certainly has never expressed. Such unfairness is not compatible with the honesty that is said to characterize the followers of Confucius. It smacks rather of Christian dealing, and any more of it will incline us to believe that "Ah Hea Lee" is a fraud, or at least that he is fast learning the wicked ways of the barbarians he affects to despise.

There is no necessity on the farming lands of America for what our correspondent calls the "laboring class." The land that can be held by owners should be practically limited by placing a high tax on all over a certain amount. Then the owners of land should, to a great extent, be the cultivators. By neighborhood co-operation in the use of labor-saving machinery, there would be demand only for such help as could be furnished by the young men of the country, who have not yet attained to the dignity of freeholders. Let there be an apprenticeship at farming, as at other industrial pursuits, and the apprentices and owners would do nearly all the work necessary to be done.

As to forcing saloon keepers and others into the labor market, if it could be done, the sooner the better. If all men worked, the few who are now virtual slaves would have an easier time. It is not, however, by commencing at the surface that we are to effect any great reform. Great evils require severe remedies, and the changes in our industrial, monetary and social systems, which are near at hand, must bring with them more or less of suffering.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

COMMON SENSE is furnished to subscribers for Three Dollars per annum, in advance. Letters intended for the Business Department should be addressed:
AMANDA M. SLOOUM, BUSINESS MANAGER, 236 Montgomery st.

TRAVELING AGENTS.—Prof. W. H. Chaney, Mrs. Flora Wellman Chaney, and J. L. York are authorized to receive subscriptions for COMMON SENSE, and receipt for money due this office. LOCAL AGENT—Miss Abbie W. Baker, San Francisco.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

Relationship of the Sexes—Mrs C. F. Windle.....	292
The Sabbath—J. W. Mackie.....	294
Chinese Labor—Ah Hea Lee.....	295
Spiritual Lectures and Spiritual Journals—Ed.....	296
The Miraculous.....	297
Rights of Children—Lecture by Jennie Leys.....	298
Jennie Leys' Farewell.....	299
Social Freedom—Pat J. Healey.....	299
An Open Letter to Rev J. C. Simmons.....	300
Brief Extracts.....	301
Original Translation of Faust—Don Fulano.....	302

COMMON SENSE.

WILLIAM N. SLOOUM, EDITOR.

AMANDA M. SLOOUM, ASSISTANT.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, OCT. 31, 1874.

THE OVERLAND MONTHLY for November contains the continuation of Studies in the Sierra, by John Muir, a story by Mrs. H. W. Baker, poetry by Ina Coolbrith, and T. A. Harcourt, an interesting article by Junius Henri Browne, etc.

MRS. ELIZA FULLER MACKINLEY will occupy the platform at 911 Market street to-morrow (Sunday) afternoon and evening. The afternoon subject will be selected by the audience. The evening discourse will be on Mediums and Mediumship. Mrs. M. is an excellent inspirational speaker. The price of admission is fifteen cents, or twenty-five cents for two.

Two or three young women, desirous of acquiring a knowledge of the French language, can hear of an opportunity to join a Ladies' Class, under the instruction of one of the best teachers in this city, by applying at the office of COMMON SENSE. Monesca's system is used, two lessons per week, terms five dollars per month. The study of the language by this method is made very attractive, and the progress is rapid. The hour can be arranged to suit the class.

LYCEUM FOR SELF CULTURE.—Last Sunday afternoon the meeting, owing to the inclemency of the weather, was not so well attended as usual, but those who were there took hold of the debate with more than usual eagerness. The opinion seemed to prevail that whether man might be properly said to have a free will or not, he was so much subjected to the influences of birth, education and other conditions, that in his faults and misfortunes he was more properly an object of commiseration than of vindictiveness and malice. The debate next Sunday afternoon will be on the question, "Have the working men of America made a good and wise use of the ballot?" Mr. Knight will open, after which the platform will be free for others. These meetings are growing in interest, and are well worth the attention of those who love free speech and free inquiry. The meetings open at 2 o'clock, at Social Hall, No. 39 Fourth street, near Market.

SPIRITUAL LECTURES—SPIRITUAL JOURNALS.

One of the Spiritual societies in this city has expended for lectures during the last six months $3,000, or at the rate of $6,000 per annum. What the other has paid we are not informed, but probably half this sum. Much good, no doubt, has been accomplished, but it is a question whether a portion of the money raised by contribution for the supply of deficiencies might not have done more for the cause if given to aid in the establishment on a firm basis of a Spiritual journal.

For one thousand dollars per annum we will engage to print for free distribution five hundred extra copies, weekly, of this paper. These papers judiciously scattered as seed would soon produce a large number of permanent subscribers. In fact, we have no doubt that in this way our subscription list could be doubled within six months. By taking care that they did not fall into the same hands each week, the paper could soon be brought to the notice of a large number of persons who have never heard of it.

Let us consider for a moment the relative cost and value of lectures and papers. Two lectures, each Sunday, for a family of four, would cost from eighty cents to $1 50, or say from $40 to $80 per annum. COMMON SENSE costs the comparatively insignificant sum of three dollars per annum, and it contains more ideas, more real information, than can be gained by the lectures. Both are desirable, but the disparity between the cost of the two is very great, while the difference in value is very little, and that is in favor of the paper. The paper, costing less than six cents, can be read by a dozen or twenty persons, while a lecture for one person costs from two to four times, occasionally eight times, the price of the paper. We know Spiritualists who pay sixty dollars per year for the support of Spiritual lectures in addition to their admission fee. This is right. We are glad to know there are some who are willing to do this; but the same persons, by a strange perversion of judgment, would consider it an absurdity if they were requested to pay one-sixth part of this sum yearly for the support of the only organ Spiritualists have on this coast. Many of these persons have declined even to invest $10 in the stock of the COMMON SENSE Company, although offered to them at one-fifth of its par value, and almost certain to be worth double its cost within one year, and to pay interest on the money invested. We wish to sell enough of the stock of the Company to enable us to purchase a job office, the profits on which will sustain the paper in its infancy, and assist materially to establish it on a firm basis. We desire also, ere long, to establish a Liberal bookstore that the Spiritualists of the State need not be ashamed of. The business is naturally connected with that of publishing a Liberal journal, and the two can be made to sustain each other, and accomplish a vast good for the cause. Who will assist us in this enterprise? We ask no gifts, but merely the investment of capital in a legitimate, paying business. Lectures are well, but a good paper can be made to reach a much larger number of people, and will do more and better missionary work. Spiritualists generally are not propagandists; they are, in fact, almost indifferent about extending their faith, but when an effort is made to reach the people, let it not be wholly in one direction.

THE MIRACULOUS.

Rev. Mr. Stebbins, on Sunday last, preached on the Supernatural and the Miraculous a carefully prepared, scholarly discourse. From a report in the Post we are told that Mr. Stebbins said: "The supernatural expresses generally that kind or quality of power of which the miraculous is the single variety." Well informed Spiritualists do not believe in the supernatural. The word itself is a self contradiction. Nature embraces everything. Nothing can be superior to or outside of it. It is the "all in all." They believe in, or rather they know, something of the super-mundane; it is the foundation of their faith; but the supernatural, strictly speaking, is a name for that which, by the very nature of things, can have no existence. Mr. Stebbins says, according to the Post:

New forms of literature, new habits, reason, faith and skepticism have set bounds to the sea of credulity. In an age of credulity religion is a perpetual panic; in the age of reason and faith the genial power of divine love brooding over the world. This change has come as the morning comes, gradually, silently, mightily. But in the midst of these great changes of feeling the supernatural remains, and there seems no probability that it will ever be eliminated from the mind. The chief cause of miracles is associated by many with religion, and a reluctance of the mind to believe in them is called skepticism. To rest the claims of the gospel on miracles is a mistake, and to separate them is one sign of the spirit of the age. Miracles are not proof, because it is easier to believe in the thing to be proved than in the proof.

This may not be a correct report. If it is, the inference may be drawn that Mr. Stebbins does not believe that the events narrated in the New Testament, and called miracles, actually occurred. Now, Christian Spiritualists believe that they did occur, and that most of them are constantly occurring at this day, but that they are in accordance with law, and consequently not miraculous. Mr. Stebbins goes on to say:

There is nothing so valid as the spirit to prove the truth of the gospel, and a thousand wonders cannot remove it from its place. A man can work wonders in my sight, but without other evidence I cannot believe he was sent from God. The miracles of the New Testament were not wrought to force conviction, but as deeds of love. In one town it is stated that Christ did not many mighty works there because of the unbelief of the inhabitants. If it had been his intention to convict by miracles, he would have piled wonder on wonder till all were convinced.

To intimate that Christ could have performed his wonders notwithstanding the unbelief of the inhabitants, is to contradict the plain meaning of the text, which is that he could not because of such unbelief; that is, he could not do anything contrary to law, and the law under which spiritual works are performed requires harmony, which is induced by belief. Belief, however, is not absolutely necessary, because harmony may exist without it; but the writer of this gospel was evidently of the opinion, as many Spiritualists are to-day, that utter unbelief is unfavorable to spirit manifestation. The following, also from the Post's report, will be cordially approved by most Spiritualists:

I believe all controversy about religion being decided by miracles is a mistake. Miracles are no part of Christianity, nor is a belief in them necessary to become a Christian. Christ is his own authority. Our ideas of miracles depend on our idea of nature, what is included by the latter in our minds. Nature is the name given to our bounded experience, our knowledge of law. As nature advances, the miracle of one age becomes the knowledge of another. The mistake is to say the miracle is a violation of the laws of nature. Some higher and unknown law may hold the known law in suspense. When a ball is thrown into the air the laws of gravitation are not suspended. The universe is full of law, and it may be that the ascending series extend where no knowledge of the law can reach. A miracle is improbable, understanding it as a physical effect. Each event of fact is a miracle till seen from its own plane.

POWER OF THE MIND.—Prof. J. H. Stinson has been lecturing in Jacksonville, Oregon, on "Science, Superstition and Automatology." By "Superstition" the Professor probably means Spiritualism. The lecture was illustrated by experiments made by Hon. I. Cox, which consisted in the movement of sticks of various sizes, from three to nine feet long, and one-half inch to two inches in diameter, about the stage "by the force of the mind." These sticks were made to stand unsupported at various angles, and even to remain suspended in the air. The Oregon Sentinel says: "The exhibition was intended to show that what has heretofore been attributed to the supernatural is but the beginning of a new science, and as that science is developed the belief in the supernatural must decrease." Such experiments, instead of furnishing evidence against Spiritualism, tend to sustain it. Intelligent Spiritualists have never denied the power of the will to act on substance and produce motion, but they claim that after spirits have passed to the higher life, unfolded their powers, and learned to comprehend more fully the laws of force and matter, this power of moving objects is greatly increased, and they are able also to perform many other acts considered by us as contrary to law—that is, contrary to what we know of law.

Silas Farrington says rational religion differs from the current Christianity in nothing more than this, that it cannot ask an unreasoning acceptance of even its most precious thoughts from any one. It must give all the freedom which it takes. We cannot worship a Book and despise a Universe.

Spiritualists and Free Thinkers must not neglect to read the advertisement addressed to them on the last page; also the one headed "Books, Books, Books."

A bill has passed the Oregon Senate which provides that husbands and wives without children may be considered divorced by simply ceasing to live together.

"THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN."

Miss Leys in her lecture, on Sunday afternoon last, in reply to the question which may be asked, "What has this subject to do with Spiritualism?" said Spiritualism has to do with all questions that relate to the welfare of the human race. Children are dying, and shall we close our eyes to the little graves less than a span long, and not raise the voice for their redemption? Let no one write on tablets of stone "God's Providence," "Dispensation of Heaven," when Nature had been defrauded and her laws broken.

Whatever perfects life here enhances the life beyond. Hence, Spiritualists should know, above all others, that children have either a right to be well born or not born at all. Could the children have the power to select their own progenitors, would they select the poor, the wretched, the impure? Would they accept any person as a parent who would give them the seeds of disease, crime, and death? The time will come when parents will be considered guilty for the child's transgression. Parents whose sins extend down to the third and fourth generation must learn to understand this law. If humanity would be free it must learn to co-operate with these germinal truths. At the basis of life alone is the place to operate. Look upon the race as it is, and then ask, Is it the best? The florist and agriculturist are careful to perpetuate the best; but who ever thinks of applying this law to the human race?

In this genesis of immortal life can any one be too pure? Can any justify themselves in the transmission of passion, disease, and depravity? The first right of a child is a healthy constitution. No one has any right to curse a soul with their own transgressions; thus defrauding it of its own divine birthright. Only the healthy should procreate, and they only when they are living in harmonious relations. Whenever there is non-affiliation, the child must partake of the discord. Hatred to brothers and sisters, and even murder comes into the world through the aversion which the mother feels to the giving life to her child. Until the creative functions are held to be as sacred as the apple of the eye, children will come into the world stunted, dwarfed, and impure. Feticide and infanticide are peopling the spirit world, for which grievous sin mankind are responsible. There are troops of little children in spirit life thus evoked in passion and lust, who will claim their parentage, and there will be no escape from the fearful responsibility. Not one birth should ever be an accident. Loss of physical pleasure, is it? O man, wandering in the Sodoms, just for one moment of physical pleasure to cast a lifetime of anguish into an immortal soul, destined to live on forever and forevermore!

The feasting and wine drinking at the marriage feast has often resulted in an idiotic child, born of lust from the first night's debauch. "Fools rush in where angels fear to tread" is truer of the creative functions than any other. The child has the right to be produced only when the physical and mental are full of brightness, when the spirits of both father and mother are bathed in joy and healthfulness. Make the creative act the act of a God, and gods will walk the earth. The marriage system of to-day appears before the world in the character of an almost universal state of disappointment in the kindest and sweetest aspirations and expectations—a state in which love must still do duty in a charnal-house, from whence all hope or joy has flown—a sepulchre worse than death; a state where, though the spirit of love has vanished from life, taking with it all the beauty and glory of existence, the outward form must still be kept up through fear of the law which has no right to thus deform the individuality. The fruits of this state of affairs are to be seen in the unfortunate offspring brought through undesired maternity, by uncongenial mates, into the world of material life; in the determined expression of self, in utter defiance of all law; in the feet that walk with desperation the road of prostitution "which leads down to death," where that Nemesis holds sway whose scourge visits even the third and fourth generation; and finally in general disease and death which has no right to be here, and which will eventually disappear as the race draws nearer the true spirit of Nature's law. The epoch and the light has come! The new gospel of the true life of the spirit, which is to save the children of the future, and the bleeding hearts of our times, also, is dawning in glory upon our earth.

THE PEAVINE MINE.—This mine, in which a number of prominent Spiritualists are interested, is said to be one of the best mines in Washoe county, Nevada. It has been badly mismanaged, the object of the manipulators being to mine the pockets of shareholders; but recently four of the members of the Board of Trustees were forced to resign, and a new Board was chosen, consisting of Joseph Brown, E. C. Dickey, A. D. Griffin, Mrs F. P. Kingsbury and M. E. Morse. The company is somewhat in debt, and money is required to complete the furnace and purchase wood and timber, consequently an assessment of 25cts per share has been levied, which it is believed will be the last, and to favor stockholders who have been nearly beggared by previous assessments, a loan is to be negotiated, at 2 per ct. per month interest, for which the stock on which the assessment is not promptly paid will be given as security redeemable on paying the assessment and interest. Assessments will be forwarded by M. E. Morse, No 11 O'Farrell street.

Stealing a loaf of bread is low business, and people are sent to jail for doing it; but robbery according to law, is what makes men respectable, and those who are very successful at it are rewarded by the people with a seat on the Bench, in Congress, or the Legislature. Consequently the makers and expounders of our laws are mainly the ones who are interested in sustaining the present order of things. Vive la humbug. When will the people see that they are the source of power, and that the rights of humanity, rather than the protection of property, should be the object of legislation?

JENNIE LEYS FAREWELL LECTURE.

On Sunday evening last, notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, the large hall was full. Probably no minister in the city had half as many hearers. The meeting, after vocal music by Mrs. Loomis, was opened by Mrs. Mackinley, or a spirit controlling her, who paid a high tribute to the medium, Miss Leys, in anticipation of her departure from the city. The audience warmly applauded the assertion that Miss Leys carries with her their sympathy, love and god-speed.

Miss Leys briefly returned thanks to the spirit for the loving words, and took occasion to congratulate the people that after her departure they would not be left without an inspirational speaker. With regard to the teachings of her own guides, she said: "Let the word spoken in any paper be what it may, those who have attended the meetings will testify that the lessons taught have all been on the side of chastity, purity of life and exalted moral principle." She returned thanks to all who have assisted to make her path here so happy. She then proceeded to give descriptions of actual scenes in the spirit world. The lecture, which was very lengthy, seemed to interest most of the audience, but it was unsatisfactory to our reporter, and he has not thought it worth while to write out his notes, though he may do so for next week's paper. A far more interesting and practically useful discourse was that given in the afternoon on the "Rights of Children," a fair sketch of which will be found on page 297. At the close of the evening discourse resolutions cordially recommending Miss Leys were adopted by the audience.

STILL IN DOUBT.—The Evening Post publishes an account of various seances held at the house of Mrs. Stirling, 506 Third street, the medium being Mrs. Herrick, and represents the manifestations as fraudulent. The editors of COMMON SENSE have attended several of the seances, and although not prepared to pronounce all the phenomena genuine, yet believe some of them to be so. Dr. Moore, who is himself a Spiritualist, stated, at one of the seances, that he had at a previous seance seen what he thought to be a plate of phosphorus in the hand of the medium, when the spirit lights were produced. The Doctor also produced lights with phosphorous which resembled somewhat those exhibited during the seance, but the "expose," if it can be so called, was far from convincing to most of those present, although all were satisfied of the honesty and good intentions of the Doctor. If the manifestations had been clearly proved fraudulent, we should have given an account of the "expose," but there was so much room for doubt that we refrained, lest we might do injustice to innocent persons. Those who know Mrs. Herrick well, know her to be a genuine medium, yet it is possible that she has sometimes been tempted to assist the spirits in order to make the demonstrations appear to be wholly successful.

The next Lyceum Social will be held at the Hall, 911 Market street, on Friday evening next, Nov 6th.

SOCIAL FREEDOM. [For Common Sense.]

ANOTHER REPLY TO AUSTIN KENT.

Sir, no man—who cares for the morality of the race—can agree with A. Kent on this grand question. I hold it to be utterly subversive of social order to grant the "sexual emancipation of woman." If we do so, what security have we for their continued allegiance to their family obligations and our marital rights? Any man must agree with Mr. Lewis, that promiscuity is synonymous with "free sexuality," and is there any one mad enough to want the same freedom for both sexes in that respect? Surely, no one. Why, sir, "free sexuality" is tantamount to individual sovereignty, a condition that cannot be tolerated for a moment in the "softer sex." It is equivalent to giving woman the control of her person in sexual matters—a doctrine monstrous in its conception, and disastrous in its results. You might as well think of giving her the same compensation for the same skill and labor—a pet doctrine with these fanatics. This doctrine of "free sexuality" is the great curse of the age, and I fully agree with Mr. Lewis that it is entirely inconsistent with "monogamic marriage;" in fact, sir, forced sexuality is the natural order of things, especially as it applies to woman; and, as far as I am concerned, I heartily endorse it. Jennie Leys says "woman should have more freedom in her love relations." Ah, sir, 'tis cruel thus to pander to a morbid sentiment. If woman had more freedom in this matter, could you trust your mother, your wife, or your daughter? If human nature is the same in both sexes, the every-day experiences of thousands of our best men, in all walks of life, even in the pulpit, emphatically answer no. Then how can we trust mere women in that respect? I am, sir, in favor of social freedom for man only.

PAT J. HEALEY.

SPIRITUALISTS' UNION.—At a meeting of a few Spiritualists, held at the house of Mrs. Mackinley, President of the Spiritualists' Union, last week, the sum of $92 50 was contributed for the purpose of purchasing additional chairs for use in the hall of the society, 911 Market street. At the Sunday evening meeting Mrs. Mackinley stated that during the six months she has been in office, the society has expended $3,000 for rent, compensation of lecturers, etc., and that there is no debt. Mrs. Mackinley said that it is desirable to keep the price of admission as low as possible, and that it probably would not again be increased. Matting being wanted to lessen the noise made by late comers, a collection was taken up, and $28 realized. The sum required for the purpose is about $100, which will purchase sufficient to cover the aisles and the space in front of the platform. The society was never in a more flourishing condition than it is to-day. The platform to-morrow will be occupied by Mrs. Mackinley.

Francis Abbot asks, "Is it not better to be a wild ass in freedom than a tame ass in the traces? If we are asses all round, why not prefer a free swing for our assinity?"

AN OPEN LETTER.

TO REV. J. C. SIMMONS, PRESIDING ELDER SANTA ROSA DISTRICT
M. E. CHURCH SOUTH.

DEAR SIR:—You asserted, in your sermon at Windsor last Sunday evening, that "Necromancy, or consulting the dead, is the deadly sin of the Bible;" also, that "God would not enact a law against what does not exist." I infer from this that you acknowledge the spiritual existence of the dead, and our ability to communicate with them, and that the law of Moses against consulting the dead was intended to prevent a popular evil in the time of its enactment, and as the evil still exists (notwithstanding the stakes, gibbets, or other instruments of torture and death), that the law is and should be in full force and effect. In view of your acknowledgement of the prevalence of spirit communication, your assertion that Satan is the author of all spiritual phenomena is alike inconsistent, unscriptural, and contrary to our own observation and experience.

In Matthew 17:1-9 we have a scrap of history of the greatest significance on this question: the law-givers of both dispensations—Moses, accompanied by the great prophet Elijah, on the spiritual side, and Jesus, accompanied by Peter, James and John, on the earth side—met in solemn council, and if they did not verbally, did by act and example abrogate the law in question. If you maintain the continued force of the old statute against conversing with spirits, then we are driven to the conclusion that Jesus, like Saul (and as do many ministers now-a-days), committed this "deadly sin" privately. His language seems to favor this view: "He charged them, saying, tell the vision to no man until the son of man is risen from the dead," binding them, during his life, to keep the secret. Had it become known that he held spiritual seances, or communicated with spirits in any way, he would have been put to death. They already said "he hath a devil" or familiar spirit; could it have been proven he would have suffered the penalty, an ignominious death, and Rev. J. C. Simmons and hosts of other sticklers for the law, penalty and all, would say amen! The general bad luck and the premature death of kings Saul and Ahab are attributed to their disregard of the law in question. Would you ascribe those of Jesus to the same cause?

This seance of Jesus, Peter, James and John on the mount is parallel to that of Saul, the woman of Endor and others. You deify Jesus, and stigmatize the woman as a witch. Why this difference? Samuel was a familiar spirit for the woman, Moses and Elias for Jesus. "The spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets (1 Cor. 14:32), is evidence that the woman of Endor was a prophetess.

Jesus never re-enacted the prohibitory spirit law of Moses. He warned his hearers against evil spirits; so does A. J. Davis against Diaka. The "deadly sin" of necromancy may be charged in general against the disciples of Jesus, from the apostles down. "Mary Magdalene and the other Mary" talked with a spirit of a young man, Mark 16:5; to two spirits according to Luke 24:3, and learned that Jesus had risen. Were they necromancers?

At the ascension "two men stood by them in white apparel," who delivered a short address to the crowd of necromancers, who had been conversing with their spiritualized master for forty days, and had followed him out to the Mount of Olives to take a last look at their ascending Lord. Cornelius had an interview with "a man in bright clothing," which resulted in opening the gospel door to the Gentiles, Acts 10:30. The centurion, Cornelius, lived at Cesarea. About the same time he had his interview with the spirit, Peter, at Joppa, had a vision by the same spirit, calculated to prepare his mind to carry gospel to the heathen, Cornelius; thence to the world. It was worthy an exalted soul to break down Jewish exclusiveness and open the spiritual door to the whole world. The evidence that the same spirit who interviewed Cornelius gave Peter the vision, is found in the 20th verse of the chapter above referred to. Were they both necromancers?

As an incentive to good works and a higher life, we are informed that we are surrounded by a "cloud of witnesses," the church of the first born, "the spirits of just men made perfect," represented as very near us. Was it not understood that the church militant and the church triumphant are one, and may communicate and verify the apostolic article of faith, The Communion of Saints? See Heb. 12th chap.

Paul tells us to covet spiritual gifts, "but rather that ye may prophecy" because "the spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets;" 1 Cor. 14 chap. Does he exhort us all to become necromancers? I will conclude by inviting your attention to the account of the beloved John, who had conversed with Moses and Elijah on the mount, when he said: "It is good for us to be here," and many other times, no doubt, had been as highly privileged, but dare not write of them for fear of this terrible statute you would still inflict upon the world. See the last verse of his gospel. The beloved exile John, after being led through the wonderful visions of the apocalypse, fell down at the feet of the angel to worship (Rev. 22:9), but was arrested in the act by the angel in these words: "See, thou do it not; for I am thy fellow servant, and of thy brethren the prophet, and of them which keep the sayings of this book: worship God." This spirit of a man, a prophet by occupation, also called an angel, would not be worshipped, and still farther staggers John by disclosing to him in the sixteenth verse his name in these words: "I, Jesus, have sent mine angel (or spirit, which is synonymous,) to testify unto you these things."

I have here called your attention to a few of the most positive proofs that Spiritualism or legitimate necromancy was essentially the religion of Jesus Christ and the apostles. Hoping you will give these hints a careful consideration, I am, with great respect, yours for the discovery and application of truth. A NECROMANCER.

The Santa Barbara Index gives an imaginary conversation between Mrs. Van Cott, the Methodist revivalist, and Bishop Merrill concerning her ordination, in which Mrs. Van Cott is supposed to say:

"During the last year, through my labors, I have brought one thousand seven hundred and thirty-five persons into the Church. In order to accomplish these conversions, I have traveled, in one year, 7208 miles. In the prosecution of my ministerial work, I have written, in one year, 650 letters; and I have attended 828 religious meetings; and I have preached 399 sermons."

To this the Bishop is forced to reply:

"Yes, you have traveled, and written, and prayed, and preached; and 1735 persons, received, through your ministrations, into the Church, bear living and joyful testimony to your power in converting sinners to Christ, and saving souls from damnation; but—but—but—but—you are a—woman."

When it was believed that Moulton would refrain from telling what he knew of Beecher, the New York city press toasted him as a brave, honorable, refined and truthful gentleman; but when, at last, he told the truth, he became a conspirator, a liar, a blackmailer, and all that was vile.

A CASE IN POINT.

George H. Mix is the name of a young man, the essence of whose nature is hypocrisy. He came here a few years ago, and got introduced into society for three reasons—he was well recommended, he dressed well, and he was pious and meek. Various books were missed from bookstores, and were found in pawnshops, pledged by the oily young gentleman. His friends paid up, and he was saved from prosecution. Some time ago he decamped, leaving a forged check behind him. He has now, it appears, turned up in New York, where he innocently managed to secrete and steal $1,500 worth of lace. In his trunks were found various forged letters, recommending him highly to the attention of bankers in this city; and the letters by which he procured his situation in New York were also forged. George is of good family, but he seems to have been born for the penitentiary.—Morning Call.

Yes, he was born for the penitentiary, as thousands of others are, although the children of "respectable" parents. George's parents were in good pecuniary circumstances, but the husband doled out money to his wife in such a way that she was obliged to steal and play the hypocrite, in order to get any little articles for enjoyment beyond the necessities of life. The father was also a hypocrite, a penurious, hard man, yet a member of the church, who deluded himself with the belief that his sins would be forgiven, and he would go to the good place. His outward life was a mere sham, his inner hollow and corrupt. This child, George H., is the natural result of such parentage, and is no more to blame for what he is than a wolf is to blame for possessing a wolfish nature. Perhaps he should be sent to prison to keep him from wrong doing, but his father should also go there to prevent him from fathering any more thieves and hypocrites to prey upon society. Begin at the root, if you would eradicate an evil.

POSITIVISM AND SPIRITUALISM.—I have read the writings of the Positives. Have you read the writings of the Spiritualists? I assure you that, with all their nonsense, they have an extensive and respectable literature. The exclusion of the vast accumulation of evidence for the existence of another world which is furnished by the facts of Spiritualism, seems to me to be narrow-minded and unscientific. In my view the Positivists have one side of the truth and the Spiritualists the other; and in the final clash between them, which is even now coming, they will mutually correct each other. Positivism will be compelled to accept the facts of Spiritualism and enlarge its scientific domain. Spiritualism will have to respect and adopt the rigid cautiousness of Positivism. And out of the union of these schools—the learned and the popular—will issue the system of all persuading truth. I have come to think that the Spiritualists represent the sails of the great ship of progress, and the Positivists the ballast. The ship needs both sails and ballast. Steady, conservative, learned men, who will not give in to anything that cannot be rigorously proved, must be carried in the hold, or the world would have a sorry time with the top-sails of Spiritualism.—J. H. Noyes.

It would be far better for the nation to lengthen the Presidential term to six years and prohibit reelection under any circumstances, than to continue the present system, which puts a premium on political corruption and baseness.

BRIEF EXTRACTS.

Many American girls are kept unmarried because the men considered of their own degree do not come forward, and the men who do come forward—good, honest, substantial fellows—are men considered beneath them; they do not belong to "our set."

A childless home is a misfortune, to be endured when it cannot be avoided, but to be avoided whenever it is possible. For all that is childlike in human nature, all that keeps human beings young forever is nurtured and preserved by contact with children, and the affections they call into play.

The sons of would-be fashionable people are kept idle, because they are in the set where work is voted low and "careers" are not always open; they are put into professions unsuited to them, and where they can never thoroughly succeed because those in which they would have been perfect are also those the special set to which they belong vote low.

Any one who has ever talked to children knows that they form the most inexorable audience in the world, and the hardest to feed with chaff. No power on earth will make them listen longer than they are really interested, or profess any interest that they do not feel. To hold an audience of children, you must have not merely a fluent speech, but something to say.

We utterly repudiate the idea that the elevation of woman wars upon or weakens home in any of its legitimate operations or accessories. Rather is it calculated to improve and elevate domestic life, by throwing new protections around it, a new intelligence into it, and new sanctities over it. Woman needs the ballot in order that she may build her home upon impregnable foundations, and surround it with legal protections and moral barriers which shall keep it forever sacred.

One of the physiological observers of men and things says paralysis is becoming a common disease. It is not confined to the fleshy, the plethoric, nor to the aged. The fast life of our business young men tells on them. It is a very common thing to see men of thirty and thirty-five bald-headed, feeble-gaited, and walking about with canes, their underpining knocked out, with other signs of premature age. These signs of early weakness develop in paralysis.

It does not follow that every married woman should keep house, any more than that every married woman should cut and make her husband's clothes and her own. Each person must do what he or she is best fitted for; and so long as husband and wife manage the details of their life in a way most conducive to their own welfare and happiness, the world has no business to meddle or complain. But there is no antagonism between the ballot and the bread-trough. Good housekeeping and good citizenship are not arrayed against each other in eternal conflict.

Thirty years ago, the Khanate of Bokhara was one of the most fertile provinces of Central Asia, and well wooded and watered, was regarded as an earthly paradise. Five years thereafter, a mania for forest clearing broke out among the inhabitants, and continued to rage as long as there remained timber on which to vent itself. What trees were spared by rulers and people, were afterwards entirely consumed during a civil war. The consequence of this ruthless destruction of the forest growth it now painfully manifest in immense dry and arid wastes. The water-courses have become empty channels, and the system of canals constructed for artificial irrigation, and supplied from the living waters has been rendered useless.

[For Common Sense.]

AUTUMN FLOWERS.

BY L. HUTCHINSON.

I love the wayside Autumn flowers,
So bright and so serenely fair,
As those brought forth by vernal showers
Or brightest of exotics rare.
A crown of loving joy they seem,
Like smiles upon an aged face,
A halo round the dying Queen
Of Summer in the Fall's embrace:
They tell of brighter Springs to come,
Of hopes that live beyond the tomb.

A fragrance on the air they breathe
That lulls our senses to repose,
Like blessings which a saint bequeathes
When passing from this world of woes:
As friends who smile when fortune frowns,
They bloom amid the frost and rain,
By hedge-rows and on barren ground;
They shun the rich and cultured plain—
A lesson to the world they give,
And, smiling, tell us how to live.

So may we live, when age shall come,
Our deeds, like Autumn flowers, may prove
To cheer Earth's pilgrims, one by one,
As onward to the goal they move;
Nor shrink we from the chilling blast,
But feel to smile when we at last
Sink slowly to our graves in peace.
And from the Truth seeds we have sown
Spring better deeds than we have done.

Sweet blossoms of the faded fields,
Like beauty that old age adorns,
Since not alone in youth we see
All rainbow hues of early morn;
So brighter as the setting sun
A heavenly radiance shines afar,
And Death, when sands of life are run,
Leave pearly gates of Heaven ajar;
And who shall say that Spirit flowers
Do not adorn Celestial bowers?

Owensville, Cal.

FAUST—A TRAGEDY.

FROM A MANUSCRIPT TRANSLATION BY DON FULANO.

FAUST [Solus].—How can he keep alive hopes faintest germ,
Who cleaves persistently to empty trash;
With eager trembling hand, and grasp too rash
Would treasures seize, yet joys to clutch a worm!
Dare such a man's voice here break in on me,
Where spirit voices late were whispering round?
Ah! yet, this once at least, thanks, thanks to thee,
Poorest of souls that look upon the ground;
You tore my heart free from the grim despair
Which had begun my reason to unseat;
A vision so gigantic filled the air,
That I, poor dwarf, felt dwarfdom was my fate.

I, image of the God-head, who in vanity
Looked on myself as truth's reflection, saw,
In heavenly light and brilliancy, the law
By which I sought to cast aside humanity.
I, more than cherub, whose free native power
Through nature's veins aspired to glide,
And on the elements God-like to ride,
Working and striving, semi-deified!
How deep must I atone; my fancied dower
One thunder word has blasted in an hour.
Dare not I meet my powers with thine? oh! no;
Had I the strength to draw thee to my side,
I found no power to force thee to abide;
In that most glorious flash of joy and woe
I felt myself so little, yet so great;
Thou monster thrustest helpless me below
The dark, dull waters of mere human fate.
Oh! who shall guide my course? What must I shun?
Shall I each instinct and desire obey?
Our very deeds and all our sufferings run
Counter to Life's aspiring upward way.
The noblest yearnings that our spirit owns,
'Neath trash most foreign to its nature, 'shidden;
When this world's good things ease our ceaseless groans
Its better instincts as absurd are children;
And hero feelings, once our life of life,
Grow torpid in the stirring worldly strife.

Though Phantasy did erst, bold in her flight,
Stretch hopeful wings towards the vast Eternal,
Now, faith, a narrow space contents her sprite
When joy sinks joy in Time's cyclone infernal.
Care builds her nest deep in the troubled breast,
There broods she over sorrow and unrest;
Her ceaseless rockings shake both ease and pleasures;
She hides her well masked face 'neath specious treasures;
Our house and land are cares, our child or wife,
Fire, water, person, dagger, what you will;
You tremble with vain dread when there's no ill,
And what you never lose, that must you ever sigh for.

The Gods I am not like—I feel, 'tis true,
Like the worm rather than the mud creeps through,
For which, while dust it feeds upon, a slave,
The wanderer's fool forms guillotine and grave.

Is this not dust all, where this lofty wall
With rows of bones cramps my soaring sprite?
The frippery which with crowds of trifles small
Trammels me in this moth world, wretched wight!
Can I in these find what my nature needs?
What if in thousand books I find it stated
That thus the human heart forever bleeds,
That here and there some poor soul was elated?
Thou hollow skull, why that eternal grin,
But that thy brain, like mine, once wildering pondered,
Sought the fair day above this ceaseless din,
And hunting Truth, in this dim twilight wandered.
Ye instruments must laugh at me I feel,
With cog and pinnion, cylinder and ring,
I found the door, ye should its locks unseal,
But tho' your wards are long, no bolts back do they fling!
Secret in working in day's blazing light,
Dame Nature never lets her close veil leave her,
And what she bares not freely to thy sight,
Thou'll't never wrench from her with screw and lever.
Useless old trumpery, I've not taken down,
Ye stand there still just as my sire did leave you.
And thou old scroll art now all smoke-dried brown,
So long my mournful lamp hath famed beneath thee.
Far better 'twere my little all have squandered,
Than laden with that little here to sweat;
Whatever from your sires you chance to get,
Inherit it, and use it, ere you're sundered.
All that you use not is a heavy burden,
But every moment brings home its own guerdon.

* The crowning beauty of Faust consists in its simple truth; its close adherence to nature. How natural this apostrophe to the skull, just here. I find in an old verse scrap book of my own, the following stanzas, written, I remember, in an outburst of genuine feeling, one evening at Hampton. It was summer, I was preparing for the examinations at the College and Hall, and was overworked and sleepless. I came in from a walk just after sunset in a state of considerable nervous depression, and sat down in my narrow little study to my books as usual; grinding up Quain and Ellis, and Sharpey. Finding my swimming head incapable of application, I shoved the books away in disgust, and catching, as I lifted my head and threw myself back in the easy chair, the peculiar sardonic expression on the face of the skull upon the mantelpiece, I scribbled thus:

God! how my brain seethes, get ye gone, ye books,
Your half-read words but dance upon my sight
Leaving no impress! Thou old skull, which look'st
So placid on my passion, thou art right.
"Why burn thine eye-balls thus, the inmost nooks
Of my bare orbits cool the wind to-night,"
"Peace! peace!" thou mutterest "in a little time
Thy boiling brain shall be as cool as mine."

Thou mouthest at me with those fleshless jaws,
In silent mockery of all human woe,
One long eternal grin without one pause
In its grim merriment—and is it so
Amusing then to die, that death thus draws
Smiles from dry bones, o'er which when flesh did grow
Frowns like fierce billows rolled, and furling tears
Laid the spring dust of half their brightest years?

And yet I love thy company, oh, skull!
For to my buzzing ears thou whisperest peace,
And hintest of an hour, when this life's dull
—So dull—anon so fevered—round shall cease;
When this high throbbing heart, and brain so full
Of troubled visions, shall be laid at ease
In maggots' bellies, and thoughts vaulted dome
Become a meatflies' nursery, and a reptiles' home.

Special Notices.

DR. BANCROFT'S treatment for Dyspepsia and General Debility has benefited me more than all the medicine I have used for many years.

O. A. BANCROFT, 519 Sycamore street, Milwaukee.
DR. Bancroft's office is 204 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

For the very best Photographs go to Bradley & Eulofson's Gallery, with an elevator, 429 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Those suffering from that most annoying of the minor miseries of human life—a cold in the head—or from catarrh in any form, should try Dr. Evory's Diamond Catarrh Remedy. Just try it—that's all. Sold at this office, and by all druggists.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, NO. 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

COMMON SENSE can be purchased at the following places in this city: Patten's, 773 Market; Snow's, 519 Kearny; Sharp's, 236 Montgomery, and at this office, 236 Montgomery street, up stairs. Price of single copies, ten cents.

COMMON SENSE.

A Journal of Live Ideas.

VOL. 1.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1874.

No. 26.

Signs of the Times.

Many papers have recently printed articles deprecatory of expensive funerals.

Massachusetts is soon to have a reformatory prison for women, all the officers of which, excepting the Superintendent, Treasurer and Steward, are to be women.

Anthony Comstock, the man who, in spite of some injudicious acts, has really done a good work in the way of suppressing immoral books and pictures, was stabbed last week by a dealer in bawdy literature.

Victoria Woodhull has at last consented to give addresses to women alone, being convinced that she can thereby reach some who would not otherwise hear her. She will give one private lecture in each place she visits.

The Secretary of the "Dawn Valcour Community" says the reported failure of the scheme is a falsehood. "The community is in good working order, and its prospects are better than at any previous time since its organization."

The result of the elections, especially the Republican reverses in New York and Massachusetts, have put an effectual quietus on the third term project. Probably Grant, now that he sees re-election is impossible, will declare that he had no thought of accepting a re-nomination.

A North Carolina minister lost his life a week or two ago in a singular manner. He was anointing his entire body with kerosene, as a cure for rheumatism, when the oil was ignited by the fire on the hearth near which he was standing, and he was burned to death.

Mrs. Emily Pitts Stevens has been elected Grand Conductor of the California Grand Lodge of the Sons of Temperance. The Chairman of the Executive Committee declared that the only hope of the temperance cause was in woman suffrage, and the sentiment was received with great applause.

A sandstone anvil has been discovered near Ironton, Ohio, supposed to have been used by the mound-builders. It is composed of very sharp grit, contains over 100 depressions, weighs about 500 pounds. This relic of a extinct race is to be presented to the Cincinnati Society of Natural History.

Dr. French, in his Notes on Miracles, says a person asleep is heavier than when awake, and says every experienced nurse knows it. It is somewhat surprising to hear a man like Dr. French make such an assertion. The body of a sleeping or drunken person appears heavier because it is limp—making what is called "dead weight," but it does not weigh a pound more, as the learned Doctor might himself have ascertained by experiment.

The New York Independent says Bowen's contract with Jay Cooke was closed before Cooke's failure, consequently the idea of now "setting it aside" is ridiculous.

G. W. Carlton & Co. have just issued the first volume of a work by Dr. Eugene Crowell, written to prove the identity of modern Spiritualism and primitive Christianity.

The ladies of Santa Cruz have succeeded in raising funds for a public reading room, open to both sexes. It is hoped that some of the frequenters of liquor saloons and billiard rooms will be induced to forsake their old haunts.

A strong opposition has been raised in England against the patent laws. Sis Roundell Palmer, the Lord Chancellor, although believing in the justice of copyrights, claims that in the case of inventions and discoveries the facts lay in nature itself, and are common property.

The Golden Age says the public interest in Spiritualism was never so strong as now. The papers of Mr. Wallace have given it confirmation on the scientific side, and the materializations at the house of the Eddy family and elsewhere are almost too marvelous for belief even by those who have seen them.

The Christian Observer attributes the blood-thirstiness of the Pomeroy boy to temporary demoniacal possession. Sensible people, who do not believe in the devil, know that the boy was born a butcher, his mother having frequented the slaughter-house during her pregnancy, and daily gloated over the bloody scenes she there beheld.

Mrs. Livermore presided over the Second Woman's Congress, held in Chicago in October. Many admirable essays were read on subjects pertaining to the advancement of women. The questions of labor and finance were intelligently discussed, and a notable paper on the treatment of "fallen women" was read. The training of children, temperance and dress reform all came in for consideration.

Since the death of the Radical there has been no magazine in America devoted to advanced religious thought. People generally do not like such reading, and it is said Old and New lost many subscribers in consequence of the scholarly papers of James Martineau. They were too heterodox for the church people, and even too advanced for many calling themselves Liberal.

The Golden Age, in a notice of the Woman's Congress, recently held in Chicago, says: "That such a collection of representative women from twenty different States could be convened, and organized, and with parliamentary method hold session after session, discussing the most important and vital themes, marks a progress which would amaze us had it not been made by steady and insensible approaches step by step."

[For Common Sense.]

REMARKABLE FULFILLMENT OF A DREAM.

BY MEDICUS.

I left London in October, 1865, for Ceylon. I left both Dr. Hillier and his brother Peter, my two bosom friends, in excellent health. Although I knew that Tom's family were phthisical, I had no fears about him. He corresponded with me regularly up to August, 1868, without my hearing anything from him to shake my security. In August, 1869, I was living at Kandy, Ceylon, editing the Kandy Herald. I was in tolerable good health, but in an excitable state of mind; my cousin had lately died and left the whole care of the paper and its affairs in my hands. One night I went to bed in my usual health, slept deeply and had a singular and a remarkably vivid dream. I never had but one other dream so vivid as this one in my life. Its scenes had all the reality to me, both at the time and in waking memory, of real events. I thought that I had passed into the other world. I found myself strolling along a path skirting the base of a beautifully wooded mountain range, at a sufficient elevation to overlook the beautifully diversified strip of country which lay between the range and the sea coast, which was here indented by a succession of lovely bays, not so much like those around Sydney harbor, as like those in the neighborhood of Palmer, in Sicily. The character of the scenery too was very Sicilian; the sloping land that lay between me and the deep blue sea, was rich with vineyards and orange groves, on which the purple and golden fruit were thickly hanging; beautiful villas, embosomed in trees, luxuriant with fruit and flowers, ornamented with turreted and pinacled roofs, offered by the whiteness of their color, and the sharp lines of their architectural tracery, a beautiful contrast to the wild luxuriance of the semi-tropical vegetation in which they were half buried. Wildly beautiful ravines, where the rocks were clothed to their very summits by flowery creepers and clinging trees, ran up into the mountains at frequent intervals on the one hand, while on the other the undulating coast sloped gently down to the snowwhite sands of deeply indented bays, whose glittering border formed a beautiful contrast to and break between the bright emerald of the fruit groves, and the clear deep cerulean sapphire of the other water. The air was fresh, cool and exhilarating. I tripped along the path without any feeling of fatigue or friction; in fact with much of the sensation of being under the influence of hashisch. The path I was following led me down to the borders of a still more lovely bay than I had yet passed, where a well appointed yacht lay at anchor. Before, however, I nearly reached the beach, I came to a hedge of flowery acacia—the yellow scented acacia—and hawthorn, and followed this down till I reached a magnificent gateway, which stood open, and which I passed through. I found myself in a beautiful park, or rather garden; although it was only planted with flowery and evergreen shrubs, tastefully disposed about a lawn of the finest grass. Across the path I walked for some distance, turning back again towards the mountains, which here more nearly approached the sea in a gradual slope.

I met no one, but as I passed deeper into the park, I saw deer and other beautiful animals in the distance amongst the trees. At length, on rounding a spur of the mountain, I saw upon the slope above me a magnificent palace, quite unlike any structure I ever saw on earth. Its architecture was complicated and gothic, and the whole of it was carved in open work, far more elaborate, but of the same description, as that of the spires of Strasburg and Freiburg cathedrals. It was apparently composed of marble of snowy whiteness, which, had it not been a good deal overgrown with the most gorgeous flowery creepers, would have been a very unpleasant dazzling object for the eye to rest upon beneath that glowing sun. Creepers hung in festoons around its windows and cornices, and in places up to its very roof. They were loaded with purple and crimson and orange flowers—one is common at Malta, the other at Ceylon. The exquisite whiteness of the marble was not stained by age or vegetation, but formed a lovely contrast to the deep green and gorgeous colors through which it peeped out here and there sparingly, but in places to a much larger extent. I made my way towards this splendid structure, up the sloping lawn, over the soft grass, which yielded beneath my feet like a Turkey carpet. I passed several lovely arbors on the lawn, provided with turf sofas and ottomans, with rustic tables in the centre, all embowered in creepers. On every table of every arbor I passed, I saw a Kandy Herald lying.

At length I reached the edge of a much steeper slope, too steep to climb, and skirting this a short distance found myself at the foot of a long marble staircase, which led up to the terrace on which the building stood. I mounted the steps. They were magnificent, broad and wide, with a low balustrade of marble on each side. Both steps and balustrade were exquisitely carved in relief, the steps with a tracery pattern, arabesque; the sides with scenes from history of some kind. At intervals of about ten or twelve feet, stood a small but exquisite group of statuary, on a pedestal in the balustrade. The flight of steps seemed as long as some of the flights leading from the city to the high ground about the five-storied pagoda of Canton.

I rested several times during the ascent, and turned round to enjoy the ever-increasing beauty of the view over the bay, and the surrounding country. As I got higher up, it reminded me of the view from the top of the Ziza at Palermo, combined with that from the top of the tower at Valentia. On each side the top step were larger statues, and as far as I remember all the relieves and statues represented some sacred subject from the Christian or Jewish history. The top step itself bore on its face, in deeply cut letters in relief, I. H. S., as you see it on the altars of some old churches. I was much struck by the beauty of the architectural tracery of the open work of the marble building, which stood on a large broad marble platform, carved like the stairs and ornamented with groups of statues and flowers, orange trees and flowering shrubs in immense carved marble tubs and vases. The whole of the marble, as likewise that of the stairs, was of a delicate flesh color, veined with deeper pink. That of the palace was pure white. I walked slowly to the beautiful gothic archway of the building, exquisitely carved like that of the cathedral of Milan in relief. There was no door; it was free to any one to enter. I went in, and found myself in a sort of hall or vestibule, which was separated from a large hall apparently by a screen, which ran round it on three sides of its quadrangle, the other being formed by the wall of the building itself. The screen was about ten feet high, and carved in open work, yet so that you could not see through. Both it and the wall itself was of white marble, relieved by festoons and wreaths of flowers in marble or coral of a blood red. The effect was beautiful and striking. Through the open carving of the wall itself I could see the bay and get peepes at the surrounding country as through so many small windows.

A thick Turkey carpet of a rich pattern, into whose luxurious softness one sank up to the ankles, covered the floor, and exactly fitted the space. A broad divan covered with rich green velvet, with cushions of the same embroidered and trimmed with gold, ran all round the room, whilst ottomans and lounges, all covered in the same luxurious material, were scattered about the central space. A grand piano, with a harp or two, stood in the centre, whilst musical instruments of every sort were lying about, with music and music books, all over the tables of carved walnut and marble which stood here and there. I took a seat and waited. I heard a light footstep trip down a stairs outside, a door opened in the screen, and an elderly but very pleasant, fresh colored lady, of a very benevolent cast of countenance, dressed in clothes of exquisite fabric and texture, but very plain and neat in fashion, walked in with a quiet and sprightly step, smiled and bowed. I rose and bowed deeply. I was about to apologize, when she interrupted: "Yes, I know, you come to call on Dr. Hillier. Well, he is not here yet; he has not arrived, but we are expecting him here very shortly." With that I awoke. I fancied I had seen that lady's face before, quite different, yet the same. The expression and the tone I knew perfectly, but the tout-ensemble I did not recognize. She reminded me of Mrs. Hillier, only the lady I saw was of a slight and good figure. Mrs. Hillier was very stout in the flesh. I fancy the lady said, "Dr. Hillier and his brother," but am not quite certain about this.

On awaking I felt the dream to be no ordinary dream. It was fully as real to me as if the events had actually taken place. I felt that I myself had been to this spot, had seen and done all this, and I remembered it all perfectly. I could have painted the scenery and the tracery of that architecture had I been an artist. I told my wife the dream, and added, "how strange if anything is wrong with Tom." A few days afterwards I got a letter from Dr. Hillier telling me that he had been taken with hæmoptysis, that the physicians told him that he must give up practice and take a sea voyage. That at first he determined to come to Ceylon for the trip, but Walshe told him not to do so. Then he had determined to go to the Cape to see a sister they supposed to be dying of phthisis. He had engaged his passage for November (this was in December). It was the last letter I ever had from him or Peter. In December, as I was waiting at Colombo to leave by the steamer for Sydney, I received a London Lancet, containing an account of the deaths of both brothers. It happened thus: Tom and his wife were to leave for the Cape in a sailing vessel about the first week in November. Peter came up from Gloucestershire to bid him good-by, and brought up a mare with him to be used by the London firm, a mare he had used in a van in Gloucestershire.

On the afternoon on which he was to take his farewell dinner with Tom at Queen Ann street, he drove this mare round Hyde Park in his dog cart. The mare shied, took fright and ran away, came in contact with a lamppost or something; the cart was overturned and Peter carried to University College Hospital insensible, with fracture of the base of the skull. Tom was sent for, and had him removed to his own house. He watched him and tended him till he died; then took his remains down to Gloucestershire, buried him and looked into all his affairs. Then Tom broke down, and began to see visions. He had been calm and collected up to that day, but the day after the funeral, when all was over, he woke up in the night and told his wife—whom he woke up—that his mother had been with him, telling him the most glorious news about the next world, that he must go at once and tell his father. He continued to see visions of his mother and other dead friends, and to detail their conversations—chiefly religious—till he became very excited. He was removed to a private asylum in London, and lived for eight days, but only slept about four hours, in spite of opiates, after that first night of raving. During three days after this he fancied his mother was constantly with him, teaching and helping him. He said that now he had learned so much from her, he would be able with me to teach the world. He said that communion and sympathy were the only cures for brain diseases and madness.

SINGULAR CIRCUMSTANCE.

A CONFLAGRATION IN MASSACHUSETTS WITNESSED BY A MAN IN MAINE.

The Brunswick (Me.) Telegraph tells the following:

On Monday last we called on Mr. John Fitzgerald, the well known temperance lecturer (living on Bank street,) who is confined to his bed, quite feeble, but still able to converse briefly with friends who call. At this interview he related to us a remarkable experience, through which he passed on Saturday morning, 19th ult., the day upon which the fire occurred at Fall River, Mass. Mrs. Fitzgerald had arranged her husband for his morning nap, and had just stepped out of the door when she heard him cry "fire" in tones so startling that she rushed back to the house in the greatest alarm, to hear her husband repeat the cry in tones as loud as the first—all the more startling to her, as for several days he had spoken not above a whisper; he was evidently greatly excited, catching at the bedclothes, and attempting to get out of bed—saying he must have his clothing. Mrs. Fitzgerald asked her husband "What does this mean?" "Wife," says Mr. Fitzgerald, "there is a fire in a factory in Fall River, Mass., in the upper story, the mule room; I see the sparks flying from the machinery as sparks fly from a grindstone when men are grinding their tools, and the factory is full of women and children. I see it all." He called to the people not to jump from the windows, and was very much excited. Mrs. Fitzgerald was alone with her husband, and exerted her utmost strength to keep him in bed. All at once Mr. Fitzgerald fell back upon the bed and said: "It is all over; the roof has fallen in, and those poor people are burned." After that he was completely prostrated; and Mrs. Fitzgerald for some time feared that he would not recover from the shock.

Mr. Fitzgerald said he never thought of looking at his watch, but that he saw the fire in the morning somewhere from 7 to 9 o'clock. It was not until Monday that Mrs. Fitzgerald heard of the fire, and not until Tuesday, 22d, she got a paper containing an account of it.

The great lights of the world are aloof from the churches. Knowledge has been and is the bane of religion.

THE BIBLE SABBATH LEGALIZED—No. 2.

BY J. W. MACKIE.

When the Bible, God and his Son Jesus Christ, are incorporated in the Constitution of the United States stricter Sabbath enactments will be passed than the present legislative relic of Puritan rule can give us any idea of. As the New Testament throws no light by which legislators can be guided in framing Sunday laws, only to repeal them, recourse must be had to the Old Testament. Then what! The Bible Sabbath enforced will cause traffic of all kinds to cease, public and private conveyances on land and water, the duties of the toilet, public restaurants, private cooking, kindling of fires for any purpose, all manner of labor and journeyings will all come under the ban of legal prohibition. Our hearts, our mouths and our ears will be closed to all human sympathies and endearments, and only open to the things of God, psalm singing, praying, reading works on Divinity approved by law, the ordinances of the Church and the interests of the clergy. Who can wonder that in the olden time under such a rule the people yawned, "Behold what a weariness it is!"

Then think of it ye lukewarm Liberals who dwell at ease in Zion, there will be no Sunday papers then, and Common Sense will not be found in the land; the inanities of the Pacific Churchman will take the place of papers "spicy and bold;" the Banner of Light will be furled, and there will be no Truth Seeker or Investigator; the Golden Age will be a thing of the past, and there will be no Index, only the Index Expurgatorium; and alas, alas! there will be no News Letters and quacks will abound. Amid the lurid light of this literary destruction there remains one small prospective comfort—the Jolly Giant will be no more. Peace to his ashes.

God in the Constitution and Sunday the property of priests! Libera nos Domine. But in their zeal and power will they be content with a sabbath enslavement one day in seven? The Old Testament as a part of the Constitution enforces other Sabbaths. What shall be done with the new moon? Does not Psalm Lxxxi, 3, 4; say, Blow up the trumpet in the new moon, in the time appointed, in our solemn feast day; for this was a statute for Israel and a law of the God of Jacob? The new moon is frequently spoken of in the same sense of sacredness as the weekly Sabbath, as in Amos viii, 5 When will the new moon be gone that we may sell corn? And the Sabbath that we may set forth wheat?

There exists the same authority for the observance of the new moon that there is for observing one day in seven. Why too should the yearly Sabbath, one year in seven, be neglected, and the year of Jubilee? Unless Protestants accept the traditions of the Church of Rome, how are they to tell what of the Old Testament ceased to be obligatory when Christianity superseded Judaism? The New Testament is very indefinite on this point. Peter and Paul were antagonists on this very subject, and separated leaving the great question unsettled. Peter wished to graft Christianity on Judaism, while Paul preferred Paganism. The end of each seems to be attained in the Christianity which now exists. Judaism is the warp, Paganism the woof, and the teachings of Jesus the coloring. Pagan days christened are observed as faithfully as in the Augustan age. Judaism has its trade mark on Christian institutions, which will give our future clerical lawgivers ample scope to enact any law which may suit their own interest by the very indefiniteness of the fundamental law, the Bible of the Old and New Testaments. We may yet hear sung again, in good earnest, the following:

OLD SONG.

A Presbyterian cat sat watching of her pray,
And in the house
She caught a mouse
Upon the Sabbath day.
The Minister offended at such a deed profane,
Threw by his book,
The cat he took,
And bound her in a chain.
Thou damn'd confounded creature and blood sucker, says he,
'Tis enough to throw
To hell, below,
My holy house and me.
Thou well mayst be assured thou blood for blood shall pay,
That in thy strife
Took mouse's life
Upon the Sabbath day.
O, then he took his Bible book, and earnestly he pray'd
That the great sin
The cat was in
Might not on him be laid.
And straight to execution was poor Grimalkin drawn.
When on a tree
There hanged was she
While Pres. John sung a psalm.
Since the act of Puritan and they that bear such sway
You ne'er must kill
A louse nor mouse
Upon the Sabbath day.

CHRISTIANITY.

BY HUDSON TUTTLE.

Christianity is a sapless trunk, on whose leafless, moss-grown branches, theological owls echo the mournful monody of salvation to man never lost?

What assurance have we that a century hence will not regard the creeds and formulæ of the churches as we regard the childishness of the Puritans, or the corruption of Romanism?

Religion has ostracized Gallileo, Bruno, Darwin, Huxley, Tyndall, Mill, Paine, Jefferson, Shakespeare, Dickens, and many other leaders of mental and moral achievement.

The conflict of the ages has been the conflict between the received religion and the tendency of civilization. The Saviors of the world, one and all, have suffered martyrdom at the bloody hands of religion.

The past needed sects and the battle of conflicting creeds; the present has no use for them. They are dead bodies, once pregnant with vitality, now festering in decay. Something else is required. It is positive knowledge, scientific accuracy of thought and demonstration.

If it be known that mankind move onward with the absolute certainty of planetary bodies around their central orbs; that there is no retrogression, and as yesterday's thoughts are replaced by to-day's, as to-day's will yield to-morrow's, it is our duty not to stand in the way of this tidal flow in the sea of humanity.

LETTER FROM LENA CLARKE.

SHE HEARS BEECHER AND VISITS SLADE—SOMETHING ABOUT THE EDDY FAMILY.

We are in receipt of a letter from Mrs. Lena Clarke, dated Westmorland Hotel, October 19th, from which we call as follows:

This morning I had an appointment with Slade, the medium. I was grievously disappointed in him. I wished to test his powers as a medium, being a perfect stranger to him. I asked, by writing on a slate, some simple questions, none of which were answered as common sense would dictate, from a spirit such as my husband. He gave me about ten minutes of his time, for which he charged five dollars.

Last evening I went to hear J. M. Peebles tell what he saw on his three days' visit the last week to the Eddy Brothers in Vermont. Among the visitors whom he found at the house were persons from various parts of Europe. He said that the spirits talked French with the Frenchmen, German with the Germans, and Russian with Russians. He said that on the second evening of his visit eight departed spirits placed themselves in beautiful bodies and walked on the stage. He saw Honto and a large number of other spirits materialized, and was perfectly satisfied with the demonstrations. The New York Sun says Mr. Oleott last week had a powerful electric battery brought from Brooklyn and experimented on Miss Honto, the materialized spirit of the Indian girl. When the full power of the battery was turned upon her she did not wince. She was also weighed on Fairbanks' scales, with two results; the first time 88 pounds, the second 65, changing her weight at will. The materialized spirits prophesy that after a year or two they will be able to appear as public speakers, and after their orations vanish in air in the presence of the multitudes.

Yesterday morning I started out early for Mr. Beecher's church, in Brooklyn, with a friend. When the doors opened a dozen armed policemen were there to keep back the crowd. We were fortunate in securing a good seat. Every place where a seat could be placed was filled, and many people were standing. It looked more like an opera than a church. Every one looked happy and smiling. There could not have been less than 3,000 people. The music and singing were delightful, the congregation joining in. Mr. Beecher looked thoughtful and pleased, fresh and not unhappy, a halo at times seemed to surround him.

The platform where he sat was decorated with vases, filled with beautiful and delicate ferns, tube roses, gladioles, autumn leaves, &c. I was surprised and delighted with his discourse, not being prepared to hear such views enunciated in any church. He is in himself a power, bubbling over with love, life, magnetism and spirituality. One of the numerous broad assertions he made was that a man can be a Christian without belonging to any church or organization; that churches are schools to get men to become God-like, which some churches fail in doing, and that only as men live out the Christ nature can they become like God and a part of him. I think his experience is benefitting him, forcing him to speak and live the truth as never before.

I shall be with you again soon, if the angels are willing. Love to you all. From your sister, and co-worker in the cause of humanity,
LENA CLARKE.

A SPIRIT WHO DID NOT KNOW HE WAS DEAD.

EDITOR COMMON SENSE:—Perhaps some of the readers of your sterling journal may be interested in the following story, which was related by a reliable lady of San Jose. Just after she had "outgrown" Methodism, and come into the light of Spiritualism, like all other young converts, she felt a special desire to try and induce others to embrace the new doctrines, and for this purpose she was constantly arguing with those who entertained different views. Among the number was a "soul sleeper," by name Charles Clement, with whom she spent much time in argument, without making any inroad in his particular way of thinking; and one day, in a spiritual debate, they both became angry, and abruptly terminated their discussion. They never saw each other again, the man dying within three months from that time.

Shortly after his death this lady attended a private circle, and the spirit of Charles Clement, through the medium, (who was a stranger to her) wrote out the remainder of his argument, resuming it just at the point where they left off. The lady was much astonished, and said to him, "If you still retain your belief, and find it true, that souls are unconscious after death, how came you here?" He said, "You talk very strangely; I came here to try to prove to you my doctrine of soul-sleeping. What is the matter with you all? I can't get Laura (his wife) to speak to me, and I think she has become deaf, for I speak very loud to her and she pays no attention to me." The lady then said, "Charles, don't you know that you are dead?" He quickly replied, "Do you think I am a fool? I am not dead, but standing here, face to face with you, talking to you, and yet everybody seems to treat me indifferently."

There are several points to be elucidated, if this story is true, and the lady says she can bring witnesses to testify to it. This conversation took place in writing, while the spirit thought it was talking, and only the medium heard him. Then, if he was dead and did not know it himself, why did he not recognize others in the spirit world, and through them learn of his condition? He must have been a soul-sleeping somnambulist, to be unconscious in the other world, and stalking around in this for recognition. Is this an isolated case or are there others like it in the annals of Spiritualism.
S. J.

San Jose, Nov. 2d, 1874.

There are many others like it; but this condition usually lasts but a short time. Though the communication was in writing, it is not averred that the spirit moved the hand of the medium. The writing was by impression on the mind of the medium. As to the change of views in the other world, the process is quite as gradual as in this. The Baptist remains a Baptist, and the Methodist a Methodist, until by slow progress they ascertain the truth. It is quite natural that a spirit should endeavor to carry on an argument as of old, even on such a subject as his own existence as a spirit, he not yet realizing that he was a spirit. As to the query why he is not at once aware of the presence of other spirits, and is not informed by them of his changed condition, it is probable that he may see spirits and think they are still "in the flesh." We leave this question, however, to some of our correspondents.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

COMMON SENSE is furnished to subscribers for Three Dollars per annum, in advance. Letters intended for the Business Department should be addressed:

AMANDA M. SLOOUM, BUSINESS MANAGER, 236 Montgomery st.

TRAVELING AGENTS.—Prof. W. H. Chadey, Mrs. Flora Wellman Chadey, and J. L. York are authorized to receive subscriptions for COMMON SENSE, and receipt for money due this office. LOCAL AGENT—Miss Abbie W. Baker, San Francisco.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

Remarkable Fulfillment of a Dream—Medicus.....	304
Singular Circumstance.....	305
The Bible Sabbath Legalized—Mackie.....	306
Christianity—Hudson Tuttle.....	306
Letter from Lena Clarke.....	307
A Spirit who did not know he was dead.....	307
Rates for Clubs.....	308
Spiritual Circles.....	309
Spiritualism according to the Adventists.....	310
Charter Oak Hall.....	311
Christian Liberality.....	311
Lycium for Self Culture.....	312
A Prophecy—P. B. Randolph.....	313
Liberality of Liberals.....	313
Poetry.....	314

COMMON SENSE.

WILLIAM N. SLOOUM, EDITOR.

AMANDA M. SLOOUM, ASSISTANT.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, NOV. 7, 1874.

Subscribers are requested to notice the date attached to their names on the address. "May 16'74" means that the recipient should have paid for his paper six months ago, but has failed to do it. Our terms are necessarily in advance. Some subscribe for six months, and a number of such subscriptions expire with this number, "Nov. 7'74." We hope all who see their papers so marked will renew their subscriptions without delay, sending us the money for another six months, or, if convenient, for a year in advance.

DR. DEAN CLARKE is to lecture at the Hall of the Spiritualists' Union, 911 Market street, to-morrow (Sunday) afternoon at 2 o'clock, subject, "What do we know about God?" In the evening, "What do we know about the spirit world, and its relations to this life?" Mr. Clarke has settled here as a permanent resident, and will speak occasionally as circumstances may require. Our home speakers should be encouraged, and we hope to see a large audience in attendance whenever one of "our own" occupies the platform.

The lectures of Mrs. Mackinley, at the hall of the Spiritualists' Union, last Sunday, was listened to with pleasure. The evening discourse on mediums consisted mainly of sketches of the character and services of prominent mediums, including A. J. Davis, A. B. Whiting, Ascha W. Sprague, T. L. Harris and others, with quotations from their writings.

We have received No. 7 of the Spiritual Scientist, a twelve page weekly, "devoted to the science, history, philosophy and teachings of Spiritualism." It is handsomely printed on tinted paper, and is filled with good reading matter. It emanates from that prolific fountain of good things, Boston.

Robert Collyer of Chicago has decided not to go to New York. He feels under obligations to remain with the people who have been so uniformly kind and appreciative, even at a lower salary.

RATES FOR CLUBS.

DEAR COMMON SENSE:—I see in your number of October 31st this: "For $1,000 per annum we will engage to print 500 copies extra for free distribution." Now, sir, if you will, by agitating it a little while, you might get perhaps more than that amount of money, by giving two copies of the COMMON SENSE for $5 to the same name, or three copies for $7, for surely there are enough Liberalists who are able to take two or three copies. It is the duty of all who have got their spiritual eyes open, to do a little to open the eyes of friends; yes, and make friends of some of our enemies by opening their eyes. We might pay you $2 and have you mail a copy for one year to names of our relatives or friends in orthodox ignorance. I, for one, would subscribe for two copies. I have sent two copies of the Religio-Philosophical Journal for one year, and three copies for three months to others. I pay in advance; the paper, of course, to be stopped when the time is up, unless I see fit or am able to continue it, or send it to some one else. I am, sir, a friend to freedom and Common Sense.

Watsonville.

Yours as ever, E. T. SLIGHT.

We will gladly furnish two copies for $5 to any one who will pay for them to give away, and we will mail to any address for that price. We have not fixed any club rates for the paper, because we could not afford to do so. Unless we can greatly increase our edition, we cannot offer the paper for less than $3 per annum, because with our present edition, about 1200, fifty-two papers cost more than three dollars. By adding one thousand to our list, we could print the extra papers for $2 per annum, there being no extra cost for type setting. On an edition of ten thousand we could make money at $2 per annum. This is the reason why papers of large circulation can be afforded at low rates, the additional cost being only for white paper and press work, with a little extra expense for mailing.

A WORD ABOUT AGENTS.

We have paid agents who solicited subscriptions one dollar of every three collected, but, except in a few instances, the plan has been an injury to us, for very few agents have devoted time to the business; they merely took the money of their neighbors and put one-third into their own pockets. The offer was not intended to cover such cases, but was designed to encourage actual workers for the paper. The plan has also prevented subscriptions in some localities, where the people, instead of paying three dollars to help the enterprise, waited, and some are waiting to this day, to join neighborhood clubs, so they can get the paper for $2. In one locality our traveling agent ascertained that nearly every Spiritualist was waiting till, by means of a home agent, they could get the paper for two dollars, which is less than half its actual cost during the first year of its publication. Give us aid now, and in a few years you can have the paper for two dollars, and we will print a great deal better paper than we do now.

By far the best local agents we have had are those who have worked without pay, for the good of the cause. The agent at Santa Cruz, a lady, refused to accept a paper for her services, and actually advanced the money for some of her subscribers.

SPIRITUAL CIRCLES.

A correspondent writing for information concerning spiritual circles, says:

"I have lately become interested in Spiritualism, but I find it too great an expense to continually attend mediums' circles. Do you know of circles or meetings for mutual improvement and development? There must be plenty of people who would be glad to meet together to promote each other's growth in liberal and spiritual ideas. He that puts his hand to the plough and turneth back, is surely not a worthy follower of the spiritual philosophy. Whenever two or three are met together for good, there will surely be good influences around them."

The best way for our correspondent is to organize a circle among his own personal friends. From four to eight persons are enough. Care should be taken to select those likely to harmonize. They should be of about the same age, and station in life, or at least there should be no great diversity as to mental capacity. All should be in good health, and after sitting one or two evenings, if any consider themselves injured by it, they should withdraw from the circle, or perhaps, what would be better, let those withdraw from whom the unfavorable influences are known to come. Some people cannot sit in circles without drawing on the vitality of others. What they gain others must lose, and as self-protection is the first law of nature, it is right for each to take care of number one. Sitting in promiscuous circles, as a rule, is not beneficial to anyone, and is only advisable for those who have spirit friends who understand the law, and are capable of affording them protection; yet even they sometimes suffer from contact with persons whose magnetism is deleterious to them. Persons who dislike each other should never sit together. After a developing circle is once formed, consisting of friends or persons congenial to each other, it should not be disturbed by the admission of others or the loss of any composing it. The attendance should also be regular, and the meetings held once or twice a week on the same evenings. The arrangement of the circle, when finally decided, should also be the same, the seances should be in the same room, and even the seats should be in the same position. The object should be serious and candid inquiry, and none of the manifestations should be treated with levity or derision. It is not necessary to have a professional medium, nor in fact is it necessary that any of the circle be Spiritualists. On an average one medium will be found in each family, whether believers or not. The usual method is to join hands, though some sit near each other without touching. It generally facilitates harmony to join hands. The light should be dim, the room well ventilated, and the door locked, so that there may be no interruption of the circle for one hour, which is long enough for a sitting, as a general rule. Vocal music is a great aid to induce harmony. The first indication of spirit presence is generally a cool breeze sweeping over the hands, and sometimes the face. If there is a medium in the circle the fact will be manifest before many sittings. After sitting a half or three-quarters of an hour, it is well to unclasp hands, and sit another half hour, free to write, if so impressed, or to move about as one may wish. If any are affected, no resistance should be made, although the movements may appear somewhat ridiculous at first. Those who prefer to sit for raps or table tippings, which, by the way, usually attract a lower order of spirits, can sit around an uncovered table, with the palms of the hands in contact with the upper surface. The right hand of each may touch the left of the next sitter, if desired. There should be leadpencils and writing paper on the table, for use in case they are required. When motions of the table or sounds are produced, one person should be selected to ask questions, in order to prevent confusion. The speaker should talk to the table as to an intelligent person, and after stating that three raps mean yes, one no, and two doubtful, the first questions should properly be whether or not those composing the circle are in the most favorable position for manifestations. If not, seats should be changed, until the circle is properly arranged. After reaching this stage every circle will have experience enough to go on unassisted.

THE "Common Sense Publishing Company" made a dollar and a half this week in an unexpected manner, from a man who, six months ago, subscribed for a year, and promised to pay "next week." Our collector has called at his house a half dozen times during the six months, without getting the money, and we had despaired of ever getting it, and had marked the delinquent off the list, when he saw an advertisement in the paper he did not like, and thinking it would be a "crusher" to order his paper stopped, he sends in the money, with the message, "discontinue my paper." It had already been done, but this little circumstance reminds us that only two subscribers have fallen off during the last three months, during which we have gained over two hundred. The advertisement which displeased the gentleman may be found at the head of the last column, on the last page. It is addressed to Spiritualists and other Liberal Thinkers. It was written for good cause, as many who have had occasion to purchase spiritual publications well know.

WELL USED.—Col. Stevenson, the U. S. Shipping Commissioner, has for more than a year given free use of two large rooms in the building where his office is located for a Sailors' Reading Room. On Saturday afternoons the rooms are used by a Sewing Society, in which the young women of the neighborhood are taught needle-work, by some ladies of the Episcopal church. On Sunday morning the rooms are used by the Swedish Lutheran Church. In the afternoon, from 1 to 3 an Episcopal Sabbath School is in session, and from 3 to 4 P. M. Episcopal service is held, while in the evening the entire suite of rooms are given up for the use of the Temperance League, all free of charge.

Elizabeth Cady Stanton says "The true relations of man and woman—the foundations of the family and home—are of far more importance than any question of church or state can possibly be."

SPIRITUALISM ACCORDING TO THE ADVENTISTS.

EDITOR COMMON SENSE:—As you have taken no notice of the discourses given by the Advent preachers in their tent in this city, and as some of them have been of special interest to Spiritualists, I send you the outlines of the best to which I have listened:

The lecturer began by admitting all that was said of the raps, the tippings, the communications, and even the materialization. And now said he, as to the cause. It is of the devil, the father of lies and deceptions, and of all manner of humbug. If we believe in the scriptures, we cannot but believe that these things are really just what they are said to be. The Bible tells us that in the last days scoffers shall come. That they shall seek familiar spirits, and do wonders and miracles, and see visions, and talk in unknown tongues, and deny God and the Bible, say that sin is not sin, and that marriage is a delusion and a fraud. And just so do these Spiritualists. And the Bible tells us further, that such things are forbidden. The saints of God are forbidden to listen to them, or to follow them; for it is written that they shall deceive the very elect if it were possible.

The Witch of Endor was the great Spiritualist of her day. She had to hide in a cave. The law of God had ordered her to be put to death. Saul sought her not till God had forsaken him. Was it Samuel that she raised up? Not at all. She called to her aid her master, the devil. When he came to her she knew Saul. He personated Samuel. He answered all Saul's questions for her; and Saul understood well that he was consulting the foul fiend. So it is when you go to your medium. You ask for the spirit of your grandfather, or of some deceased friend. The devil knows them all, with all their secrets. He personates them. He presents himself to the vision of the medium in their shape. He answers questions, and he deceives you with lies. He undermines all the teachings of the past. He unsettles morals, he denies religion, he encourages those who go after the wise women and the familiar spirits, to abandon all the means of salvation, that they may be damned and lost forever.

Swedenborg, the great father of Spiritualism, said that there were lying spirits. Edmunds and Davis make the same confession. And lying spirits cannot be good spirits, they cannot be of God. But all spirits must be in affinity with either God or the devil; and as these are not of heaven they must be from hell. And they show plainly where they are from by what they teach. If the devil were here to-night, and we were to ask him what sort of a fellow satan was, what do you think he would say? Would'n't he tell you that he was a pretty good chap, and very much misrepresented and abused by the clergy? I guess he would. And this is precisely what the spirits answer through the mediums.

Do you ask him is there is a God? He answers No! no such thing; and so do the spirits through the mediums.

Shall we ask him if the Bible is the book of life? He says it is a fraud and a delusion, misleading men and women to their destruction. And so do the mediums.

Do you ask satan if Jesus is the son of God, and the way of salvation? He laughs at you, and denounces the story as a humbug. And the mediums do the same.

Do you ask the devil if sin is wicked and wrong, and if it will be punished hereafter? He says no, that sin is not sin, is not wicked, and there is no wrong in doing just as you please. And the spirits and the mediums say the same thing.

Do you ask if people shall marry, and live decently, and cling to one another in good faith, forsaking all others? and satan laughs at you for a simpleton. So do the mediums. They tell you that marriage is a delusion and a fraud. That it is better to live single and do as you please; and that it is no sin to do whatever your nature desires, even to the length of promiscuous intercourse, if such be your inclination.

Thus you see the platform of the devil and of the Spiritualists is the same, plank for plank, proving that they come from the same source. It reads as follows:

The devil is a good fellow.

The Bible is a fable.

Christ was simply a bastard.

Sin is not wicked.

There is no punishment for it.

Marriage is slavery.

True liberty is to do just as you please.

And now, my friends, if this doctrine be not of the devil, and the direct means of enticing men and women to hell, tell me what is? Tell me where you can find anything worse than this, and I will try and denounce that also? The lecturer, as he went along, read from the works of Spiritualists to prove his positions. LAKE.

Our correspondent thinks this kind of talk is worthy of reply in extenso. We do not; consequently what we have to say will be very brief. We have only to say that if the devil (supposing there to be one) has such power to mislead poor mortals, what sort of a God must that be which permits it?

Many repulsive doctrines can be fastened on Spiritualism by quoting individual Spiritualists, just as almost everything that is vile can be justified by quotations from the Bible. The platform given by this honest preacher is anything but the platform of Spiritualists. As they do not believe in the devil, of course they cannot consider him "a good fellow." As the Bible is full of Spiritualism, it is not of course considered a fable, but a historical record, made by man, a book not to be worshipped, but read, and judged according to its value, the same as any other book.

Instead of preaching that there is no punishment for sin, Spiritualists believe there is no forgiveness for it; that whoever sins must suffer; that this is a law of nature.

And finally, as to lying spirits, their existence is a fact, and probably will continue to be so as long as lying men are constantly going from this world to the other. The Tent preachers and others of that sort cannot live always.

CHARTER OAK HALL.

A discussion or "conference" is held on Sunday afternoons, at Charter Oak Hall, on subjects selected by those who participate. For several weeks past the subject has been Government. On Sunday last it was Freedom, and our reporter was somewhat surprised to hear "freedom of the affections" made a prominent topic, the leader being Mr. Butler, who acted also as President. Of course he opposed freedom in this direction. He first referred to Free Speech, and a Free Press, saying in effect, that we ought not to be free to speak ill, that freedom should be used only to say good things of people. The drift of his remarks was in favor of repression in everything relating to human action; except in the right direction. [Who is to be the judge as to what is right?]

W. N. Slocum suggested that Mr. Butler did not go below the surface; he did not agree with him in any particular, but made no attempt to review Mr. Butler's argument. He referred merely to one portion as an illustration—that was with regard to speaking ill of others. He thought that to analyze character is right, whether the analysis be favorable or unfavorable to the subject of it. Our object should be to arrive at a truthful judgment, and to give truthful expression to opinion. True, it is better as a rule to reflect on the good there is in human nature than on the evil, but to speak good only would have a tendency to make us hypocritical. If we have anything to say of any person we should say the truth, even though it be uncomplimentary. We cannot always remain silent. There are evils which demand condemnation, and we fail of our duty if we fail to speak as the truth requires.

A Mr. Arnold made a few remarks to the effect that if we were all free to act out nature, we would go back to wild beasts. [Perhaps some would.]

Mr. Martin spoke a few words mainly in opposition to Mr. Butler. He favored freedom, woman suffrage, etc. If we did not sometimes speak of the evil there is in people, our children would be misled by evil companions they should be warned against. He spoke also of freedom for the affections, saying that our regard for others does not in the least detract from our love for our own family, but it rather adds to our capacity to love.

Capt. Smith asked why persons should be compelled by the marriage tie, or any other bond, to pretend to love those they do not. He favored freedom under the guidance of the judgment.

Several other persons spoke on social freedom, a subject heretofore tabooed in this hall. As the remarks were not very profound we do not report them. The best were made by a lady, who thought we should purify our hearts and enlighten our understandings, so as to fit us for freedom.

The subject for consideration to-morrow was not announced.

In the evening the usual seance was held, and several remarkable tests given. The hall was crowded, as usual.

Mrs. Low, one of the mediums, described a spirit calling himself William Lunn, who she said had lost one leg, and one of the fingers of the left hand. A man in the gallery recognized the description, and asked some questions, which were answered, but the medium suggested that as there was some ill feeling between the spirit and the man, the latter better have a private interview. The man replied: "No, I don't want to meet him alone. That man was shot to death, and I was one of the party that did the shooting." He did not say whether it was a lynching operation or an execution made under orders during the war.

CHRISTIAN LIBERALITY.

The growth of liberality in the churches was pleasantly illustrated in this city on Sunday evening, when Rev. Dr. E. L. Rexford was installed pastor of the First Universalist Church. The service was opened by an invocation by Rev. Thomas Eliot, Unitarian, of Portland, Oregon. Rev. Dr. Cohen, of the Temple Emanuel, read a psalm, and Rev. Mr. Parker, Universalist, made a prayer. Rev. W. E. Ijams, pastor of the Green Street Congregational Church, then preached the installation sermon, a very liberal, sensible discourse. He said that eclecticism should be considered as the only true principle in Christian theology. Seek only the good and true in each sect, and cling tenaciously to what you have proved to be true. He spoke kindly of all the sects, even the Hebrews. Of the Universalists and Unitarians he said:

"We owe to them the recognition of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of the race. Go back one hundred years and you will find that we had no Heavenly Father, but a dreadful God, with a frown on his face and a scourge in his hand. The mission of the Universalists has been to emphasize the discovery of God as the father of all men, even of wicked men. Universalists should be termed Restorationists, for preaching the final victory of good over evil.

To our Unitarian brethren is due the restoration of dethroned reason to her throne. Authority ruled in Christendom until the Unitarians began to think. Reason was sick and in prison, and they visited her, naked and they clothed her, hungry and they fed her, athirst and they gave her drink. Bigots define Unitarianism as hostility to Jesus, but it stands by the Christ of history, placing on his brow the title of the "King of men." Were he living now, it would recognize his royalty and be the last to forsake him in his mission."

The installation prayer was made by Rev. Mr. Hamilton, Presbyterian, and the charge to the pastor given by Rev. Mr. Stebbins, Unitarian. Rev. Mr. Elliot spoke briefly of the duties of congregations to pastors, and Rev. Chauncey Park, Congregationalist, gave out the closing hymn. At the conclusion of the services Rev. Mr. Ijams was warmly congratulated on his liberal discourse. Really the world moves.

Infinite toil would not enable you to sweep away a mist; but, by ascending a little, you may often look over it altogether. So it is with our moral improvement; we wrestle fiercely with a vicious habit, which would have no hold upon us if we ascended into a higher moral atmosphere.

LYCEUM FOR SELF CULTURE.

Last Sunday afternoon there was a very full and lively meeting. Mr. H. L. Knight opened. He asked the question, Has the workingmen of America, and of California in particular, made a good and wise use of the ballot? And he did not hesitate to answer in the negative. He said we are always seeking for some short and easy path to perfect happiness. We do not want to make a diligent study of all the particulars and conditions. We are prone to hunt for some universal panacea that will, like some great machine, do everything with one simple stroke.

In politics we are apt to say give us the ballot, and we shall be all right. The women think if we only give them the suffrage, it will smooth their way to every other good. The pious man says, seek the Lord and his righteousness, and all other things shall be added unto you, forgetting that all the piety in the world will not raise a bushel of potatoes. The quack doctor is always finding some medicine of universal efficacy, some kind of pain that will do everything, and save the need of any further study of philosophy or chemistry. The astrologer would have us believe that if parents would only contrive to have all their children born under a propitious aspect of the stars, their future happiness would be amply secured. But all these grand schemes always prove abortive. Human good is not attained in that short, wholesale way. On the contrary, each particular good has its particular cause, and that cause must be studied and put in force, or the effect will not come. Too often have we found this to be the case, and nowhere is the principle so well illustrated as in our political affairs.

The European subject, when he looks round upon the vast domain of nature, monopolised by a few great landholders, when he sees the palace of the millionaire beside the squalid hut of the laborer, when he beholds on the one end of society extravagant waste, and on the other abject and squalid poverty, thinks that if he had the ballot in his hands these things would not be so. When he sees his poor old blind uncle worn out in the service of society, shut up in a squalid workhouse on a mere pittance, and treated like a dog, when he beholds his sister selling herself for gold, and flinging her new born babe into the river, or exposing it on the street to die, he is apt to think that if he had the ballot such things would not be. He flatters himself that the great domain of nature would be more equally distributed, that some curb would be put upon the accumulations of the rich, some limit to the degradation of the poor; and that in a free country, until every cottage had at least plenty of bread, useless and demoralizing finery would be nowhere allowed. But alas! how mistaken he is. Here in California, with the most intelligent working men in the world, with the example of other nations before their eyes, and the ballot in their hands, all these things have happened. We have permitted the largest land grabbing and swindling in the world. In twenty years our millionaires have almost monopolized the wealth and power of the country. We have the most gorgeous palaces, and beside them American citizens driven to despair and death, American women bartered away for bread, and new born babes exposed on our streets to die; showing that political rights cannot cure social evils; that every great wrong has its specific remedy, which must be studied and applied.

The ballot is not a gift to be used at pleasure, that we may reward a friend, or promote some private interest. It is a sacred trust to be used wisely and well. It is the duty of the American citizen to so use this trust that the glory and beauty of republican institutions may be vindicated before all the world. We must not be content to enjoy the right of voting merely; we must use it as a means of social reform. We must cause society to become what we believe it ought to be. We must secure these blessings to ourselves in our old age, and to our children who may come after us. And only when we have done all these things can it be said that we have used our privileges wisely and well.

There was a lively debate after the opening discourse, and the subject was adjourned for two weeks. Next Sunday Dr. Gibbons will open the meeting on the best means of Self Culture. These meetings are open to all after the first address, and it is hoped that those who feel interested in free discussion will give them their attention. They are held at Social Hall, 39 Fourth street, every Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Music and other exercises.

THE CALIFORNIA ETHIOPIAN MINSTRELS, a newly organized troupe, gave their third entertainment at Platt's Hall, on Thursday evening. The company embraces several performers of more than ordinary merit, good singers and dancers, and several who exhibit much dramatic talent. In a smaller hall the music would be still better, some of the voices not having sufficient volume to fill the building. The entertainment closed with a dance. It is said that this company intend to visit the interior. They are worthy of patronage. John Cosgrove is the Business Manager, assisted by Fred Thal.

A NOVEL EXHIBITION.—A very interesting and amusing exhibition may be seen at Keefe's Observatory, at the end of the Railroad wharf, at the foot of Fourth street, near Long Bridge. Visitors can see reflected on a circular canvas every object in the neighborhood—people walking, running, fishing, boat sailing, the rippling water, and the movement of everybody and everything within range, giving all the varied colors, making a living panorama. It is worth a visit, and the walk in a pleasant day is delightful.

We are informed that the claim of $12,500 made by the Submarine and Earthquake Proof Company, (or something like it) against the city, is for the royalty due for the use of the patent in the City Hall Building, so far as the work has proceeded. It has been supposed that the verdict of $10,000 recently obtained was in compensation for the use of the principles involved in the patent, but it now appears that the $10,000 was merely for damages, leaving the royalty still unpaid.

A PROPHECY.

The fact has been often repeated during the last few years that spiritual mediums, astrologers and others have predicted great troubles which are to come to the people of this planet in about the year 1881, or culminating in that year. According to astrology the "aspect" is bad for several years, though worse in '81 than in '82. To give our readers an idea of what is said by the "seers," we quote as follows from the last work of Dr. B. P. Randolph, a pamphlet called "The Ghostly Land, being the Mystery of the Human Soul, its Dwelling, Nature and Power of Materialization." Like all of Randolph's works, it is very wordy, and very much disconnected, but the following, with some omissions, is what the writer says of the troubles ahead, to which, he, however, affixes no definite date:

This land and this whole earth of ours is doomed to pass through a terrible series of convulsions, electric, volcanic, magnetic, climatic,—a general upheaving and overturning of the present state of things the wide world over. Preparations are now going on, and there are portents abroad in the air and lands which are unheeded, but which bode fearful disasters to the earth and man. There will also be social, political and military upturnings, and cataclysms such as were never known before; while the purely physical disturbances will almost equal the terrible event of which the "Deluge" is a traditional reminiscence, which altered the axis of the earth, and changed with the equator; sunk the Old Atlantis and upheaved it again. * * * This took place about fifty-eight thousand years ago. All these recorded things will transpire before the good time arrives, wherein the present false and barbarous civilization will be displaced, and replaced by a true one, which will be inaugurated by a female, and therefore be immeasurably superior.

A spirit of religious persecution is beginning to fill the air, and will finally possess all sects alike, leading to open conflict and such a bloody series of wars everywhere, as only can be waged by God's masterpiece in His behoof. In the name of God they will again redder the rivers and glut the lands with human blood, for no such revelry in carnage ever cursed the earth, as when men murder each other for "pure love of God"! This is in the near future. Its causes will be attributed variously, but the real ones are purely, wholly physical, that is to say, chemical. Bolides, meteors, internal fires, magnetic and electrical storms, comets, earthquakes and volcanic eruptions are the moving elements out of which the bad time, preceding the good, is coming. These all result from firetempests in the sun, which even now are working great changes; but the awful clash will begin as soon as an awful solar event takes place—not long either—the propulsion from explosion of a vast mass of incandescent matter from the sun—a tremendous sheet of fire, which breaks, and streams in zigzag paths about the central orb, thus shrunken one twenty-fourth in size, and of course affecting every other mass in the solar system; changing polarities; melting polar ices; levelling huge mountains; altering ocean beds and river courses; submerging plains and deserts; building new islands and continents amidst the storm-tossed waters; changing earth's angle to the ecliptic plane; completely reversing magnetic, thermal, electric and esothermal lines, thus occasioning sudden climatic leaps from hot to cold and cold to hot, of course generating famine, madness and disease, to say nothing of the millions who reach quick death, leaving their festering carcasses to poison the air, and transform the fair lands into charnel houses, redolent of cadaver and death!

* * * Pestilence will decimate whole nations; and cities by hundreds will utterly perish by fire and flood. People will then begin to realize that money is worthless in itself; they will also doubt, and then deny the existence of a God in any sense or form that belief has ever yet assumed on earth. Thus two starting-points will be established,—the end of selfishness and the abrogation of the clergy, therefore, the last religious war will have been fought, and—what naturally must follow therefrom, in time—national lines and useless governments will be wiped out forever, the divine right of kings and rulers be laughed at, and the solid foundations of universal rule of the people, by the people, for the people, will become for the first time practically possible.

LIBERALITY OF LIBERALS.

A general claim of liberality will not answer as an offset for actual work. Hence, it is pertinent to ask Liberals to name what they have done or propose to do to help humanity in a practical way. Can a satisfactory answer be given?

The churches organize and maintain charities to help the poor and the unfortunate—Liberals have organized nothing of the kind. The churches maintain colleges, seminaries and theological schools—the children of Liberals must attend these sectarian institutions or remain uneducated, because the Liberals have none. The churches build meeting-houses, pay preachers, provide Sunday schools for children—Liberals have no church building paid for so far as we know, have not a dozen halls or places of meeting under their exclusive control, and not more than two or three dozen speakers who succeed in making anything like a respectable living at lecturing. There are two orthodox papers in New York alone, either of which circulate nearly twice as many copies every week as the entire circulation of all the Liberal papers. The orthodox have organizations—a few Societies and Lyceums struggling for existence is all the Liberals can show. We do not believe it is an extravagant assertion to say that orthodox church members even pay more for tobacco and whisky every year than the Liberals for their religion.

The weakness of Liberalism is not on account of a lack of numbers, for it has more than any denomination in the land; it is not poverty, for the Liberals control their full share of the wealth of the country; but it is because they have organized no general enterprises which all Liberals can unite in supporting. And they will remain disorganized and at the mercy of the churches until they commence to build up as well as tear down. How many of The Lyceum readers will be willing to join a band of builders?—The Lyceum.

Mr. N. Martin, of Lane county, Oregon, tells the truth about woman suffrage in the following pithy sentences: "Universal Suffrage is a just cause in which no man or woman need be ashamed to labor—a noble cause which none need be ashamed to advocate. In fact, many but for popularity would at once acknowledge its just merits and become its champions. But long-established customs and deep-seated prejudices are hard to overcome. Progress is, however, apparent to every observing person. The time is not far distant when legislators will overcome their timidity in this regard, and come out boldly for freedom and the right."

The people in churches have outgrown their creeds. The world has no vital faith.

FAUST—A TRAGEDY.

FROM A MANUSCRIPT TRANSLATION BY DON JULIANO

Care builds her nest deep in the troubled breast,
There broods she over sorrow and unrest;
Her ceaseless rockings shake both ease and pleasures;
She hides her well masked face 'neath specious treasures;
Our house and land are cares, our child or wife, or Fire, water, poison, dagger, what you will;
You tremble with vain dread when there's no ill,
And what you never lose, that must you ever sigh for.
The Gods I am not like—I feel, 'tis true,
Like the worm rather than the mud creeps through,
For which, while dust it feeds upon, a slave,
The wanderer's foot forms guillotine and grave.
Is this not dust all, where this lofty wall
With rows of boxes cramps my soaring spirit?
The frippery which with crowds of trifles small
Trammels me in this moth world, wretched wight!
Can I in these find what my nature needs?
What if in thousand books I find it stated
That thus the human heart forever bleeds,
That here and there some poor soul was elated?
Thou hollow skull, why that eternal grin,
But that thy brain, like mine, once wondering pondered,
Bought the fair day above this ceaseless din,
And hunting Truth, in this dim twilight wandered.
Ye instruments must laugh at me I feel,
With cog and pinion, cylinder and ring,
I found the door, ye should its locks unseal,
But tho' your wards are long, no bolts back do they fling!
Secret in working in day's blazing light,
Dense Nature never lets her close veil leave her,
And what she bares not freely to thy sight,
Thou'lt never wrench from her with screw and lever.
Useless old trumpery, I've not taken down,
Ye stand there still just as my sire did leave ye.
And thou old scroll art now all smoke-dried brown,
So long my mournful lamp hath burned beneath thee.
Far better 'twere my little all have squandered,
Than laden with that little here to sweat;
Whatever from your sires you chance to get,
Inherit it, and use it, ere you're sundered.
All that you use not is a heavy burden,
But every moment brings home its own gerdon.

[Faust looking on a bottle of landanum.]

Why fascinates my gaze that spot alone?
Is that small bottle there in truth magnetic?
Why lights soft hope at once my soul splenetic,
As when the moon greets forest wanderer lone?

I greet thee well thou only bottle mine,
Which I with reverence take from out thy shrine;
In thee I honor human art and skill,
Thou essence of the all-glorious slumber juices,
Show to thy master now thy glorious uses,
Thou extract of all subtle powers that kill.

I look on thee, my sorrow is assuaged,
I clasp thee now, still is the strife that raged;
My spirits food-tide slowly ebbs away,
Towards the broad ocean points my spirit's prow,
The mirrored sun path ripples 'neath it now,
To bright new coast lines beckons a new day.
A ferry chariot swoops on hovering pinions
Down from on high; I feel myself adroit
On this new path to pierce the ethereal night,
Until I reach those unknown spheres, dominions
Of pure activity, such glorious life,
Delight divine, and this hast thou departed,
Poor wretched worm? Yes, tempt the daring strife,
And sternly turning with a heart well nerved
Thy back upon this glorious sun below,
Address thyself to rend those gates asunder,
Past which each other man would sneaking go;
Here hast thou room to show that God's dread thunder
Cannot appal or crush the man of worth.
To tremble not before that horrid pit,
Where human phantasy—in reason's dearth—
To vain self torture dooms its halting wit;
To struggle towards that passage to the spheres
Whose narrow entrance all hell's seething sears;
Gladly to dare the leap, no glance behind thee,
E'en with the risk in nothingness to find thee.

Come down at length, thou pure bright crystal goblet,
Unwind thee from that old concealing doubt;
'Tis many a year since I have thought of thee.
Thou glitterest once at my dear father's banquet,
Delightedst there the solemn guests, when he
Who held thee last, before the next of rank set;
The drinker's duty, in a rhyming measure
I unfold the secrets of thy art treasure,
Those pictured carvings; and then at one draught
To drain thy hollow; ah! this makes me think
Of those old evenings when I've seen thee quaffed
In my glad boyhood. I alas! must drink
My draught in solitude; no friendly hand
Will take thee, goblet, emptied out, from mine;
Upon thy beauties my wit will not shine;
Here is a wine which makes one drunk, right soon,
With dark brown stream it blims thy gleaming hollow,
I choose it, and prepare it as my boon;
With my whole soul, this farewell drink I swallow
As festive greeting to yon rising sun.

This portion is republished from last week, the typographical errors corrected.

[He sets the goblet to his lips.]

A SOUND OF BELLS, AND CHORUS SINGING,

CHORUS OF ANGELS—Christ has arisen!
Joy to each mortal wight,
Whom the old Adamite,
Clinging, parental blight
Holds in prison.

FAUST—What angel strains, what melody intense,
Snatches the goblet from my lips with power?
Ye pealing bells, do you invade my sense
With tidings of old Master's first sweet hour?
Sing ye sweet voices now, that soothing song,
Which burial night heard angel throats peaking—
The sealing of humanity's new dower?

CHORUS OF WOMEN—With drugs and sweet spices
His body we bound;
We true ones, his fair limbs
Laid up in the ground,
In napkins and cere-cloths
Cleanly we wound him;
He's not, but the mere cloths
Which were around him.

CHORUS OF ANGELS—Christ is in heaven;
Happy the loving one
Who, through the troublesome,
—Healing, and proving one—
Trial hath striven.

THE WOMAN'S LOT.

Bear witness, I am calm. I read my lot
As soberly as if it were a tale
Writ by a creeping feuilletonist, and called
"The Woman's Lot; a Tale of Every-day;"
A middling woman's, to impress the world
With high superfluities; her thoughts a crop
Of chick-weed errors or of potsherd facts,
Smiled at like some child's drawing on a slate,
"Gentle!" "Oh, yes, gives lessons; not so good
As any man's would be, but cheaper far."
"Pretty?" "No; yet she makes a figure fit
For good society. Poor thing, she sews
Both late and early, turns and alters all
To suit the changing mode. Some widower
Might do well, marrying her; but in these days!
Well, she can somewhat eke her narrow gains
By writing, just to furnish her with gloves
And droskies in the rain. They print her things
Often for charity." O a dog's life!
A harnessed dog, that draws a little cart—
Voted a nuisance.

GEORGE ELIOT.

Special Notices.

DR. BANCROFT'S treatment for Dyspepsia and General Debility has benefited me more than all the medicine I have used for many years.

O. A. BROWN, 519 Sycamore street, Milwaukee.

Dr. Bancroft's office is 204 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

For the very best Photographs go to Bradley & Bulofson's Gallery, with an elevator, 429 Montgomery Street, San Francisco.

Those suffering from that most annoying of the minor miseries of human life—a cold in the head—or from catarrh in any form, should try Dr. Evory's Diamond Catarrh Remedy. Just try it—that's all. Sold at this office, and by all druggists.

Send Austin Kent one dollar for his pamphlets on Free Love and Marriage, etc. He has been seventeen years physically helpless, confined to his bed and chair, is poor and needs the money. He sends four or five well-written essays for one dollar. His address is AUSTIN KENT, Stockholm, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., Box 44.

Farmers, do you know that the Babcock Fire Extinguisher is a sure exterminator of gophers, squirrels, etc., and that it will effectually kill insects on fruit-trees, with little trouble and scarcely any expense. One charge of the machine will exterminate all the squirrels in a hundred-acre field. A new machine, in perfect order, and with six charges, can be purchased at this office. Address COMMON SENSE, 226 Montgomery street.

"THE WOMAN" is a Monthly Journal of Reform—Regarding the subjection of Labor, of Woman, and the Prevalence of War as unnatural evils, induced by false claims to obedience and service; favors the Abolition of the State, of Property in Land and its kindred resources, of speculative income and all other means whereby Intrusion acquires wealth and power at the expense of Useful People. Since labor is the source of wealth, and creates all values equitably vendible, the WOMAN (not by restrictive methods, but through Liberation and Reciprocity) seeks the extinction of interest, rent, dividends and profit, except as they represent work done; the abolition of railway, telegraphic, banking, trades union and other corporations charging more than actual cost for values furnished, and the repudiation of all so-called debts the principal whereof has been paid in the form of interest.

Terms—75c. annually in advance.

Address THE WORD, Princeton, Mass.

E. H. HARTWOOD, Editor.

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, NO. 226 MONTGOMERY STREET.

COMMON SENSE can be purchased at the following places in this city: Patten's, 778 Market; Sharp's, 226 Montgomery, and at this office, 226 Montgomery street, up stairs. Price of single copies, ten cents.

COMMON SENSE.

A Journal of Live Ideas.

VOL. 1.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1874.

No. 27.

Signs of the Times.

A method has been patented in France for preparing leather from tripe, a much better use for it than preparing it for the table.

The sickliest of all sickly trash — the boshy sermons of DeWitt C. Talmadge published in the Christian at Work. They are nauseating.

Because Rev. J. F. Ware preached that there is no literal hell, one orthodox minister said he lied, another prayed that the Unitarian friend might be thrust into hell, and another called him one of the devil's emissaries.

Poverty, disease and crime, says Wendell Phillips, are the great problems of civilization, and the last two are chiefly occasioned by the first. Let all the world arrive at the state desired by Paul, neither poverty nor riches, and the millenium will be at hand.

A telegraphers' newspaper, speaking of the employment of women as operators, says that their power is already felt in the higher style of conversation between male operators over the wires. Low jests and vulgarity have grown less frequent, and an intimation that there is a female operator on a circuit puts a quietus on the most virulent of blasphemers.

Rev. Dr. Dudley, of the Congregational Church, Milwaukee, resigned because of a charge of views. His people would not accept his resignation. He then told them he did not believe in a hell of fire; but that he wanted to preach, if at all, to the people at large, infidels, spiritualists, etc., and wanted free seats, and a society of active workers to sustain him. This is a good sign. One by one the preachers are dropping off from the old forms.

Mr. Morse, the best Inspirational speaker in England, has received during four years, for his services, the following sums: In 1871, 50*l*; in 1872, 88*l*; in 1873, 125*l*, and in 1874, up to October, 108*l*. This sum would scarcely support a speaker in America, it being only about $50 per month. There are those here who work for even less than this, but they can only do it by constantly accepting the hospitalities of friends.

It is said the scheme of A. T. Stewart to furnish a home for homeless working women at low rents, has proved a failure, from the unwillingness of the women to go and come under surveillance. Would not men do the same? To watch people as if they could not be trusted, is a constant imputation of evil, and no one is anxious to live always under a cloud. The sunshine of freedom is pleasant, though it may sometimes reveal vice. Stewart understands dry goods better than he does free women.

The postage on all newspapers, outside of the county where published, must be prepaid at the office of publication after Jan. 1st. 1875.

In the Cincinnati Exposition which has recently closed with such great financial success, the Art Department was thrown open to visitors on the Sabbath.

The Evangelist, a Presbyterian paper, says there is not a man, woman, or child in the whole Presbyterian Church who believes in the dogma of Infant Damnation.

General Sherman, according to the Freeman's Journal, is not a Catholic, but he promised before his marriage that his children should be brought up in that faith.

The revenues derived from the property of the Established Church in England amount to $35,000,000 annually. Twenty-eight prelates of this church receive in salaries $800,000 annually, or nearly $40,000 each.

Rev. Mr. Rexford, of the Universalist Church, San Francisco, uttered good Spiritual doctrine when he said, "No soul will be saved either in this world or the other till he is rescued from ignorance and sin."

Our farmers say there is too much grain. Is not our political economy a little at fault, that when the human family has plenty to wear and plenty to eat, the masses should suffer the most poverty and privation.

The Third Asst. Postmaster General estimates the loss to the Government by the use of stamps a second time at one million dollars per annum, or about five per cent. We do not believe the loss is one per cent. The Washington people judge of the public honesty by their own standard, which is very low.

English people have a queer way of doing things. Four out of a dozen subscribers towards the expenses of a soiree given in honor of J. J. Morse, in London, put their names down for 1*l* 1*s* each, which is the current value of the English guinea. Yankees would get rid of that coin, or knock the odd shilling off in less than no time.

A plant called palo blanco, which grows wild on the plains of Bogota, is to be introduced in the market as a new tea. It is said to possess superior qualities as a beverage. The first infusion of the tea, when taken, excites a pleasant sensation in the stomach and a feeling of renewed strength; the skin becomes moist and the brain and nerves experience agreeable sensations, similar to weak spirits taken in small quantities. The second infusion, made from the same leaves, is recommended for daily use, and the stronger one when one is sick. As an article of diet, it is preferable to that from Asia; it is more fragrant, requires less sugar and is cheaper. Second, as a medicine it is much superior to Chinese or Japanese tea. Third, for the traveler it is invaluable in correcting bad water and restoring strength.

[For Common Sense.]

RELIGION AND SCIENCE.

REPLY TO REV. MR. PLATT, BY E. VOGEL.

The Alta California of the 2d inst. contained, under this head, a discourse by Rev. Mr. Platt, at Grace Church. The following is an endeavor, in the defense of science, to throw more light on the question, "What is the relation of the religions of the world to materialistic science?" The subject, as put forth in these words of the Rev. Mr. Platt, embraces not only Christianity, but all religions, and has therefore to be examined under its broadest fundamental aspects.

What is religion? What is materialistic science? Religion is defined as a system of faith and worship; it is the foundation for the establishment of important laws, intended for the guidance and direction of mankind. Materialistic science also is a system of faith and worship, establishing likewise laws for the guidance and direction of mankind. The faith of religion is in a God, different in the different religions; the faith of science is in Nature, which scientists have a right to call their God.

Thus religion and science are both systems of belief contending for authority over mankind, and the question is, which of the two, the God of religion or the God of nature, is the true or the false God? I said religion and science are struggling for the authority over mankind, which means to say that the ideas by which they are summed up are entertained by men, and exist only through men and their exertions. There are men specially devoted to the maintenance of religion, and others likewise to the maintenance of science. In most countries powerful organizations exist for the maintenance of religion; in Christian countries they are the corporations of ecclesiastics, known under the designation of churches.

That human judgment should be the highest final authority in matters divine, may, at first, seem inadmissible, but first, there is no other power on earth endowed with the faculty of judging, discriminating and qualifying but man, who determines what is good or bad, true or false, human or divine, etc. Second, men really do and have always taken divine things in their own hands, as witnessed by the Rev. Mr. Platt, who computes the errors and superstitions of mankind as one-half belonging to religion, the other to science, and might have added that there is perhaps no subject on which the human family have disagreed and still disagree more widely than religion.

What then is the foundation of human judgment? Is it arbitrariness, or is it dependent on certain laws, in virtue of which unity would be possible? And, if so, are the religious or the scientific party, or both, judging in violation of those laws, thereby perpetuating disunion? With all his perfections and imperfections man is the product of nature, his appearance on earth, his stage of physical, intellectual and moral development are not less dependent on the immutable and inexorable laws of nature than all the other phenomena of the universe.

The universe is the sum of all that exists; it is eternal, infinite, absolute, omnipotent and omnipresent; including all space and all time, all force and all matter, as also all truth and all error; it has the attributes of divinity, it is—God.

The great office of science is to penetrate into the mysteries of nature, to observe and study her phenomena, establish their laws, the relations existing between them, and the manner in which they are dependent on, and explanatory of, each other. Nature being the divine law, and science its expounder, the decision of the true or the false God, belongs properly to science, which is the only tribunal competent to affirm or to deny the existence of a phenomena of nature.

If there can be no doubt that the universe is the all-including-all, that the laws of nature are the laws of God, then religion, not being the law of nature, cannot be the law of God, there being room only for one all-including God, and one all-pervading law.

The claims of religion are not only not founded on any natural phenomena, but they involve no less than the overthrow, the annihilation of that part of the divine order of things which nature has instituted for the direction of human affairs. First, the transmission of sacred writings to living generations, by the special interference of Providence, is an assertion supported by no evidence of fact, and incompatible with every known phenomena of nature. Second, the inspiration, or suggestion of the ideas, contained in those writings, by the direct and special agency of God, is another assertion without evidence of fact, and impossible from the following considerations:

Written or spoken language, as a means of communication, is a human contrivance, dependent on human agreement in regard to the meaning of signs and sounds, and utterly unfit and inadequate for the expression of the immutable and eternal laws of God. It implies the agency of man for its perpetuation and communication to the nations of the earth, for the translation into different languages, and interpretation of the meaning of written or spoken words and sentences. For none of these modes of interference in matters divine is there any sanction, no rule, no principle of interpretation, authorized by God or nature, having ever been established. Assumption of divine authority, on the ground of interpretation, is virtually an abrogation of the legislative power of the Creator by the good pleasure of the creatures, the interested party for whose obedience the law is intended, constituting themselves supreme judges of its meaning and import. It is thus that human arbitrariness has ruled supreme over mankind, that theologians, priests, clergymen, confidently have proclaimed, and do proclaim, the mysterious ways and intentions of an inscrutable Providence, and dispense, without stint, the honors and rewards of heaven, and the terrors of hell.

The history of churches is but an uninterrupted conflict of opinions and wrangling in matters of faith; the variety of modifications that their doctrines have undergone proditions, and the number of dissenting organizations to be counted by the hundreds. There could, at best, be room only for one true religion. By what earthly power could any of the many that claim divinity, be selected as the true one, and where, among those existing, should divinity commence—where human arbitrariness cease? As the laws of nature can be repealed or put aside by no religious or other decree whatever, having prevailed from eternity, long before man and religions had made their appearance, it follows that the history and doctrines of religions can exhibit but the spectacle of a never-ending, irreconcilable conflict and hopeless struggle with nature. And such is indeed the case.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

PROPHECY BY THE LIGHT OF ASTRONOMY.

EDITOR COMMON SENSE:—The article in your last week's paper headed Prophecy, being an extract from a work by P. B. Randolph, presents a fearful state of affairs, but knowing, as I do, the author, I am inclined to think the picture is somewhat too highly colored; but that there is more or less of truth in it we need not go to the seers to ascertain, for the scientists have for years predicted similar evils. The following, from the New York Medical Journal for October, 1872, was written by the well known astronomer, M. L. Knapp, M. D., who, as you see, gives dates and causes. He says:

"The next perihelion passage of Jupiter will occur in 1880; there will be a conjunction of Jupiter and Saturn in 1881; the commensurate perihelion of Uranus and Neptune will occur in 1882; and the perihelion passage of Saturn will occur in 1883; but not the commensurate perihelion of Jupiter and Saturn; this will be deferred until 1915-16. But lively times in physics, lively times for doctors and undertakers also, may be looked for by those who believe in the certainties of Astronomy, all the way from now to then, for Uranus will not complete his perihelion circuit until the going out of the nineteenth century, and Neptune not until 1923; so that malign influences may be looked for under every recurring perihelion approach of Jupiter during the cycle in which we are now sailing, viz: of 1880, 1882, 1904 and 1916. Jupiter will make his perihelion passage in September, 1880; Uranus his in August, 1882; Neptune his in December of the same year, and Saturn his in December, 1885, all within a period of less than five years, by a few days. So close an approximation to the synchronous perihelia of the four planets has not occurred since the Christian era." * * * *

"Whether they will throw a heavier pall over the earth than at their last adjustment, time only will show. The planetary forces will be brought nearer to a focus; but the world is in an advanced condition. Agriculture, horticulture, commerce, the arts and sciences, medical skill and remedies (and he might have added the valuable and powerful assistance from the spirit world in curing diseases) all the protecting comforts of life and health, are a thousand fold more advanced; therefore the world ought to stand it better, and the most advanced and enlightened nations will ride out any great, forcible and long continued pestilential period better than they did even a century and a half ago. * * * The last nearest approach to the synchronous perihelia was the period of 1708 to 1718, (Neptune's latest previous revolution) when they all made their perihelia within less than ten years; and this period, carried through to 1738, (the commensurate period of Jupiter and Saturn) was the most mortal period of the eighteenth century, in which Lord Anson flourished as a circumnavigator, and his ships' crews nearly all perished with scurvy, long before the introduction of lemon juice into the naval service * * * It has been asserted that from 1880 to 1885 the planets Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus and Neptune will approach the earth nearer than they have for eighteen hundred years. This is not the case; but they will then approach the earth more synchronously or co-incidentally than they have since the Christian era, as aforesaid, which is as far back as I have run the calculation. Not only the four large superior planets will make their nearest approach to the earth from 1880 to 1885, but the inferior planet Venus will also make her inferior conjunction and transit the sun again in 1882, eight years after her approaching transit in December, 1874, making her nearest approach to the earth simultaneously with them. And not only this, but also in the said approaching extraordinary epoch, and the most extraordinary year of that period, viz: 1882, our nearest celestial neighbor, the moon, will be making her nearest approaches to the earth, and will, of course, exert her greatest astral influence upon the earth, its atmosphere, its imponderable forces and its living organizations. The extraordinary meteorological phenomena of the year 1873, destruction of crops in Russia, partial famine in Iowa by grasshopper devourings, etc., etc., are indices of what may be looked for, on a grander scale, in the proximate future, when astral influences shall have culminated and poured her heaviest broadsides upon us during a succession of years, say in the interim between 1877 and 1885.

It is evident by the above description that Dr. Knapp ascribes the malign cosmical phenomena, epidemics, etc., which periodically visit the earth, to astral influence, Jupiter ruling, as it were, the pestilential periods, for they regularly recur at his perihelion approaches, and have done so for the last two thousand years. But I will close this article with the hope that it may attract the attention of Prof. Chaney, who has made the Science of Astronomy and Astrology his life long study, and who I know is well able to open to us a vast field of knowledge. I would suggest to you, Mr. Editor, for the thousands of readers of COMMON SENSE, to engage Prof. Chaney for a fair compensation to write a series of articles on these intensely interesting subjects, and I have no doubt that many of the readers would be willing to contribute towards this extra expense as gladly as myself, for the sake of receiving more light on a matter of science so misunderstood by the masses. There are many in this city that advertise as Astrologists, whilst they merely tell fortunes by cards, and one astrologer advertises he is "the only living one," yet I am informed on good authority that he does not use any ephemeris. A man might as well say he can read, yet has never learned the alphabet.

A young man of excellent character, a native of East India, wants a situation as servant with a gentleman traveling, or with the captain of a steamer. He is willing to accept a position as office boy in this city. He is just the man to act as body servant to a gentleman of means. He is neat in appearance, agreeable in manners, and is fidelity itself. Good references given. Apply at this office.

SPIRITUAL MANIFESTATIONS FORTY YEARS AGO.

FACTS BY DON FULANO.

When I was a boy at a girls' school, aged about eight, I lived with my uncle and aunt, at Nailsworth, Gloucestershire. They resided at a place called Spring Hill. This house was rented by my uncle from the executors of an old gentleman named Dyer, who had lived there for many years, had been much attached to the place, and being an old gentleman of singular religious views and misanthropic habits, had a very pretty summer house, with stained and ground glass windows, situated in one corner of an extensive and shady orchard of apple and pear trees. The house itself was a large, irregular and rambling one. On the first floor, at one extreme end of a subsequently added portion of the structure, was the nursery, with a servants' bedroom adjoining. These rooms were over the kitchen, and looked out at the back towards the stables. A long, straight, narrow passage ran right through the building, the bedroom doors opening into it, from the nursery, at the back, to my uncle and aunt's bedroom in the front. At the door of their bedroom the passage turned at a right angle to the left for a few feet, and then went straight on again after another sharp turn to the right, to the head of the stairs, which lead into the hall. At the spot where the second turn to the right was made, and exactly opposite the door of the bedroom which opened at the head of the stairs, was the door of a small chamber over the descending stairs in which I usually slept. Immediately opposite the door of my little room, at the distance of twenty feet or so, opened the door of the strangers' or best room, the windows of which looked out on the lawn. I was a nervous boy, and was frequently kept awake at night, more frequently startled in the very early morning, by all kind of sounds, for which I could not at all account. I remember two distinctly. One was like the noise which would be made by peas thrown in the handfuls scattering on the floor outside. Another like the noise that I fancied would be made by a number of cattle chewing carrots or hard food, and now and then stamping and turning, which always seemed to me to proceed from the hall below. I never remember to have heard these sounds after daybreak, or before dark.

It was my practice to get up at daylight in the autumn mornings, and roam round the orchard picking up the Burgundy pears which had fallen during the night, but careful to give a wide berth to the summer house, of which I always stood in awe. One morning I got up at daybreak for the purpose, and on opening my door walked straight towards the head of the stairs. When about half way towards it, and about ten feet from the best room door, I became aware that the door was about a third open, and that there stood in the opening the figure of an old gentleman in dressing gown and slippers, who stared fixedly at me. I stared for a moment or two in my turn, noting even the pattern of the gown, if not of the slippers, and thus, afraid to go on from some indefinable awe, I walked backwards to the turn in the passage, slipped round the corner and ran as fast as I could to the servants' room. I knocked at their door, and on their waking demanded if any gentleman had arrived over night, and been put in the best room. They said, "No." "Did my father come?" No. "Did Mr. Hornblown?" "No." "Then you had better come and look," said I, "for there is some one there now." We went and looked, found the door open, but nothing more. I told the story at breakfast to my uncle, but was soon laughed out of it, and strange to say, it never impressed me much until years afterwards, when, a grown boy, I heard my uncle describing in the Gloucestershire dialect, the account his old servant Joseph, who was also Mr. Dyer's man, had given him of the apparition to him of his old master, when he was sleeping alone in the nursery, keeping the house alone in the interval between Mr. Dyer's death and my uncle's arrival. "Bless 'e do a walk, Master Willum, he do. I see'd 'em myself, when I war a minding the house. 'a come to the fut of my bed, and 'a stood there, just as a was in life, and all my haar did stand up stiff, and I tried to speak to 'em, and cound'nt, and a tried to speak to I like, and a cound'nt. Bless 'e, 'a do walk."

My father came down from London at intervals to see us. On these occasions I had to sleep with him in the best room. This was such a horror to me that I looked to his coming with dread. In the best room, on the left hand side of the bed, was an iron closet let into the wall, with an iron door inside the wooden one. It was said that this had been Mr. Dyer's room, and that in this cupboard he kept his deeds and papers. Be this as it may, I never slept in the room in windy weather or quiet, but there came at intervals raps, as of a man's knuckles upon that iron door. Having once heard them sleep was at an end. I lay in a cold perspiration, holding my breath till they should come again, and sure enough, after an interval of varying length, again suddenly would those terribly distinct raps break asunder the stillness of the night with a sharpness which sent an electric thrill of terror through my whole system, and sometimes set me trembling till the bed shook. However, this I could bear. But once the door of the room unlatched, and slowly opened, grating on the Brussels carpet. Then, unable to bear the accumulating horrors, I screamed for help. My Father, my uncle and aunt came trooping up from below, but although the half open door was an evidence of the truth of my assertion, they attributed all to the wind, and chided me for a foolish, timid child. When my father came to bed, however, I told him of the raps, and when they came, as before, after the light was put out, I took him up to hear them. He listened and confessed it was queer. He got out of bed and put a chair against the door. They continued still. He lit the candle—they ceased. He extinguished it—they began again. He confessed himself puzzled.

I never heard them once with a lighted candle in the room. The light seemed to be a safeguard against them. This was in the year 1836 or 1837. It was in '48 that the Fox girls, in America, were first led to the discovery of spirit rapping in exactly the same way. If this be so, I was on the verge of the discovery twelve years before. In 1866, being in England, I asked my father if he remembered these circumstances. He said he did. I asked my uncle about old Joseph's tale. He said he remembered his telling it; and also remembered a tale I told of having seen a figure in the best room when a child.

When a beloved hand is laid in ours,
 When, jaded with the rush and glare
 Of the interminable hours,
 Our eyes can in another's eyes read clear,
 When our world-deafen'd ear
 Is by the tones of a loved voice caress'd:
 A bolt is shot back somewhere in our breast,
 And a lost pulse of feeling starts again.
 The eye sinks inward, and the heart lies plain,
 And what we mean, we say, and what we would, we know.
 A man becomes aware of his life's flow,
 And hears its winding murmur, and he sees
 The meadows where it glides, the sun, the breeze;—
 And then he thinks he knows
 The hills where his life rose,
 And the sea where it goes.

—MATTHEW ARNOLD.

STORY WITH A MORAL.

MR. EDITOR:—The account given in your paper last week of the experience of Mr. Fitzgerald, of Maine, who witnessed the Fall River Fire while sick at his own home in Brunswick, reminds me of a similar experience of a Baptist minister's wife in the same State. In 1854 Wm. K. Small, a young student from the Baptist Theological College, came to Buckfield, a small village on the Androscoggin river, Maine, and taught school there, preaching on Sundays in the Union Chapel, the only church then in town, to people of all shades of opinion. His sermons were not at all sectarian, and therefore he was liked by all classes, and in a few years he gained so in popularity that he thought it safe to strike out for his own sect. He gathered those around him who were Baptists, and on consultation it was considered safe to build a church of their own. The Rev. Wm. K. Small, on the next Sunday, made a pleasing sermon, and then appealed to the congregation for aid in constructing a new church, and that audience, including Christians, Infidels, and even Jews, subscribed liberally on the spot, and those who had no money subscribed from two to six weeks manual labor. A splendid church went up in a very short time, and Mr. S. preached in it most sweetly, and people were delighted with him; but Mr. S. soon conceived another little plan; he wanted a parsonage. When his plans were perfected, he appealed as before, to his hearers, and they responded manfully to it, so that in the course of three months a house worth about fifteen hundred dollars was built, without costing him anything, but giving the orders as he wanted it. When it was finished he, with his wife and child, departed for Yarmouth, 49 miles distant, near Portland, Maine, to her brother, on a visit. About 1 o'clock, A. M., she woke her husband, exclaiming "Willie, Willie, the house is on fire." He answered, "You are dreaming." She insisted upon it, but he did not believe it. The next morning they received a telegram, stating that their new house was burned at midnight. Mrs. Small was at the time in good health.

They returned the same day to find the vision of his wife confirmed. But Rev. Mr. S. was a shrewd man, and knew just how to touch the people's pockets. The next Sunday he preached one of the most pleading sermons, appealing again in glowing language to his hearers for another parsonage, and stated that his work was so blessed because his hearers were in full sympathy with him, and it could be more so yet, if he was provided with a home. Again this mixed congregation responded to his appeal promptly, and this time Mr. S. laid out his plans for a house worth two thousand five hundred dollars, and it was built by the people like the other, and when it was finished the whole town gave him a donation party, and nearly furnished the whole house with everything conceivable, and with provisions enough to last them six months. Having lived next door to him I know.

He preached after this a year or over to this congregation, and having become popular by that time he received (as he stated) a call from the Lord to preach in Bangor, Maine, for a salary of twelve hundred dollars. Of course so strong a call he could not resist, having received but $500 per year there; so he went to Bangor, and the people of Buckfield employed another minister, who moved into the parsonage. At the end of a year the Rev. Small sent a bill of $200 for rent. The deacon of the church called a meeting of the members, and all were of the opinion that the house belonged to them as a parsonage, and therefore they would not pay any rent. One of the deacons went to Bangor with their message, but Mr. S. said if they could show that he ever gave it to them he would give it up. This he knew they could not do, and so they settled the matter by paying him $2000 for the house. I forgot to mention that after the second house was built he commenced preaching sectarianism, so that all the liberal element went back to Union Chapel again, and employed liberal speakers. Small denounced them from his pulpit with the vilest epithets, and called the chapel a hog pen.

MORAL.—Liberalists, don't sustain a sectarian, no matter how sweet he preaches. Don't help to build them churches, as they will drop you as soon as they can stand alone. If you have any dealings with them, make sure you have everything in black and white, or you may find yourself minus of what rightfully belongs to you. If sectarians denounce Spiritualism, don't get excited and quarrel with them in anger, but coolly reason with them, and the victory will be on your side every time, because people now-a-days will think for themselves in spite of the ministers.

VERITAS.

SPIRIT LIGHTS.—Mrs. C. Anderson, a medium, writes from the Isle of Wight to the London Spiritualist as follows:—"On the third of this month, September, I went with my daughter and servant to Freshwater and Alum Bay, some seventeen miles, to see a dear friend who was there for a few days from Rochester, and on starting for home the rain that had threatened all day came down in torrents, nearly blinding us. When night closed in it was so dark that we could not see the road. In my irritation at this annoyance I mentally upbraided "Oress," who has for years been my controlling spirit, at his want of love in not helping us, when I heard this reply distinctly—"What is worth having is worth asking for. Did you ask me to do so, dear child?" I had not. But immediately a light was thrown all along the road we had to travel, and this light played on the umbrella of the servant sitting opposite in the pony chaise. I drew my daughter's attention to it, and she insisted it must come from the moon or a bright cloud, and in her scepticism stopped driving and looked up, but all was dark as Erebus, with the exception of this light on us and along the path. This continued till we reached home, thus proving not only the nearness, but the love and power of these bright ones. The light was as clear as the brightest moonlight."

COMMON SENSE PUBLICATION OFFICE, 236 MONTGOMERY STREET.

COMMON SENSE is furnished to subscribers for Three Dollars per annum, in advance. Letters intended for the Business Department should be addressed:

AMANDA M. SLOCUM, BUSINESS MANAGER, 236 Montgomery st.

TRAVELING AGENTS.—Prof. W. H. Chaney, Mrs. Flora Wellman Chaney, and J. L. York are authorized to receive subscriptions for COMMON SENSE, and receipt for money due this office. LOCAL AGENT—Miss Abbie W. Baker, San Francisco.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

Religion and Science—E. Vogel.....	316
Prophecy by the Light of Astronomy—B. Shrad.....	317
Spiritual Manifestations Forty Years Ago—Facts in the Life of Don Fulano.....	318
Story with a Moral—Veritas.....	319
Katie King.....	351
Lycium for Self Culture.....	322
Letter from Mrs. Hutchison.....	323
Geo. Francis Train.....	323
Extraordinary Manifestations.....	324
Self Culture.....	325
Brief Extracts.....	325
Faust—Translation by Don Fulano.....	326

COMMON SENSE.

WILLIAM N. SLOCUM, EDITOR.

AMANDA M. SLOCUM, ASSISTANT.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., SATURDAY, NOV. 14, 1874.

The "Ad Interim Literary Club," a recently organized institution, meets every Sunday at 11 A. M., for the reading of original essays, etc., at Social Hall, 39 Fourth street. The public are invited.

Readers who desire to attend a circle for the development of mediumistic power, can hear of an excellent opportunity by calling at the rooms of Dr. Bancroft, at 204 Montgomery street. Only those who are able to spend two evenings per week for at least four weeks will be admitted.

We have received a copy of The Heathens of the Heath, a romance by the author of Exeter Hall. It shows the foolishness of foreign missions, and proves that the real missionaries of the world are those who are denounced as infidels and skeptics. We shall notice it more fully after reading.

Eugene B. Hoke, an inspirational speaker from Illinois, who treats mainly of the science and philosophy of Spiritualism, recently arrived in California under on engagement to speak at Los Angeles and San Bernardino. He will tomorrow afternoon attend the Conference at Charter Oak Hall, at 2 P. M., and will probably take part in the discussion.

We have received from the author, Edward Isaac Dobson, a copy of a small book of original poems, just from the press. It is a neat little volume of 56 pages, containing thirteen poems, nearly all of which were written within the last six months. The author is a native of Rough and Ready in this State, and is 19 years of age. He is evidently very ambitious, quite irreverent, and a decided atheist. He seems to have a mind of his own, and may yet make a mark in literature. Of all the aspirants for literary fame who claim California for their home, Dobson is certainly most entitled to the honor, if honor it be. We shall next week present extracts from the work that our readers may have a taste of its contents, and possibly be induced thereby to purchase. For sale at all the book-stores; price one dollar.

A GOOD EXAMPLE.—The "Common Sense Publishing Company" this week received from E. T. Slight, of Watsonville, five dollars, in payment for the paper to be sent one year to each of two persons, whose names he sent. If they refuse to take the paper, or if they become subscribers and pay for it themselves, he is to be informed, and the papers are then to be sent to any address he may furnish. Now here is a practical and excellent way to assist COMMON SENSE to get a large list of subscribers. If those who pay in this way desire it, the addresses will be so marked as to indicate that the paper is paid for, but in most cases it would be better to leave the recipients free to pay for themselves, which they would not be, if marked paid in advance. We would suggest also, that more good can be accomplished by sending the paper to four persons three months than to one an entire year. In this case we would mark the paper paid three months. We also offer for $5 to send ten papers to as many different addresses three months each, or if friends will send us names of those likely to subscribe, we will send a specimen to each free, post paid. Now, who will send in the next five dollars?

Sensible communications are always acceptable at this office, the more the better; but correspondents will be patient if their favors are not published as soon as received. We endeavor to get a variety in the paper, and when any department has to be cut down it is generally the editorial matter that suffers. An article by the editor on Materialization, in answer to Brother Simonds of the Living Way, as well as several communications must necessarily lie over another week. Just as soon as we can command the means to do so, the paper will be enlarged. Will you not help us to get the means?

THE LYCEUM SOCIAL.—The last dance at the Hall of the Spiritualist Union was well attended, and all the people, young and old, enjoyed themselves greatly. It was the most pleasant entertainment of the kind yet given at this Hall. The next sociable takes place in the same Hall, 911 Market street, on Tuesday evening. It is a good place to go, even if you do not dance. Friends meet there and enjoy the exhibition of life and happiness on the part of the young.

